But when the litigation was caused by the misstatements of the widow herself and the neglect of her attorney to supply the other side with the time and place of the marriage, which was denied, the court declined to condemn in costs the party who challenged her interest, and failed. Ib.

Where an intervener in a probate suit had been cited to appear by the defendants, the unsuccessful parties, and had been charged by them with procuring the will by undue influence, the court, in pronouncing for the will, departed from the usual practice of allowing only one set of costs, and condemned the defendants in the costs of the intervener as well as of the executors. Tennant v. Cross, 56 L. J., P. 74; 12 P. D. 4; 57 L. T. 372.

Of Legatees.]—Where the litigation arose out of the testator's act, and the subsequent conduct of the parties was calculated to excite suspicion, the court allowed a legatee, who resisted probate, costs out of the estate, although the opposition was unsuccessful, and fraud was charged. Hooton v. Dennet, 17 L. T. 670; 16 W. R. 488. S. P., Mitchell v. Gard, 3 Sw. & Tr. 276; 33 L. J., P. 7; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 51; 9 L. T. 491; 12 W. R. 255.

Of Heir-at-law.]—An heir-at-law cited to see proceedings, if he pleads, but does not prove suit, in opposition to a will, is, with respect to his liability to costs, in a position analogous to that of the next of kin in the prerogative court who, not content with putting the executors on proof of the will, have brought in an allegation, and have failed to prove it, and therefore an heir will be liable for costs incurred since an entry of a caveat by him. Fyson v. Westrope, 1 Sw. & Tr. 279; 29 L. J., P. 139; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 250; 7 W. R. 347.

When the court gives the next of kin, who unsuccessfully oppose a suit, their costs out of the estate, on the ground that the litigation was caused by the act of the testator, it will also give the heir-at-law, who has been cited to see proceedings, his costs out of the estate if he has not by his conduct put the estate to unnecessary expense. Smyth v. Wilson, 36 L. J., P. 82; 15 L. T. 446.

In a suit as to the construction of a will in which the heir-at-law is a necessary party, and is made a party by order of the court, he will be allowed the costs both of proving his heirship, and also of the general suit between the parties, even though he is ultimately unsuccessful. Singleton v. Tomlinson, 3 App. Cas. 404; 38 L. T. 653; 26 W. R. 722—H. L. (Ir.)

An heir-at-law, who intervenes in a suit and opposes a will, is entitled to costs if the will is pronounced against. Rayson v. Parton, 39 L. J., P. 20; L. R. 2 P. 38; 21 L. T. 647; 18 W. R. 232.

When issues are found distributively, the party condemned in costs is not liable for costs of issues found in his favour, if separately from the other costs. Ib.

—— Where Notice Given of Intention to Cross-examine only.] — If the next of kin or others having a right to put executors upon proof of a will in solemn form of law plead undue influence or fraud, they will be liable for costs, although they may have given a notice that they only intend to cross-examine the witnesses produced in support of the will. Harrington v. Bowyer, 41 L. J., P. 17; L. R. 2 P. 264; 25 L. T. 385; 19 W. R. 982.

A next of kin, who vexatiously calls in probate of a will granted in common form, may be condemned in costs, although he has given notice that he intends only to cross-examine the witnesses produced in support of the will. Beale v. Beale, 43 L. J., P. 70; L. R. 3 P. 179; 30 L. T. 770; 22 W. R. 712.

Application for—Lapse of Time.]—In a suit between the queen's proctor and a party claiming to be next of kin as to the legitimacy of a deceased, a verdict was given in favour of, and administration granted to, such alleged next of kin. Under the impression that he could pay his costs of suit out of the property of the deceased, no application was made by him to the court at the time of trial in reference to that matter, but in consequence of proceedings in chancery he had been unable to recover such costs. A citation having been served upon him to shew cause why the administration should not be revoked, by reason that he was not one of the next of kin of the deceased, he applied to the court, after the lapse of nine years, to make a formal order that his costs of suit against the queen's proctor should be paid out of the deceased's estate. The court refused to do so after such lapse of time. Dyke v. Williams, 40 L. J., P. 33; L. R. 2 P. 239; 24 L. T. 805; 19 W. R. 784.

Codicil Proved by Legatee—Costs as of Executor proving.]—A legatee who has propounded a codicil and succeeded is entitled to the same costs as an executor under similar circumstances. The defendant, the executor of the will of R. C., had proved the will only. The plaintiffs propounded a codicil. The court having pronounced for the codicil, condemned the defendant in costs, and gave the plaintiffs also out of the estate such sum, nomine expensarum, as would cover the additional expenses. Wilkinson v. Corfield, 50 L. J., P. 44; 6 P. D. 27; 29 W. R. 613; 45 J. P. 440.

Varying Order.]—The court, having made an order that the costs of all parties should be paid out of the estate, with a priority to the costs of the executor, who was universal legatee of the personal and devisee of the real estate, refused to vary such order so as to make the costs a charge upon the real estate in case the personalty was insufficient. Davies v. Reynolds, L. R. 3 P. 90; 28 L. T. 605.

The court, on decreeing probate, ordered that the costs of a defendant (who was interested in both the real and the personal estate, and had unsuccessfully opposed the will) should be paid out of the assets, although he had pleaded undue influence and fraud, being of opinion that acts of the testator, indicative of delusions, justified the opposition; but, being also of opinion that that was no ground for the pleas of undue influence and fraud, deducted from the defendant's costs what appeared a reasonable sum to cover the additional expense thereby occasioned, and that decree having been passed, the court refused an application on motion on behalf of the widow of the testator to vary it as to the costs. O'Kelly v. Browne, Ir. R. 9 Eq. 353.

Liability of Applicant.]—A creditor taking out administration with a supposed will annexed does so, though acting innocently, at his own risk, and will not be allowed his costs in a successful action to condemn the will. Ross v. Wallace, 29 L. R., Ir. 330.

The half-sister of the deceased, in the absence of his widow and in the belief that the widow was dead, took out administration; the court, upon it being shewn that the widow was living, recalled the grant with costs against the half-sister. Carr, In goods of, 67 L. T. 357.

Notice given that Plaintiff intends only to Cross-examine.]—The defendants, as executors, obtained probate of a will in common form. The plaintiff, after having made inquiries and having received full information from the defendants, issued a writ against them, claiming revocation of the probate. The defendants set up the will, and counter-claimed that the probate should be delivered out to them. The plaintiff, in his reply, set out the grounds upon which he impeached the will, and gave notice, under Ord. XXI. r. 18, that he did not intend to call witnesses, but merely insisted upon proof in solemn form:—Held, that, upon the wording of the rule and the facts of the case, the plaintiff was not protected by the notice from being condemned in the costs. Tappenden v. Lucas, 65 L. T. 684.

Where the party opposing a will has given notice under r. 41 of the Contentious Business Rules of 1862, that he merely insists on the will being proved in solemn form and only intends to cross-examine the witnesses, the court has no jurisdiction to condemn him in costs, such power only existing where the party giving the notice has taken proceedings to call in the probate. The same rule applies to a defendant in a probate action tried before a county court judge. Beale v. Beale (L. R. 3 P. 179) distinguished. Leigh v. Green, 61 L. J., P. 66; [1892] P. 17.

Liability of Married Women.]—In an action for probate which was tried by a jury, and in which the verdict was for the plaintiff:—Held, that the court had power to condemn in costs the defendant, a married woman having general separate estate. Morris v. Freeman, 47 L. J., P. 79; 3 P. D. 65; 39 L. T. 125; 27 W. R. 62.

Where a will was propounded by a married woman, and her husband had not been joined with her as a party to the suit, the court, having pronounced against the will, condemned the wife in the costs. Clarkson v. Waterhouse, 2 Sw. & Tr. 378; 29 L. J., P. 136; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 326; 1 L. T. 415.

Parties cited but not appearing.]—The court has power to condemn a party who has been cited, but has not appeared, in the costs of a testamentary suit. King v. Gillard, 37 L. J., P. 4; L. R. 1 P. 539; 17 L. T. 297.

Order against Infant Defendant, against her Guardian ad litem, and against Defendant who appeared, but had not pleaded.]—The widow, as executrix of the deceased, propounded his will. The defendants were a sister of the deceased, who was one of the next of kin entitled in distribution in case of an intestacy, and an infant niece of the deceased, who would also have been entitled to a share in the event of an intestacy. The infant appeared by her mother, who had been appointed her guardian ad litem. The first-named defendant appeared to the citation, but did not plead; but on behalf of the minor a defence was put in alleging that the testator's marriage with the plaintiff was null and void by reason of the testator's insanity at the time; that the will was not duly executed; that the testator did not know and approve of the contents; that he was not of sound mind at the time he executed it; and that the will was procured by means of the undue influence of the plaintiff. At the trial the court pronounced for the will with costs:—Held, that the first-named defendant, the minor, as well as the guardian of the latter, must be ordered to pay the plaintiff's taxed costs. Vivian v. Kennelly, 63 L. T. 778.

Liability of Queen's Proctor.]—The court has no authority to condemn the Queen's proctor in the costs of unsuccessful litigation. Atkinson v. Her Majesty's Proctor, 40 L. J., P. 49; L. R. 2 P. 255; 25 L. T. 164; 19 W. R. 786.

—— Of Administrator.] — An order on an administrator to pay costs is equivalent to an order to pay out of the deceased's estate; and if the assets have been properly exhausted, no attachment will be granted for disobedience of such order. Williams, In goods of, 3 Sw. & Tr. 437; 33 L. J., P. 127; 10 L. T. 583.

Costs of Administrator and Receiver pending Suit.]—The duties of an administrator and receiver pending suit commence from the date of the order of appointment, and if the decree in the action is appealed from, do not cease until the appeal has been disposed of. Costs of the administrator and receiver pending suit and of his solicitor allowed from the date of the appointment until the dismissal of the appeal. Taylor v. Taylor, 50 L. J., P. 45; 6 P. D. 29; 45 J. P. 457.

—— Of appointing Administrator pendente lite.]—The costs of appointing an administrator pendente lite are part of the costs for which the unsuccessful party condemned in costs will be liable. Fisher v. Fisher or Fry, 48 L. J., P. 69; 4 P. D. 231; 44 J. P. 24.

Priority in Payment of.]—One of the creditors of a testator cited the executrix in the probate division to prove the will, and an order was made that she should prove it within a time limited, and that, in default of her doing so, administration should be granted to the creditor. The executrix proved the will, and another friendly creditor then commenced an action in the chancery division against her to administer the estate, and the ordinary administration decree was made. Afterwards the creditor who had issued the citation obtained in the probate division an order that his costs of the proceedings there should be paid out of the estate in priority to other claims:—Held, that the costs of the administration action must be paid in priority to the costs in the probate division. Mayhew, In re, Rowles v. Mayhew, 46 L. J., Ch. 552; 5 Ch. D. 596; 37 L. T. 48; 25 W. R. 521—C. A.

Set-off of.]—It is a common practice of the court to award each party a portion of the costs of a cause at the final hearing; and the court has jurisdiction to direct a set-off of costs awarded by the court itself as between two parties. Magrath v. Magrath, Ir. R. 10 Eq. 155.

—— Of Probate Action when included in Costs of Administration.]—A testator by his will gave 2,000*l.* to be equally divided among certain legatees, and the residue of his estate to his executrix. The will was proved, but an action to set aside probate wasshortly afterwards commenced in the probate division against the executrix by certain of the legatees, who were also next of kin of the testator, some of the plaintiffs being married women, suing without their husbands. Judgment, with costs of that action, was entered for the executrix on February 7th, 1879; and on March 1st, 1879, an action to administer the testator's estate was commenced in the chancery division by some of the plaintiffs in the probate action and some legatees, the husbands of the married women being now joined as plaintiffs against the executrix as defendant; the executrix thereupon paid the 2,000*l.* (less duty) into court, under an order which provided against its being paid out without notice. The probate division made an order on August 1st, 1879, directing the plaintiffs in the probate action to pay the specified taxed costs thereof to the solicitors of the executrix, and the executrix thereupon obtained a charging order in the administration action against the share in the fund in court of one party only, not being one of the married women. All the shares in question had been assigned or incumbered before the date of judgment in the probate action:—Held, that the costs of the probate action were expenses of administration caused by the acts and conduct of the legatees, and proper to be deducted from the legacies themselves, and to be considered a charge upon them as against assignees, incumbrancers, and husbands taking in right of their wives. Knapman, In re, Knapman v. Wreford, 50 L. J., Ch. 629; 18 Ch. D. 300; 45 L. T. 102—C. A.

—— Executrix entitled to set off in Priority to other Claimants.]—Held, further, that the executrix had not by payment into court of the specific fund resigned any claim she might have against it for expenses of administration, and she was entitled, in priority to all parties claiming, to set off against such share therein, and to be paid the proportionate share of the taxed costs of the probate action. Ib.

Orders for Costs enforceable—Action on.]—An order of the president of the probate division that defendant pay plaintiff a named sum, being the amount of plaintiff's taxed costs of a discontinued probate action which defendant had been ordered to pay, may be enforced by an action in the queen's bench division. Norton v. Gregory, 14 R. 735; 73 L. T. 10—C. A.

—— Elegit.]—A defendant in a suit having been condemned in costs, and having neglected to pay them, and having no personal property, but having real property:—Held, that the court had power to issue a writ of elegit. Heath v. Heath, 29 L. T. 931; 22 W. R. 266.

—— Sequestration.]—A writ of sequestration having been issued to enforce an order for the payment of costs, the sequestrator demanded possession of the property, which was in the hands of parties holding under the person whose estate had been sequestered, and was refused possession. The court declined to enforce the sequestration by an attachment against those parties, but granted a writ of assistance to the sheriff for that purpose. Bayley v. Bayley, 4 Sw. & Tr. 222; 29 L. J., P. 72.

—— Out of what Estate payable.]—The court has not jurisdiction to order costs to be paid out of real estate. Young v. Dendy, L. R. 1 P. 344.

When the court made an order for the payment of the costs of a defendant who was interested in the residue, and had unsuccessfully contested the validity of a will out of the estate, and it afterwards appeared that the residue was insufficient to meet his costs, and that unless the order was varied a specific legatee, who had not appeared at the trial, would have to contribute towards those costs, the court allowed the legatee to enter an appearance in the cause to enable him to move the court to vary the order. Ib.

An order of the probate division directing that the costs of a party to proceedings before it shall be paid imports that they shall be paid out of the personalty. Shaw, In re, Bridger v. Shaw, 64 L. J., Ch. 47; [1894] 3 Ch. 615; 8 R. 555; 71 L. T. 515; 43 W. R. 159.

—— Out of Realty.]—A testatrix directed by her will that all her "just debts, funeral and testamentary expenses be paid and discharged out of her real and personal estate." She died possessed of no personal estate, and the litigation in relation to her will was in some measure due to its concealment by her direction from the defendant in the suit, who opposed probate of it but failed. In the circumstances of the case the court was of opinion that the defendant was entitled to his costs, and ordered such costs to be paid ratably out of the real estate. Smith v. Hopkinson, 47 L. J., P. 40; 4 P. D. 84; 39 L. T. 124; 26 W. R. 884.

The court has no jurisdiction to order costs to be paid out of real estate; and it is the practice of the court, without having regard to the amount or the ownership of the property, if the case has been a proper one for litigation, and has been properly conducted, to order the general costs to be paid out of the personal estate. O'Kelly v. Browne, Ir. R. 9 Eq. 353.

A will was proved by A., who acted as executor for some months. Then the probate court, and the house of lords on appeal from the probate court, decreed probate to B. instead, and directed all the costs to be paid out of the estate. There was very little personal estate, but considerable real estate. B. filed a bill for the administration of the real and personal estate of the testator in order to obtain payment of his costs:—Held, that the probate court not having jurisdiction over real estate, could not, neither could the house of lords on appeal from the probate court make an order for payment of the costs out of the real estate. B. therefore was not entitled to a decree for the administration of the real estate, but as he had acted for some time as executor, he was entitled to a decree for the administration of the personal estate. Charter v. Charter, 45 L. J., Ch. 705; 3 Ch. D. 218; 34 L. T. 412; 24 W. R. 874.

Where the heir-at-law successfully resists probate of a will of real estate, the court of probate has no jurisdiction to charge the real estate with the costs of the litigation. Newton v. Newton, 13 Ir. Ch. Rep. 245.

—— Where no Estate out of which Costs can be paid.]—A wife, having a power of appointment over certain funds, executed the same by will in favour of her husband. The funds were handed over to the husband in the lifetime of his wife, and by him transferred to the trustees of a settlement made in anticipation of the marriage of his adopted daughter. The husband survived his wife but did not prove her will, and died possessed of property of only nominal value. Subsequently his representative propounded the will of the wife, and was opposed by her next of kin. A copy of it was pronounced for, and the costs of the next of kin ordered to be paid out of her estate:—Held, that there was no property out of which such costs could be paid. Adamson v. Hammond, 43 L. J., P. 17; L. R. 3 P. 141; 29 L. T. 700.

Staying Proceedings until Payment.]—A. died intestate, and letters of administration of his estate were granted to B. as his half-brother and one of the next of kin. C. commenced against B. an action in the chancery division for the administration of the estate of A., alleging that he was the maternal uncle and sole next of kin of the intestate, and that B. was illegitimate. The action was dismissed for want of prosecution, and C. afterwards commenced a fresh action against B. in the probate division for the revocation of the grant of letters of administration. The court refused to order a stay of proceedings until after the payment by C. of B.'s costs in the administration action. Hankin v. Turner, 48 L. J., P. 28; 39 L. T. 611; 27 W. R. 232.

b. Taxation of.

Principle of.]—When the costs of an unsuccessful party are directed to be paid out of the estate, they are not taxed on so liberal a scale as between proctor and client. Jeffrey v. Jeffrey, 28 L. J., P. 43.

Inasmuch as, by 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, s. 61, the heir-at-law is put in the same position as the next of kin, the same principles as to costs will be applied in both cases. Fyson v. Westrope, 1 Sw. & Tr. 279; 29 L. J., P. 139; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 250.

Where there are separate defendants liable to costs, the costs will be distributed in proportion to the issues raised by the respective pleas. Ib.

—— Amount Allowable.]—On taxation of costs, as between solicitor and client, the schedule of fees, though a guide to the taxing-officer, does not bind him in the exercise of his discretion, which ought to be exercised upon the principle of liability to the solicitor and justice to the opposite party. Ryan v. Dolan, Ir. R. 7 Eq. 92.

The remuneration for loss of time, which medical witnesses attending during the examination of the other witnesses fairly claim, may be paid to them and charged to the opposite party. Ib.

In a testamentary suit a compromise was effected by counsel, one of the terms of the arrangement being that the plaintiff should pay to the defendant's attorney a specified sum for his agreed costs:—Held, that the attorney was entitled to receive the sum specified, and there being nothing to shew that he had acted improperly in respect of the compromise, that his bill of costs was not liable to taxation. Holditch v. Carter, L. R. 3 P. 115; 29 L. T. 249; 21 W. R. 934.

Counsel.]—In taxing a bill of costs the registrar is not bound, by the practice of the prerogative court, as to the number of counsel to be allowed, but should exercise his own discretion in the matter. Braine v. Braine, 1 Sw. & Tr. 271; 29 L. J., P. 151.

In making an allowance for briefs, he should consider whether they have been made unnecessarily long and expensive. Ib.

The question brought before the court on this application having been raised by the registrar, costs of the application were not allowed against the plaintiff. Ib.

The court will not interfere with the registrar's discretion as to the number of counsel to be allowed, and more than one consultation in the progress of a cause is never allowed. Edwards v. Payne, 1 Sw. & Tr. 276; 29 L. J., P. 145.

Of Special Jury.]—An application for a certificate that a case was a proper one to be tried by a special jury ought to be made immediately after the verdict has been given; and if made on a subsequent day is too late. Skipper v. Skipper, 29 L. J., P. 133; 2 L. T. 636; 8 W. R. 589. Dillon v. Caffrey, Ir. R. 6 Eq. 363.

Witnesses.]—In taxing the costs of a trial, the registrar has a discretion as to the number of witnesses whose expenses should be allowed. Edwards v. Payne, supra.

c. Security for.

A plaintiff applied for administration to B. on presumption of death. The defendant appeared in answer to a citation advertised in newspapers, and alleged that he was B. The court refused to make any order on the defendant to give security for costs. Robson v. Robson, 3 Sw. & Tr. 568; 34 L. J., P. 6; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 1243; 11 L. T. 459.

A. claimed administration of the estate of R., as having died intestate in 1843. The defendant pleaded that R. did not die in 1843, or at any other time; in fact he alleged that he himself was R. The defendant was permanently resident at Bathurst in New South Wales. The court refused to order the defendant to give security for costs. Ib.

The court will not order a plaintiff to find security for costs, when, though a foreigner, he is staying in England at the time of the application, and there is nothing to lead to the supposition that he is on the point of leaving the country. His affidavit in opposition to such an application need not state an intention of permanent residence. Crispin v. Doglioni, 1 Sw. & Tr. 522; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 303; 1 L. T. 446.

13. Orders and Decrees.

Amendment.]—When the court pronounced for a will, but in its decree made no order as to costs, it subsequently amended its decree by ordering the costs of the legatee, who had propounded it, to be paid out of the estate. Bewsher v. Williams, 3 Sw. & Tr. 62; 8 L. T. 290; 11 W. R. 541.

Effect and Operation—Generally.]—The 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, s. 25, enacting that the court shall have the like powers for enforcing its orders as are vested in the court of chancery in relation to suits depending there, does not constitute an order of the probate court for payment of money a charge on land within 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 13. Pratt v. Bull, 1 De G., J. & S. 141; 1 N. R. 298; 32 L. J., Ch. 144; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 239; 7 L. T. 702; 11 W. R. 295.

The court of probate has, under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, s. 25, the like powers, jurisdiction and authority for enforcing its orders, decrees and judgments as are by law vested in the court of chancery, but the limit of this authority must be found in the powers exercised by the court of chancery prior to the passing of 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110. The court of probate does not possess the additional powers and authority indirectly conferred upon courts of equity for the enforcing of their orders by that statute. Crispin v. Cumano, 38 L. J., P. 28; L. R. 1 P. 622; 20 L. T. 150; 17 W. R. 535.

—— Next of Kin bound by.]—A next of kin, who has been cognisant of and privy to a suit between the executors and another next of kin, is bound by the decision in that suit, although he has not been cited to see proceedings, and has not intervened therein. He cannot therefore reopen the question of the validity of the will after its validity has been established in such suit. Ratcliffe v. Barnes, 2 Sw. & Tr. 486; 31 L. J., P. 61; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 313; 6 L. T. 658.

A next of kin, although not cited to see proceedings, and not having intervened, is bound by a decree in a suit in which a will is contested by other next of kin, if he was cognisant of the suit and had an opportunity of intervening. Wytcherley v. Andrews, 40 L. J., P. 57; L. R. 2 P. 327; 25 L. T. 134; 19 W. R. 1015.

But this rule does not apply to a case when the parties to the suit compromise it, and the decree is founded on the compromise. Ib.

The court having pronounced for a will in consequence of a compromise between the parties contesting it, a next of kin, who was no party to the suit, although cognisant of it, was held not to be barred by the decree from instituting a fresh suit for the revocation of probate. Ib.

—— Heir-at-Law bound by.]—The heir-at-law is bound, as to the personalty, by a decree in a testamentary suit of which he was cognisant, although he had not been cited and had not intervened, unless the decree was founded on a compromise or something equivalent to a compromise. Moran, In goods of, Ir. R. 8 Eq. 303.

When, therefore, probate has been decreed on a verdict directed in consequence of the non-appearance of a party to the record, an heir-at-law so situated was held to be barred by the decree from disputing, save as to the realty, the validity of the will proved, and condemned in costs. Ib.

—— Acts as an Estoppel.]—After administration of the effects of E. had been granted to W. as one of the next of kin, a suit was instituted in chancery to which he was a party, and in it the question was raised who were the next of kin of E. The administratrix of S., who in his lifetime was one of the next of kin of E., obtained leave to attend and took part in the inquiry, which resulted in a decision that W. was not one of the next of kin of E. A suit for revocation of the grant of administration was afterwards instituted against W. by A. and B., who were the next of kin of S., the administratrix of S. having renounced her right to administer the estate of E.:—Held, that, although as against the administratrix of S., W. would have been estopped by the decision of the court of chancery from alleging that he was one of the next of kin of E., he was not estopped as against A. and B., as they did not claim through the administratrix of S., and were not parties to the chancery suit. Spencer v. Williams, 40 L. J., P. 45; L. R. 2 P. 230; 24 L. T. 513; 19 W. R. 703.

Varying Decrees.]—The court has no jurisdiction to vary on motion a decree which had been passed. O'Kelly v. Browne, Ir. R. 9 Eq. 353.

Compromise—Enforced as a Rule of Court.]—In a cause of proving a will and codicil in solemn form, promoted by the executor against the legal personal representative of the sole next of kin, a compromise having been agreed to, by which a verdict establishing the will and codicil was to be taken by consent for the plaintiff, and the defendant was to receive 2,000*l.* out of the estate:—Held, that the judge had jurisdiction to make the terms of the compromise a rule of court and to enforce it as such. Probate of the will and codicil was decreed to the plaintiff, as executor, the terms of the compromise being embodied in the decree. Harvey v. Allen, 1 Sw. & Tr. 151.

The court, having jurisdiction, under the judicature act, to enforce the performance of consents, will not refuse to make them rules of court, except in the case of complicated accounts. Warmingham v. Norman, 1 L. R., Ir. 272.

—— Refusal of Court to make Terms a Rule of Court.]—But where on a trial, before a judge of assize and a jury, of issues relating to the validity of a will, certain executors of which were the plaintiffs, and certain other executors of which were the defendants in the suit, a verdict was taken by consent for the plaintiffs on an agreement made an order of nisi prius, one of the terms of which was that the executors (the defendants) should renounce probate, the judge refused to make the order of nisi prius a rule of the court, on the ground that the court of probate could not properly enforce an agreement that any executors of a will should renounce probate thereof, but granted probate to the plaintiffs. Hargreaves v. Wood, 2 Sw. & Tr. 602; 32 L. J., P. 8; 11 W. R. 31.

When a suit is compromised before trial, the court will not make the terms of compromise a rule of court, as it has no power to enforce compliance with the terms; but it will make an order that the contentious proceedings be discontinued, and that the terms of compromise be filed in the registry. Roadnight v. Carter, 3 Sw. & Tr. 421.

Where, at the trial of an issue by agreement between the parties a verdict is taken by consent, such agreement cannot afterwards, even with the consent of the parties, be made a rule of court unless that was a term of the agreement. Evans v. Saunders, 30 L. J., P. 184.

During the progress of a suit, a compromise was entered into by the parties and committed to writing. A verdict was thereupon given for the validity of the will, but no order made as to the costs. The court, two years afterwards, refused to permit the terms of compromise to be embodied in an order to be enforced as a rule of court. Carritt v. Christian, L. R. 2 P. 181; 24 L. T. 236.

14. Attachment.

For Nonpayment of Money or Costs.]—When an order has been made for payment of costs, the court will not grant an attachment for nonpayment of them without an affidavit of personal service of the original order on the party to be attached. Thomas v. Crowther, 2 Sw. & Tr. 501; 10 W. R. 861.

The court will not consider the question of issuing an attachment for nonpayment of a sum of money ordered to be paid, till personal service of the order has been made, or it is shewn that personal service is evaded. Williams, In goods of, 3 Sw. & Tr. 437; 33 L. J., P. 127; 10 L. T. 583.

An order that a defendant, "as administratrix of the effects of the deceased," do pay the costs of a suit, is tantamount to an order that such costs should be paid out of the estate, and does not render the party personally liable. Ib.

Where, therefore, such an order was made, and there were no assets, the court refused an attachment for nonpayment of the costs. Ib.

The court will not allow an attachment to issue against a party for nonpayment of costs pursuant to an order, unless there are affidavits by all the persons to whom those costs are payable that they have not been paid. Bayly v. Bayly, 29 L. J., P. 146.

The same strictness will not be required before issuing a sequestration. Ib.

Against Married Women.]—Where the court has condemned the defendants in costs, and has made an order upon them for the payment of the same, it will refuse to direct an attachment to issue against them for noncompliance with that order, on their stating, on affidavit, that they are married women and have no separate property. Harris v. Bradbury, 2 Sw. & Tr. 459; 31 L. J., P. 86; 6 L. T. 163; 10 W. R. 447.

An attachment will not be granted against a married woman for disobedience of an order for payment of costs if she has no separate property. But the onus of establishing that fact lies upon her; and if she does not appear, upon a motion for an attachment, of which she had notice, the court will grant the attachment. Parker v. Hick, 3 Sw. & Tr. 436; 33 L. J., P. 154.

For refusing to bring in Will.]—A person served with a subpœna under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, s. 26, to bring in a testamentary paper, failed to comply with it. On a motion for an attachment against him:—Held, that, in accordance with Ord. XLIV. r. 2, the party proceeded against must have notice of the application in the first instance. Baigent v. Baigent, 1 P. D. 421; 33 L. T. 462; 24 W. R. 43.

The court granted an order for an attachment against A. for disobedience of a subpœna to bring in a will; but directed that the attachment should lie in the registry for eight days after notice to A. of its having issued, before proceedings should be taken to enforce it. Simmons v. Dean, 27 L. J., P. 103.

The application for such attachment is contentious business. Ib.

Where a subpœna has been personally served upon an individual to bring in a testamentary paper, and such individual fails to comply therewith, the court will not at once order an attachment to issue against him, but will make a preliminary order that he shall attend in court to be examined in reference to his possession of such paper. Parkinson v. Thornton, 37 L. J., P. 3.

The executors appointed in a will intermeddled in the estate, but did not take probate of the will. Having been cited to do so, and not having obeyed the citation within the time limited by it, an attachment was applied for against them. The court refused to order an attachment in the first instance, but directed that a peremptory order should be served upon them to take probate within ten days. Mordaunt v. Clarke, 38 L. J., P. 45; L. R. 1 P. 592; 19 L. T. 610.

For not filing Inventory.]—See Marshman v. Brooks, post, col. 626.

15. Writ of Sequestration.

For Nonpayment of Costs.] — The court granted a writ of sequestration for nonpayment of costs on an affidavit by the attorney that he had not received them, and that the parties to the suit had informed him that they also had not received them, notice of the motion having been given. Bayly v. Bayly, 29 L. J., P. 146.

The court refused to enforce a writ of sequestration for nonpayment of costs in a testamentary cause by an attachment against the tenants, who held under the person whose estate had been sequestered, and who refused to give up possession, but ordered a writ of assistance to the sheriff to be issued. Bayley v. Bayley, 29 L. J., P. 72.

In a testamentary suit an order was made on the defendant, both as executor of the original defendant and as being himself a party, to pay the taxed costs. The costs not having been paid within the time appointed, and the defendant being abroad, a writ of sequestration issued against his real and personal estate. A large amount of stock was standing in the books of the Bank of England to the credit of the defendant, as executor of the original defendant in the suit, and a dividend was due thereon:—Held, that the court of probate had no authority to make an order upon the Bank of England (without their assent) to pay over such dividends to the sequestrators. Crispin v. Cumano, 38 L. J., P. 28; L. R. 1 P. 622; 20 L. T. 150; 17 W. R. 535.

16. Other Matters of Practice.

Statute.]—55 Vict. c. 6 provides for the recognition in the United Kingdom of probates and letters of administration granted in British possessions.

Photographing Signatures.]—The court will allow a photograph to be taken of signatures to a document purporting to be signed by an alleged testator when it thinks a proper case has been made. Neilson v. Underwood, Ir. R. 4 Eq. 59.

Appointment of Receiver.]—The court of chancery may appoint a receiver of personal estate pending the grant of probate, delayed on account of a caveat having been entered where a suit in the probate court has not been actually constituted. Parkin v. Seddons, 42 L. J., Ch. 470; L. R. 16 Eq. 34; 28 L. T. 353; 21 W. R. 538.

The court will also, under the same circumstances, appoint a receiver pendente lite of the rents of real estate, if neither the devisee nor the heir-at-law is in actual possession. Ib. See also Cases ante, col. 482.

Receiver—Security of Guarantee Society.]—The security of a guarantee society may be taken in the case of a receiver in a probate action. Carpenter v. Solicitor to the Treasury, Stokes, In goods of, 51 L. J., P. 91; 7 P. D. 235; 46 L. T. 821; 31 W. R. 108; 46 J. P. 663.

Presumption as to Death—Advertisements.]—The court refused to dispense with the usual advertisement in newspapers before presuming the death of a sailor who had been last heard of in 1859 as then about to sail from New Zealand to China in a barque now believed to have been lost. Atkinson, In goods of, Ir. R. 7 Eq. 219.

Marking Papers.]—A will, with the necessary affidavits, was forwarded to the executor in India. The several papers were returned correct in every respect save that the will was not marked by the person before whom the executor was sworn, as required by r. 49 of Rules and Orders, 1862. The court, under the circumstances, dispensed with the rule, and decreed probate. Williams, In goods of, 17 L. T. 484; 16 W. R. 406.

Caveats.]—Executors of a will affecting realty cannot be prevented from obtaining probate in common form by a caveat entered by the heir-at-law, if he has not been cited. Young v. Ferrie, 4 Sw. & Tr. 210; 29 L. J., P. 69; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1318.

If an heir-at-law enter such a caveat, it is not necessary for the executors to deliver a declaration; and if they do so, and the heir-at-law does not plead to it, he will not be condemned in the costs incurred in delivering it. Ib.

A married woman, under the powers given to her by her marriage settlement, executed a will. Subsequently the marriage was dissolved, and the will itself was destroyed by burning. Administration having been taken by her next of kin, was called in by the residuary legatee named in the will, who propounded the same, and the next of kin made no defence. A caveat had been entered by the person interested under the settlement in case the deceased had not duly executed a will; but such caveat was not warned by the party propounding the will. The court directed that the caveat should be warned, in order that the party who had entered it might intervene, if he thought proper. Ming v. Ming, 36 L. J., P. 51; 16 L. T. 69; 15 W. R. 718.

A receiver pendente lite cannot be appointed where a caveat has been entered and warned, and appearance has been entered, but no writ has been issued. Parker, In re, Dearing v. Brooks (infra, col. 627), explained. Salter v. Salter, 65 L. J., P. 117; [1896] P. 291; 75 L. T. 7; 45 W. R. 7—C. A.

Inventories.]—An attachment will be granted against a married woman for non-compliance with a citation calling upon her to file an inventory in the registry of an estate of which she is administratrix. Baker v. Baker, 2 Sw. & Tr. 380; 29 L. J., P. 138.

An administrator in custody under an attachment, obtained by the persons entitled in distribution, for not filing an inventory, is not entitled to be discharged from custody upon his filing such inventory, except upon payment of costs. Marshman v. Brookes, 32 L. J., P. 95; 11 W. R. 549.

The court has no jurisdiction to compel an administrator, who obtained his grant of administration from an ecclesiastical court before January, 1858, to file an inventory of the goods of deceased in the registry. By 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, s. 87, such inventories are returnable only into the court of chancery. Bouverie v. Maxwell, 36 L. J., P. 3; L. R. 1 P. 272; 15 L. T. 137; 15 W. R. 89.

Bringing into Registry Testamentary Papers.]—It is not sufficient, in order to make out the title to a term of years, with the view of obtaining administration, to refer to deeds deducing such title in affidavits; the deeds themselves must be brought into the registry. Keene, In goods of, 1 Sw. & Tr. 265; 28 L. J., P. 34.

Subpœna to bring Scrip into Registry—Contempt of Court.]—Where a writ of subpœna was issued in a non-contentious matter directing R., a solicitor, to bring into the probate registry a scrip which was stated to be, but which was not in fact, in his possession or control:—Held, that his non-compliance with the subpœna was not under the circumstances a contempt; that the fact that he had not followed the practice general in such a case (and compulsory in a contentious matter) of filing an affidavit explaining the reason for his non-compliance, with which practice he was acquainted, was not a contempt. Emmerson, In re, Rawlings v. Emmerson, 57 L. J., P. 1—C. A.

Non-contentious Proceedings — Declaration instead of Oath of Foreigner.]—Upon application by three German executors, all resident in Germany, for probate of a will, one of the executors declined to take the usual oath, on the ground that he was not allowed to do so by the laws of his place of residence, and the registrar of the principal probate registry declined to accept his declaration in lieu of the usual oath, but the court accepted the declaration, and ordered that probate should issue in favour of all three executors. The rules of the supreme court do not apply to non-contentious probate business. Caspari, In goods of, 75 L. T. 663.

Taking Wills out of Registry.]—The court will not allow a will in its custody to be taken out of its jurisdiction on any alleged necessity for the furtherance of justice. It must presume that other courts, when satisfied that the original document is withheld by a competent authority, will admit secondary evidence. Manfredi, In goods of, 1 Sw. & Tr. 135; 6 W. R. 792. S. P., Holl, In goods of, 1 Sw. & Tr. 136, n.; 27 L. J., P. 38.

When an executor is in this country, the court will allow a will, which has been brought into the registry for the purpose of obtaining probate, to be delivered out to the executor, in order that he may be sworn thereto before a commissioner, on an exemplified copy of it being left in the registry. Gibbs, In goods of, 28 L. J., P. 90.

Receiver — Injunction — Executor intermeddling with Estate.]—An executor before obtaining probate, and without the consent of his co-executor, intermeddled with assets and made preparations to sell them. The court granted leave to the co-executor to issue a writ for an injunction and for a receiver. Moore, In goods of, 57 L. J., P. 37; 13 P. D. 36; 58 L. T. 386; 36 W. R. 576; 52 J. P. 200.

—— Application before Probate — Chancery Division.] — The Judicature Act, 1873, s. 25, sub-s. 8, enables any judge of the high court to appoint a receiver of a deceased's estate (before grant of probate or administration), notwithstanding the absence of lis pendens; but applications for any such order being on the way to probate proceedings are properly made in the probate division, and if made elsewhere will not be encouraged. Parker, In re, Dearing v. Brooks, 54 L. J., Ch. 694.

Grant with Omission—Mistake in Date of Reference.]—A testatrix executed a will in 1887, and a subsequent will in 1889, by which she revoked all previous wills. In 1891 she executed a codicil which by mistake was described as a codicil to the will of 1887:—Held, that probate might be granted of the codicil, together with the will of 1889, with the reference to the will of 1887 omitted. Gordon, In goods of, 61 L. J., P. 132; [1892] P. 228; 67 L. T. 328.

Words of Revocation included in Will without Knowledge of Testatrix.]—A testatrix by her will constituted her illegitimate son her universal legatee and one of her executors. After the execution of the will, and shortly before her death, she expressed a wish to bequeath part of her furniture and other personal effects to her sister, her sole next of kin and heiress-at-law, and proceeded to write out a bequest giving effect to such wish on a printed form of will, which was duly executed. The form commenced by a clause of revocation; but the testatrix did not fill up the blanks in this part of the form; and the clause was not read over to her at the time of execution, though the rest of the will was, and there was no evidence that she knew of such clause:—Held, that, under the circumstances, probate might be granted of the paper, omitting the clause of revocation, as a codicil to the original will. Moore, In goods of, 62 L. J., P. 9; [1892] P. 378; 1 R. 454.

If a testator employs another to convey his meaning in technical language, and that other person (without fraud) makes a mistake in doing it, the mistake is the same as if the testator had employed the language himself. Collins v. Elstone, 62 L. J., P. 26; [1893] P. 1; 1 R. 458; 67 L. T. 624; 41 W. R. 287.

A lady, after making a previous will and codicil, desired to make a special disposition of a small sum of money payable under a policy of life insurance. She asked an insurance agent to draw up a will carrying out her intentions. He procured a form, which the testatrix executed, containing a revocation clause that was allowed to remain under a misapprehension as to its effect:—Held, that the testatrix, having had the will read over to her, must, in the absence of fraud, be held to have approved as well as known the contents thereof, and probate of the last will only, with the words of revocation, was granted. Guardhouse v. Blackburn (L. R. 1 P. 109) and Morrell v. Morrell (7 P. D. 68) followed. Ib.

—— Words introduced per incuriam.]—However clearly an error can be established in a will, unless words have been inserted by fraud or by mistake without the knowledge of the testator, the court of probate cannot correct it either by the omission of words or by the insertion of other words. Harter v. Harter, 42 L. J., P. 1; L. R. 3 P. 11; 27 L. T. 858; 21 W. R. 341.

Upon motion to omit from probate christian names transposed in a will:—Held, that this could not be done, as it was not shewn that the testator did not mean those names to be inserted in the will, though he might not have meant so to benefit the persons to whom those names actually belonged. Durlacher, In goods of, 75 L. T. 664.

—— Name of Legatee inserted twice by Mistake.]—Where a testator in his instructions for his will ordered a sum of 20,000*l.* to be bequeathed to his two daughters, Georgiana and Florence, in equal moieties of 10,000*l.* each, and the conveyancing counsel who settled the will by mistake drafted two clauses in each of which the sum of 10,000*l.* was bequeathed to Georgiana, and the name of Florence was omitted from the draft altogether, and such mistake was repeated in the engrossment, and the will was executed by the testator with such mistake in it, the court being satisfied on the evidence that there had been a bonâ fide mistake, with the consent of all parties admitted the will to probate with the name Georgiana omitted from the second bequest, leaving the interpretation of the clauses as altered to the chancery division. Boehm, In goods of, 60 L. J., P. 80; [1891] P. 247; 64 L. T. 806; 39 W. R. 576.

Same House devised twice over — Omission of Adjoining House—Number of House in one Devise struck out.]—A testatrix wished to devise No. 103, E. Road, to A., and No. 105, E. Road, to B., and a draft will was prepared and approved by her carrying out her intentions, but by a mistake in the engrossment both devises were of 103, E. Road, and the will was duly executed without the mistake having been discovered:—Held, on motion, that the court could not substitute 105 for 103; but that it would grant probate of the will with the figures 103 in the devise to B. struck out. Walkley, In goods of, 1 R. 480; 69 L. T. 419.

Erroneous Recital—Residuary Gift—Excepted Property—Intention to Exclude.]—Where the will of a testator contains a general residuary gift, then, in order to exclude from that gift a particular property belonging to the testator, and not otherwise disposed of by the will, it is necessary to find a plain and unequivocal intention on the part of the testator not to include that property in the residuary gift, even if it is his to dispose of. Bagot, In re, Paton v. Ormerod, 62 L. J., Ch. 1006; [1893] 3 Ch. 348; 69 L. T. 399—C. A.

A testatrix, by mistake, recited in her will that she had settled upon A. B. a particular property, which, in fact, was still at her disposition. The will contained other recitals and bequests of other properties, and also a residuary bequest in favour of X.:—Held, that the property mentioned in the recital passed under the residuary gift to X. Circuitt v. Perry (23 Beav. 275), Harris v. Harris (Ir. R. 3 Eq. 610), Hawks v. Longridge (29 L. T. 449), and Clibborn v. Clibborn (9 Ir. Jur. 381) observed upon. Ib.

Torn Will—Incomplete Restoration—Copy.]—The will of a testator was, after his death, torn into pieces by one of his sons while a copy was being made by the executor. Most of the pieces were recovered and gummed together; but there were still some blanks left, and it was in an incomplete form when presented for probate, though the copy shewed what all the words omitted in the blanks had been:—Held, that probate might be granted of the incomplete will and the copy as together constituting the will of the deceased. Leigh, In goods of, 61 L. J., P. 124; [1892] P. 82; 66 L. T. 379.

VIII. ESTABLISHMENT OF WILLS AND ISSUE DEVISAVIT VEL NON.

A. General Principles.

Jurisdiction of Court of Equity.]—A court of equity has no jurisdiction to declare what is or is not a man's last will. Pemberton v. Pemberton, 13 Ves. 297.

A court of equity has no jurisdiction to determine on the validity of a will either of real or personal estate. Jones v. Jones, 3 Mer. 161.

Will of real estate not to be proved on a reference before the Master. Lechmere v. Brasier, 2 Jac. & Walk. 289; 22 R. R. 130.

Bill by an heir-at-law for an issue to try the validity of a will made in England dismissed partly on the ground of his acquiescence both in the ecclesiastical court and upon a bill to perpetuate testimony, but principally because the lands lay in Pennsylvania. Pike v. Hoare, 2 Eden, 182; Ambl. 428.

If a British subject domiciled in a foreign country by his will appoints A. his executor, but makes a disposition of his personal property which, though valid by the laws of England, is invalid by the laws of that foreign country, the court of chancery is at liberty, notwithstanding probate may have been granted to A. in this country, to hold that the will has no operation beyond appointing A. the executor. Thornton v. Curling, 8 Sim. 310.

A., seised of lands subject to mortgages, devised them to B., in whom the mortgages became vested:—Held, that the court had jurisdiction in a suit instituted by the heir of A., praying the ordinary redemption relief and an issue devisavit vel non, to grant such an issue. Egmont v. Darell, 14 Ir. Ch. R. 564.

A court of equity has no original jurisdiction to try the validity of a will either of real or personal estate, but where on a bill filed for the removal of terms, or for other equitable relief, the validity of a will of real estate incidentally comes in question, the court will proceed to investigate that question, and will, generally speaking, for the purpose of informing its conscience, direct an issue devisavit vel non. Middleton v. Sherburne, 4 Y. & C. 358.

On question of validity of devise, issue at law must determine it. Dawson v. Chater, 9 Mod. 90.

Wills cannot be set aside for fraud and imposition in equity, because if of personal estate they may be set aside in the ecclesiastical court, and if of real estate by issue at law devisavit vel non. Kerrich v. Bransby, 7 Bro. P. C. 437.

A bill can be maintained by a devisee of the legal estate in real property, who is in possession, for the purpose of establishing the will against the testator's heir-at-law, although the heir has brought no action of ejectment against the devisee. Boyse v. Rossborough, 1 Kay, 71; 2 Eq. R. 675; 3 De G. M. & G. 817; 23 L. J., Ch. 305; 18 Jur. 205; 2 W. R. 91.

Previously to the statute of frauds the court of chancery frequently took upon itself to determine the validity of wills by inquiry before some of the masters of the court, a practice which has ceased since the case of Kerrich v. Bransby, supra. Ib.

But as early as the time of James I. it appears to have been considered that the proper mode of trying the validity or invalidity of a will of real estate was by a trial at law, the court of chancery reserving power to deal with the case as justice might require. Ib.

The proceeding in equity to establish a will against the heir differs very much from assisting to try its validity or invalidity, either by removing the obstacle of an outstanding term, in which case the trial at law would be by ejectment, or by perpetuating testimony concerning the will, because, by a decree establishing the will, the heir-at-law is so bound, that a perpetual injunction would be granted against him, if after such decree he should attempt to impeach the will. Ib.

The origin of this jurisdiction is obscure; but, on principle, it cannot arise from the fact of the devise being upon trust, for that can make no difference to the heir, or because the court experiences a difficulty, for then, in all other cases of difficulty occurring under deeds, there would be the same jurisdiction. Ib.

Nor can it be for the protection of trustees, because the jurisdiction exists where there is no trust, but only the obstacle of an outstanding legal estate, which prevents an action at law. Ib.

But upon principle and authority there is an inherent equity on the part of the devisee, whether legal or equitable, arising from the mere fact of the devise, to have the will established against the heir. Ib.

An averment in such a bill that A. claims to be heir of the testator, supported by a statement that he has sued in that character in Ireland and succeeded, is sufficient. Ib.

That the legal estate has been conveyed by the plaintiff to his own trustee since the testator's death cannot give any equity to sustain such a bill. Ib. See also Lovett v. Lovett, infra.

Proving Will of Lands.]—Though it be proper to prove a will of lands in equity, yet the same is not absolutely necessary, any more than it is to prove the deed in equity. Cotton v. Wilson, 3 P. Wms. 192.

Will of Copyholds.]—There is no case in which the court has established a will of copyholds. Semble, the probate copy of a copyholder's will is sufficient to lead the uses of a surrender to the use of his will. Archer v. Slater, 10 Sim. 624.

Construction.]—Courts of equity determine on devises of legal estate, as courts of law do. Sayer v. Masterman, Ambl. 345.

Where a title depends on the words of a will, this is properly determinable in equity, as by a judge and jury at nisi prius. Tanner v. Wise, 3 P. Wms. 296; Cas. t. Talb. 284.

Practice.]—In a creditor's suit, since the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 104, for making the real estate subject to the debts, it is not necessary to establish the will against the heir. Goodchild v. Terrett, 5 Beav. 398.

When a bill prayed that the rights of all parties interested might be declared, and set forth the testator's will and codicil, and averred that the defendant was untruly described in the codicil as the testator's next of kin and heir-at-law, and that he had obtained probate on an untrue allegation that the executors were dead, there being no distinct averment of the character in which the plaintiff claimed:—A demurrer was allowed with leave to amend. Parker v. Nickson, 4 Giff. 306; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 196; 7 L. T. 460.

Although it is the rule that a will is only established against the heir from the day of its production, the court allowed, on the application of the plaintiff, that the decree should be dated on the day it was pronounced, though the will was produced on a later day. Seale v. Buller, 12 Jur. 108.

The court of chancery, in deciding whether the trial of an issue devisavit vel non has or has not been satisfactory, cannot act on precisely the same principles as a court of law, where a similar question might arise on the trial of an ejectment where the same will was in dispute; for in the latter case, if the jury come to an erroneous conclusion, it is open to the defeated party to bring his claim, in a fresh action, under the consideration of a new jury, and so from time to time, until the proceeding should have assumed a character of vexation. But if a verdict is satisfactory to the court of chancery, the effect is for ever to shut out further litigation and inquiry, and the court will put the plaintiff in possession if successful; but if he fails, it will not enable him again to open the question. Lovett v. Lovett, 3 Kay & J. 1; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 1130; 5 W. R. 5.

An issue devisavit vel non had been directed to try the validity of a later will as to real property, and a time was limited wherein to try it. The plaintiff in the issue claiming under the later will withdrew the record during the pendency of an appeal to the privy council, which resulted in the establishment of that will. An order was made in 1842 directing the issue to be taken pro confesso; and as consequential thereto a subsequent order was made vesting the enjoyment of the property in the claimants under the earlier will:—Held, that there were no special circumstances to take the case out of the usual course. Townley v. Deere, 1 W. R. 483.

Effect of Issue.]—Bill by heir-at-law against devisee to set aside will as having been obtained by undue influence and misrepresentation from testator, at whose death there were outstanding terms of years and tenancies which would be a bar to ejectment by plaintiff. Issue directed at hearing devisavit vel non; verdict in favour of heir. Motion for new trial refused; and by order on further directions will declared void. Appeal by devisee against the orders directing the issue and declaring the invalidity of the will:—Held, that in such a case, where an action of ejectment is barred by an outstanding term, the fittest relief generally is to restrain the term being set up as a bar, because such a course leaves each party at liberty to assert by legal proceedings what is in substance a mere legal right. But the court of chancery has power to direct the legal question to be tried by an issue, and will use that power in cases where effectual relief would not be given by merely restraining a party from setting up the outstanding term, as where the subject-matter of the devise is a mere equitable right. Difference between the two modes of proceeding discussed and commented upon. In deciding whether the trial of an issue devisavit vel non has been satisfactory, the court of chancery does not act on the same principles as a court of law in ejectment where the same will is in dispute, because, in the latter case, the defeated party may bring a fresh action, but the consequence of a verdict satisfactory to the court of chancery on the issue is to stop litigation for ever. Boyse v. Rossborough, 6 H. L. Cas. 1; 26 L. J., Ch. 256; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 373; 5 W. R. 414.

Testator by his will devised his lands in Ireland and England to B. The will was disputed by A., the heir-at-law, who filed his bill in Ireland to set it aside. An issue had been directed and a verdict given against the will, and a motion for a new trial refused. B. filed a bill in England to have the will established, and to have it declared that the English estates passed under it:—Held, that the proceedings in Ireland were no bar to B.'s obtaining an issue in England to try the validity of the will, the verdict in Ireland having no authority to conclude the question as to the English estates, although pronounced upon the same will. Boyse v. Rossborough, 1 K. & J. 124; 3 Eq. R. 78; 24 L. J., Ch. 7; 3 W. R. 8.

A bill filed in 1757 by H., pretending to be a devisee, charging that B., the only son of testator, was illegitimate, and making M. a party (who, in case of B.'s illegitimacy, was heir-at-law to testator) : issue of devisavit vel non directed ; H. and B. proceed to the trial of that issue, M. taking no part in it ; the issue found in the negative, and bill dismissed in 1770. On a bill filed in 1776 by B. for the possession and title-deeds, he has an equity against H.'s ever insisting on the will, or the illegitimacy, and also against M.'s insisting on the illegitimacy, after having declined to contest it on the issue. Bond v. Hopkins, 1 Sch. & Lef. 413.

A verdict being against the will, the heir is entitled, although a new trial is directed, to be left in possession, provided no danger of insolvency to answer for the interim rents and profits in the event of the will being established. Devisee casually in the occupation of real estate after death of testator, or let into possession by the favour of the occupiers, acquires no right. The heir on the death of his ancestor in possession may enter and remove everybody, except the widow, who has a right to stay until her dower is assigned to her. Lloyd v. Trimleston (Lord), 2 Moll. 81.

B. At Suit of Devisee, Executor, or Trustee.

Against Persons other than Heir-at-Law.]—Devisees, filing a bill to establish a will and carry the trusts into execution, have no right to call upon persons who claim paramount the will, to litigate such claims with them. Devonsher v. Newenham, 2 Sch. & Lef. 199.

The court of chancery can entertain a suit to establish a will against parties claiming under a prior will, and disputing the plaintiff's claim ; a devisee being entitled to have the will established and his title quieted not only against the heir, but against all persons setting up adverse rights. Lovett v. Lovett, 3 K. & J. 1 ; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 1130 ; 5 W. R. 5.

E., by her will, dated in 1851, gave landed estates to the defendant and his family. By a will dated in 1853 she revoked that will and gave the property to the plaintiff and his family. By a codicil dated in 1855 she confirmed the latter will, and died shortly afterwards. It was proved that the testatrix was eighty-three at the time of her decease ; that she had always been of a very violent and imperious temper, but had become much less firm in her will, and more under the subjection of others, since 1849 ; that she had always previous to 1853 expressed great bitterness against the branch of the family to which the plaintiff belonged, and had had no communication with him, and there were no other apparent circumstances to alter that feeling. The letter in which the instructions for the will of 1853 were addressed to her solicitor was full of rambling, incoherent hallucinations ; and there appeared to have been at least one other letter of the same description sent by her about the same time. On these grounds the defendant had contested in the ecclesiastical courts, but unsuccessfully, the will of 1853, under which the plaintiff claimed, probate of that will having been granted as of a good will of personalty. The plaintiff then filed a bill against the defendant to have the will of 1853 and codicil of 1855 established as to the realty :—Held, that such a bill would lie against a devisee as well as against an heir-at-law ; and that, consistently with Boyse v. Rossborough (1 K. & J. 124), the bill could not be dismissed. Ib.

But held also, that the court would not in such a case take upon itself to act without the intervention of a jury to decide upon the question of devisavit vel non, i.e. on the questions of capacity in the testatrix or undue influence exerted on her. Ib.

A document which had been proved in the course of the proceedings in the ecclesiastical courts, but not in the suit in equity, but which had been referred to by one of the witnesses in the suit in an affidavit, and which moreover had been verified, was allowed to be read, for the purpose, not of inducing the court to make a final decision, but of informing the court of the nature of the case alleged by the defendant to call for examination elsewhere ; and the court being of opinion that there was a primâ facie case for contesting the later will, an issue was directed accordingly. Ib.

A testator, being subject to a commission of lunacy, gave by his will certain benefits to his only daughter, a married woman, who was also his heiress-at-law, and declared that if she or her husband, or any person on their or either of their behalf, should dispute his will, or if any proceedings should be taken by any person whomsoever, by any possible result of which any estate or interest could be in any way attainable, by his daughter or her husband, of larger extent than was intended for her by the will, and she and her husband should not formally disavow, stay, or resist such proceedings to the best of their ability, then he revoked the benefits given to her. The heiress-at-law, on occasion of her marriage, and during her minority, had joined with her husband in assigning her expectant interest to the trustees of her marriage settlement. The trustees of the will filed their bill to have the will established and the trusts carried into execution, and adduced proof of the sanity of the testator at the date of his will. To this suit the heiress-at-law and the trustees of the settlement were made parties : —Held, without deciding on the validity of the settlement, that the plaintiffs were bound to prove their title as against the trustees of the settlement, and the court accordingly, at the instance of these trustees, directed an issue devisavit vel non. Cooke v. Cholmondeley, 2 Macn. & G. 18 ; 2 H. & Tw. 162 ; 19 L. J., Ch. 81 ; 14 Jur. 117. Affirming on this point 15 Sim. 611.

In order to protect the heiress-at-law from the clause of forfeiture contained in the will, the court directed a statement to be inserted in the order that the issue was directed at the instance of the trustees of the settlement. Ib.

A testator seised of large real estates made a will, by which he gave certain benefits to his daughter, who was his heir and a married lady, and declared that if she, or her husband, or any person on their or either of their behalf, should dispute his will, or if any proceedings should be taken by any person whomsoever, by any possible result of which any estate or interest could be, in any way, attainable by his daughter or her husband, of larger extent than was intended for her by the will, and she and her husband should not formally disavow, stay, or resist such proceedings to the best of their ability, then he revoked the benefits given to her ; the testator was the subject of a commission of lunacy when he made his will, and continued so until his death. In a suit by the trustees of the will to establish it, the plaintiffs proved that the testator was of sound mind when he made his will, and there was no evidence to the contrary; nevertheless, the court directed an issue devisavit vel non to be tried, the plaintiffs to be plaintiffs at law, and a gentleman (with whom the husband had entered into a covenant, during the infancy of his wife and in the lifetime of her father, to make a settlement of any estates that she might thereafter become entitled to) to be the defendant at law. Cooke v. Turner, 15 Sim. 611; 16 L. J., Ch. 487; 11 Jur. 702. See S. C., on appeal, preceding case.

Heir claiming as Devisee—Right to Issue.]—Where the point at issue was the validity of the will of A., and the party claiming under it was, at the time of the institution of the suit the heir-at-law of the testator, while the party opposing it was devisee of the immediate heir of A.:—Held, that the former party claiming as a devisee could not insist upon the privilege of an heir to have an issue as a matter of course. Lorton (Viscount) v. Kingston (Earl), 5 Cl. & F. 269.

Against the Heir-at-Law.]—Although a charge for debts created by will on real estate, in aid of the personal estate, does not entitle the executor to sustain a suit to establish the will against the heir, his duty being confined to administer the assets, and leave the parties who become interested in the real estate to work out their interests as they can, yet if one of the executors is also a devisee in trust such suit is proper. If there is no trust, the court does not direct the form of the trial in which to establish the will against the heir, but only takes care that a fair trial shall be had. But if there is a trust, that brings all under the control of the court, and it always directs an issue devisavit vel non, and never an ejectment. Fingal (Lord) v. Blake, 1 Moll. 113.

In a suit by devisees against an heir-at-law, alleging suppression by the heir of the testator's will, and praying delivery up of the premises. No case of suppression was made at the hearing, but the plaintiffs shewed distinctly that the will under which they claimed had existed, and was in the house of the testatrix within two years before her death, during which two years the heir-at-law, with his family, had been living in the house:—Held, that this was a case for an inquiry, and for an issue as to whether the testatrix did devise the lands in manner alleged. Smith v. Spencer, 1 Y. & C. C. C. 75; 5 Jur. 1056.

A bill, by a devisee of lands who was in possession, for the purpose of establishing a copy of a will which had been abstracted, against the heir-at-law, but raising no case implicating the heir in the abstraction, was retained for a year. The result of an action, in which the copy of the will had been received in evidence, having been in favour of the plaintiff, the court, by its decree, established the will upon and according to the copy, and restrained the defendant from bringing any action to disturb the plaintiff in the enjoyment of the lands devised to him. Davies v. Evans, 4 De G. & Sm. 440.

A bill to establish a will against an heir-at-law may be maintained at the suit of a mere legal devisee, not charged with any trust or duty under the will. Boyse v. Rossborough, 6 H. L. Cas. 1; 26 L. J., Ch. 256; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 373; 5 W. R. 514.

A mere legal devisee may file a bill against the heir-at-law of the testator for the purpose of having the will established against him, though no trusts are declared by the will, and though it is not necessary to administer the estate under the direction or decree of a court of equity. S. C., 3 De G. M. & G. 817; Kay, 71; 2 Eq. R. 675; 23 L. J., Ch. 305; 18 Jur. 205; 2 W. R. 91, 290.

A decree of the court of chancery in Ireland, after verdict upon an issue devisavit vel non, does not determine the validity or invalidity of the will, so far as it relates to lands in England, and cannot be pleaded in bar to a suit in this court. S. C., 1 K. & J. 124; 3 Eq. R. 78; 24 L. J., Ch. 7; 3 W. R. 8.

The right of the heir and that of a devisee to this issue distinguished; the former is absolute; the latter is in the discretion of the court. Ib.

Issue devisavit vel non granted to a devisee after a decree in Ireland against the will, and an order refusing a new trial; and although subsequently an attesting witness, who had been examined in Ireland, and whose cross-examination was deposed to have been very effective in support of the heir's case, had died, the devisee having appealed to the house of lords, and not appearing to be chargeable with delay, either in the appeal or in this suit. Ib.

The possibility that the house of lords might be influenced in the appellant's favour by the result of the English trial, and the consideration that this was a probable motive for the present application:—Held, not to afford ground for refusing or postponing the trial of the issue. Ib.

Obiter. The course, where an instrument is clearly established to be invalid as a will, is, that the heir has a right to have it delivered up as a cloud upon his title, unless it affects to pass real estate out of the jurisdiction.

Creditor claiming under Will against Heir-at-Law.]—In a creditors' suit, seeking the application of real estate in the payment of debts, both the heir-at-law and devisees of the debtor being parties, and the will not being admitted by the heir, the court would neither dismiss the bill against the heir, nor direct an issue devisavit vel non at his request, the right of the creditors being paramount. Spickernell v. Hotham, 9 Hare, 73; 20 L. J., Ch. 629.

—— In Absence of Heir.]—Bill to establish will and execution of trusts by sale of estate, heir-at-law not to be found, court cannot pronounce will proved, heir not being before court, but real estate to be sold. French v. Baron, Dick. 138; 2 Atk. 120.

Will, though proved per testes, not declared well proved in absence of heir, but decreed to be established. Stokes v. Taylor, Dick. 349. And see Binfield v. Lambert, Id. 337.

Will not declared well proved in absence of heir, but real estate to be sold in pursuance of trust. Cator v. Butler, Dick. 438.

In a suit to establish a will, and for the administration of real and personal assets, if the heir-at-law of the testator be abroad, it seems the court does not, as in other cases, declare the will well proved, or establish the same, but merely directs the trusts of the will to be carried into execution. Thompson v. Topham, 1 Y. & J. 556.

If an adult heir-at-law refuse an issue on the hearing of a cause, the court will establish the will against him, though he does not admit it. Jackson v. Barry, 2 Cox, 225.

On a bill to establish a will against an heir though he made default, the court ordered the proofs to be read, and said that otherwise the will could not be well proved. Webb v. Litcot, 3 Atk. 25.

Where a bill is not framed to establish a will, and the heir does not dispute it. Semble, that the court has no jurisdiction to declare against the heir the construction of a strictly legal devise as regards the quantum of the subject-matter; but if the heir elects to be dismissed, the court will make such a declaration for the guidance of the trustees. Stanley v. Stanley, 2 J. & H. 491; 10 W. R. 857.

—— On Death of Heir pending Suit.]—If, in a suit to establish a will, the heir admits the will, and dies before the hearing, the derivative heir is bound, and the will need not be proved. Robinson v. Cooper, 4 Sim. 131. S. P., Lock v. Foote, Id. 132.

—— Where Heir an Infant.]—Heir-at-law by his answer admitted the will, but died before the cause was brought to hearing, and left an infant heir; and by a bill of revivor, the infant was made a defendant and the suit revived; it was:—Held, that the will must be proved per testes against such infant heir. Sleeman v. Sleeman, Dick. 787.

—— Where Heiress-at-Law a Married Woman.]—Admission of will by feme covert, heiress-at-law living separate from her husband, sufficient to establish it. Codrington v. Shelburne (Earl), Dick. 475.

The admission of a will, in the separate answer of a married woman, who is the heiress-at-law of the testator, is not sufficient evidence to enable the court to declare the will established. Brown v. Hayward, 1 Hare, 433; 6 Jur. 847.

C. At Suit of Heir-at-Law.

Two suits were instituted, the one by a residuary legatee, and the other by the heir-at-law. In each suit the plaintiff insisted that the devisee was a trustee of the real estate:—Held, that the heir-at-law was entitled to have the will established against him, and that no administration of the estate could be made until the validity of the devise was ascertained; and on the heir-at-law asking for an issue, it was directed in both suits to ascertain whether the devise formed part of the will; but upon appeal the order for an issue was discharged, liberty being given to the heir-at-law to bring an ejectment. Taylor v. Brown, 31 L. J., Ch. 453; 10 W. R. 361.

Heir-at-law, not sole plaintiff, bringing bill to establish will, court declared it well proved, and established it. Penny v. Penny, Dick. 520.

If an heir files a bill stating that his ancestor's will was duly executed and attested, but dies before the cause is heard, leaving an infant heir, the will must be proved. Hollings v. Kirkby, 15 Sim. 183.

D. Proof of Will.

1. Testamentary Capacity.

Must be Proved.]—When a will is to be established, the testator must be proved to be of sound and disposing mind. Wallis v. Hodgeson, 2 Atk. 56.

Where a bill is brought to prove a will of land, the sanity of the testator must be proved. Secus, in the case of a deed of trust to sell for payment of debts. Harris v. Ingledew, 3 P. Wms. 93.

Evidence.]—Letters addressed by deceased persons to a testator, and found after his death in his bookcase among his private papers, with their seals broken (no act being proved to have been done by him in regard to them), are inadmissible in evidence, upon a question as to his competency to make a will. Wright v. Doe d. Tatham, 5 Cl. & F. 670. And see S. C., 2 N. & P. 305; 7 A. & E. 313; 7 L. J., Ex. 340.

In considering the validity of a will, where the only question is, not as to unsoundness, but as to absence of mind of the testator, the court should disregard the contents and dispositions of the will, and be governed solely by the evidence of capacity. Swinfen v. Swinfen, 27 Beav. 148; 28 L. J., Ch. 849; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1276.

—— Interrogatories.]—Where the evidence proves the execution of a will, but the witnesses have not been examined as to the sanity of the testator, the cause will be adjourned at the hearing, and liberty will be given to exhibit an interrogatory to prove his sanity. Abrams v. Winshup, 1 Russ. 526.

Questions for Jury.]—In ejectment on the title by heir against devisee—the main issue being whether the will was obtained by undue influence—the judge submitted two questions to the jury—first, whether the testator was, at the time of the execution of the instrument, of sound disposing mind, memory and understanding; secondly, whether he was induced to make the will by the undue influence of W. L. The jury having answered the first question in the affirmative and disagreed as to the second, the judge, being of opinion that there was no evidence of undue influence against the defendant in possession, directed a verdict for him:—Held, that, there being evidence from which, though not directly bearing on the instrument in question, the jury might reasonably infer that the will had been obtained by undue influence, the verdict so directed could not be upheld. Purdon v. Longford (Earl), Ir. R. 11 C. L. 267.

An issue—whether a will was obtained by undue influence—ought not to be submitted to the jury unless there is reasonable evidence that the person charged had influence over the testator; that he exercised that influence over the testator, to the extent of coercion, in relation to the will itself; and that the execution of the impeached instrument was procured by the exercise of such influence as the causa causans of the act itself. Longford (Earl) v. Purdon, 1 L. R., Ir. 75.

An issue—whether a will was obtained by fraud—ought not to be submitted to the jury unless there is reasonable evidence that fraud has been practised; that its influence continued so that the testator was labouring under it at the time he made his will, and that he was by that means induced to make his will. Ib.

Upon the trial of the issue, the due execution, the mental competence, and the voluntariness of the act, or absence of undue influence only are inquired into; and evidence touching the legal disability of testator to devise upon another ground ought not to be admitted upon that issue. Upon the return of the verdict establishing the will, the court will proceed to consider the objections by the heir, against giving it operation: and though the court will not add to the issue devisavit vel non a further issue as to testator's disability to devise legally, the facts upon which that objection is rested being merely allegation in the answer, it might do so if proof was made of the facts, and a reasonable doubt entertained of their effect. Fingal (Lord) v. Blake, 1 Moll. 113, 158.

On an issue devisavit vel non, the will being impeached on the ground that the testator's mind was impaired by drinking, and was under undue influence on the part of the devisee or his family:—Held, that though the testator was proved to have been addicted to drinking, and to have had delirium tremens a few days before the will, the question was whether he was sane and sensible, and able to understand the nature and contents of the will at the time when it was executed. And, although it was drawn by a son of the devisee (an old friend), and at his house: Held, that if the testator had really requested him to do it, and it was his voluntary and spontaneous act, not under constraint, free from force or fraud, from imposition or importunity, there was no undue influence, and the will was valid. Handley v. Stacey, 1 F. & F. 574.

New Trial.]—Testatrix was in a state of great bodily disease which tended to affect her brain, and subject to wanderings and delusions previously and subsequently to the execution of the instrument purporting to be her will. An issue devisavit vel non having been directed, a new trial was granted, the court not being satisfied upon the evidence that the case in favour of the will was clearly established, or that there was that absence of continuous delusion at the time of executing the instrument that she was capable of forming and giving effect to a deliberate intention with respect to the disposition of her property. Where a person much depressed by illness, but with his mind calm and clear, gives instructions for a will of a complicated nature, such a will would not be set aside, although on executing it the next day the testator could not have given those complicated instructions, or even fully understood them; but at a time when the mind is incapable of forming an intention, or arriving at it as a new idea, the mere recollection of an intention vaguely expressed in conversation two months before is not sufficient proof of capacity. Distinction between temporary delusions arising from delirium and rooted delusions arising from insanity, principles which guide the court in granting a new trial of an issue. Bennett v. Manchester (Duke), 2 W. R. 644.

On an issue devisavit vel non, it appeared that at the time of the will the testator was in extreme old age, and in the last stage of bodily infirmity, bedridden, utterly helpless, and dependent on the care of the plaintiff (sole devisee of the realty), and a nurse (the only legatee), and a physician, an attesting witness, and an intimate friend of the devisee, her own attorney (another witness) having prepared the will, upon instructions elicited by himself from the testator by interrogatories. They had a few days before represented him as "quite incapable of managing his own affairs, or taking care of his person"; and it being admitted that two or three days before he was not competent to make the will, yet the jury being told that if he understood the state of his property and his family, and the effect of the will, and if he had free volition, and the will was really in accordance with his intentions, and there being evidence that it was, a verdict in favour of the will was not disturbed. Swinfen v. Swinfen, 1 F. & F. 584.

2. Attesting Witnesses or their Handwriting.

Nature of Proof required.]—Chancery requires judgment of ecclesiastical court that an instrument is testamentary, but is not satisfied with proof in that court, but requires the witnesses to be examined again, or if no witnesses proof of signature. Rich v. Cockell, 9 Ves. 376; 7 R. R. 227.

Under the old practice a disputed will could not be proved vivâ voce at the hearing; but liberty was given, under the new practice, to prove a will in court, and the heir was allowed to cross-examine the witnesses. Chichester v. Chichester, 24 Beav. 289.

Answer of heir believing that a will was made will not prevent the necessity of its being proved. Potter v. Potter, 1 Ves. 274; Ambl. 98.

A feme covert has power given her by her husband to make a will; probate of such will per testes is sufficient proof without other proof. Balch v. Wilson, Pre. Ch. 84.

Plaintiffs by their bill sought, as devisees, to set aside a conveyance executed by the devisor. The defendant, by his answer, admitted that the will (which was made after the wills act came into operation) was duly proved in the ecclesiastical court. By a slip evidence was not adduced of the execution of the will:—Held, that the defect might be supplied; but that the defendant was entitled to require this to be done by an action of ejectment. Davies v. Davies, 3 De G. & Sm. 698.

In establishing a will, the attestation of all witnesses must be proved, and if not personally, either that they are abroad or dead, and the proof must be positive. In proving will for certain purposes only, such proof as will satisfy the court is sufficient, and in such case leave will be given to exhibit an interrogatory for further proof of will for the former purpose. Wood v. Stane, 8 Price, 613.

All Witnesses examined if living.]—In a suit to establish a will in equity, all the witnesses to it should be examined, or proof given of their deaths. Ogle v. Cook, 1 Ves. 177.

Where a will is to be established in equity, it it must be proved by each of the subscribing witnesses, if living, and if dead their death must be substantiated, &c. Grayson v. Atkinson, 2 Ves. 454.

In every issue devisavit vel non, the court of equity requires that all the attesting witnesses to a will shall, if it is possible to procure their attendance, be examined. M'Gregor v. Topham, 3 H. L. Cas. 132. Affirming 3 Hare, 488, 496.

On the trial of an issue devisavit vel non, all the subscribing witnesses must be examined, except in cases of necessity, as death, insanity, or absence abroad, or the heir waives his right, and the rule is not merely technical. Bootle v. Blundell, 19 Ves. 494, 500; G. Coop. 136; 15 R. R. 93.

It is enough to examine one of the witnesses to a will, except where it is proved against the heir-at-law; in such a case it is necessary to examine all the witnesses. Brown v. Chambers, Hayes, 597.

When One Witness dispensed with.]—Proof of one of the witnesses of an old will, of whom no account could be given, dispensed with. M'Kenire v. Fraser, 9 Ves. 5.

One of three witnesses to will not to be found; but on sufficient evidence will declared well executed. Binfield v. Lambert, Dick. 337.

But in Bird v. Butler will not declared well executed, but trusts to be performed and carried into execution. Ib. note. See id. 349.

A motion for a new trial of two issues was made upon three grounds: first, the alleged improper summing up of the judge; secondly, because the weight of evidence was against the verdict; and thirdly, because only one of the attesting witnesses was examined at the trial. The motion was refused, on the ground that, upon the evidence alone, without regard to the summing up of the judge, the court would not have been satisfied, if the jury had given a different verdict; and because the two attesting witnesses, who were not examined, were present in court on the trial of the issue, and tendered to the party moving for a new trial, who declined to examine them. Semble, the rule is not universal, that, on the trial of an issue devisavit vel non, all the attesting witnesses must be examined at law. Semble, that rule does not apply where the bill is filed by the heir-at-law to restrain the devisee from setting up a legal estate as a bar to the ejectment. Tatham v. Wright, 2 Russ. & M. 31.

Where One Witness Abroad.]—Practice in a suit to establish a will where one of the witnesses is abroad. Hare v. Hare, 5 Beav. 629; 12 L. J., Ch. 344; 7 Jur. 337.

A subscribing witness to a will disposing of real estate being in Jamaica, his evidence was dispensed with. Carrington (Lord) v. Payne, 5 Ves. 405; 5 R. R. 87.

One of the witnesses being beyond sea, there should have been a commission to examine him, and the court could only direct a trial at law. Grayson v. Atkinson, 2 Ves. 454.

Where None Available.]—If, after the deaths of all witnesses who could have spoken to the will, which, while they lived, was, after an investigation by the parties interested and under advice, abandoned as invalid, a jury found a verdict in its favour, a court of equity ought not to act upon it. Lorton v. Kingston (Earl), 5 Cl. & F. 269.

Presumption in favour of a will apparently duly executed where one attesting witness was dead, the second denied her signature, but was not to be believed, and the third was of defective memory. Hitch v. Wells, 10 Beav. 84.

When a deceased had executed testamentary instruments having formal attestation clauses, a will was established upon the presumption omnia esse rite acta, although the attesting witnesses swore that they had no distinct recollection of the transaction. Reeves v. Lindsay, Ir. R. 3 Eq. 509.

Proof of Handwriting when Allowed.]—Witness to devise of real estate becoming insane, proof of his handwriting was allowed. Bernett v. Taylor, 9 Ves. 381.

One witness dead and other out of jurisdiction; proof of handwriting allowed. Banks v. Farquharson, Dick. 167.

Will not allowed to be proved by proof of handwriting of witness without positive proof of his being dead. Bishop v. Burton, 2 Comyn, 614.

Proof of the handwriting of an attesting witness to a will received under particular circumstances, in order to found a decree establishing the will. James v. Parnell, Turn. & R. 417.

A will of lands not declared to be well proved, so as to be acted on in a judgment creditors' suit, by proving the deaths and handwritings of two of the subscribing witnesses and the handwriting of the third witness, against whom an attachment had issued for refusing to be examined. To substitute proof of the handwriting of such witness for his personal examination, a bill ought to be filed, not by a judgment creditor, who was entitled, whether the will of the deceased debtor was or was not duly executed, to satisfaction out of his real estate, but by a person whose relief depended on the establishment of the will and the general administration of the assets. Bomford v. Wilme, Beat. 252.

When it is sought to have a will disposing of real property declared well proved, it must be proved by the three witnesses, or proof of their death and handwriting; but for other purposes, not requiring such a decree, but merely to read it as a legal instrument, one witness to prove it is sufficient. Concannon v. Cruise, 2 Moll. 332.

3. Onus of Proof.

The onus of proving a will being on the party propounding it, is in general discharged by proof of capacity, and the fact of executions from which the knowledge of and assent to its contents by the testator will be assumed. Barry v. Butlin, 2 Moore, P. C. 480.

The principles expounded in the cases of Paske v. Ollatt (2 Ph. 323) and Barry v. Butlin (supra) that the burthen of proof lies upon the party propounding a will, and that the court is not bound to pronounce in favour of a will unless it is judicially satisfied that it is the last will of a free and capable testator, considered and affirmed. Browning v. Budd, 6 Moore, P. C. 430.

The execution of a will by a competent testator being duly proved, the presumption is, that the testator was cognisant of its contents, and that the instrument expresses his will, unless there be other circumstances to lead to a different conclusion, or to render it doubtful for the court to act upon that presumption. Ib.

It is a settled rule of evidence in the ecclesiastical courts, that if a will traced to the possession of the deceased testator, and last seen there, is not forthcoming at his decease, it is presumed to have been destroyed by himself; and in order to let in secondary evidence of the contents of such will, the party propounding it must rebut the presumption by evidence of a contrary import. The onus of proof lies on the party propounding the will in such cases. Welch v. Phillips, 1 Moore, P. C. 299.

Proof of the factum of a will, and of the testator's capacity, are not sufficient to encounter suspicious circumstances which may raise a presumption of falsity or fraud, requiring clear and satisfactory evidence to remove it. Von Stentz v. Comyn, 12 Ir. Eq. R. 622.

It is not necessary to prove the fraud or imposition. It may in such a case be presumed, the onus of proof lying on the party propounding the will. Ib.

4. Proof of Foreign or Colonial Will.

Will established on secondary evidence, the original being in the colonies. Gardner v. Myre, 4 Beav. 143, n.

Will proved in the West Indies established on production of a tested copy and prerogative probate. Bayley v. Bayley, 4 Beav. 143, n.

A will proved abroad and retained there established on production of a copy certified under the hand and seal of the proper officer, &c., which had been admitted to probate in the ecclesiastical court here. Pullan v. Rawlins, 4 Beav. 142. See also the cases on the same point reported, id. 143, n., et seq.

A will was proved in the West Indies, and a duly authenticated copy of it was sent to this country, accompanied by an affidavit made by one of the attesting witnesses when the will was proved, showing that the will had been executed and attested pursuant to the Statute of Frauds; and that copy was admitted to probate in this country, and was produced in the court of chancery with the affidavit annexed to it. The vice-chancellor, however, refused to establish the will without full proof of its due execution and attestation. Rand v. Macmahon, 12 Sim. 553; 6 Jur. 450.

The court of chancery will establish a will made and proved in the colonies on the production of a duly authenticated copy of it, provided the due execution and attestation of the original are proved by the attesting witnesses. Ib.

A will of a personal estate which lies in a foreign country may be proved here. Jauncy v. Sealey, 1 Vern. 397.

E. Bill to Set Aside Will.

Jurisdiction.]—A bill in equity will lie to set aside a will made under the influence of superstitious terrors. Middleton v. Sherburne, 4 Y. & C. C. C. 358.

A fraud in procuring a will cannot be determined in equity, but must be decided by a trial at law. Webb v. Claverden, 2 Atk. 424.

After probate of will, court of equity may inquire into fairness of residuary bequest of personal estate. Marriot v. Marriot, 1 Stra. 666.

Wills cannot be set aside for fraud and imposition in equity, because if of personal estate they may be set aside in the ecclesiastical court, and if of real estate by issue at law devisavit vel non. Kerrich v. Bransby, 7 Bro. P. C. 437.

Where an heir-at-law filed a bill to set aside as unduly obtained a will, purporting to dispose of real estate, alleging the existence of an outstanding legal estate, or in the alternative to have the benefit of legacies on the ground of their being void under the Mortmain Act, but failed to prove the existence of any outstanding legal estate, the bill was dismissed (without prejudice to the right to file another) as to the former alternative for want of equity, and as to the latter alternative as being premature; Knight Bruce, L.J., who thought that the bill might have been retained to afford an opportunity of bringing on the question of the validity of the will, not agreeing in the dismissal. Wright v. Wilkin, 4 De G. & J. 141; 7 W. R. 431.

The court of chancery has not jurisdiction to entertain a bill by an heir-at-law against a devisee to set aside a will on the ground of imbecility on the part of the testator, and of the exercise upon him of undue influence, no obstacles existing to prevent the heir-at-law from bringing an ejectment. Jones v. Gregory, 4 Giff. 468; 33 L. J., Ch. 679; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1171. Affirmed, infra.

Demurrer to a bill by an heir-at-law for a declaration, that such of the will or paper writing of the testator as related to certain houses, being part of the real estate of the testator, was void, and ought to be cancelled, or that an issue might be directed to try whether the freehold estates of the testator were devised or not, or that the plaintiff might be at liberty to proceed by ejectment for the recovery of such estates, and also for the appointment of a receiver, allowed with costs. Ib.

A bill was filed by an heir-at-law to have a will of real estate cancelled on the ground that it had been obtained by the direct fraud of persons taking a beneficial interest under it, of whom the principal defendant was one:—Held, that, notwithstanding the 21 & 22 Vict. c. 27 and 25 & 26 Vict. c. 42, the bill was demurrable, the heir-at-law's remedy being only at law. S. C., 2 De G. J. & S. 83; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 59; 9 L. T. 556; 12 W. R. 193.

After probate of a will of personalty has been granted, the chancery division has no jurisdiction to entertain a suit to set aside testamentary dispositions on the ground of fraud in obtaining the execution of the will, the probate division having exclusive jurisdiction in the matter. Meluish v. Milton, 45 L. J., Ch. 836; 35 L. T. 82; 24 W. R. 892.

Practice.]—Will is never set aside without issue devisavit vel non. Pemberton v. Pemberton, 11 Ves. 53.

The course upon a bill by heir impeaching a will is to direct him to bring an ejectment, removing obstacles from terms, &c. Pemberton v. Pemberton, 13 Ves. 297.

A court of equity will not entertain bill by heir-at-law for setting aside and declaring void an impeached bill, alleged to have been procured to be made under circumstances of fraud charged, unless some obvious definite impediment, which court can see and reach, to proceeding at law by ejectment, be shown by bill to obstruct heir in that (the regular) course, and that although defendants have possessed themselves of all the papers and muniments of the deceased, and threaten to set up outstanding terms. Jones v. Jones, 7 Price, 663.

Where a jury had found will to be a forgery, and it appearing that the will, which had been proved, was in the custody of the probate court, the court, on motion for a decree, declared that the will must be set aside so far as it related to the real estate, and that the devisees were trustees for the heir-at-law. Bonser v. Bradshaw, 5 Jur. (N.S.) 86.

Pending a suit for the establishment of a will of real estate, the heir-at-law, who had concurred in the will, and in the establishment of the suit, having commenced actions of ejectment and detinue to recover the estate and the title-deeds, the court, on the application of the trustee, referred it to the master to inquire what proceedings ought to be taken to defend the actions, and restrain the actions in the meantime. Edgecumbe v. Carpenter, 1 Beav. 171; 8 L. J., Ch. 17.

Right of Heir to an Issue.]—An heir is entitled to have the validity of a contested will tried upon an issue, or possibly, under the 25 & 26 Vict. c. 42, by a jury before the court of chancery. But when the heir has caused the difficulty, as when he has destroyed the will, or where it is traced into his possession, and he does not produce it, he has no such right. Hampden v. Hampden (3 Bro. P. C. 551) followed. Williams v. Williams, 33 Beav. 306; 3 N. R. 100; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1267; 9 L. T. 566; 12 W. R. 140.

It is at the option of the heir-at-law to have the validity of a will tried in an action of ejectment, or by an issue devisavit vel non. Grove v. Young, 15 Jur. 810.

Where a bill is filed by an heir-at-law against a devisee to try the validity of a will of real estate, the court, under special circumstances, will direct an issue devisavit vel non, on motion, before the hearing. Middleton v. Shelburne, 4 Y. & C. 358.

The fact that the validity of a will of great and personal estate executed since the passing of the 7 Will. 4 and 1 Vict. c. 26 has been established before the judicial committee as regards the personal estate, in a proceeding to which the heir-at-law was a party in another capacity, does not take away his right to an issue devisavit vel non. Stacey v. Spratley, 2 De G. & J. 94; 27 L. J., Ch. 725; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 28. S. C., 4 De G. & J. 199; 28 L. J., Ch. 563; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 503; 7 W. R. 485.

An heir-at-law admitted by his answer the execution of the will under which the plaintiff claimed, but alleged another will, revoking the former and giving the estate to himself, which he said had been destroyed by mistake, but did not go into any evidence of the second will or its destruction:—Held, that he was not entitled to an issue devisavit vel non as to the validity of the first will, though the plaintiff, by reading the statement in the answer as to the second will, had made it evidence. Whitaker v. Newman, 2 Hare, 299; 12 L. J., Ch. 350; 7 Jur. 231.

An issue devisavit vel non was granted, as to a will alleged to have been forged, on an interlocutory application by an heir-at-law who was plaintiff in a suit against the devisee under the supposed will. Bonser v. Bradshaw, 4 Jur. (N.S.) 1011; 6 W. R. 427.

—— To Receiver.]—Where a bill was filed by an heir-at-law against devisees, alleging that the will was forged, and praying that it might be set aside, that the devisees might be directed to convey the estate to him, and that, if necessary, an issue devisavit vel non might be directed, the court, on motion by the plaintiff for an issue, or that he might be at liberty to proceed by ejectment, and for a receiver, made the order for an issue, but directed the motion for a receiver to stand over till the hearing. Ib.

Receiver not appointed on behalf of heir-at-law as against a devisee; the heir must try the question at law. Knight v. Duplessis, 2 Ves. 360.

Discretion of Court.]—It is not a matter of course to grant an issue at law, devisavit vel non, to the heir-at-law of a testator. In all such cases the court looks at the will, considers the evidence on both sides, and exercises its discretion in the matter; for an heir-at-law can in a court of equity, since the 25 & 26 Vict. c. 42, examine and cross-examine witnesses in open court, and, if he chooses, before a jury. Cowgill v. Rhodes, 33 Beav. 310; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 86; 9 L. T. 595; 12 W. R. 190.

Where, therefore, the heir-at-law filed a bill for the administration of his testator's estate, and for an issue devisavit vel non, or an action, to try the validity of his will, and the court was satisfied that the evidence already adduced in support of the will outweighed that which was brought or could be brought against it:—Held, that the bill must be dismissed, and with costs. Ib.

In a bill filed by an heir-at-law to impeach a will of real estate as having been obtained by undue influence or fraud, the court of chancery has a discretion to direct an issue devisavit vel non, or merely to remove obstacles out of the way of the heir asserting his legal title. The house of lords, on appeal, will not interfere with the exercise of that discretion, unless it appears that injustice has been, or is likely to be its consequence. Boyse v. Rossborough, 6 H. L. Cas. 2; 26 L. J., Ch. 256; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 373; 5 W. R. 414.

On an application by an heir-at-law to have a will condemned as against the devisees, there being no personal estate to be administered, the court has a discretion to refuse to try the case. Lawless v. Lawless, Ir. R. 3 Eq. 87.

When the heir-at-law had been party to acts done by the devisees, and parties claiming under the devisees alleged collusion between the heir-at-law and the devisees, the court refused to try the case. Ib.

On a bill by an heir praying an issue devisavit vel non, for the purpose of obtaining incidental relief, the court is bound, under 25 & 26 Vict. c. 42, to determine the question without remitting the parties to an action. But, by analogy to the old practice, the court will, in general, direct a trial by jury, and (with a view to the contingency of a motion for a new trial) will direct the trial to be before itself. Egmont v. Darell, 1 H. & M. 563.

Heir-at-law an Infant.]—Heir-at-law is in cases of wills entitled to issue devisavit vel non; but if counsel for infant heir feels clear, from evidence, that there is no ground to impeach the will, he is well justified in declining to ask an issue. Levy v. Levy, 3 Madd. 245.

Counsel acting for a minor heir-at-law are justified in exercising their discretion whether or not he ought to take an issue of devisavit vel non. Knipe v. M'Mahon, 3 Dr. & War. 295.

The court will not generally decree a will to be established against a plaintiff infant heir. Hills v. Hills, 2 Y. & C. C. C. 327.

—— A Married Woman.]—If an heiress-at-law, who is a married woman, does not, at the hearing of the cause, ask an issue to try the validity of a will, the court will not afterwards grant her a rehearing, in order to enable her to obtain an issue. White v. Vitty, 1 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 188.

Effect of Acquiescence and Delay.]—Bill by an heir-at-law, for an issue to try the validity of a will made in England, dismissed, partly on the ground of his acquiescence, both in the ecclesiastical court, and upon a bill to perpetuate testimony, but principally because the lands lay in Pennsylvania. Pike v. Hoare, 2 Eden, 182; Ambl. 428.

Heir-at-law is usually entitled to an issue devisavit vel non, and is not liable to pay costs, notwithstanding issue is found against him and will established. Tucker v. Sanger, M'Cle. & Y. 425.

An heir-at-law contesting his ancestor's will, in a suit to establish it in equity, is not entitled to an issue devisavit vel non to try the validity of it in a court of law in all cases and at any distance of time, but he is not precluded from the exercise of that usual right except by a case of such acquiescence as would bar his possessory right at law (viz., an acquiescence of twenty years) or would put the adverse parties in a much worse situation than they would have been had he disputed the will originally. Id. 424. S. C., 13 Price, 119.

An heir who disputes the will may, by long acquiescence, lose his right to have its validity tried at law upon an issue devisavit vel non; and where an heir had acted as devisee in trust under the will for a great number of years, he was refused an issue even to try the question of parcels. Man v. Ricketts, 7 Beav. 93; 13 L. J., Ch. 194; 8 Jur. 159.

An issue directed to try the validity of a will several years after testator's death, as a will cannot be established against the heir in equity by a decree without an issue or ejectment if he require it, and a person claiming under the will has a right to have its validity established. Blake v. Foster, 2 Ball & B. 387.

At the hearing of a suit to establish a will an issue was directed at the instance of the heiress-at-law, who was a married woman. Before any trial she and her husband presented a petition, stating that at the urgent request of their children (who were devisees) they had agreed to withdraw all opposition to the will upon being allowed their costs, and praying that the order directing the issue might be discharged upon these terms. Upon this petition an order was made according to the prayer, and purporting to be made upon the consent of the married woman by her counsel. Subsequently a private act of parliament was obtained, authorising leases to be made of the devised estates. The married woman was one of the petitioners for the act, and was excepted from the saving clause, and the act recited the will, and proceeded upon the assumption of its validity. Some years afterwards the married woman presented a petition to rehear the cause. This petition was entitled in the cause, and in the matter of the private act. It stated the subsequent transactions, but not the provisions of the act:—Held, that the preceding transactions did not constitute grounds for taking the petition off the file, and that such grounds were not afforded by the introduction into the petition of statements as to the matters occurring since the hearing, or by the petition being entitled in the matter of the act, or by the omission to set out in it the act itself, especially upon appeal, when these objections of form had not been insisted upon in the court below. Turner v. Turner, 2 De G. M. & G. 28; 21 L. J., Ch. 422. Varying 15 Jur. 711.

Held, also, upon the rehearing, that the order discharging the direction for an issue was not binding upon the wife, but was upon the husband. Ib.

Semble, per Lord Cranworth, that if at the hearing a married heiress-at-law does not ask for an issue she is bound by the decree. Ib.

F. Costs.

General Rules.]—The question of the costs of an issue devisavit vel non is in the discretion of the court. Stacey v. Spratley, infra, col. 650.

When an issue is granted, the costs of the heir are reserved till further directions. Boyse v. Rossborough, supra, col. 646.

Where a bill is filed to set aside a will, and, upon an issue directed by the court, the verdict of the jury is in favour of the will, and a new trial is refused, the bill will be dismissed without costs, unless the validity of the will could have been tried by ejectment. Tatham v. Wright, 2 Russ. & M. 31.

Heir-at-law is usually entitled to issue devisavit vel non, and is not liable to pay costs, notwithstanding the issue is found against him and will established. Tucker v. Sanger, M'Cle. & Y. 425; 13 Price, 609.

When the heir-at-law intervened in a suit which was instituted by the next of kin of the deceased to determine the validity of a will disposing of real and personal property, the court refused, on the will being pronounced invalid, to condemn the heir-at-law in his own costs, though it was shown he had intervened without being cited to do so. Rayson v. Parton, 18 W. R. 232.

One of the next of kin of a testator instituted a suit for the administration of his estate, and obtained a decree directing inquiries whether the testator died seised of any freehold estate, and, if necessary, who was his heir-at-law. The heir-at-law, on being served with notice of the decree, came in and proved his pedigree:—Held, that he was entitled to the general costs of so doing. Swift v. Swift, 1 De G. F. & J. 160; 29 L. J., Ch. 121; 1 L. T. 150; 8 W. R. 100.

In a suit to establish a will, one of the witnesses could not depose positively to the due attestation of it; and an issue was directed at the heir's request. The verdict was against the heir; but the court gave him his costs both at law and in equity. Wright v. Wright, 5 Sim. 449.

Heir-at-law disputing will, though on trial there were shown no grounds for disputing it, yet held he was entitled to his costs at law and equity. Crew v. Joliff, Pre. Ch. 93.

Bill by devisee against heir-at-law to establish will and execute trusts, but praying no more; plaintiff to pay costs. Boson v. Boson, Dick. 300.

If an heir-at-law is a creditor, and is brought into court as defendant, the circumstance of his having examined witnesses, and of having failed in the trials of issues at law to ascertain the validity of his ancestor's will, shall not deprive him of his costs in equity. Burne v. Breen, 1 Ball & B. 308.

As to costs given to heir-at-law where he brings bill to dispute will, or bill against him to establish it. Blinkehorne v. Feast, Dick. 153.

If heir-at-law infant brings bill and fails, he does not pay costs. Ib.

Costs of Heir when Disallowed.]—In what cases an heir-at-law is refused his costs in an issue devisavit vel non. Tucker v. Sanger, M'Cle. & Y. 439.

Heir-at-law raising a point against a will and failing, costs were refused to and against him; but an executor or trustee merely submitting a point for opinion of court, though he fail, shall have costs. Rashleigh v. Master, 1 Ves. 205; 3 Bro. C. C. 99.

An heir-at-law burnt a writing, supposed at the time to be a valid will, but which afterwards on trial was found to be invalid. A bill having been filed to establish this writing as a will against the heir, or, failing that, to establish as a will another writing of earlier date, which had also been destroyed, and which was, at the trial, found to be a valid will, the heir-at-law, at the hearing, admitted that he had burnt the writing, and admitted a copy thereof, but refused to admit a copy of the earlier writing:—Held (on the question of costs), that the heir was not entitled to costs up to the hearing, but that the costs of the issues, and the heir's costs, subsequently to the hearing, were payable out of the estate. Marriott v. Marriott, 12 W. R. 303.

In suit against heir-at-law to establish will, if he examines witnesses in chief, he must pay his own costs. He is in no such case made to pay the costs of others. Tucker v. Sanger, supra.

In a suit to establish a will, the bill stated that A., one of the defendants, was the testator's heir. A. admitted it, and disputed the validity of the will, upon which an issue was directed. The verdict was in favour of the will. The plaintiff then discovered that A.'s elder brother had died, leaving two daughters, who were still living, as A. well knew. The court refused to give him his costs, either at law or in equity. Roberts v. Scoones, 7 Sim. 418.

Bill by devisee, against an heir to prove a will; the heir cross-examines the plaintiff's witness, and refuses to release his right, yet the heir shall have his costs given him on motion; otherwise, if he examines witnesses of his own. Bidulph v. Bidulph, 2 P. Wms. 185.

Heir-at-law has a right to his costs though he cross-examines plaintiff's witnesses; but if he examines witnesses on his own part he shall not have costs as to that. Vaughan v. Fitzgerald, 1 Sch. & Lef. 316.

Heir-at-law, defending in formâ pauperis, in a suit to establish a will, was held, under the circumstances, to be entitled only to pauper costs. Stafford v. Higginbotham, 2 Keen, 147; 6 L. J., Ch. 314.

The devisee for a mortgagee filed his bill against the heir and executor of the mortgagor for a foreclosure, and also made the heir of the mortgagee a party, in order to establish the will against him. This latter party cannot have his costs out of the estate. Skipp v. Wyatt, 1 Cox, 353.

——On Pleading Testamentary Incapacity.]—An heir-at-law questioning the sanity of his ancestor is entitled to an issue devisavit vel non, and if he fails will not be compelled to pay costs, if the circumstances justified him in trying the issue; but costs will not be allowed him. Smith v. Dearmer, 3 Y. & J. 278.

A will executed under very suspicious circumstances by a testator, whose testamentary capacity there was reasonable ground for disputing, was established, as regarded personal estate, by proceedings before the ecclesiastical court and the judicial committee, to which A. was a party as one of the next of kin. After this, at the hearing of a suit instituted by the devisee, A., who was also the heiress-at-law, asked for an issue devisavit vel non, which was granted. Further evidence was adduced on both sides, and the jury found in favour of the will:—Held, that under the circumstances the asking for an issue was not such vexatious and unreasonable conduct as to make A. liable to pay costs, but that as she had asked for it with full knowledge of the former proceedings, the result of which made it very improbable that she could succeed on the trial, she ought not to receive costs. Stacey v. Spratley, 4 De G. & J. 199; 28 L. J., Ch. 563; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 503; 7 W. R. 485.

Where an heir-at-law disputes the will of a testator on the ground of a testator's insanity, and the court directs an issue at law, the result of which is to establish the will:—Held, that the heir-at-law is not deprived of his costs on account of his having failed to prove his assertion of insanity, unless he made the assertion without any just or proper grounds. Waters v. Waters, 2 W. R. 642.

Heir-at-law, defendant in a suit to establish a will on the ground of insanity, does not as of course lose his costs of the trial of an issue devisavit vel non, although he has gone into evidence to prove insanity and failed, but the question of costs is in the discretion of the court: obiter. Circumstances under which the heir in such a case will lose his right to costs, both at law and in equity. Roberts v. Kerslake, 1 Kay & J. 751; 3 W. R. 616.

Upon a bill by a devisee to establish a will where the heir-at-law disputes such will upon the ground of insanity, and fails upon trial of the issue directed at law, the costs of the issue are in the discretion of this court, and the heir will not be deprived of them, though he has failed to prove insanity, if he has set up such defence upon fair and reasonable grounds. Such question may be tested by considering it as the case of an infant upon inquiry at chambers as to the propriety of allowing such a defence to be set up on his behalf. The heir who has raised such a defence upon his answer without fair or reasonable grounds will not be allowed his costs of the suit. Ib.

An heir-at-law filing a bill to set aside a will on the ground of insanity, and failing on the trial of the issue, is entitled to have the bill dismissed without costs. Farnham v. Cosby, Wall. Lyn. 288.

Though an heir, brought into equity to have the ancestor's will established against him, may demand an issue, yet, if he sets up insanity, he shall not have his costs of the issue. Berney v. Eyre, 3 Atk. 387; White v. Wilson, 13 Ves. 87, 91.

When Costs given against Heir.] — Will established against heir-at-law's bill, he pays costs at law and equity; but on bill by devisee no costs on either side. Johnson v. Gardiner, Dick. 313. S. P., Gough v. Botevel, Dick. 396.

Heir-at-law ordered to pay the costs of an issue to try the validity of a will in which he had failed. Swinfen v. Swinfen, 27 Beav. 148; 28 L. J., Ch. 849; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1276; 7 W. R. 321.

When the heir-at-law filed a bill against the devisee and executor impeaching the validity of the will, and an issue was directed which resulted in the validity of the will being established:—Held, that the bill must be dismissed without costs as regarded the devisee, and that the heir-at-law must pay the costs of the executor.

Bill of heir-at-law against devisee, where vexatious, dismissed with costs. Seal v. Brownton, 3 Bro. C. C. 214.

An heir-at-law of a testator obtained possession of the will by force, and tore it up. The pieces were, however, collected and put together, and proved. The will contained no devise of the real estate, and a claim was filed against the heir to enforce a sale. On the heir's request the court directed an issue devisavit vel non, when the will was established :—Held, that the heir had so misconducted himself, that although his misconduct had not increased the costs of the issue, he must pay the costs of it. Middleton v. Middleton, 5 De G. & Sm. 656.

Where a devisee brings a bill merely in perpetuam rei memoriam, and the heir only cross-examines the witnesses, he is entitled to his costs; but where he encounters the will he shall not have them. So if an heir has an issue directed to try a will, he shall have his costs though the will be established, for he has a right to know how he is disinherited ; but if the heir sets up a disability against the testator and fails, he shall not have his costs ; and the court will give costs against an heir in a case of spoliation, or secreting a will. Berney v. Eyre, 3 Atk. 387.

A testator made his will during his last illness, and thereby gave the bulk of his property, real and personal, to trustees, upon trusts for the benefit of the solicitor who prepared the will, and his children. Shortly after his death the trustees contracted to sell the real property. The heir brought an ejectment against them, alleging that the will had been improperly obtained. He failed on the trial. The trustees filed a bill to enforce specific performance of the contract against the purchaser. The cause was ordered to stand over for the trustees to file a bill against the heir to establish the will. They did so, and in his answer the heir alleged that the testator, at the date of the will, was incompetent to make it, and that the will had been fraudulently obtained. An ejectment was directed to try these facts : on such trial the verdict was in favour of the will :—Held, that the heir must pay the costs of such ejectment, and so much of the suit as was occasioned by the issues he had raised improperly ; and no costs of the suit were given to him. Grove v. Young, 5 De G. & Sm. 38 ; 21 L. J., Ch. 95 ; 15 Jur. 1099. And see S. C., nom. Grove v. Bastard, 1 De G. M. & G. 69 ; 2 Ph. 619 ; 17 L. J., Ch. 351 ; 12 Jur. 385.

Heir-at-law, defendant, desiring an issue upon a will, in which he failed, entitled to his costs in equity ; no costs on either side as to the issue ; ordered to pay costs of a groundless motion for a new trial. White v. Wilson, 13 Ves. 87.

—— Pleading Testamentary Incapacity.]—The only son of a testator, who succeeded, on the death of his father, to a considerable landed estate, was condemned in costs for contesting, in a litigious and vexatious manner, the validity of a will, by which his father, who was a weak old man, bequeathed the whole of his personal estate, about 12,000*l.*, to persons in no way related to him, including his solicitor, medical man, and butler. Barry v. Butlin, 2 Moore P. C. 480.

If an heir-at-law, alleging insanity in a devisor, file his bill against the devisee, and he fail in the issue devisavit vel non, he shall pay the costs of the issue, but not the costs of the suit, unless he might have asserted his claim by ejectment ; and then his suit will be deemed vexatious, and he will be ordered to pay the costs of it. Scaife v. Scaife, 4 Russ. 309.

If an heir brings a bill to set aside a will for insanity, instead of an ejectment, he shall pay costs if he fails. Webb v. Claverden, 2 Atk. 424.

IX. CONSTRUCTION.

A. GENERAL PRINCIPLES.

Rule of Construction—Rule of Law.]—A rule of construction is one which points out what a court shall do in the absence of express or implied intention. A rule of law is one which takes effect when certain conditions are found, although a testator may have indicated an intention to the contrary. Coward, In re, Coward v. Larkman, 57 L. T. 285—C. A.

General Rules.]—General rules of construction of will. Noel v. Weston, 2 V. & B. 271 ; 13 R. R. 79.

If the operative part of an instrument is clearly large enough to embrace two classes of objects, its effect is not to be cut down because the previous recital does not refer to both those classes. Savile v. Kinnaird, 11 Jur. (N.S.) 195 ; 11 L. T. 687 ; 13 W. R. 308.

The circumstance of the testator not having had the legal estate can make no difference in the construction of a devise. Jervoise v. Northumberland (Duke), 1 J. & W. 573 ; 21 R. R. 229.

There is no difference between a direction to trustees to pay and a gift ; the testator is equally the donor in both cases. Nicholls v. Judson, 2 Atk. 301.

Fallacy of applying to a case of intestacy words which the testator has applied to the case of testacy. Robinson v. London Hospital (Governors), 10 Hare, 28 ; 22 L. J., Ch. 754.

The rules of construction of executory instruments, bearing date before the Wills Act, 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26 (1837), do not differ from those applicable to wills of the same period. Hughes v. Whitby, Ir. R. 7 Eq. 98.

Time from which Will speaks.]—Where a testator expresses himself in the present tense, it relates to what is in being at the time of making the will. Abney v. Miller, Atk. 597. Semble, overruled, 2 Bro. C. C. 292.

Wills in general construed from the making, unless circumstances or the tenor of it show it should be from death of testator, but the intermediate time not regarded. Lomax v. Holmden, 1 Ves. 295.

Construction of a will, as supposing the testator to contemplate the period of his death with reference to the objects who are to take under his will, and to look beyond that period with reference to the event on which his dispositions are to take effect. Rye's Settlement, In re, 10 Hare, 112 ; 22 L. J., Ch. 345 ; 16 Jur. 1128 ; 1 W. R. 29.

The general rule as to testaments is, that the time of the testament and not the testator's death is regarded. Downing v. Townsend, Ambl. 280.

The provision in the 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26, s. 24, that a will is to be construed as if made immediately before the testator's death, relates only to the property comprised in the will. Bullock v. Bennett, 7 De G. M. & G. 283; 3 Eq. R. 799; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 567; 3 W. R. 545.

The statute 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26, extends generally to wills made previously to the passing of the act, where alterations have been made affecting such wills subsequently to the 1st of January, 1838. Croker v. Hertford (Marquis), 4 Moore P. C. 339.

And see cases post, col. 1257, sub tit. TIME OF OPERATION AND AFTER-ACQUIRED PROPERTY.

Circumstances taken into Account.]—In construing a will, the court has regard to the period when and the circumstances under which it was framed; and where the will is of ancient date, if there is any ambiguity in the construction, the course of action on the bequest since the will came into operation may be referred to in aid of the construction which has been adopted, on the ground that it is not to be assumed that a continued series of breaches of trust has been committed in the presence of those who are interested in an opposite conclusion. Att.-Gen. v. Sidney Sussex College, 38 L. J., Ch. 656; L. R. 4 Ch. 722.

Testator's Intention considered.]—In case of a will, the intent shall prevail unless contrary to law, i.e., if the limitations are allowable by law; not that the words must be taken in such signification as the law imposes on them. In a will, words taken in law as of limitation shall be taken as words of purchase if so intended. Austen v. Taylor, Ambl. 377.

The intention of a testator, if clear and consistent with rules of law, is to govern without regard to the grammatical construction, or whether it deserves favour or not. Thellusson v. Woodford, 11 Ves. 112; 8 R. R. 104—C. A.

A will is not to be affected on account of the unmeritorious object; only one general rule of construction for courts of law and equity applicable to all wills. However the court may condemn the object, the intention is to be collected from the whole will; every word is to have effect according to the natural common import; words of art to be construed according to the technical sense, unless upon the whole will plainly not so intended. The court is bound to carry the rule into effect, if consistent with the rules of law, and if it can see a general intention consistent with the rules of law; but the particular mode is not; though that shall fail, the general intention shall take effect. Id. 4 Ves. 329.

"Heir male" in a will may be words of purchase. Id. 326.

The intention of the testator is not to be set aside because it cannot take effect to the full extent, but it is to work as far as it can. Ib.

Where upon the careful perusal of an instrument it is impossible not to be satisfied that a strict and ordinary interpretation of its language would disappoint the intention with which it was framed, such an interpretation is not to be adopted. Key v. Key, 4 De G. M. & G. 73; 1 Eq. R. 82; 22 L. J., Ch. 641; 17 Jur. 769.

Order of words in wills not considered; if the intent better answered, it is otherwise. East v. Cook, 2 Ves. 32.

Distinction between marriage articles and wills; all the parties to the former considered purchasers to effectuate their intention; none of the parties mentioned in the latter are so, as the testator's intention is alone to be considered. Stratford v. Powell, 1 Ball & B. 25.

Rules for construction of wills; the intention if possible to be collected from the words, not from circumstances dehors; upon general principles and established rules, not by conjecture; and without inquiring whether the personal estate sufficient for the debts. The personal estate first liable to the debts, unless the intention is clearly to exempt it, and throw them wholly on the real, for which express words are not necessary. Bootle v. Blundell, 19 Ves. 521; 15 R. R. 93.

The testator's intent in a will must be consistent with the rules of law, and in many cases the intent has been restrained, as where attempting a perpetuity or to prevent a tenant in tail from alienating. Bagshaw v. Spencer, 2 Atk. 575.

Departing from strict words of a will has produced such uncertainty that it is to be wished they had been left to legal construction. Id. 576.

In construing words to make them agree with the intent of the party, a court of equity is more liberal than a court of law. Id. 580.

Where the intention of a party would put the estate in abeyance, such intention is overruled by the rules of law. Papillon v. Voice, W. Kel. 31.

In case of a will, where the remainder is devised in contingency, the reversion in fee is not in abeyance in the meanwhile, but descends to the heir. Id. 511.

Question of intention to be determined by the court, but not proper for the master. Pitt v. Camelford (Lord), 1 Ves. 83.

It is not a good rule in construing a will to consider what power would be, by a particular construction, given to a particular person, by the exercise of which he might be able to defeat what appears to be the general purpose of the will. Atkinson v. Holtby, 10 H. L. Cas. 313.

Intention Inferred for Creditors.]—In some cases, as for creditors, an intention will be inferred from the purpose beyond what is expressed. Thellusson v. Woodford, supra.

Construction for creditors favoured not doing violence to or straining the words. Noel v. Weston, 2 Ves. & B. 269; 13 R. R. 79.

The most liberal construction of wills for creditors. Godolphin (Earl) v. Penneck, 2 Ves. 272.

Testator's Interpretation of his own Words adopted.]—Where a testator has made a specific bequest to "his wife's nephew J. W. R.," who was illegitimate, and then subsequently given a portion of his residuary estate to "the nephews and nieces of my said wife," the illegitimate nephew will be entitled to share in the residuary gift with legitimate nephews and nieces, on the ground that the testator has himself shown how he intended his language to be interpreted. Parker, In re, Parker v. Osborne, 66 L. J., Ch. 509; [1897] 2 Ch. 208; 76 L. T. 421; 45 W. R. 536.

A testatrix, by her will made in 1879, gave the income of personal property amongst her nephews and nieces and great-nieces therein named, with a direction that if any of them should die leaving issue him or her surviving such issue should take the share of income which his, her or their parent would have taken. M., one of the nieces named in the bequest, in 1865 went through the form of marriage with A., the husband of her deceased sister, by whom she had a daughter, G. In another bequest contained in the will the testatrix described M. as the wife of A., and G. as M.'s daughter. In a bequest, by a codicil, of specific chattels to G., the testatrix described her as her great-niece:—Held, that G., although illegitimate, was entitled to take the share of her mother. Hill v. Crook (42 L. J., Ch. 702; L. R. 6 H. L. 265) applied. Walker, In re, Walker v. Lutyens, 66 L. J., Ch. 622; [1897] 2 Ch. 238; 77 L. T. 94; 45 W. R. 647.

Whole of Instrument to be considered.]—For the purpose of collecting the intention, every part of the will must be considered. Gittins v. Steele, 1 Swan. 28; 18 R. R. 7.

Some effect must be given to every part of a will. Collet v. Lawrence, 1 Ves. 268.

A will cannot be construed by adverting to a single clause; everything bearing on the subject must be taken together. Crone v. Odell, 1 Ball & B. 456, 480. Affirmed 3 Dow, 61; 15 R. R. 20.

Particular intent clashing with the general intent in a will must give way. Ib.

Every word in construction of will is to have effect, if not inconsistent with general intention, which is to control. If two parts are inconsistent, the latter prevails. If a meaning can be collected, but it is wholly doubtful in what manner it is to take effect, it is void for uncertainty. Constantine v. Constantine, 6 Ves. 100.

Every word of a will must have a meaning imputed to it, if capable of it without a violation of the general intent, or any other provision in the will. Reeves v. Brymer, 4 Ves. 698.

The court may expound the words in a will, but cannot strike them out. Southcot v. Wilson, 3 Atk. 233.

In construing wills, the leading rule is, that the intent of the testator should be observed, and no part of a will to which a meaning or operation can be given shall be rejected. Reeves v. Newenham, 2 Ridgw. 36.

A testator bequeathed the residue to three trustees and their heirs, in trust for his daughter for life, with remainder over. He afterwards struck out the names of his trustees, and substituted that of his daughter. A facsimile probate was granted:—Held, that a construction must be put upon the whole will as it stood, for to neglect any part of it would be taking upon the court itself the province of a court of probate. Held, moreover, that the several parts of the will were not inconsistent, and might well be read together. Shea v. Boschetti, 18 Beav. 321; 2 Eq. R. 608; 23 L. J., Ch. 652; 18 Jur. 614; 2 W. R. 281.

Bequest in terms importing an intention not to make an immediate disposition may, upon the construction of the whole will, amount to a present bequest. Lynn v. Beaver, Turn. & R. 63; 23 R. R. 185.

In considering a question of election raised by a will, the court must have regard to the whole scope of the will to ascertain if the language of the testator can be fairly interpreted as disposing of an interest which he himself possesses. Prima facie the court must construe the words of disposition as applying to an estate, which the testator had power to dispose of, if the words will fairly apply to it; and in order to raise a question of election, it must be clearly seen that the words used point to an estate which is not the testator's own, but that of another. Rancliff (Lord) v. Parkyns (6 Dow, 149) discussed. Minchin v. Gabbett, [1896] 1 Ir. R. 1.

Will and Codicil.]—A codicil to a will does not affect the construction of the will itself as an independent instrument. Rolfe v. Perry, 1 N. R. 428.

In the construction of a gift in a codicil, the court may and must look at the previous will and codicils. Hartley v. Tribber, 16 Beav. 510.

Legal and Technical Words.]—The general rule of construction in almost all questions arising upon wills is first to ascertain by an examination of the entire will what is the natural and grammatical meaning of the language used by a testator, subject to this, that if the law places a certain signification upon the words he has used, they must, in the absence of a controlling context, be construed in that sense, no matter how he may possibly have meant them to be understood; and having thus arrived at the meaning of the words, they must be so applied, unless so to do would lead to some palpable absurdity, or violate some rule of law. Palmer v. Orpen, [1894] 1 Ir. R. 32.

Words in a will must be taken in their legal sense, unless by the context or by express words they clearly appear to be intended otherwise. Synge v. Hales, 2 Ball & B. 506.

The construction of a legal devise must be the same in a court of law or equity. Id. 507.

Where a testator expresses himself in ambiguous terms respecting the disposition of his property, the legal operation of the word he uses must be adopted. Stubbs v. Roth, 2 Ball & B. 553; 12 R. R. 119.

Rule of construction that the words used by a testator shall be interpreted according to their legal effect and operation, unless it clearly appear that he intended to use them in a different sense. Winslow v. Tighe, 2 Ball & B. 204; 12 R. R. 75.

Where a testator makes a codicil without professional assistance, his expressions are not to be construed literally and technically, if, upon the whole instrument, it appears that he meant to use them in a different sense. Read v. Backhouse, 2 Russ. & M. 546.

Whether a general intent, or a particular intent, expressed in a will is to prevail, must depend on the context of the whole will, in construing which words of a technical kind are not necessarily to receive a technical meaning. Jenkins v. Hughes, 8 H. L. Cas. 571; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 1043; 8 W. R. 667.

In order to determine the meaning of a will, a court of construction must read the language of the testator in the sense which he himself appears to have attached to the expressions that he has used, with this qualification, that when a rule of law has affixed a certain determinate meaning to technical expressions, that meaning must be given to them, unless the testator by his will excluded beyond all doubt such construction. Towns v. Wentworth, 11 Moore, P. C. 526.

When the main purposes and intentions of a testator are ascertained to the satisfaction of the court, if particular expressions are found in the will which are inconsistent with such intention, though not sufficient to control it, or which indicate an intention which the law will not permit to take effect, such expressions must be discarded or modified, and, on the other hand, if the will shows that the testator must necessarily have intended an interest to be given which no words in the will expressly devise, the court is to supply the defect by implication, and thus to mould the language of the testator, so as to carry into effect, as far as possible, the intention which, in its opinion, the testator has on the whole will sufficiently declared. Ib.

It is not desirable to multiply words having the same technical meaning, by introducing one which never had such a meaning, where another already exists with that technical meaning already appropriated to it. Massy v. Rowen, L. R. 4 H. L. 288.

Where a lay testator who writes his own will uses words which have an intelligible conventional meaning, he is not to be held as having used the words with any other meaning, unless the context of the instrument shows that he intended to do so. Hamilton v. Ritchie, [1894] A. C. 310—H. L. (Sc.)

Where a will gives an unqualified bequest of land, making no reference to the time at which it is to operate, the gift takes effect a morte testatoris, except where that date would disturb any of the provisions already made in the will, or where the testator has clearly indicated that he did not intend it to operate until a later period. Ib.

A testator, by his will, gave the life-rent of his entire estate, heritable and movable, to his wife, who survived him. The will proceeded: "I also leave to my nephew," W., the estate of Bankhead; "but I wish it expressly understood that in the event of my said nephew," W., "dying without leaving any lawful male heir of his body, then, in that event, my said lands of Bankhead are to revert back to my nephew," H. The nephew W. survived the testator, but died unmarried before the testator's widow. W. left a general disposition disposing of all estate which might belong to him. On the widow's death, the nephew H. claimed Bankhead:—Held, that the estate of Bankhead had vested in W. a morte testatoris, and that it was conveyed to W.'s trustees by his general disposition. Ib.

—— Foreign Will.]—If a domiciled Englishman makes a will expressed in the technical terms of the law of a foreign country, so as to manifest an intention that it should operate according to that law, the meaning of the will must be ascertained by the foreign law, and then an equivalent effect must be given to the will in England. Studd v. Cook (8 App. Cas. 577) discussed. Bradford v. Young, 54 L. J., Ch. 96; 26 Ch. D. 656; 50 L. T. 707; 32 W. R. 901.

An English will by a testator domiciled in Lower Canada must be interpreted with regard to the law of Lower Canada, and not that of England. McGibbon v. Abbott, 54 L. J., P. C. 39; 10 App. Cas. 653; 54 L. T. 138—P. C.

Words Recurring.]—It is a canon of construction that where a testator has affixed a particular meaning to a word in one part of his will, it shall be construed as having the same meaning in all other parts of it unless it violates the sense. Rhodes v. Rhodes, 27 Beav. 413.

It is a well-settled rule of construction never to put a different construction upon the same word when it occurs twice or oftener in the same instrument, unless there appear a clear intention to the contrary. Ridgeway v. Munkittrick, 1 Dr. & War. 84.

The same word recurring in any instrument should, if possible, be construed to have the same meaning. Foster v. Wybrants, Ir. R. 11 Eq. 40.

Unambiguous Words Construed Literally.]—Rule of construction is not to make any intendment contrary to plain and usual sense of words, unless from other parts of will plainly appearing not intended to have that extensive operation. Ilchester (Earl), Ex parte, 7 Ves. 368; 6 R. R. 138.

Implication in a will cannot prevail, unless necessary. Upton v. Ferrers, 5 Ves. 801; 5 R. R. 167.

The literal and technical force of words in a will to be counteracted by rational implication. Vauchamp v. Bell, 6 Madd. 343.

In construction of residuary clause, question is not what the testator had in contemplation when it was made, but what the words he used according to their ordinary signification will embrace, unless qualified by other expressions in the will. Bland v. Lamb, 5 Madd. 412.

It is a common rule of construction, that if the words of a gift are of themselves plain, distinct, and capable of having a legal effect, effect must be given to them, notwithstanding any improbability which may arise from looking at the other parts of the will. On the other hand, if the words are ambiguous in expression or effect, they are not to be rejected for uncertainty, but you must collect, if you can, from the other parts of the will an indication of what the testator meant by those words, which, by themselves, appear to be ambiguous. Wilson v. Eden, 11 Beav. 289.

The plain first meaning of a testator's words is to be followed, unless they give rise to some incongruity. Nockolds v. Locke, 2 Jur. (N.S.) 1064; 5 W. R. 3.

The primary duty of a court of construction, in the interpretation of wills, is to give to each word employed, if it can with propriety receive it, the natural ordinary meaning which it has in the vocabulary of ordinary life, and not to give to words employed in that vocabulary an artificial, a secondary, and a technical meaning. Young v. Robertson, 4 Macq. H. L. 314, 325.

Primarily, the words of a will are to be considered. They convey the intention of the testator's wishes; but the meaning to be attached to them may be affected by surrounding circumstances, among which is the law of the country in which the will is made, and its dispositions are to be carried out. If that law has attached to particular words a particular meaning, or to a particular disposition a particular effect, it must be assumed that the testator, in the dispositions he has made, had regard to that meaning or to that effect, unless the language of the will or the surrounding circumstances displace that assumption. Dossee v. Mullick, 6 Moore, Ind. App. 526.

Admitting the correctness of the principle of giving to words their natural and grammatical meaning, yet the intention of a testator gathered from the context, may justify a modification of his words. Grey v. Pearson, 6 H. L. Cas. 61; 26 L. J., Ch. 473; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 823; 5 W. R. 454.

In constructing wills, and indeed statutes, and all written instruments, the grammatical and ordinary sense of the words is to be adhered to, unless that would lead to some absurdity or some repugnance or inconsistency with the rest of the instrument, in which case the grammatical and ordinary sense of the words may be modified, so as to avoid that absurdity and inconsistency, but no further. Ib.

Where the words of a will have a primary and common-sense meaning, they must be taken to have been used in that sense, unless the contrary appears from the context, or from extrinsic circumstances. Crook v. Whitley, 26 L. J., Ch. 350; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 703; 5 W. R. 383—L. C.

In construing the autograph will of an illiterate man, the meaning of technical language may be disregarded, but no word which has a clear and definite operation can be struck out. Hall v. Warren, 9 H. L. Cas. 420.

The rule that a testator's language ought to be adhered to unless some inconsistency would result from doing so ought not to be departed from on slight grounds, and the court refused to depart from that rule in a case where there was very strong probability that the testator meant something different from what he had actually said. Nunn v. Hancock, 16 W. R. 818.

Where the words of a will are unambiguous, they cannot be departed from merely because they lead to consequences capricious or even harsh and unreasonable. But where they are capable of two interpretations, that construction of them is to be adopted which is in accordance with an intelligible and reasonable, and not a capricious or anomalous, result. Bathurst v. Errington, 46 L. J., Ch. 748; 2 App. Cas. 698; 37 L. T. 338; 25 W. R. 908—H. L. (E.)

A will is to be construed according to the plain meaning and intention of the testator, notwithstanding that the result of so construing it may be to defeat the object which he had in view. Cunliffe v. Brancker, 46 L. J., Ch. 128; 3 Ch. D. 393; 35 L. T. 518.

Words are to be construed according to their plain ordinary meaning, unless the context shows them to have been used in a different sense, or unless the rule, if acted on, would lead to some manifest absurdity or incongruity. A testator must not be presumed to intend an absurdity; nevertheless, if shown by the context or by the whole will to have so intended, the intention, if not illegal, must be carried out. Rhodes v. Rhodes, 51 L. J., P. C. 53; 7 App. Cas. 192; 46 L. T. 463; 30 W. R. 709—P. C.

There is no difference between the words which a testator himself uses in drawing up his will and the words which are bonâ fide used by one whom he trusts to draw it up for him. The court in either case must take the words as it finds them, and therefore held that the plaintiff, the natural daughter, was not entitled to have probate amended by omitting the words, "from and after the decease of my said wife without leaving issue of our said marriage," on the ground that the draughtsman introduced them without reason or special directions, and that the effect of the same had not been intelligently appreciated by the testator. Ib.

The court in construing a will, must act on the language which the testator has used according to its ordinary signification, and must not extend the meaning of words without being able to assign any possible limit where to stop. De Roebeck v. Clonecurry (Lord), Ir. R. 5 Eq. 588.

Therefore, when a testator, having accounts in two banks, bequeathed all cash balances which should, at his death, be standing either to his current account or his deposit account with any of his bankers:—Held, that the bequest did not include moneys in the hands of his land agent or his salesmaster, although the testator's account was entered in the salesmaster's ledger; and sometimes got such money as he required in cash or by cheque; sometimes requested cheques to be sent to him; and on a few occasions gave orders for payments to third persons. Ib.

Where clear words of gift are found in a will, full effect is to be given to them, notwithstanding capricious results may follow. Wharton v. Barker, 4 Jur. (N.S.) 553; 6 W. R. 534.

It is the safest and best mode of construction to give to words free from ambiguity their plain and ordinary meaning. Buchanan v. Andrew, L. R. 2 Sc. App. 286.

In construing a will, plain and distinct words are only to be controlled by words equally plain and distinct. Goodwin v. Finlayson, 25 Beav. 65.

Ambiguous Words.] — The meaning of an ambiguous will to be collected from the words and the context, not from the punctuation. Sanford v. Raikes, 1 Mer. 651.

Testator having a right to order a thing to be done, expressing in his will that it is to be done, must be understood to speak imperatively, and not merely by way of recital. Ib.

Where a testator expresses himself in ambiguous terms respecting the disposition of his property, the legal operation of the word he uses must be adopted. Stubbs v. Roth, 2 Ball & B. 553; 12 R. R. 119.

Words that are doubtful and afford implication only are not to be attended to where testator has expressed himself in legal words. Bagshaw v. Spencer, 2 Atk. 575.

It is a common rule of construction, that if the words of a gift are of themselves plain, distinct, and capable of having a legal effect, effect must be given to them, notwithstanding any improbability which may arise from looking at the other parts of the will. On the other hand, if the words are ambiguous in expression or effect, they are not to be rejected for uncertainty, but you must collect if you can, from the other parts of the will, an indication of what the testator meant by those words, which, by themselves, appear to be ambiguous. Wilson v. Eden, 11 Beav. 289.

In case of doubtful words of a will, an heir is to be favoured; not where the will is plain. Falkland v. Bertie, 2 Vern. 340; 12 Mod. 182; 2 Freem. 220; 3 Ch. Ca. 129.

Where the words of a will are unambiguous, they cannot be departed from merely because they lead to consequences capricious or even harsh and unreasonable. But where they are capable of two interpretations, that construction of them is to be adopted which is in accordance with an intelligible and reasonable, and not a capricious or anomalous, result. Bathurst v. Errington, 46 L. J., Ch. 748; 2 App. Cas. 698; 37 L. T. 338; 25 W. R. 908—H. L. (E.)

Where there are two meanings of a word used in a will, one of which would effectuate and the other defeat a testator's intention, the court is bound to select that meaning which would carry out the testator's object. Whicker v. Hume, 7 H. L. Cas. 124; 28 L. J., Ch. 396; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 933; 6 W. R. 813. And see S. C., 1 De G. M. & G. 506; 14 Beav. 509; 21 L. J., Ch. 406; 16 Jur. 391.

If the language in a will admits of two constructions, according to one of which property will go in a convenient and ordinary course of succession, and, according to the other, in a capricious and inconvenient course, courts of justice may reasonably lean towards the former as being what was probably intended. Semble. Jenkins v. Hughes, 8 H. L. Cas. 571; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 1043; 8 W. R. 667.

Ambiguous words will not control the legal effect of words of limitations. Gummoe v. Howes, 26 L. J., Ch. 323; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 176; 5 W. R. 219.

Before the court can resort to the context of a will in search of a meaning for the words of a particular clause, it must be satisfied that the meaning of the clause is different from that which the words naturally import. Walker v. Tipping, 9 Hare, 800; 16 Jur. 442.

In construing a will, if the words used are themselves of doubtful meaning, the circumstances of the case may be referred to for the purpose of assisting in the explanation, but must not be employed to show the construction to be doubtful, in order to enable the court to make what appears a more reasonable will for the testator. Gordon v. Gordon, L. R. 5 H. L. 254.

The recurring use of the words, "As to," at the commencement of several devises is not necessarily an indication of the commencement of a devise complete in itself, and separate and independent from other limitations. Ib.

Practice.]—Except in case of difficulty, this court will itself determine questions of construction in the first instance, without seeking the assistance of courts of law. Wilson v. Eden, 14 Beav. 317.

Where there is a doubtful question as to the legal title to an estate on the construction of a will, the practice is, not to determine it on demurrer, although the inclination of the court may be in favour of the defendant, but to overrule the demurrer, without prejudice to the defendant's insisting on the same matters by way of answer. Brownsword v. Edwards (2 Ves. 243) referred to on this point. Mortimer v. Hartley, 3 De G. & Sm. 316.

The court declines to express an abstract opinion on a point of law on the construction of a will when immediate relief is not given. Hampton v. Holman, 5 Ch. D. 183; 36 L. T. 287; 25 W. R. 459.

The court deprecates the citation of authorities in cases of wills unless to lay down some general principle or to explain some technical expression. Waring v. Currey, 22 W. R. 150.

Where there is a clear decision of a court of law upon the construction of a will, and no precise authority on the other side, a court of equity will not decide contrary to the decision at law. Robinson v. Wood, 4 Jur. (N.S.) 625; 6 W. R. 728.

Costs of obtaining Decision of Court.]—Where a testator has used doubtful language, it may be right for those interested to have recourse to the court to ascertain the true construction of his will, and to throw the necessary costs upon the fund in dispute. When the decision of the court of first instance has been obtained at the expense of the fund, if either party is dissatisfied, he must, as a general rule, challenge that decision at his own peril. If, however, the appeal be successful, the costs of the appeal may be regarded as part of the unavoidable expense of obtaining a correct decision. Dillon v. Arkins, 17 L. R. Ir. 636—C. A.

B. ADMISSIBILITY OF PAROL EVIDENCE.

Reference to Original Will.]—For the purpose of construing a will the court is entitled to look at the original will as well as at the probate copy. Harrison, In re, Turner v. Hellard, 55 L. J., Ch. 799; 30 Ch. D. 390; 53 L. T. 799; 34 W. R. 420—C. A.

Original will of personalty examined in order to arrive at the true construction of certain bequests. Compton v. Bloxam, 2 Coll. C. C. 201.

The original will of personalty cannot be looked to, to contradict the probate, though it may in some cases to explain it. Oppenheim v. Henry, 1 W. R. 126.

Cases in which the court will look at an original will of personalty, for the purpose of determining its meaning or construction. Walker v. Tipping, 9 Hare, 802, n.

—— To Certified Copy.]—A testator died in 1874, in France. His original will, in the French language, was registered in France, and retained there. In 1876 an English translation of a certified French copy of the original will was admitted to probate here. On an allegation that the translation was inaccurate, and none of the parties insisting that an application should first be made to the probate division to rectify the English translation:—Held, that the court might look at the certified French copy as well as at the English translation admitted to probate, to determine the true construction of the will, Cliff's Trusts, In re, 61 L. J., Ch. 397; [1892] 2 Ch. 229; 66 L. T. 483; 40 W. R. 439.

—— To Will in Foreign Language.]—A domiciled Englishman made his will in a Spanish colony, in the Spanish language and form, and empowered K., whom he appointed his universal heir, to make his (the testator's) will, making therein the declaration, &c., and other matters which had been and would be communicated to him. The will was admitted to probate:—Held, first, that the will was an English will, and that in construing it the Spanish language was only to be looked to in order to ascertain the equivalent expressions in English; and, secondly, that K. being appointed universal heir, the beneficial interests, after performing the trusts, if any there were, belonged to K., and not to the testator's next of kin. Reynolds v. Kortright, 18 Beav. 417; 2 Eq. R. 784; 2 W. R. 445.

—— To other Documents.]—No papers, letters, &c., can be taken notice of, to influence construction of will. Bertie v. Falkland, 1 Salk. 232.

A testator made a voluntary settlement of some real estates. He afterwards, by his will, devised other real estates to nearly the same uses :—Held, that the deed could not be referred to for the purpose of construing the will. Randall v. Daniel, 24 Beav. 193.

A pedigree made by a testator's direction, and found among his papers, not admitted to explain a will, equivocal but not unintelligible. Crosley v. Clare, 3 Swanst. 322, n. See S. C., nom. Crossly v. Clare, Ambl. 397.

To explain Words of Will.]—Parol evidence cannot be admitted to explain the written words of a will. Stratton v. Payne, 3 Bro. P. C. 103.

Parol evidence admitted to explain a will where doubtful; not to contradict. As on a legacy to the four children of B., and afterwards another to the children of B.; B. having then two children by the first husband, four by a second: admitted to show the first legacy was restrained to the last four children; not so of the other legacy. Hampshire v. Peirce, 2 Ves. 216.

In construing a will, if the words used are themselves of doubtful meaning, the circumstances of the case may be referred to for the purpose of assisting in the explanation, but must not be employed to show the construction to be doubtful, in order to enable the court to make what appears a more reasonable will for the testator. Gordon v. Gordon, L. R. 5 H. L. 254.

In trying the meaning of phrases in a will all circumstances may be looked at in which the court might have been called to determine the meaning of the same phrases applied to a different state of circumstances. Radnor (Earl) v. Shafto, 11 Ves. 457; 8 R. R. 198.

To Add to Will.]—This court will not add a legacy to a will upon parol proof, though it concerns personal estate only. Whitton v. Russell, 1 Atk. 448.

A testator, having devised his estates in a particular way, directed that a different disposition of them should take place, in case certain contingent property and effects in expectancy should fall in and become vested interests to his children. The children being entitled to no contingent interests at the date of the will, the court refused to admit evidence offered for the purpose of showing that the testator referred to expectation from particular individuals which had been afterwards realised, as being in effect to add to the will, and not to explain it. King v. Badeley, 3 Myl. & K. 417; 3 L. J., Ch. 206.

Of Instructions by Testator.]—Will is to be construed without regard to the instructions. Murray v. Jones, and Fawcett v. Jones, 2 V. & B. 318; 13 R. R. 104.

Where declarations to testator's solicitor, at the time of giving instructions for making a will, admissible in evidence. Guillebaud v. Mears, 7 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 136.

Bequest to testator's cousin V. B., son of his late uncle P. B. Testator had no cousin of that name, but had a cousin G. V. B., son of an uncle J. B.; and had also a cousin F. B., son of the said uncle P. B. :—Held, evidence of all the circumstances surrounding the testator when he made his will was admissible to explain who he meant to take, but not evidence of instructions given to his solicitor when he made his will. Bernasconi v. Atkinson, 10 Hare, 345; 17 Jur. 128; 1 W. R. 152.

A name and description of a legatee were given in a will, which, taken together, could not be applied to any other person; evidence of the state of the family was admitted, and an affidavit of a solicitor who prepared the will was offered to show what had been the cause of the mistake: —Held, that the affidavit was inadmissible. Drake v. Drake, 8 H. L. Cas. 172; 25 Beav. 642; 29 L. J., Ch. 850; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 727; 6 W. R. 791.

There being a devise in a will of all testator's household stuff, as brass, pewter, linen, and woollens, except a trunk, the person who drew the will was examined to prove that the testator directed him to insert all his goods except the trunk, and was allowed to be read. Pendleton v. Grant, 2 Vern. 517. S. C., better reported, 1 Eq. Cas. Abr. 230, pl. 2.

Devise to his nearest poor relations. Parol evidence admitted to show that testator knew he had such in Salop, but no further; not to prove declarations or instructions whom he meant by written words of the will. Goodinge v. Goodinge, 1 Ves. 231.

Where testatrix gave her real and personal estate to plaintiffs for life, remainder to J. in tail, remainder to R. in fee, with a few pecuniary legacies, and charged her real estate with the payment, if her personal estate should not be sufficient; and, by her will, declared she gave the rest and residue of her personal estate to Lord C.'s three daughters :—Held, that parol evidence of attorney, who drew the bill, that he had express directions to give the personal estate to the three daughters of Lord C., could not be read, though there were some things in the case which might make a judge wish to admit it. Ulrich v. Litchfield, 2 Atk. 372.

Courts of law and equity admit parol evidence in two cases only—to ascertain the person, where there are two persons of the same name, or where there has been a mistake in the name; and in resulting trusts, relating to personal estate, as where an executor has a small legacy, and the next of kin claim the residue, there parol proof is admitted to ascertain who shall have it. Ib.

Lord H. not satisfied with Lord Cowper's rule of admitting parol evidence in doubtful wills. Mr. Justice Tracy, who assisted Lord Cowper in Strode v. Russel (2 Vern. 621), was at first of same opinion with him; but, on consideration, was clear the evidence could not be admitted, and his alteration of judgment had weight in the house of lords. Ib.

In Brown v. Selwin (Cas. t. Talb. 240) Lord H. said he was for admitting it. And even Lord Talbot had a remorse of judgment at the same time he rejected it; but the house of lords refused it, and affirmed the decree. Ib.

In construing a will, nothing contained in a letter from a solicitor to the testator, written about the time of the execution of the will, is admissible as evidence of the construction of the will. Wilson v. O'Leary, 41 L. J., Ch. 342; L. R. 7 Ch. 448; 26 L. T. 463; 20 W. R. 501.

Evidence that the testator had in his possession a first codicil at the time he made the second was admitted, so far as it went to prove the position of the testator, but rejected so far as it suggested any motive for his making the second codicil. Ib.

Held also that a letter written to the testator by his solicitor, advising him to recopy his first codicil, was inadmissible. Ib.

At the death of a testator two copies of his will were produced, one of which had been retained by himself, the other deposited with his bankers; each with a codicil containing the same gift in the same words, but of different dates, and attested by different witnesses. Probate having been granted of the duplicate will and of the two codicils:—Held, that evidence by one of the attesting witnesses to one of the codicils was admissible for the purpose of showing, from the circumstances attending the execution, that the two codicils were not two, but one instrument, and accordingly that the legatee therein named was entitled to one legacy only. Hubbard v. Alexander, 45 L. J., Ch. 740; 3 Ch. D. 738; 35 L. T. 52; 24 W. R. 1058.

Devise of real estate to be sold, and the produce, with the personal estate, to testator's wife for life, with power to appoint a moiety by deed or will, with two or more witnesses. The estate was not sold; the wife, having no other real estate, by will with three witnesses, gave specific legacies, some described to have been her husband's, and all the rest, residue, and remainder of her estate and effects, of what nature or kind soever, and whether real or personal, and all her plate, china, linen, and other utensils, which she should be possessed of, interested in, or entitled to at her decease; the power is executed by the residuary clause. Evidence of conversation with the person who drew the will, to show the testatrix had no other real estate, rejected. Standen v. Standen, 2 Ves. 589.

Of Declarations by Testator.]—Evidence as to statements made by a testator when he executed his will was rejected. M'Clure v. Evans, 29 Beav. 422. And see Baker v. Ker, 11 L. R., Ir. 8.

The declaration of a testator will not be admitted to explain an omission in a will, although evidence of surrounding circumstances will. Sullivan v. Sullivan, Ir. R. 4 Eq. 457.

Evidence of the declarations of a testator as to whom he intended to benefit, or supposed he had benefited, can only be received where the description of the legatee, or of the thing bequeathed, is equally applicable, in all its parts, to two persons, or to two things. But evidence of the circumstances, the habits, and the state of his family at the time he made the will, is admissible, so as to put the court in the position of the testator, in order to ascertain the bearing and application of the language which he uses, and whether there exists any person or thing to which the whole description given in the will can be with sufficient certainty applied. Charter v. Charter, 43 L. J., P. 73; L. R. 7 H. L. 364.

To have recourse to the declarations of a testator as operating on his will is considered dangerous, and if he has made different declarations at different times, little reliance can be placed on them. Dwyer v. Lysaght, 2 Ball & B. 162.

The acts and declarations of a testator at the time of his will, to show what he meant by a particular expression, admissible in evidence. Blake v. Marnell, 2 Ball & B. 35; 12 R. R. 68. Affirmed 4 Dow, 248.

Testator bequeathed to A. B. the premium of insurance on his life in an insurance office for her immediate expenses. Shortly before the date of the will a bonus had been declared upon the testator's policy of assurance:—Held, that the bonus alone passed under this bequest, a verbal declaration by the testator to A. B. upon the execution of the will to show that he intended her to have both the policy and the bonus being inadmissible in evidence. Barrow v. Methold, 3 W. R. 629.

A Presbyterian, who had three infant daughters bred up that way, and had three brothers Presbyterians, makes his will, appointing his brothers, and also a clergyman of the Church of England, guardians to his three infant daughters, and dies, having sent his eldest daughter to his next brother. The clergyman gets the two other daughters into his custody, and places them at a boarding school, where they were bred according to the Church of England, and brought his bill to have the eldest daughter placed out with the other daughters. The three brothers, that were Presbyterians, brought their bill to have the two daughters delivered to them, offering parol evidence that the testator directed and declared he would have his children bred up Presbyterians. The court declared no proof out of the will ought to be admitted in the case of a devise of a guardianship, any more than in the case of a devise of land. Storke v. Storke, 3 P. Wms. 51.

Devise of land not to be explained by parol proof touching the declaration of the testator, or the instrument given by testator for the making of his will. Parol proofs shall be admitted to explain a surrender of copyhold land, to show a mistake either in the land or uses. Towers v. Moor, 2 Vern. 98.

As to Condition of Testator's Family.]—In construing a will, the state of testator's family at time of will is to be attended to. Crone v. Odell, 1 Ball & B. 449. Affirmed 3 Dow, 68; 1 Bli. (N.S.) 594; 15 R. R. 20.

In construing will, the intention of testator, and not the technical import of words, is to be regarded. Ib.

For the purpose of construing a will, the court must be informed of the circumstances surrounding the testator when making his will, such as his family status and the nature of his property. Extraneous evidence of these matters is therefore admissible. Webber v. Stanley, 16 C. B. (N.S.) 698; 33 L. J., C. P. 217; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 657; 10 L. T. 417; 12 W. R. 833.

The construction of will is not to be altered upon inference from testator's knowledge of circumstances of family. Radcliffe v. Buckley, 10 Ves. 195; 7 R. R. 383.

A doubtful will construed upon evidence as to the state of the testator's family. Blundell v. Gladstone, 11 Sim. 467; 1 Ph. 279; 12 L. J., Ch. 225; 5 Jur. 481; 7 Jur. 269. Affirmed, sub nom. Camoys (Lord) v. Blundell, 1 H. L. Cas. 778.

As to Beneficiary Intended.]—In construing a will the court may, for the purpose of identifying the person or thing intended as the object or subject of the testator's bounty, inquire into every material fact, and all the extrinsic circumstances which were known to the testator, relating as well to the person who claims or the thing claimed as to the testator's family and affairs. But the court may not admit any direct extrinsic evidence of the testator's intention, unless there is more than one person or thing equally answering the description he has used. Charter v. Charter, supra.

When the object of a testator's bounty is not correctly named, or is described by a name which is only in part correct then, if there is enough in the will, when read with the knowledge of surrounding circumstances, to show who it was that the testator intended to benefit, so that, if the incorrect or partially correct description by name were expunged, the gift would not be void for uncertainty, the indications of intention discoverable in the rest of the will are to prevail over those which arise from the use of the inaccurate or only partially correct description by name. Ib.

In the construction of wills, the court looks not only to the terms of the will itself, but to the surrounding circumstances and the state of the parties. Pasmore v. Huggins, 21 Beav. 103; 25 L. J., Ch. 251.

Upon this principle, where a testator gave the income of a fund to his sister (then sixty-eight years of age and married to a second husband) for life, and after her decease bequeathed the fund to her children "by her then present or any future husband," and she had children by both her first and second husbands:—Held, that the children by her former marriage were not excluded. Ib.

As evidence of friendly intercourse with parties benefited by a doubtful will is admissible in favour of that will, so also is evidence of friendly intercourse with relations not benefited by such will admissible against it, though of very slight weight. Hitchings v. Wood, 2 Moore, P. C. 355.

Parol evidence of collateral circumstances relating to the ages of the devisees, and the situation of the parties, and to their being married or unmarried, is admissible in evidence for the purpose of construing a will. Lowe v. Huntingtower (Lord), 4 Russ. 532; 2 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 164; 26 R. R. 633.

Evidence of reputation is not admissible in expounding a will to prove a person's age. Colclough v. Smith, 10 L. T. 918.

Legacy to A., if in the testator's service at the time of his decease; parol evidence admitted to show that, though she had quitted his house, she continued and was by him considered as in his service, and upon that evidence the legacy was established. Herbert v. Reid, 16 Ves. 481.

Legacy to a person dead in the lifetime of the testator lapsed, although the words are "to M., his executors, administrators, and assigns"; and parol evidence inadmissible that the testator knew, at the time of making the will, that the legatee was dead. Maybank v. Brooks, 1 Bro. C. C. 84.

Evidence offered to prove that testator, who gave legacy to A., his executors, &c., knew A. to be dead, and meant it for his representative rejected. S. C. nom. Mabank v. Brooks, Dick. 577.

A bequest of residuary personal estate to "the children of the deceased son (named Bamber) of my father's sister share and share alike" is void for uncertainty where, at the date of the will, there were three such deceased sons; and evidence of the testator's intention cannot be admitted to show that he meant to benefit the children of all the three sons. Stephenson, In re, Donaldson v. Bamber, 66 L. J., Ch. 93; [1897] 1 Ch. 75; 75 L. T. 495; 45 W. R. 162—C. A.

The rule that the court can reject an inaccurate enumeration of a class and allow the whole class to share the bequest applies only where the testator's intention to benefit the whole class is shown by his will. Hare v. Cartridge (13 Sim. 165) doubted. Ib.

—— Particular Words of Description.]—A testator, after giving legacies to Mary Wyatt, Matthew Wyatt, Frederick Wyatt, Louisa Atwell (called Wyatt), Maria Weir, and Emily de Vere, proceeded, "I give and bequeath to , daughter of , holding some situation about the church , the sum of fifty pounds annually during the continuance of her natural life, and I direct my trustees or trustee for the time being to pay to the said the said annuity of fifty pounds . . . and the receipt of the said shall be sufficient discharge to my trustees or trustee for the time being; and from the decease of the said I direct," &c.; and the testator directed that, "in case any one of my said legatees, Mary Wyatt, Frederick Wyatt, Watthew Wyatt, Louisa Atwell (called Wyatt), Maria Weir, Emily de Vere, or Marian Elliott," should become bankrupt, &c., her or his legacy should determine, and that the trustees or trustee should pay to her or him, "if in the case of Mary Wyatt, Matthew Wyatt, and Frederick Wyatt, the sum of forty shillings a week," and "if in the case of Maria Weir and Emily de Vere, the sum of thirty shillings a week," and "if in the case of Marian Elliott, the sum of fifteen shillings a week":—Held, on an originating summons by Marian Furniss (formerly Marian Elliott), supported by an affidavit by her to the effect that she was the daughter of James Elliott, beadle of the parish church at Epsom, and that the testator was acquainted with her, that she was entitled to the annuity of fifty pounds given by the will. Furniss v. Phear, 36 W. R. 521.

A testatrix made the following bequest: "To the three children of B. 500*l.* each." At the date of the will, and at her death, there were nine children of B. Evidence was tendered to the effect that, at the time when B. had three children, the testatrix had made a will containing the same bequest; that when B. had six children she had made another will containing the same bequest; that when B. had nine children she had made another will containing the same bequest (the will in question being the fourth will); and that she at all four times knew the number of B.'s children:—Held, that, on the assumption that this evidence was admissible (but without deciding that point), each of the nine children was entitled to a legacy of 500*l.* Daniell v. Daniell, 3 De G. & Sm. 37; 18 L. J., Ch. 157; 13 Jur. 164.

A testator, in 1877, left to his trustees a sum of 10,000*l.* railway stock, in trust for the "children" living at his decease of his deceased niece, "Margaret Kerr." Some years before the date of the will the niece mentioned had married a second time, under circumstances which very much displeased the testator, who had in consequence declined to hold any communication with her, and always refused to recognise her by any other surname than that of "Kerr," her first husband's. There were five children of the first marriage, and one of the second, who survived the testator. Within three weeks after the date of the will the testator wrote a letter to one of the five children of the first marriage, from which it appeared that he intended to confine the gift of the 10,000*l.* to them, as he stated therein that he had by his will left them 2,000*l.* each. He also caused a similar letter to be written and sent about four years later. The testator died in 1883:—Held, that the word "children" must bear its primâ facie meaning, so as to include the children of both marriages, and that, there being no latent ambiguity as to its signification in this instance, the letters were not admissible to show the testator's intention. Andrews v. Andrews, 15 L. R. Ir. 199—C. A.

A testator bequeathed his residuary personal estate upon trust to pay and divide the same equally to and amongst his nine grandchildren, that is to say, the three children of his daughter Jane, the three children of his daughter Elizabeth, the two children of his son Joseph, and the child of his daughter Harriet. At the date of the will Joseph had four children, two by a former and the other two by his present wife. Evidence was tendered to show that the testator had declared an intention of benefiting the two children of Joseph by his first marriage, and a declaration by him that he knew nothing about Joseph's other children:—Held, that the evidence tendered was not admissible to construe the will, and that all Joseph's children were entitled equally with the several other grandchildren. Matthews v. Foulshaw, 4 N. R. 500; 11 L. T. 82; 12 W. R. 1141.

A testatrix gave a share of her residue to her "cousin, Harriet Cloak." She had no cousin of that name, but she had a married cousin, Harriet Crane, whose maiden name was Cloak; and she had a cousin, T. Cloak, whose wife's name was Harriet:—Held, that extrinsic evidence was admissible to show the testatrix's knowledge of and intimacy with the members of the Cloak family. Grant v. Grant (infra) distinguished. Taylor, In re, Cloak v. Hammond, 56 L. J., Ch. 171; 34 Ch. D. 255; 56 L. T. 649; 35 W. R. 186—C. A.

Parol evidence admitted to prove which heir was intended, viz., whether the heir of the mother's mother's side, or the heir of the mother's father's side. Harris v. Lincoln (Bishop), 2 P. Wms. 136.

Parol evidence is admissible to explain the sense in which the word "nephew" is employed in a will. Grant v. Grant, L. R. 5 C. P. 727; 22 L. T. 233; 18 W. R. 576. Discussed in Parker, In re, Bentham v. Wilson, 50 L. J., Ch. 639; 17 Ch. D. 262; 44 L. T. 885; 29 W. R. 855.

A testator by his will left to his nephew his (the testator's) interest in the lands of L., subject to the payment of all charges on the said farm and lands, and, as to the said farm, subject to the payment by him (the testator's nephew) to each of his parents during their respective lives, of the sum of 5*l.* per year. At the time of his decease, and at the date of the will, the testator had several nephews, sons of the testator's brothers, who had emigrated to America many years before. He had also a nephew, T. D., son of his sister, M. D. For some years before his death the testator resided with M. D. and her husband, and T. D. had managed the testator's farm at L. The solicitor who drew the will proved that the testator intended T. D. as the object of his bounty:—Held, that T. D. was entitled to the farm. Phelan v. Slattery, 19 L. R. Ir. 177.

A testator bequeathed a legacy to his niece E. A great-great-niece, E. J., held to answer the description, and to be entitled to the legacy. Parol evidence not admissible to show the circumstances under which the bequest was contained in the will, and that the testator could not have intended to designate his great-great-niece. Stringer v. Gardiner, 4 De G. & J. 468; 28 L. J., Ch. 758; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 260; 7 W. R. 602.

Local Description Inaccurate—Extrinsic Evidence admitted to show Testator's Intention.]—See Anstee v. Nelms, 1 H. & N. 225; 26 L. J., Ex. 5; 4 W. R. 612.

As to Condition of Testator's Property.]—The state of testator's property cannot be resorted to as a criterion to explain the will. Kellett v. Kellett, 1 Ball & B. 542. Affirmed, 3 Dow, 248; 15 R. R. 63.

Parol evidence admitted to show the state of testator's property when he made his will. Hyde v. Price, C. P. Cooper, 193.

The court ought not to consider the circumstances of the testator to determine his intention as to personal estate; whether as to real, quære. Inchiquin v. French, Ambl. 40; Ridgw. 230; 1 Cox, 1.

Will not to be construed by something dehors; as by the state of the property where no latent ambiguity. Page v. Leapingwell, 18 Ves. 466; 11 R. R. 234.

Different construction of the word "surplus" from that which it commonly bears, inferred from the expression of the will. Ib.

Where a testator gives stock standing in his name, and has not stock so standing, but it is in the name of a trustee, parol evidence is admissible of the mistake. Hewson v. Reid, 5 Madd. 451.

A testatrix, having a special power of appointment over a fund, gave by her will (as translated from the Italian), to objects of the power, "the whole of my property of every kind, including rentes, stocks, securities, &c., deposited with my bankers and trustees . . . in a word, all I may be seised of at the time of my death, nothing being excluded or excepted." At her death she had no such "rentes, stocks, &c." of her own; but certain consols and securities, representing the fund, had before the date of her will been deposited at her banker's in the names of the trustees of the fund:—Held, that her will was merely a general gift of her property, and contained nothing to show that she was executing the power. Evidence of the state of a testator's property at the date of the will, to show an intention to execute a power, is inadmissible, where the gift is not specific. Innes v. Sayer (3 Mac. & G. 606) followed. Huddleston, In re, Faà Di Bruno v. Eyston, 64 L. J., Ch. 157; [1894] 3 Ch. 595; 8 R. 462; 43 W. R. 139.

Of Testator's Belief as to his Property.]—Statement of property written by testator, and his books of accounts, admitted as evidence that he considered as his property, and meant to dispose of, property not strictly, though in some sense, his: viz., mortgages and leases, the property of his wife under will, by which he was executor with her before her marriage. Druce v. Denison, 6 Ves. 385.

A testator bequeathed a legacy to A. "in full satisfaction of all claims he may have upon me." The testator was indebted to the executor of B., who held B.'s residuary estate on trust for the wife of A. Parol evidence to show that the testator regarded the debt as belonging to A.'s wife, or to A. in her right:—Held, not admissible. Parmiter v. Parmiter, 1 J. & H. 135; 8 W. R. 578. Affirmed, 30 L. J., Ch. 508; 8 L. T. 799—L. C.

Where the intention to dispose was clearly expressed on the face of the will, and parol evidence was tendered for the purpose of showing that the testatrix had taken the amount of the property which she was capable of bequeathing, supposing certain property in which she had only a life interest to be her own, and that the legatee under the will, who also took an interest in such supposed absolute property under a settlement made by the testatrix, ought, in order to enlarge the residuary bequest, to be put to his election, such evidence was held to be inadmissible. Clementson v. Gandy, 1 Keen, 309; 5 L. J., Ch. 260.

Held, that a court of equity, in a suit to enforce the trusts of the will, might receive parol evidence to show what the testator had been accustomed to consider to be an estate called the Ashford Hall estate. Ricketts v. Turquand, 1 H. L. Cas. 473, varying the judgment below.

Testator gave the residue of his estate to the poor of the parish of K. com. L., but that parish was in com. N. It was set up by the next of kin, that testator did not imagine his residuum would exceed 10*l*., and had so declared; whereas it amounted to near 1,000*l*. The court thought that parol evidence should be admitted, to help out the description of the parish, but not as to the quantity of the thing given. Brown v. Langley, 2 Barnard. 118.

A testator devised "the townland of T., including the house, offices and demesne, &c., of W." In addition to the demesne of W., which, in fact, formed part of T., the testator was entitled to adjoining lands, called M. and C.:—Held, that extrinsic evidence that the testator treated M. and C. as part of the demesne of W. was inadmissible for the purpose of showing that M. and C. passed under the devise. King v. King, 13 L. R. Ir. 531.

As to Testator's Intention.]—Extrinsic evidence is admissible to shew the circumstances of the testator at the time of making his will, so as to enable the court to place itself in the situation of the testator, but it is inadmissible to prove either his motives or intentions. Martin v. Drinkwater, 2 Beav. 215; 9 L. J., Ch. 247.

Parol evidence not admissible to show the intention of the testator against the construction upon the face of the will. Cambridge v. Rous, 8 Ves. 22; 6 R. R. 199.

Evidence not admissible that devisor did not mean what he had expressed, but admissible to show that a particular expression was not his will. Powell v. Mouchett, and Lichfield v. Mouchett, 6 Madd. 216; 22 R. R. 276.

The general doctrine of the admissibility of parol evidence to explain a testator's intention, and the cases of Hurst v. Beach, (infra, col. 675), Booker v. Allen (2 Russ. & M. 270), Weall v. Rice (2 Russ. & M. 251, 263), and Lloyd v. Harvey (2 Russ. & M. 310), considered. Hall v. Hill, 1 Con. & L. 120; 1 Dr. & War. 94; Ir. R. 4 Eq. 27.

Parol evidence is inadmissible for the purpose of explaining the testator's intention, even against the heir-at-law. Irvine v. Sullivan, 38 L. J., Ch. 635; L. R. 8 Eq. 673; 17 W. R. 1083.

Extrinsic evidence explanatory of a will in order to raise a case of election, is not admissible. Dummer v. Pitcher, Coop. t. Brough. 257; 2 Myl. & K. 262.

A legatee, son-in-law to the testator, was held entitled to his legacy, discharged from debts due by him to the testator, and a debt for which the testator was his surety, upon evidence from the testator's accounts, letters and memorandums in his handwriting. Parol evidence of declarations in conversation was produced for the same purpose; but the court appeared to rely on the evidence in writing. Eden v. Smyth, 5 Ves. 341; 5 R. R. 60.

A testatrix was the owner of four debentures of the Spanish government, each of which had impressed upon it the words "Capital 1,000*l*.," and purported to secure to the holder 50*l*. per annum in perpetuity, but redeemable on payment of "55*l*. per cent. on the nominal amount." By her will she bequeathed thus:—The sum of 2,000*l*. Spanish bonds or coupons now belonging to me, and all dividends which shall be due to me thereon at the time of my decease":—Held, that two only of the debentures passed, and that parol evidence of declarations of the testatrix as to her intention was inadmissible. Horwood v. Griffith, 4 De G. M. & G. 700; 23 L. J., Ch. 465.

Held, also, semble, that where there is a specific bequest, parol evidence is admissible to show what property there is answering to the description of it; but that, if on that evidence it appears that there was property correctly answering the description, no evidence can be adduced to show that it was intended to apply to other property. Ib.

J. B., at his death, had a balance due from his banker, and was also entitled to a share of the balance due to A. B. from his banker; A. B. having received moneys for him from time to time, and with his knowledge paid them to his own bankers, as his own moneys; but J. B. had no concern with A. B.'s bankers, nor did they know that he was interested in the moneys paid by A. B. J. B. bequeaths all his money in the hands of any banker:—Held, that his balance at his own banker's, and also his share of A. B.'s balance, will pass, and that evidence is admissible to show that he so intended. Hemming v. Whittam, 2 Sim. 493; 1 L. J., Ch. 94.

A testator devised all his real estates (except the hereditaments thereinafter particularly devised), including all estates vested in him upon trust, or by way of mortgage, to trustees upon certain trusts; in a subsequent part of his will he devised his farm in A., in the possession of T. H., to T. R. He had two farms in A. called respectively S. and M., both of which were in the possession of T. H., but at different rents. On a question being raised which of these two farms the testator intended to give to T. R.:—It was sufficiently established by the evidence that during the lives of the testator and his father the proceeds of the farm S. had been regularly paid to a Roman Catholic priest, and that the testator had uniformly dealt with it in conformity with a real or supposed trust affecting it for this purpose:—Held, therefore, that he must be taken to have intended to comprise it in the general devise of trust estates, and that consequently the farm M. was the one devised to T. R. Blundell v. Gladstone, 3 Macn. & G. 692. Reversing 14 Sim. 83; 8 Jur. 301.

Among the testatrix's papers some writings were found, made after the passing of the Wills Act, but not attested as thereby required:—Held, that these could not be looked at for the purpose of ascertaining what her intentions were. Briggs v. Penny, 3 De G. & Sm. 525; 13 Jur. 909. And see S. C., 3 Macn. & G. 546.

A clause which the law will not allow to operate may be used to explain the intentions of a testator. Martin v. Martin, 35 L. J., Ch. 281; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 889; 14 L. T. 129.

—— Meaning of Gift.]—When the meaning of a will is doubtful, the court may resort to evidence of the state of the testator's property, but where the words are plain no such intrinsic aid can be resorted to. Hensman v. Fryer, 37 L. J., Ch. 97; L. R. 3 Ch. 420; 17 L. T. 394; 16 W. R. 162.

Where there is a primâ facie gift, specific evidence of the state of the property at the date of the will is admissible. Innes v. Sayer, 3 Mac. & G. 606; 21 L. J., Ch. 190; 16 Jur. 21. Affirming 7 Hare, 377.

Extrinsic evidence admitted, not to construe a will, but to show with reference to what it was made. Bengough v. Walker, 15 Ves. 514; 10 R. R. 106.

Court will not take into consideration the amount of the property, nor the number of objects, for the purpose of construing will, except in case of a specific disposition. Sibley v. Perry, 7 Ves. 522; 6 R. R. 183.

Extrinsic evidence is more readily admitted to explain an ambiguity in the subject than in the object of the gift. Rowlatt v. Easton, 2 N. R. 262; 11 W. R. 767.

Where the subject of a devise is described by reference to some extrinsic fact, extrinsic evidence must be admitted to ascertain the fact, and to ascertain the subject of the devise. Different from the cases of reference to a paper which is to form part of the will, where the will itself must specify the paper to be incorporated with it. Sandford v. Raikes, 1 Mer. 653.

Testator contracts for the purchase of a house, and afterwards, by a codicil to his will, gives to A., his executor, the house which he had given a a memorandum of agreement to purchase, and which was to be paid for out of timber which he had ordered to be cut down. This amounts to a direction that the purchase-money for the house shall be so provided for: and evidence was admitted to show what was the order given by the testator, with reference to the cutting of timber. Id. 646.

Testatrix gave 800*l.* stock in long annuities to A.; the same to B.; 200*l.* long annuities to C., the interest thereof to accumulate. An inquiry admitted into the state of her property, to show she meant such sums of money, not annuities of this amount. Fonnereau v. Poyntz, 1 Bro. C. C. 472.

A testator gives to some persons annuities of 500*l.* long annuities, and to several others, legacies of 500*l.* long annuities, on one of which he directs interest to be paid at 5*l.* per cent. Evidence of the amount of his property admissible to explain the meaning of the latter bequests; and his property being insufficient to pay them in long annuities:—Held, that sums of money to be raised out of his long annuities were intended. Colpoys v. Colpoys, Jac. 451.

A legacy of a "100*l.* long annuities stock":—Held, upon the context of the will, and the evidence of the state of the funded property, to be pecuniary and not specific. Att.-Gen. v. Grote, 2 Russ. & M. 699. Affirming 3 Mer. 316; 17 R. R. 91.

Legacy of 100*l.* out of my reduced bank annuities held pecuniary, the court leaning against holding a legacy specific, unless clearly intended; the court would not take into consideration evidence of the value of the stock at the date of the codicil, by which the legacy was given, nor an erasure of a legacy to the same person by the will, but decided upon the words of the codicil. Kirby v. Potter, 4 Ves. 748; 4 R. R. 342.

A testatrix by a codicil gave to A. and M. "50*l.* each of bank long annuities now standing in my name." At the date of the codicil, and at her death, she possessed long annuities sufficient to answer this bequest specifically, but not also to satisfy certain legacies charged by the other testamentary papers upon the same stock. Evidence as to the state and value of the testatrix's property in the funds at those respective times was admitted, and on the effect of that evidence, and the language of the testamentary papers, taken together, the bequests to A. and M. were held not to be specific but pecuniary. Boys v. Williams, 2 Russ. & M. 689. Reversing 3 Sim. 563; 30 R. R. 223.

At the death of a testator two copies of his will were produced, one of which had been retained by himself, the other deposited with his bankers; each with a codicil containing the same gift in the same words, but of different dates, and attested by different witnesses. Probate having been granted of the duplicate will and of the two codicils:—Held, that evidence by one of the attesting witnesses to one of the codicils was admissible for the purpose of showing, from the circumstances attending the execution, that the two codicils were not two but one instrument, and accordingly that the legatee therein named was entitled to one legacy only. Hubbard v. Alexander, 45 L. J., Ch. 740; 3 Ch. D. 738; 35 L. T. 52; 24 W. R. 1058.

—— Insufficiency of Estate.]—Parol evidence is not admissible to show the inadequacy of the personal estate of the testatrix to satisfy the purposes of the will; but with regard to real estate, parol evidence would be admissible for that purpose, if an intention to pass realty appeared on the will. Jones v. Curry, 1 Swanst. 66; 1 Wils. Ch. 24.

The testator having a power over 3,000*l.*, originally the property of his wife, gave several legacies, and then, after the death of his wife, the residue to the defendant: his estate was not sufficient to pay the legacies, yet held that the will was not an execution of the power, the same not being referred to, nor anything by which an intention appeared in testator to execute it. Evidence to show the testator's own estate was insufficient for the purposes of his will without the 3,000*l.*, rejected. Andrews v. Emmot, 2 Bro. C. C. 297.

Legatee adducing Evidence to contradict Will.]—A testator gave the proceeds of sale of his real and personal estate to trustees, on trust to divide the same among his children living at his death, and the issue of deceased children, in equal shares per stirpes. The will stated that the testator had advanced to four of his sons respectively certain specified amounts, on account of their respective shares, and the testator directed that the "respective sums hereinbefore recited to have been advanced" should be brought into hotchpot by the four sons respectively for the purposes of the division of his estate:—Held, that the sons were bound by the statement in the will of the amounts of the advances made to them, and were not entitled to adduce evidence to show that the advances which had been made to them were in fact of less amount. Aird's Estate, In re (12 Ch. D. 291) followed. The decision in that case is not overruled by Taylor's Estate, In re (22 Ch. D. 495). Wood, In re, Ward v. Wood, 55 L. J., Ch. 720; 32 Ch. D. 517; 54 L. T. 932; 34 W. R. 788.

Of Matters subsequent to Execution of Will.]—Will not to be construed by subsequent circumstances. Moggridge v. Thackwell, 3 Bro. C. C. 517. Affirmed 13 Ves. 416; 6 R. R. 76.

Will, if extrinsic evidence could be admitted, not to be construed by matters posterior to its execution. Welby v. Welby, 2 V. & B. 192; 13 R. R. 58.

Inconvenient consequences, not in the contemplation of the testator at the time of making his will, not sufficient to authorise a variation or interpolation in the terms of a bequest; where those terms are in themselves clear and intelligible. Smith v. Streatfield, 1 Mer. 358; 15 R. R. 132.

To rebut or fortify Presumptions.]—Primary principle is, that evidence is not admissible to contradict a written will; but, in some cases, court will raise a presumption against it, and then admit evidence to repel the presumption. Hurst v. Beach, 5 Madd. 360; 21 R. R. 304.

Parol evidence is not admissible to contradict an express declaration in will; but if there be no express declaration, and only circumstances which afford inference or presumption, there parol evidence is admissible to answer that inference or presumption. Gladding v. Yapp, 5 Madd. 59; 21 R. R. 277.

A subsequent marriage and the birth of a child revokes a will. Quære, as to the propriety of admitting evidence against the presumption. Gibbons v. Caunt, 4 Ves. 848.

Although parol evidence is admissible to rebut a presumption of law against the words of a will, yet where the presumption arises from a rule of construction of words simply quâ words, no parol evidence can be admitted. Barrs v. Fewkes, 6 N. R. 355; 34 L. J., Ch. 522; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 669; 12 L. T. 727; 13 W. R. 987.

Therefore, under a gift of residuary real and personal estate to a person appointed executor, "to enable him to carry into effect the purposes of this my will," the court refused to admit extrinsic evidence to show that the executor was entitled beneficially, and was not a trustee merely for the heir of the surplus real estate, the heir being entitled by construction, and not by implication of law. Ib.

Docksey v. Docksey (3 Bro. P. C. 39), and Mallabar v. Mallabar (Cas. t. Talb. 78), explained. Ib.

Parol evidence is admissible to rebut the presumption that a legacy given to a person who is appointed executor is annexed to the office—Per Cotton, L.J. Appleton, In re, Barber v. Tebbit, 54 L. J., Ch. 954; 29 Ch. D. 893; 52 L. T. 906; 49 J. P. 708.

A testator's will contained the following clause: "I give and bequeath to my brother E. whatsoever real estate I may die possessed of, wheresoever situate, on trust nevertheless to pay thereout the sum of 800*l.* due from me to the trustees under the marriage settlement of S., and the sum of 300*l.* due from me to B., and also on trust to pay to each of my sisters M. and C. and to my brother A., as long as they respectively live, the sum of 50*l.* every year." The will contained a bequest of the personalty to E. and A. and certain of his sisters, and appointed E. executor thereof:—Held, that as E. was an express trustee, parol evidence was not admissible to show that there was an intention to give him a beneficial interest. Croome v. Croome, 59 L. T. 582.

Testatrix, who made her will on a printed form, after giving certain legacies, gave all her estate real and personal "unto to and for own use and benefit absolutely," and then appointed C. W. C. to pay all her debts, &c., and to be executor of her will. The chief clerk certified that the testatrix was illegitimate, and that she left no issue or next of kin. The crown and the executor claimed the residue, and the executor tendered evidence to prove that the intention of the testatrix was that he should take the residue, if any, for his own benefit:—Held, that, under the peculiar circumstances, parol evidence was admissible to rebut the presumption against the executor arising from the blanks in the will, and that the executor, subject to the payment of costs, was entitled for his own benefit to what should remain. Bacon's Will, In re, Camp v. Coe, 55 L. J., Ch. 368; 31 Ch. D. 460; 54 L. T. 150; 34 W. R. 319.

Legacy of interest then due on mortgage. After making will, testator survives eleven years, and receives interest on mortgage. Evidence admissible to prove interest was received as accruing since the making of will, and not on account of what was due before; therefore, legacy was held adeemed. Graves v. Hughes, 4 Madd. 381.

A testatrix was possessed of original shares in a company fully paid up, and of the same number of shares not fully paid up, which had been issued one for every original share. She bequeathed specifically certain of her shares in the company. Evidence is not to be admitted to show that the testatrix intended by each specifically bequeathed share a double share, consisting of one of each class. Millard v. Bailey, 35 L. J., Ch. 312; L. R. 1 Eq. 378; 13 L. T. 751; 14 W. R. 385.

Parol evidence admissible to fortify the presumption of a legacy being adeemed. Monck v. Monck (Lord), 1 Ball & B. 298; 12 R. R. 33.

Parol evidence may be read in support of legal operation of will. Lake v. Lake, Dick. 236.

Terms of Art.]—A statuary bequeathed articles used in his business, by their technical names, some of which were very obscurely written. Reference directed to ascertain what was meant, the master taking to his assistance persons skilled in writing, and acquainted with articles used by statuaries. Goblet v. Beechy, 3 Sim. 24; 9 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 200. Reversed 2 Russ. & M. 624.

A testator bequeathed certain legacies, using letters to designate the amount, viz., "the sum of i. x. x." Parol evidence admitted to show that the testator used those letters as private trade marks, and to prove the amounts which they represented. Kell v. Charman, 23 Beav. 195; 4 W. R. 787.

A testator, by a will made in 1872, devised "forty-five acres of the lands of D." to A., and "fifty acres" of the same lands to B.:—Held, that extrinsic evidence was not admissible to show that the testator meant Irish and not statute acres. By the statutory definition contained in the 5 Geo. 4, c. 74, s. 2, the word "acre" has received a legal signification which must be attributed to that word, whether used in a contract or in a will, or other voluntary instrument. O'Donnell v. O'Donnell, 13 L. R. Ir. 226—C. A.

Secret Trust—To show Existence of.]—A testator who died in Jan., 1885, by his will dated in Dec., 1884, bequeathed to his friends A. and B. the sum of 500*l.* free of legacy duty to be raised and paid out of his pure personalty, "relying, but not by way of trust, upon their applying the said sum in or towards the object or objects privately communicated to them" by him. The executors objected to pay over the bequest, on the ground that there was a secret trust, and that such trust appeared to be an illegal one. The legatee accordingly applied to the court to order payment of the legacy. The executors tendered affidavits to show that the bequest was upon a trust. The legatees objected that the court could not go beyond the terms of the will: — Held, that the evidence was admissible. Russell v. Jackson (10 Hare, 204) followed. Spencer's Will, In re, 57 L. T. 519—C. A.

C. ERASURES AND INTERLINEATIONS.

Erasures.]—How the spiritual courts proceed when there are erasures in a will, and the executrix submits to have the will proved as though no such erasures had been therein. Parker v. Ash, 1 Vern. 256.

A., by will duly executed, devises a copyhold estate to his wife, and on the day of his death orders his nephew to obliterate some devises, but nothing as to the copyhold, and then caused a memorandum to be written that he approved of the will as obliterated, but does not republish it, and orders his nephew to carry it to one to write it fair, and before it is done, he becomes delirious:—Held, to be a good will, and that the copyhold passed. Burkitt v. Burkitt, 2 Vern. 498.

A testator gave his residuary estate in certain portions between his two granddaughters and his four grandsons. He afterwards drew a line through the material parts of the bequest, and by a marginal note stated that, one grandson being dead, and the other three being provided for, he intended to bequeath 1,000*l.* to each of his grandsons, and the residue between his two granddaughters:—Held, that the first bequest was cancelled, and that the granddaughters were entitled to the whole fund, subject to the three legacies of 1,000*l.* Ravenscroft, In re, 18 L. J., Ch. 501.

Will of realty, date prior to the 1st January, 1838, and bearing upon the face of it certain obliterations which were favourable to the claim of the heir-at-law of the testatrix, established against the heir, without the obliterations, the evidence leading to the conclusion that the obliterations were not made previously to the execution of the will, or under circumstances rendering them valid within the provisions of the 6th section of the Statute of Frauds, and the heir not desiring an issue. Wynn v. Heveningham, 1 Coll. C. C. 630.

A testator having, by his will, directed his executors to transfer 500*l.*, part of his residuary estate, to N., and made a specific disposition of the other parts, and afterwards drawn a pen through the name of N. and by a codicil declared that he rased her name out of his will with his own hand, the 500*l.* belongs, as undisposed of, to his next of kin. The costs of ascertaining the right of that sum were paid thereout, in exemption of the general residue. Strymsher v. Northcote, 1 Swanst. 566; 1 Wils. Ch. 248; 18 R. R. 142.

A testator bequeathed certain property, after the death of his wife, as follows: "To our three children, Henry and James, now residing with me, our sons, and the before named Anne, our daughter." This last member of the sentence had been stroked with a pen, as if to obliterate the words, but they were still quite legible. The testator subsequently reacknowledged the will in presence of three witnesses: — Held, that the previous words of description, "our three children," were sufficient to entitle Anne to take, even if the obliteration were complete, which it was not. Boyd v. Martin, 2 Dr. & Wal. 355.

T., after giving specific legacies, gives the whole income of his property to his wife for life; as to the principal, one-half of my "Consols and Indian stock to my" son absolutely, and the other half in trust for the children of his daughter at twenty-one, with a gift of the residue to his son. The words between the inverted commas were struck through, and probate was granted of the will in blank as to them; and upon the question whether the children of the daughter were excluded or not:—Held, that they were, and that the son took everything, subject to the wife's life estate. Taylor v. Richardson, 2 Drew. 16; 2 Eq. Rep. 332; 23 L. J., Ch. 9; 2 W. R. 29.

A testator directed his executors to pay an annuity to his sister, A. B., the wife of C., for her separate use, or to such persons as the said A. B. should appoint, the receipt of the said A. B. to be a sufficient discharge, and he gave the residue of his estate among his brother E. and his sisters F. G. and A. B., the wife of the said C. He subsequently drew his pen through the name of his sister A. B. in the first, third, and fourth places where she was mentioned, leaving her description as the wife of C. still remaining, except in the third place, where there was no description:—Held, that the bequest to her was not revoked. Martins v. Gardiner, 8 Sim. 73; 5 L. J., Ch. 305.

Testator gives a moiety of the residue to such lying-in hospital as his executor should appoint. He afterwards strikes out the executor's name, and dies without appointing any other executor. This is not a revocation of the legacy, but the court will appoint. White v. White, 1 Bro. C. C. 12.

A legacy given thus, "£1.0.0.," which stood between two other legacies for 100*l.* each, the dots between the figures being smeared as if for the purpose of obliteration:—Held, to be a legacy for 100*l.* Manchee v. Kay, 3 Giff. 545.

—— Reference to Original Will.]—In construing a will of personal estate, the court, notwithstanding an objection by counsel that the probate copy alone could be looked at, ordered the original will to be produced, and had regard to certain erasures appearing therein, but which had been omitted in the probate. Manning v. Purcell, 7 De G. M. & G. 55.

Interlineations.]—The effect of interlineations considered. Hutchinson v. Hutchinson, Ir. R. 13 Eq. 332.

Rejection of a repugnancy by interlineation. Boon v. Cornforth, 2 Ves. Sen. 277.

Where a testator omits something, and supplies it by a mere pencil interlineation, which is not admitted to probate, the court cannot receive it, but must, if possible, supply the omission from the will itself; and can receive no evidence dehors the will, except as to the condition of the testator and his family at the time of execution. Edmunds v. Waugh, 6 W. R. 589.

A pencil memorandum, if regarded as a codicil, and therefore a part of the will, is receivable by the court. Ib.

Erasures with Interlineations.]—Testator gave legacies of 4,000*l.*, charged exclusively on real estate. He struck out the 4,000*l.* with his pen, and inserted 3,000*l.* in pencil; and by an unattached codicil, which was a nullity, as the legacies were exclusively charged on real estate, expressly altered the amount of the legacies from 4,000*l.* to 3,000*l.*:—Held, that the legatees were entitled to the legacies of 4,000*l.* Kirke v. Kirke, 4 Russ. 435; 6 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 143.

Obliterations and interlineations by the testator in his will, coupled with an ineffectual codicil, do not amount to a revocation, but are a substitution, which failing, the original disposition stands good. Ib.

Where a testator interlined his will to except the plaintiff, who was named a legatee under it with others, and also made a codicil expressly excluding him, but afterwards obliterated the codicil without doing the same with the interlineation of the will, the court admitted the plaintiff to an equal interest with the other parties taking under the will, considering the inference as certain that the testator so intended. Utterson v. Utterson, G. Coop. 60; 3 V. & B. 122.

Alterations whether made before or after Execution.]—Where there are alterations on the face of a will, there is no presumption of law that they were made at any particular time; but the rule applicable to such cases is, that those who propound a doubtful instrument must make the doubt clear. Williams v. Ashton, 1 J. & H. 115; 3 L. T. 177.

Therefore, where a testatrix told the witnesses to her will, at the time of attestation, that she had made alterations in her will, but did not allow them to see what the alterations were:—Held, that, in the absence of any means to determine what alterations were made before execution, the court could not give effect to any of them. Ib.

The will contained alterations and erasures affecting the amount and objects of the testator's bounty, the existence of which, at the time of execution, the attesting witnesses could not depose to:—Held, by the judicial committee of the privy council, there being an absence of all direct evidence as to the alterations and erasures, that the presumption of law was, that such alterations and erasures were made after the execution of the will and probate of the will granted in its original form. Cooper v. Bockett, 4 Moore, P. C. 149; 10 Jur. 931.

The ecclesiastical court granted probate of a will of personalty with cross lines drawn in ink over the bequests of certain legacies:—Held, on a claim raised by the parties interested in these legacies, that the will must be taken to have been executed after the cross lines were drawn, and that the only question was, what was the meaning of the testator, and that this was that the legacies were not to stand part of the will. Gann v. Gregory, 3 De G. M. & G. 777; 2 Eq. R. 484; 18 Jur. 1063; 2 W. R. 484.

In the absence of direct evidence, the court will presume that obliterations and alterations in a will have been made subsequently to its execution, and uphold the gifts which occur in the part so obliterated or altered. S. C., 1 Eq. R. 112; 17 Jur. 520; 1 W. R. 320.

A testator, who died in 1821, struck the name of one of the devisees out of his will, and interlined the names of two other persons above the erasure; but those alterations were not noticed in the attestation clause, nor was there anything to show, or from which it could be inferred, that they made before the will was executed:—Held, that they did not affect the devise. Simmons v. Rudall, 1 Sim. (N.S.) 115; 15 Jur. 162.

By the Statute of Wills (1 Vict. c. 26, s. 21) obliterations, interlineations, or other alterations in a will, after execution, are void, if not affirmed in the margin or otherwise by the signature of the testator, and the attestation of witnesses. Greville v. Tylee, 7 Moore, P. C. 320.

The mere circumstance of the amount, or the name of a legatee, being inserted in different ink, and in a different handwriting, does not alone constitute an obliteration, interlineation, or other alteration, within the meaning of the statute, nor does any presumption arise against a will being duly executed as it appears. The case is different where there is an erasure apparent on the face of the will, and that erasure has been superinduced by other writing. In such circumstances the onus probandi lies upon the party who alleges such alteration to have been done prior to execution, to prove by extrinsic evidence that the words were inserted before execution, and that they had the sanction of the testator. Ib.

In the absence of proof that certain words in a will, written with a different pen, and in different ink, and in a different handwriting, partly upon an erasure, were inserted prior to execution, so much of such will, consisting of the inserted words which constituted a reversionary disposition, pronounced against. Ib.

The case of Cooper v. Bockett (supra), considered and approved. Ib.

Although, when alterations are apparent on the face of a will, it cannot be presumed that they were made before execution, and they cannot be admitted to probate without some affirmative evidence that they were in fact so made, yet a court or jury trying this question of fact is not confined to any particular species of evidence, but may act upon any evidence which, having regard to all the circumstances, reasonably leads the judgment to the conclusion that the alterations were made before execution. Moore v. Moore, Ir. R. 6 Eq. 166.

A lawyer's holograph will settled property on his younger grandson Stephen for life, remainder to his first and other sons in tail male, then to his elder grandson Richard, remainder, &c. The word "Richard" was interlined, and "Stephen" struck out in the first, and vice versâ in the second case. These alterations were in the handwriting of, and initialled by, the testator, who had previously expressed his intention of settling the property on his grandsons in priority of birth, who also knew their names, and there was no reason why the younger should be preferred. There having been a subsequent opportunity for correcting the mistake before execution, and the appearance of the will and alterations raising the presumption, confirmed by the opinion of two experts, of contemporaneous writing, probate was decreed with such alterations. Ib.

A testator, by his will dated in 1834, devised and bequeathed real, copyhold, and personal estate upon certain trusts. Certain of the words in the declaration of trusts were interlineated. Probate was granted of the will by the consistory court of C. A question being raised whether, with regard to the real estate, the interlineation was made before or after the execution of the will:—Held, having regard to the granting of the probate by the consistory court, that it was made before the execution of the will. Cruttenden, In re, Davey v. Lansdell, 45 L. T. 465; 30 W. R. 57. See also REVOCATION BY CANCELLATION, ante, cols. 424, et seq.

D. MISTAKE OR MISDESCRIPTION.

General Principles.]—A court of equity will not supply words in a will unless there be palpably error scribentis. Molesworth v. Molesworth, 1 Cox, 75.

Testator's mistake not rectified, because nothing to show what would have been the intention, if no mistake. Smith v. Maitland, 1 Ves. 362.

Evidence of mistake not admissible to affect the construction of a will. Shergold v. Boone, 13 Ves. 376; 9 R. R. 195.

Mistake in deed may be corrected in equity, but not a mistake in a will. Powell v. Mouchett and Lichfield v. Mouchett, 6 Madd. 216; 22 R. R. 276.

Parol evidence will not be admitted to show that a bequest in a former will had been inadvertently allowed to remain in a second will. Stringer v. Gardiner, 28 L. J., Ch. 758; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 260.

Mistakes in wills shall not be supposed, if any construction that is agreeable to reason can be made out. Purse v. Snaplin, 1 Atk. 415.

In our law particular legatees are always preferred to the residuary legatees. Secus in the Roman law. Id. 418.

When there is some property which exactly comes within the words of a bequest, the bequest will not include property to which it is doubtful whether the description can apply. Ridge v. Newton, 1 Con. & L. 381; 2 Dr. & War. 239; Ir. R. 4 Eq. 389.

A will cannot be varied upon the ground of mistake, unless the alleged mistake is clearly inconsistent with the intention upon the whole will. Mellish v. Mellish, 4 Ves. 45; 9 R. R. 335; Philips v. Chamberlaine, 4 Ves. 51.

A clerical error may be corrected where, if uncorrected, it makes the will absurd, and the proper correction can be gathered from the context. Northen's Estate, In re, Salt v. Pym, 54 L. J., Ch. 273; 28 Ch. D. 153; 52 L. T. 173; 33 W. R. 336.

A testator devised an estate called Lea Knowl to trustees upon trusts for the benefit of his daughter W., her husband and children, and empowered his trustees, at the request of his daughter W., to sell the estate and stand possessed of the sale moneys upon the trusts thereinbefore declared "concerning the said Lea Knowl estate hereby devised, as to such and so many of them as shall at the time of sale have been existing undetermined and capable of taking effect." He then devised an estate called Croxton to trustees upon similar trusts for the benefit of his daughter C., her husband and children, and empowered his trustees, at the request of his daughter C., to sell the last-mentioned devised hereditaments and stand possessed of the sale moneys "in trust for such person and persons, and for such estates, ends, intents, and purposes, powers, provisoes, and conditions, as are hereinbefore limited, expressed, and declared of and concerning the said Lea Knowl estate hereby devised, as to such and so many of them as shall at the time of sale have been existing undetermined and capable of taking effect":—Held, that the words "the said Lea Knowl estate" in the trusts of the moneys to arise from the sale of the Croxton estate had been inserted in the will through an obvious error; that to read the words "the said Lea Knowl estate" literally and grammatically would be making the will lead to a manifest absurdity or incongruity, and that the will must be read as if the words "the said Croxton estate" were inserted in the place of the words "the said Lea Knowl estate" in the trusts of the moneys to arise from the sale of the Croxton estate. Ib.

Testator gave 100*l.* in trust to pay the interest to A. till her daughter, B., should attain twenty-four, and then he gave the said 100*l.* and the interest then due to her said mother, A.:—Held, a mistake, and decreed the legacy to be paid to the daughter at the age of twenty-four. Clarke v. Norris, 3 Ves. 362.

Testator devised all the residue of his estates, as well copyhold as freehold, the copyhold part thereof having been previously surrendered to the use of his will upon several trusts in favour of his wife and children; the only trust for his eldest son and heir was an annuity of 300*l.* for life, remainder to his wife and children. The testator having never surrendered his copyhold, it was held a mistaken description, the copyhold being clearly intended to pass; and the annuity being much more valuable, the heir was decreed to elect, and was not bound by receiving half a year's payment of the annuity while abroad. Rumbold v. Rumbold, 3 Ves. 65.

A testator devised his freehold estate to his widow, charged with a legacy to another, and also bequeathed to his widow his personal estate. The widow, by her will, gave a leasehold estate, part of the same property (erroneously describing it as a freehold), to A., subject, in conjunction with the freehold premises, to the legacy; and she devised the freehold premises to B., subject, with the premises devised to A., to the payment of the same legacy:—Held, that the fact of the testatrix having left the estates to A. and B. respectively, in the mistaken supposition that both estates were, under the will of the original testator, subject to the legacy, but which he had charged on the freehold only, was no ground for exonerating the estate bequeathed to A., for there was no reason to presume the testatrix would have apportioned her bounty differently if the mistake had not occurred. Westcott v. Cullifford, 3 Hare, 265; 13 L. J., Ch. 136; 8 Jur. 166.

A testator gave to his wife, so long as she should continue his widow and until all his four daughters by his former wife should attain twenty-one or die under twenty-one, an annuity of 800*l.*, and a further annuity of 100*l.* in respect of each of such daughters who should for the time being be under twenty-one, such annuities to be employed by her in maintaining herself and hi said daughters, and in educating the daughters After all his four daughters had attained twenty-one or died, he bequeathed to his wife during widowhood 600*l.* a year, and after her future marriage 200*l.* a year; and if he should have any children by his then wife, he bequeathed to his wife in respect of each of such children who should for the time being be under twenty-one a further annuity of 150*l.*, to commence after all his said four daughters should have attained twenty-one or died, to be applied by his wife in maintaining and educating such children, and to be paid by equal half-yearly payments, the first of such payments to be made at the expiration of six calendar months from his decease. He gave his residuary estate among such of his children by both wives as being sons should attain twenty-one, or being daughters attain that age or marry, in equal shares, subject to a provision for making the share of each child by the second wife exceed the share of a child by the former wife by 3,000*l.* There was the usual clause of maintenance, subject to a proviso that the power of giving maintenance should not be exercised as to any child while the annuity bequeathed to his wife in respect of such child was payable, unless the trustees thought the annuity insufficient. At the testator's death several of the daughters by the first wife were under twenty-one:—Held, that evidence that the latter of the two clauses was left in the will by mistake, and contrary to the testator's express instructions, was not admissible. Bywater, In re, Bywater v. Clarke, 18 Ch. D. 17; 30 W. R. 94.

Specific devises to various persons are void for uncertainty, if the testator, intending to select the particular subject-matter of the devise for each person, uses words that are not sufficiently clear to allow the particular gifts to be distinguished from one another. Asten v. Asten, 63 L. J., Ch. 834; [1894] 3 Ch. 260; 8 R. 496; 71 L. T. 228.

Mistake in Figures or Amounts.]—Though a debt devised amounts to a less sum than is stated in the will, yet the wrong description and falling short will not defeat the legacy, but shall be applied as far as it goes in the same manner as if there had been the whole sum mentioned in the will. Att.-Gen. v. Pyle, 1 Atk. 435.

Mistake in the computation of a legacy rectified according to the intention, though contrary to the words. Milner v. Milner, 1 Ves. 106.

Mistake in a will and codicil, as to the amount of a fund out of which younger children were to be provided for, rectified on the evident intent of the testator. Brackenbury v. Brackenbury, 2 Eden, 275; Ambl. 474.

A testator bequeathed "an annuity of 21*l.* per annum, which I purchased from J. G." The testator never had an annuity of that amount, but he had purchased from J. G. for 300*l.* an annuity of 46*l.* per annum, and had insured the life of J. G. at an annual premium of 25*l.*, and had made an entry in his books of "300*l.*, lent to J. G. at 7 per cent., 21*l.*; 25*l.*, premium on policy of assurance, 300*l.*":—Held, that the whole annuity of 46*l.* passed to the legatee. Purchase v. Shallis, 2 Hall & Tw. 354; 19 L. J., Ch. 518; 14 Jur. 403.

Devise of estates to A., upon condition that A. should release, in favour of her brother B., all A.'s interest in 1,000*l.*, "charged upon certain estates, limited by the marriage settlement" of the father and mother of A. and B. The sum of 2,000*l.* was comprehended in the settlement, and A. took an interest in it, but it was not charged on any estate:—Held, nevertheless, that it was the sum referred to in the will. Howard v. Conway, 1 Coll. C. C. 87; 13 L. J., Ch. 193; 8 Jur. 237.

Testator, possessed of 5,000*l.* 3 per cent. consols, bequeathed 2,000*l.* thereof to trustees, in trust as to 1,000*l.* to A., and as to 2,000*l.* to B.:—Held, that testator meant to give trustees 3,000*l.* in trust, bequest to them of the 2,000*l.* 3 per cent. being mentioned only once, and legacy of 2,000*l.* to B. being mentioned twice. Alford v. Green, 5 Madd. 92.

A will contained a bequest of 1,000*l.* on trusts, and of 5,000*l.* on trusts, and another bequest on trusts in which no sum was mentioned; but the language was continuous, and no actual blank was left. In another part of the will there was power to invest the said sum of 5,000*l.*, and the said two sums of 1,000*l.*:—Held, that the latter clause was evidence that the testator intended a bequest of 1,000*l.* in the bequest in which no sum was named. Edmunds v. Waugh, 4 Drew. 275; 6 W. R. 589.

A testator gave to each of his three brothers and six sisters a legacy of 500*l.*, and other legacies to other relations of his, which, with the preceding legacies to his brothers and sisters, amounted to 6,100*l.* He then gave "the remainder of his property to his wife absolutely, except 4,100*l.*, of which she was only to have the use during her life, and which he wished to be divided among his relations to whom he had left legacies in the fore part of his will, in proportion to the legacies left above, which would just make their legacies double the first bequest":—Held, that although there had been a mistake by the testator in computing the amount of the legacies given by him in the former part of his will, there was no such evidence of a clear intention on his part to double the amount of the preceding legacies as would justify the court in holding that the words "four thousand one hundred pounds" ought to be read "six thousand one hundred pounds." Thompson v. Whitelock, 4 De G. & J. 490; 28 L. J., Ch. 793; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 991; 7 W. R. 625.

A testator bequeathed 500*l.* to his widow, and by a codicil he bequeathed her "a further sum, not exceeding 300*l.*, making altogether a legacy of 1,000*l.* given to her by my will and this codicil":—Held, that there was a mere miscalculation, and that, under the codicil, the widow was only entitled to 300*l.* Morgan v. Middlemiss, 35 Beav. 278.

A testatrix bequeathed all her property, real and personal, to her son; and in the event of his receiving 450*l.*, or thereabouts, to which she considered herself entitled, she requested that he would add to that sum 50*l.*, to make up 400*l.*, which she left to her grand-daughter. The testatrix received the 450*l.* in her lifetime:—Held, that the legacy as to the 450*l.* was not specific or demonstrative, but conditional on the son receiving 450*l.*, and that the grand-daughter was not entitled to be paid that sum out of the general assets of the testatrix. Taylor v. Creagh, 8 Ir. Ch. R. 281.

In Description of Stock.]—Bequest in these terms by a testatrix having, among other property, Government securities and bank stock, "the whole of my fortune now standing in the funds":—Held, not falsa demonstratio, nor to extend to the bank stock, but to be restricted to the Government securities. Grainger v. Slingsby, 8 De G. M. & G. 385; 25 L. J., Ch. 573; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 276, 1176; 4 W. R. 623. And see S. C., 7 H. L. Cas. 273; 28 L. J., Ch. 616; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 111.

A. bequeathed "his 10,000 dollars Indiana 5 per cent. stock." He had, prior to his will, possessed that amount, but, at that time, it had been changed into 5,000 of that stock, some 2½ per cent. Indiana stock, and some canal stock, all of which he retained until his death :—Held, that the 5,000 dollars alone passed. Gilliat v. Gilliat, 28 Beav. 481.

When a testator has stock which accurately answers the description in his will, though different in amount, the description will not be extended to stock of a different description. Ib.

A bequest of bank stock held to pass 3¼ per cent. annuities, no other stock being standing in the name of the testator either when he made his will or at his death. Drake v. Martin, 23 Beav. 89 ; 26 L. J., Ch. 786.

A bequest of eight Russian bonds purchased by L., his broker :—Held, to pass different Russian bonds purchased through another broker. Ib.

A testator bequeathed to each of his six cousins "3,000*l.* 3 per cent. consols, part of that sum standing in his name in the funds." The estate at the time of his death was insufficient to satisfy the whole of the legacies. Amongst other property he was entitled to 11,000*l.* new 3 per cent. annuities, but to no consols or any other stock :—Held, that the legatees were entitled to the 11,000*l.* stock in equal shares. Burbey v. Burbey, 15 L. T. 501 ; 15 W. R. 479.

A general gift of money or shares in a particular society will not be invalidated by words erroneously describing the amount. Lane v. Way, 19 W. R. 842.

A. bequeathed "all his shares in a banking company then standing in the names of A. and B." to C. At the date of the will twenty shares were standing in the name of "B. as executor of A.," and fifty-nine shares were standing in the name of B. alone. There was a gift of the residue of the personalty contained in the will :—Held, that all the shares passed by the bequest to C. Coltman v. Gregory, 40 L. J., Ch. 352 ; 23 L. T. 583 ; 19 W. R. 122.

Husband devises to his wife 700*l.* East India stock, having none ; but there was 700*l.* bank stock, to the surplus of which the wife was entitled as an executrix, after payment of her testator's debts, and which the husband afterwards transferred in his own name. The 700*l.* bank stock shall go to the wife, being an erroneous description. Door v. Geary, 1 Ves. 255.

Testatrix bequeathed "to my uncle P. P. the interest on 200*l.*, being part of a greater sum, in Government stock, now remaining in my name in the Bank of Ireland," and after his decease "this principal sum of 200*l.* to be divided equally between the children of P. P." The testatrix had no stock in her name at the date of her will or at her decease, but was entitled to 1,000*l.* stock standing in her mother's name, to whom she was executrix and sole residuary legatee :—Held, that the legacy was specific, and that 200*l.* of the stock standing in the name of her mother passed to the legatee. Power v. Lenehan, 2 Jones, 728.

A testator directs the produce of his real estate to be invested by his executors in their own names in 4 per cent. consols. He then directs them to transfer the 4 per cent. consols and 3 per cent. consols, then standing in his name, to the said account in their own names, and afterwards disposes of "the said 4 per cent. trust stock." This disposition under the special provisions of the will includes the 3 per cent. consols which were standing in his name at the making of the will. Jacques v. Johnson, 2 Myl. & K. 64.

Bequest by will made in 1857 of "my shares in the Great Western Railway." At the date of the will testatrix had no shares, strictly speaking, in the Great Western or any other railway company, but she was possessed of Wilts and Somerset stock of the Great Western Railway, and also of preference and other stock, which was increased by further purchases of stock in the same company between the date of the will and her death :—Held, that all the Great Western and Wilts and Somerset stock in the possession of the testatrix at her death passed under the bequest. Trinder v. Trinder, L. R. 1 Eq. 695 ; 14 W. R. 557.

A testatrix gave all her leasehold and personal estate to trustees, upon trust to pay the rent and profits of two specified houses to A., and she gave the sum of 100*l.* bank stock to B. when he attained the age of twenty-one years, and in the case of his death to C. At her death the testatrix had bank annuities, but no bank stock :—Held, that 100*l.* bank annuities would not satisfy the gift of bank stock, but that the trustees must purchase 100*l.* bank stock out of the funds of the testatrix. Bignall v. Rose, 24 L. J., Ch. 27 ; 3 W. R. 77.

A testatrix bequeathed 8,000*l.* bonds which she described as "standing in the names of A. and B. at C.'s bank." She had 8,000*l.* bonds standing in the names of A. and B., but part only of such bonds was at C.'s bank, the remainder being at Y.'s bank :—Held, that the bonds at both banks passed. Hull v. Hill, 4 Ch. D. 97 ; 25 W. R. 223.

D., being possessed of 4,000*l.* 4 per cent. bank annuities, by his will gave parts of it to a number of persons ; he then made a codicil in which he said, "I find willed away only 5,600*l.* 4 per cent. bank annuities, and I have there at present 6,000*l.* I give the interest of the remaining 400*l.* to F." It appeared that he had disposed of only 3,200*l.* of the stock by his will. F. shall take the whole residue of the stock under the bequest in the codicil. Danvers v. Manning, 1 Cox, 203 ; 2 Bro. C. C. 18.

A bequest of "the capital stock or sum of 800*l.* consols," with other specific property, does not pass 800*l.* consols standing in the joint names of the testator and his wife. Poole v. Odling, 10 W. R. 591.

If testator gives stock standing in his name, and has no such stock, the legacy fails. The court sends it to the master to inquire what the testator intended as well where there is a misdescription of fund as of legatee. Evans v. Tripp, 6 Madd. 91.

A. having forty-one shares in a bank standing in her own name and being her own property, and having only a life interest in twelve shares in the same bank standing in the name of B. as trustee of a deed by which she had put in settlement those twelve shares, by her will recited that she was entitled to twelve shares in the bank, which stood in the name of herself and B. as trustee for her, and bequeathed the said shares to three persons :—Held, that the bequest was inoperative, and could not be made good out of her own shares. Millar v. Woodside, Ir. R. 6 Eq. 546.

A testator bequeathed to his son all the shares he held in the Hibernian Bank, and all dividends that might be due thereon at his decease, in trust for his eldest daughter, to his son all the stock of the governor and company of the Bank of Ireland to which he might be entitled at his decease in trust for the benefit of another daughter and her children, and he appointed his son residuary legatee. The testator had not at the date of his will or of his death, but some years before he had had, Bank of Ireland stock:—Held, that new 3 per cent. Government stock, which he was entitled to at his death, did not pass under the latter bequest. Beahan v. Beahan, 14 Ir. Eq. R. 427; 17 W. R. 603.

A testator gave to his niece "1,000*l.*, and all the policies of life insurance which I have effected in the Union and Law Life insurance offices, and the moneys payable in respect thereof; and I direct the same to be paid to her" in a specified manner. He then gave to his wife "the other policies of life insurance which I have effected in any other offices"; and the gift of his residuary personal estate to his wife contained in its enumeration "shares in public companies." The testator never had any "policies" effected on his life in the Union or Law Life insurance offices, but he had "shares" in those offices, and in other offices, as well as two policies on his life in one other insurance office. On a case stated between the niece and widow of the testator:—Held, that the testator, imagining in error that he had policies in two offices, meant to give those policies; that where he meant to give shares he had so described them; and that, as it could not be known what will the testator would have made if he had not committed this error, the court held that the shares did not pass under the description of policies. Waters v. Wood, 5 De G. & Sm. 717; 22 L. J., Ch. 206; 17 Jur. 33.

In June, a testator directed his bankers to purchase 1,127 francs French rentes for him. They entered the purchase in their books, but never transferred the amount into the testator's name; they had, however, sufficient rentes to answer it, which they considered they held for the testator. In July following the testator bequeathed "the annual rente of 1,127 francs, inscribed in his name in the book of public debt of France," to A.:—Held, that A. was entitled to 1,127 rentes, although the testator had none in his name, and though, on the balance of previous transactions in rentes with his banker, he was entitled only to 708 francs in rentes. Ellis v. Eden, 25 Beav. 482.

Testator gave a sum, part of his 4 per cent. bank annuities, to his wife for life, and after her decease to several relations; evidence was admitted that he had no such stock at the date of the will, having previously sold it all and invested the produce in long annuities, and to show the cause of the mistake; and the legacies were established. Selwood v. Mildmay, 3 Ves. 306.

Testator bequeathed part of his 3 per cent. consolidated bank annuities; upon evidence that he had no bank stock at the date of his will or his death, but that he had 3 per cent. South Sea annuities, the legacy was established. Id. 808.

Bequest of stock if the testator has it at the time is specific, and any act destroying it proves an intention to revoke; if a ring or a picture bequeathed cannot be found, that cannot be rectified. Id. 310.

In 1843 a testatrix made several bequests to the amount of 1,000*l.* "of the stock 3 per cent. consols then standing in her name in the books of the Bank of England." The testatrix died in the same year, and had not, at the date of the will or at her death, any stock whatever standing in the bank books. It appeared, however, from extrinsic evidence, that in 1840 she had had a sum of 1,000*l.* bank annuities standing in her name, which she sold out and lent to A. B., he paying her, down to her death, a sum equal to the dividends. It was held that extrinsic evidence was admissible to prove how the mistake in description arose, and that the legatees were entitled to a sum equal to the value of 1,000*l.* consols at her death. Lindgren v. Lindgren, 9 Beav. 358; 15 L. J. Ch. 428; 10 Jur. 674.

In Description of other Property.]—Testator bequeathed all his property in the Austrian and Russian funds, and also that vested in a Swedish mortgage security. The testator at the date of his will had several sums invested on different Swedish mortgages:—Held, that the bequest was not void for uncertainty, but that all the sums invested on Swedish mortgages passed by it. Richards v. Patteson, 15 Sim. 501; 11 Jur. 113.

By her will the testatrix recited that she was absolutely entitled to the sum of "500*l.* invested in the Australian Bank on deposit receipt, and also to the sum of 200*l.* on deposit receipt in Messrs. G.'s, making together the sum of 700*l.*," and bequeathed to her son 300*l.*, and to each of her two daughters 200*l.*, portions of the said sum of 700*l.* At the time of making her will, and at the time of her death, the testatrix had no sum on deposit receipt in Messrs. G.'s, nor any sum on deposit receipt in the Australian Bank, but there were standing in her name eleven shares in the Union Bank of Australia:—Held, that these shares passed under the bequest of the sum on deposit receipt in the Australian Bank. Mosse v. Cranfield, [1895] 1 Ir. R. 80.

A testator makes a general devise of all his lands in nine parishes; in five of them he had only lands in fee; in three others he had only lands over which he had a power of appointment; in the other he had lands in fee, and also lands over which his power extended. All the lands pass by his will, except the lands in the latter parish, which were subject to his power. Napier v. Napier, 1 Sim. 28; 5 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 65.

A testator gave his four leasehold messuages in L. P., with other tenements in trust out of the rents to pay the ground rents of the whole, and of another tenement in Y. P., comprised in the lease under which two of the houses in L. P. were held, and to apply the surplus on certain trusts. The testator had five messuages in L. P. held under four leases:—Held, on the context, that the five messuages passed under the bequest. Sampson v. Sampson, L. R. 8 Eq. 479; and see Blundell v. Gladstone, 3 Mac. & G. 692.

In Wording of Gift.]—By her will, dated April 1, 1895, a testatrix, among other legacies, bequeathed to A. "the sum of 300*l.* in addition to the sums owing to her from my late husband's estate," and she appointed A. and another person executrix and executor. The testatrix died on April 11, 1895. A. alone proved the will. The estate of the testatrix consisted almost entirely of property derived by her under the will of her deceased husband. A. was a grandniece of the testatrix, and for many years had resided with her and her husband and had assisted them in household matters. She was paid a nominal salary of 8*l.* per annum, it being, as she alleged, always understood that she should be provided for by the sums of money given or secured to her by the testatrix's husband. These sums were represented by an I O U for 500*l.* and a promissory note for the same amount. In her administration accounts she included the payment to herself of the two sums of 500*l.* :—Held, that the testatrix being the person to pay, and having the whole estate of her husband in her hands, her intention was that A. should receive thereout the two sums of 500*l.* plus the 300*l.* expressly bequeathed to her, the reference to such sums as debts of her husband being a mere falsa demonstratio. Rowe, In re, Pike v. Hamlyn, 77 L. T. 475—C. A.

In naming Beneficiary.]—Testator gave 100*l.* in trust to pay the interest to A. till her daughter, B., should attain twenty-four, and then he gave the said 100*l.* and the interest then due to her said mother, A. :—Held, a mistake, and decreed the legacy to be paid to the daughter at the age of twenty-four. Clarke v. Norris, 3 Ves. 362.

In Number of Class—Principle.]—In the case of a testamentary gift to children, describing them as consisting of a specified number which is less than the number in existence at the date of the will, the court rejects the specified number on the presumption of mistake, and all the children in existence at the date of the will are held entitled, unless it can be inferred who are the particular children intended, in which case the court holds those children entitled to the exclusion of the others. When a testator in a bequest to a class describes the class as consisting of a number which is found to differ from the number actually existing at the date of the will, the presumption that the testator intended to benefit the whole class is liable to be rebutted by evidence. Newman v. Piercey, 46 L. J., Ch. 36 ; 4 Ch. D. 41 ; 35 L. T. 461 ; 25 W. R. 37.

—— Specified Number less than Actual Number.]—A testator bequeathed "to the two sons and the daughter of A. B., 50*l.* each." At the date of the will, and the death of the testator, A. B. had one son and four daughters ; each of these five children is entitled to a legacy of 50*l.* Harrison v. Harrison, 1 Russ. & M. 72 ; Taml. 273.

Legacy of 100*l.* to the three sisters of A. ; A. had four sisters. The court will reject the word "three" and give the 100*l.* to the four. A release by one of the sisters to the other three does not aid their claim to the legacy under the will. Lee v. Pain. 4 Hare, 249.

Bequest of 100*l.* each to the two children of the testator's nephews, A. and B. A. had three children, and B. two children :—Held, that the five children, who were living at the date of the will and at the death of the testator, were entitled under the bequest to 100*l.* apiece. Morrison v. Martin, 5 Hare, 507.

Bequest to the two servants that should live with testatrix at her death ; she had three at that time, and all of them were held entitled. Sleech v. Thorington, 2 Ves. 560.

Testator bequeathed 500*l.* to each of the daughters of C., if both or either of them should survive D. At the date of the will, and the death of the testator, C. had three daughters, all of whom survived D. : the three daughters are entitled to 500*l.* each. Scott v. Fenoulhett, 1 Cox, 79.

Legacy to the three children of A., the sum of 600*l.* each ; four children, all born before the date of the will, entitled to 600*l.* each. Garvey v. Hibbert, 19 Ves. 125 ; 12 R. R. 155.

A., by will, gave to the two daughters of S. the sum of 10*l.* each. B., by will, gave 82*l.* short annuities, in trust to pay the same to and between the two daughters of S. in equal shares and proportions ; and if either of them should die before the expiration of the term for which the annuities were to run, then to pay the whole to the survivor ; but if both should die before that time, then the same was to fall into the residue of the personal estate. At the times when both these wills were made, S. had three daughters. Under the first will the three daughters shall take 10*l.* each ; and, under the second, the three shall take the short annuities equally, with survivorship amongst them all. Stebbing v. Walkey, 1 Cox, 250 ; 2 Bro. C. C. 85.

Bequest, in 1829, of 40*l.* a year to each of the seven children now living of J. S. Y. He had nine children then living :—Held, that they all took. Yeats v. Yeats, 16 Beav. 170.

Gift of 250*l.* to each of the two children of S. He had three children :—Held, that the three children were each entitled to 250*l.* Spencer v. Ward, L. R. 9 Eq. 507 ; 22 L. T. 702 ; 18 W. R. 858.

The executors, in ignorance that there were three children, paid the eldest, who was of age, her legacy, and set apart 250*l.* for the second, and also paid all the debts and other legacies, and paid over the residue to the residuary legatee. On a bill by the two younger children against the executors and residuary legatee, the court declared them entitled, and ordered the legacies and the costs, including those of the executors, to be paid by the residuary legatee. Ib.

A bequest of 10*l.* and furniture was made to each of the three children of W. and E. B. They had four children :—Held, that each of the four was entitled to 10*l.* and a share of the furniture. Perkins or Parkins v. Fladgate, Bassett, In re, 41 L. J., Ch. 681 ; L. R. 14 Eq. 54 ; 20 W. R. 589.

The testator gave the residue "amongst his seven children, A., B., C., D., E. and F.," naming only six. The seven children shall all share equally. Humphreys v. Humphreys, 2 Cox, 185.

A testator, having given to each of his six children a freehold estate, made a second devise to two of the children, and then gave, devised, and bequeathed all the residue of his real and personal estate unto his said four children, naming three only :—Held, that all the four children (other than the two) were entitled. Eddels v. Johnson, 1 Giff. 22 ; 27 L. J., Ch. 302 ; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 255 ; 6 W. R. 401.

A testator bequeathed a fund equally amongst his nine grandchildren, the three children of A., the three children of B., the two children of C., and the child of D. C., at the date of the will, had four children, two by each marriage. It was proved that the testator took an interest in the children of the first marriage, and had declared an intention of benefiting them alone :—Held, that this evidence was inadmissible ; that all C.'s children were entitled ; and that the fund was, therefore, divisible in elevenths. Mathews v. Foulsham, 4 N. R. 500 ; 11 L. T. 82 ; 12 W. R. 1141.

A testator bequeathed certain property, after the death of his wife, as follows: "To our three children, Henry and James, now residing with me, our sons, and the beforenamed Anne, our daughter." This last member of the sentence had been stroked with a pen, as if to obliterate the words, but they were still quite legible. The testator subsequently reacknowledged the will in presence of three witnesses:—Held, that the previous words of description, "our three children," were sufficient to entitle Anne to take, even if the obliteration were complete, which it was not. Boyd v. Martin, 2 Dr. & Wal. 355.

A testatrix, in 1831, made a will, bequeathing as follows: "To the three children of my niece, F. W., the sum of 500*l.* each." At the date of this will, F. W. had three children only, as the testatrix knew. F. W. subsequently had six other children, of the birth of each of whom the testatrix was informed. The testatrix, in 1836, 1842, and 1844, made three new wills, successively revoking the former, in each of which the bequest was repeated in the same words:—Held, that the bequest in the will of 1844 must be read as if the word "three" had been omitted, or had been the word "nine." Daniell v. Daniell, 3 De G. & Sm. 337; 18 L. J., Ch. 157; 13 Jur. 164.

A will contained the following bequest:—"I bequeath to each of my four nieces . . . the daughters of my deceased brother Joseph Vaughan, the sum of 500*l.*" At the date of the will there were five daughters of Joseph Vaughan, living, all of whom survived the testator, by two of whom a bill was filed, praying for a declaration that each of the testator's five nieces was entitled to a legacy of 500*l.*:—Held, that the testator was ignorant of the state of the family, or that he intended at some future time to exercise a choice, and that the former was the more probable. And the word "four" must, therefore, be rejected as falsa demonstratio. McKechnie v. Vaughan, L. R. 15 Eq. 289; 28 L. T. 263; 21 W. R. 399.

A testator bequeathed a legacy to two sons and a daughter, naming them; and the residue of his estate unto the four children of his deceased son Henry. The testator never had more than the four children, who were named; and his son Henry was still living. Henry had five children, all of whom were born at the date of the will, and known to the testator:—Held, that the five children of Henry were entitled to the residuary estate. Lee v. Lee, 10 Jur. (N.S.) 1041.

—— Actual Number less than Specified Number.]—The testator bequeathed an annuity to his niece, during the lives of herself and her five daughters, and the survivors and survivor of them, and, after the death of the niece, the annuity was to be paid to her said daughters, and the survivors and survivor of them. The testator's niece had five sons, and only one daughter, at the date of the will and at the death of the testator:—Held, that this only daughter was entitled to the annuity. Selsey (Lord) v. Lake (Lord), 1 Beav. 146; 8 L. J., Ch. 233.

A husband directed that after the death of his wife his trustees should pay and divide 1,000*l.* equally between such ten of the children or remoter issue of H. as the trustees should think fit. At the death of the widow there were only six descendants of H. living:—Held, that the sum was to be divided equally amongst them. Carthew v. Enraght, 26 L. T. 834; 20 W. R. 743.

A testator directs the residue of his property to be divided into eight equal shares, and disposed of "as follows among the children of B."; he then gives two shares to each of the two daughters, and one share to each of the three sons of B., making together only seven shares:—Held, that the whole residue is divisible amongst the children of B., in seven parts, each daughter taking two of those seventh parts, and each son one. Berkeley v. Palling, 1 Russ. 496; 4 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 226; 25 R. R. 115.

Specified Number not rejected — Intention ascertainable.] — The principle on which an erroneous statement of the number of a class is rejected is to avoid uncertainty, and does not apply where a will affords the means of determining which of the class are pointed at. Under a bequest as follows: "I give to the two grandchildren of A. 19*l.* 19*s.* each. They live near B." A. had three grandchildren, of whom two only lived near B.:—Held, that the third grandchild was not entitled. Wrightson v. Calvert, 1 J. & H. 250.

A testatrix, by will made in 1873, bequeathed "to each of the three children of Mrs. W., widow of W. W., one hundred pounds." W. W., brother of the testatrix, died in 1857, leaving a widow and three children, of whom one died in 1870, and two survived. Mrs. W. married again in 1858, and had six children by that marriage living at the date of the will. The evidence shewed that the testatrix knew of the second marriage, and that there were children of that marriage, but that she did not know their number; also that she had not seen Mrs. W. for six years before the date of her will:—Held, that the two children by W. W. were alone entitled, and not the children of the second marriage. Newman v. Piercey, supra.

Bequest of stock to trustees in trust, after the death of A., to transfer the same to and amongst all and every the nephews and nieces that should be then living to wit, the said J. B. or her children, and the said P. B. or his children, and D. L. or his children, and P. L. or his children; under this bequest a nephew not expressly named is not entitled to any share; and the fund is equally divisible amongst such nephews and nieces, and their children, as were living at the time of the death of A. Eccard v. Brooke, 2 Cox, 213; 2 R. R. 31.

Gift by will of stock to trustees, for "my four nephews and niece, namely, A., B., C. and D." The testator had four nephews and one niece, but he named three nephews only, and the niece:—Held, that the fourth nephew was not entitled to share in the fund. Glanville v. Glanville, 33 Beav. 302; 3 N. R. 58; 33 L. J., Ch. 317; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1189; 9 L. T. 470; 12 W. R 93.

Gift by will of a specific sum among the six children of A. A. had six children at the time; one more was born after the testator's will, but before the codicils: she shall not take a share with the six born before. Sherer v. Bishop, 4 Bro. C. C. 55.

Gift to each of the three children of testatrix's niece. At the date of the will the niece had three children living, and a fourth child en ventre sa mère at the time:—Held, the gift was to the three children only who were born at the date of the will. Emery, In re, Jones v. Emery, 3 Ch. D. 300.

Misdescription—Son for Daughter.]—A testator bequeathed 100*l*. apiece to the four sons of A. H. by a former husband. She had four children by such former husband, but one of them was a daughter:—Held, that the daughter took a legacy of 100*l*. Lane v. Green, 4 De G. & Sm. 239; 15 Jur. 763.

—— Name of one Grandchild omitted and Another repeated.]—Residue to six grandchildren, the name of one repeated, that of another omitted, all of them shall take. Garth v. Meyrick, 1 Bro. C. C. 30.

—— Uncle for Cousin.]—Bequest of 800*l*. to the four eldest children of the testatrix's cousin A. B., and 200*l*. to the three remaining children of her uncle, A. B. The testatrix had a cousin and uncle of that name; the cousin had seven children, and the uncle one, but he had three remaining grandchildren, one other having died:—Held, that the three younger children of the cousin were entitled to the 200*l*. Bristow v. Bristow, 5 Beav. 289.

Blanks—Treated as Absolute Omissions.]—Where there is no devisee named, this is an absolute omission, and cannot be supplied by parol evidence. Castledon v. Turner, 3 Atk. 258.

Gift, by will, of pictures to Lady ——, absolutely void, and shall not go to the master, nor be supported by parol evidence. Hunt v. Hort, 3 Bro. C. C. 311.

Where testator gave to Bread Street Ward 200*l*. according to Mr. ——'s will, parol evidence was not allowed to explain testator's intention where there was a blank only. Baylis v. Att.-Gen., 2 Atk. 239.

A gift to all the children of the testatrix, "with the exception of one, viz. ——," established as a gift to the class, not affected by the incomplete exception. Illingworth v. Cooke, 9 Hare, 37; 20 L. J., Ch. 512; 15 Jur. 572.

A legacy to a class not definitively fixed will be carried into effect so far as the objects can be ascertained, but blanks in a will cannot be filled up, though the testator apparently contemplated an extension of the class.

Bequest to all and every the sons and daughters of A., including —— who —— the —— illegitimate —— of A.:—Held, that the illegitimate children of A. could not take. Mason v. Bateson, 26 Beav. 404; 28 L. J., Ch. 391; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 400; 7 W. R. 225.

Devise and bequest of real and personal estate in trust for all the testator's nephews and nieces, the sons and daughters of his sister R., including ——, who —— the —— illegitimate —— of R., equally as tenants in common, is a good devise to the legitimate sons and daughters of R., exclusive of R.'s illegitimate children. Gill v. Bagshaw, 35 L. J., Ch. 842; L. R. 2 Eq. 746; 14 W. R. 1012.

A testator gave to his wife the income of his property in the funds, East India stock, or elsewhere, for her life. The principal of all such funds and stock and property he bequeathed and devised as follows: he bequeathed "one-half of my [here there was a blank] son, Montague James, to be under his own control, and the other moiety in trust for the children of my daughter Fanny." He made his son executor and residuary legatee:—Held, that no construction could be put on the blanks, and the son, as residuary legatee, took the whole. Taylor v. Richardson, 2 Drew. 16; 23 L. J., Ch. 9; 2 Eq. R. 332; 2 W. R. 29.

A testator bequeathed a sum of money to be appropriated "for some one or more purposes, charitable, philanthropic, or ":—Held, that the gift was not bad merely by reason of the blank; that the money must be treated as applicable for charitable or philanthropic purposes only. Macduff, In re, Macduff v. Macduff, 65 L. J., Ch. 700; [1896] 2 Ch. 451; 74 L. T. 706; 45 W. R. 154—C. A.

W. bequeathed to trustees stock and moneys, in trust, after life interest, to be divided in equal shares as follows: "Unto and amongst my nephews and nieces, John Parker and Nanny Parker, ——, or to such of them as shall be living at the time of the decease of all of them" the tenants for life. The words "Nanny Parker" were written in pencil, and were followed by a long blank. The will was proved, and the words "Nanny Parker," were in the probate. The testator had, at the time of his death, including John Parker and Nanny Parker, fourteen nephews and nieces. It being uncertain what bequest the testator meant to make:—Held, that the next of kin were entitled to the fund. Greig v. Martin, 5 Jur. (N.S.) 329; 7 W. R. 315.

Bequest "unto each of my four nieces ——, the daughters of my deceased brother Joseph, the sum of 500*l*." There were five daughters of Joseph, who all survived the testator:—Held, that the blank left in the will was not sufficient to distinguish this case so as to take it out of the settled rule, and that each of the five nieces was entitled to a legacy of 500*l*. McKechnie v. Vaughan, L. R. 15 Eq. 289; 28 L. T. 263; 21 W. R. 399.

—— Filled up by Parol Evidence.]—Parol evidence as to facts and circumstances within the knowledge of the testatrix at the time of making her will was admitted to explain a patent ambiguity, and to make the description of a person perfect. S. B. gave and bequeathed unto A. and B. a sum of stock, in trust to pay the dividends unto S. D. for life; and, after her decease, "in trust to assign and transfer the same unto —— Davis, daughter of S. D., to and for her own use and benefit." At the date of the will, and at the death of the testatrix, S. D. had three daughters, the plaintiff being the eldest. S. D. died in 1842. Upon the evidence produced, and not rebutted, that the plaintiff was the only daughter of S. D. the testatrix ever knew or heard of:—Held, that the plaintiff was the person described as "—— Davis," and therefore entitled to the legacy. Phillips v. Barker, 1 Sm. & G. 583; 2 Eq. R. 795; 17 Jur. 1146; 2 W. R. 110.

Persons named in a will blank identified from external circumstances. Gregson's Trusts, In re, 4 N. R. 222; 2 H. & M. 504; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 696; 10 L. T. 642; 12 W. R. 935.

Where a testator devised real estate to A., B. and C., also his nephews and nieces D., E. and F., also "—— Cort and —— Cort"; and A., B. and C. were nephews and nieces, and the only persons of the name of Cort known to the testator were his brother-in-law and a nephew and a niece:—Held, that the nephew and niece were the persons intended by the testator. Ib.

Legacy to —— P., the son of —— P.; upon the evidence, the plaintiff, the only claimant, was declared entitled. Price v. Page, 4 Ves. 679.

—— In Figures.]—A testator purported to give a legacy, but left the sum blank. A little further on the sum of "30*l.*" occurred casually in the middle of a direction to the executors to sell the testator's furniture, &c. :—Held, that a legacy of 30*l.* was given. Hibbert v. Hibbert, 42 L. J., Ch. 383.

The wife made a will bequeathing the sum of £10 00 (sic) :—Held, that 1,000*l.* only passed by it, and contemporaneous evidence of a declaration by the testatrix as to what she had left rejected. Baker v. Ker, 11 L. R. Ir. 3.

E. INCONSISTENCY OR REPUGNANCY.

Principles.]—If the meaning of a will is ascertained, reasoning from supposed cases will not induce the court to make a different construction ; but can only lead to a conclusion that the testator did not see all the consequences ; but the absurdities, improbabilities, and inconsistencies, which may arise out of cases falling within one construction or another, are attended to with a view to ascertaining the meaning. Leigh v. Leigh, 15 Ves. 103 ; 10 R. R. 31.

Where literal force of expressions differs in a will, rule is to seek the intent of testator in a consistent and rational purpose, rather than in a purpose irrational and inconsistent. Jenkins v. Herries, 4 Madd. 67 ; 20 R. R. 272.

In construing a will, if two passages in it are directly opposed to each other, the latter will prevail ; but where there is a mere inconsistency, the court will endeavour to discover from the whole the real meaning of the testator, and, if possible, reconcile all its parts. Brocklebank v. Johnson, 20 Beav. 205.

Where there are two repugnant devises, what construction shall be put on the will. Davies v. Preece, Romilly's Notes of Cases, 147.

Latter Clause prevails.]—Every word in the construction of a will is to have effect, if not inconsistent with the general intention, which is to control. If two parts are inconsistent the latter prevails. Constantine v. Constantine, 6 Ves. 100.

The rule of construction of wills is, that if the general intention can be collected, or any one particular object, expressions militating with that may be rejected, if plainly appearing to have been inserted by mistake ; not otherwise, and if two parts of the will are totally irreconcilable, the latter overrules the former. Sims v. Doughty, 5 Ves. 243.

Of two inconsistent dispositions in a will, both being intelligible, whether occurring in the same sentence or in different sentences, the last is to prevail unless a contrary intention can be safely inferred from the context. Discussion as to the amount of internal evidence which will justify such an inference. Morrall v. Sutton, 1 Ph. 533 ; 14 L. J., Ch. 266 ; 9 Jur. 637. And see S. C., 4 Beav. 478 ; 5 Id. 100. And see Crone v. O'Dell, 1 Ball & B. 449 ; 3 Dow, 61 ; 15 R. R. 20.

Effect must be given to every part of a will if possible. But if two clauses are so irreconcilable as to be incapable of bearing a connected meaning, the earlier clause should be discarded, and effect given to the later one. Biggar v. Eastwood, 15 L. R. Ir. 219.

A testator bequeathed the interest of all moneys invested in loan societies, as well as all other property, to his wife for life. He then directed all his debts to be got in and invested in government securities for the benefit of his wife for her life, and after her decease he gave various legacies to his grandchildren ; and as to the remaining part of his estate, he directed the same to be put out at interest for the benefit of his wife, during her life, and all moneys were to be kept in the Bank of England. The testator afterwards directed that all moneys belonging to him in the friendly societies, when received, should belong to his wife for her own use absolutely :—Held, that the last clause in the will must control the first, and that the testator's wife was entitled to the money in the friendly societies absolutely, and not merely for life :—Held, also, that the trustees were not bound to convert the money in the societies immediately for the purpose of investment in government securities. Marks v. Solomon, 18 L. J., Ch. 234. Reversed 2 H. & Tw. 323 ; 19 L. J., Ch. 555, the wife being held to take only a life estate.

A testator directed his debts to be paid out of his personal estate, and in a subsequent clause, out of a mixed fund composed of realty and personalty :—Held, on the context, that the latter direction prevailed. Hopkinson v. Ellis, 10 Beav. 169 ; 16 L. J., Ch. 59.

There were two inconsistent clauses in a will. By the former, the surplus rents of the testator's real estates, after maintenance of the person entitled to the possession until twenty-five, were added to the residue of the personal estate. By the latter, the surplus rents, after maintenance of such person until twenty-one (provided his attaining twenty-one happened within the legal limit of time), were settled upon the same trusts as the realty. Testator then, by a codicil, reciting the former clause, directed that the person entitled to the possession of the estate should be let into the receipt of the rents and profits at twenty-one :—Held, that as the codicil merely affected the surplus rents between the ages of twenty-one and twenty-five, and as, in other respects, the latter of the two clauses in the will was more probably consistent with the testator's intentions, the latter clause should prevail against the former, notwithstanding the express recognition of the former clause by the codicil. Shipperdson v. Tower, 1 Y. & C. C. C. 441 ; 6 Jur. 658.

The rule of law in favour of preferring the latter to the former of two dispositions in a will dealing differently with the same subject, is applied only after the failure of every endeavour to give such a reasonable construction to the entire dispositions as will render every part of them operative. Ib.

A testator, after leaving all he possessed to his wife for life, and after giving at her death part of his property to one of his sons, gave, without any reference to his wife's death, a large specific portion of his property to trustees "for the support of another son, his wife and children, and for their education and starting in life, and at the death of their parents to be equally divided amongst those then living" :—Held, that the widow took a life interest in the specific property given to the trustees. Conquest v. Conquest, 16 W. R. 453.

A. devises an estate for life to his wife ; and in the latter part creates a trust term, to take place from the day of his death, for payment of debts in such manner as the wife should direct. Declared that the term, though subsequent, shall take place of the wife's estate for life, and that the last words do not give the wife the power of exempting her life estate, but only the power of raising it by the most convenient method, by mortgage or otherwise. Ridout v. Dowding, 1 Atk. 419.

In this case an absolute term of ninety-nine years limited to C., amongst other limitations of a real estate under a will, was, with reference to the true construction of the several parts of the will, considered not as an absolute term, but as determinable on the death of C. Coryton v. Helyar, 2 Cox, 340 ; 2 R. R. 75 ; cited Burr. 923, 1631.

When a certain time is appointed for the payment of a legacy, and afterwards a contingent clause is added touching the same legacy, all the words of the will must stand together, which can never be, unless the contingency happen within the period of time appointed for the payment of the legacy. Colhoun v. Thompson, Beat. 248.

Testatrix gave her real and personal estate to plaintiffs for life ; remainder to J. A. in tail ; remainder to R. A. in fee, with a few pecuniary legacies, and charged her real estate with the payment, if her personal estate should not be sufficient, and by her will declared she gave all the rest and residue of her personal estate to L. C.'s three daughters :—Held, that the testatrix's charging real estate with the legacies, if the personal is not sufficient, shows her intention in one event to revoke the devise of personal ; and there being an alteration of her intention before she finishes her will, the construction is, she has altered her will throughout, and plaintiffs are not entitled to any part of the personal estate, but residue belongs to three daughters of L. C. Ulrich v. Litchfield, 2 Atk. 372.

Where the same thing is given in a will to two different persons, Lord Coke said, "The latter words shall revoke the former," but in the case of Paramour v. Yardley (Plowd. 539) it was held they shall take as joint tenants ; but Lord Hardwicke said he rather inclined to Lord Coke's opinion. Ib. And see Ridout v. Pain, 3 Atk. 492.

So where a man gave a horse to A. in the first part of his will, and in the latter part he gave the same horse to B., it was held a revocation, and Swinburne, pt. 7, c. 1, is mistaken in point of law in saying they should take as joint tenants. Ib.

A testator by his will desired that his wife might reside during her widowhood in the freehold house in which he dwelt. After directing his business to be carried on by his executrix (who was his wife) and his executors, so long as they thought expedient, he gave the house, stock-in-trade, and the residue of his property to his executrix and executors, upon trust to pay the wife an annuity of 20*l.* so long as the business should be carried on, and when his youngest child attained twenty-one, to sell the business, stock, and effects, together with the house, and out of the proceeds to pay the wife during her widowhood an annuity of 54*l.* 10*s.* instead of one of 20*l.*, and subject thereto trusts were declared for the benefit of the children :—Held, that the widow's right to reside in the house ceased upon the sale. Chapman v. Gilbert, 4 De G. M. & G. 366.

Clear Gift not controlled by Subsequent Inconsistent Words.]—A will contained a gift to children and the issue of deceased children, in language which clearly did not vest it in any till the youngest child should have attained twenty-one. In a subsequent part there was a declaration as to the vesting of the shares, expressed with much obscurity, and partially inconsistent with the language of the gift :—Held, that it must be rejected, and the clear gift must take effect. Bickford v. Chalker, 2 Drew. 327 ; 2 W. R. 502.

When there is an express gift in a will, and there is a subsequent clause inconsistent with the first, but with only an implied revocation, the prior gift takes effect. Kerr v. Clinton (Baroness), L. R. 8 Eq. 462 ; 17 W. R. 980.

A testator having real estates subject to mortgages, for which he was not personally liable, devised his personal estate for payment of his debts, and the surplus to his wife absolutely, and in a subsequent devise of his real estate directed that his trustees should raise by sale thereof so much as his personal estate should prove insufficient for payment of the existing mortgages and charges upon the estate, and subject thereto he devised the estate to his sons :—Held, that this was not a revocation of the prior gift, and that the mortgage debts were not payable out of the personal estate. Ib.

The clear expression of a bequest, after the death of the tenant for life, to the children then living, held not to be controlled by other general expressions in the will, so as to vest any interest in one dying before the tenant for life. La Roche v. Davies, 3 Y. & C. 612, n.

A clear gift to surviving children will not be extended so as to include deceased children on account of a slight ambiguity, not amounting to an inconsistency, in the bequest. Crosse's Will, In re, 1 N. R. 419 ; 32 L. J., Ch. 344 ; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 429 ; 8 L. T. 299 ; 11 W. R. 396.

A testator gave to his wife, so long as she should continue his widow and until all his four daughters by his former wife should attain twenty-one or die under twenty-one, an annuity of 800*l.*, and a further annuity of 100*l.* in respect of each of such daughters who should for the time being be under twenty-one, such annuities to be employed by her in maintaining herself and his said daughters, and in educating the daughters. After all his four daughters had attained twenty-one or died, he bequeathed to his wife during widowhood 600*l.* a year, and after her future marriage 200*l.* a year: and if he should have any children by his then wife, he bequeathed to his wife in respect of each of such children who should for the time being be under twenty-one a further annuity of 150*l.*, to commence after all his said four daughters should have attained twenty-one or died, to be applied by his wife in maintaining and educating such children, and to be paid by equal half-yearly payments, the first of such payments to be made at the expiration of six calendar months from his decease. He gave his residuary estate among such of his children by both wives as being sons should attain twenty-one, or being daughters attain that age or marry, in equal shares, subject to a provision for making the share of each child by the second wife exceed the share of a child by the former wife by 3,000*l.* There was the usual clause of maintenance, subject to a proviso that the power of giving maintenance should not be exercised as to any child while the annuity bequeathed to his wife in respect of such child was payable, unless the trustees thought the annuity insufficient. At the testator's death several of the daughters by the first wife were under twenty-one :—Held, by Jessel, M.R., that the annuities of 150*l.* became payable from the testator's death, and were not postponed till all the daughters by the first wife had attained twenty-one or died, on the ground that, having regard to the scope of the will, the former of the two inconsistent clauses was to be rejected rather than the latter, independently of the rule that of two inconsistent clauses in a will the latter is to be preferred; but held, on appeal, that this was not a case of two inconsistent gifts, but of a gift of something to arise at a future time, with a subsequent direction as to the time of payment which was inconsistent with the terms of the original gift, and that such subsequent direction could not enlarge the gift, but must be rejected as inconsistent with it. Bywater, In re, Bywater v. Clarke, 18 Ch. D. 17; 30 W. R. 94.

Held, that evidence that the latter of the two clauses was left in the will by mistake, and contrary to the testator's express instructions, was not admissible. Ib.

Where a testator, using a common printed form of will, gave, devised, and bequeathed all his real and personal property and estate to Albert Twiddy Hart, with certain exceptions, and then, after a blank, came a full residuary clause in print unto Edmund Twiddy Hart, Amelia Collins, and Albert Dalby and John Collins, to and for their own use and benefit absolutely :—Held, that nothing remained upon which the second gift could operate, and that the first gift prevailed. Spencer, In re, Hart v. Manston, 54 L. T. 597; 34 W. R. 527.

A testatrix left all her property to J., subject to the payment of debts and funeral expenses and certain legacies, and willed that whatever residue (if any) should remain undisposed of at the decease of J. should go to T. J. died before the testatrix :—Held, that the gift to J. being absolute, that to T. was void for repugnancy; and that, as the gift to J. had lapsed, there was an intestacy as to the residue. Jenkins' Trusts, In re, 23 L. R. Ir. 162. See Stretton v. Fitzgerald, ante, col. 385, and Corbett v. Corbett, 58 L. J., P. 17; 14 P. D. 7; 60 L. T. 74; 37 W. R. 114—C.A.

Direction that particular legacies to children shall be paid at particular time is not altered by direction subsequent that all legacies should be paid at another time. Adams v. Clarke, 9 Mod. 154.

Upon the construction of a will :—Held, that the effect of general words of charge at the commencement was not cut down by subsequent words. Jones v. Williams, 1 Coll. C. C. 156; 8 Jur. 373.

A testator gave to G. an annuity of 400*l.* to be paid to him by the trustees of the will during his life, by equal half-yearly payments in every year, and directed a competent part of his property to be set apart to answer the annuity; and after the decease of G. he gave "the principal moneys so set apart, and also such part of the annuity as might then remain unapplied as aforesaid," to S., and made S. his residuary legatee. At the time of the will (though it did not appear on the will) G. was non compos mentis, and, though never so found by inquisition, continued in that state till his death. The trustees set apart a fund to answer the annuity, but did not apply the whole of the dividends in his maintenance; and on his death there was in value more than 1,000*l.* accumulated unapplied dividends :—Held, that these accumulations did not pass by the gift in remainder to S., which was repugnant to the gift of the entire annuity to G. in the first instance. Sanderson's Will, In re, 3 Jur. (N.S.) 809; 5 W. R. 864.

—— Gift controlled by Recital.]—A. bequeaths 1,000*l.* to such children as his daughter should leave at her death; B., her husband, receives it, and by his will, reciting that A. had promised to give it rather differently, but that he (B.) was, nevertheless, desirous to make good A.'s intent and will, bequeaths it equally between his sons C. and D.; D. alone survives his mother :—Held, that C.'s representatives were not entitled, and that A.'s will would have prevailed even if B. had intended to make a variation. East v. Cook, 2 Ves. 30.

Intention Prevails—Inconsistent Words Rejected or Corrected.]—Where the words of a will are so inconsistent that they cannot be reconciled, the court must reject those that are the least consistent with the testator's intent; and the same words in the same will, though in a different clause, ought to have the same sense; and, therefore, where the testator intended survivorship among his children in the personal, he must mean it in the real estate also. Haws v. Haws, 3 Atk. 524; 1 Ves. 13; 1 Wils. K. B. 165.

A videlicet shall be rejected if repugnant, not if it can be reconciled and made restrictive. Wilson v. Mount, 3 Ves. 194.

Repugnant words in a will may be rejected or transposed. In this case the court rejected a repugnancy by interlineation. Boon v. Cornforth, 2 Ves. 277.

L., in 1803, devised her freehold estates to the use of her grandson for his life, with remainder to the use of his children as therein mentioned, and, in default of such issue, to the use of her four granddaughters (naming them), their heirs and assigns, for ever, as tenants in common, and not as joint tenants. The testatrix also bequeathed her leaseholds to trustees after the death of her grandson, and in default of issue as above mentioned, upon trust for her four granddaughters and their issue equally, in such manner, shares, and proportions as she had thereinbefore directed respecting her freehold estate :—Held, that the gift of the leaseholds was absolute to the four persons mentioned, the words "and their issue" being inconsistent with the general intention apparent in the bequest of leaseholds. Buckingham v. Sellick, 26 L. T. 764.

A direction to divide residuary estate into as many shares as the testator should have children living "at the death or second marriage of his wife, which should first happen," or then dead leaving issue, was followed by immediate absolute gifts of two shares and contingent gifts of other shares :—Held, that the words fixing the time of distribution were inconsistent with the intention of the testator gathered from the whole will, and must be disregarded; and that all the shares vested at the testator's death. Smith v. Carpenter, 25 W. R. 824.

Annuity, part out of general assets, part specific, upon intention out of funds, some of which were perpetual, others temporary, to be divided equally between A., B., and C., and their heirs or the survivor of them, "in order as they are now mentioned" :—Held, that the annuity was limited only with reference to the temporary funds, with an absolute power of disposition; and that, A. dying in life of testatrix, her share goes to B. and C. equally, the concluding words "in order," etc., being rejected as repugnant. Smith v. Pybus, 9 Ves. 566.

Testator devised his real estates to the children of his sister, then or thereafter to be born, who should live to attain twenty-one, and the issue of such of them as should die under that age leaving issue living at their decease, and their heirs; and if no child of his sister should attain twenty-one, or dying without leaving issue, or dying under that age, should not leave such issue, or such issue dying under age as aforesaid, then over. The testator's sister had one child who attained twenty-one, and afterwards died without issue:—Held, that the child took an absolute estate in fee on attaining twenty-one. The words in italics were interlined in the original will, probably by mistake, and were rejected by the vice-chancellor. Lunn v. Osborne, 7 Sim. 56.

A testator directed his trustees to sell and convert his property, and "to pay the moneys and the investment for the time being, representing the same, to my wife during her life upon trust for all my children" at twenty-one or marriage. He also provided that, "after the death of my wife, or previously thereto, if she shall so direct in writing," the trustees should have powers of advancement and maintenance, and that if he had no child who attained twenty-one or married, "then from and after the death of my wife, and such default or failure of children," he gave the money over:—Held, that the widow took a beneficial interest in the fund for her life. Greenwood v. Greenwood, 47 L. J., Ch. 298; 5 Ch. D. 954; 37 L. T. 305; 26 W. R. 5.

Inconsistent expressions corrected. Tillard v. Smith, 1 Jur. 331.

General words controlled, in order to make the whole will consistent. Whitmore v. Trelawney, 6 Ves. 129.

—— When Repugnant Gift Over.]—Semble, though the events in which a gift over is expressed to take effect do not correspond with those in which the previous estate will fail, the intention is generally only to give the estate over in the event of the previous limitation not taking effect, and the court will so construe a gift. Hillersdon v. Lowe, 2 Hare, 355; 12 L. J., Ch. 321; 7 Jur. 482.

The testator gave his real and personal estate in trust to his nephew John for life, and, after his death, to be conveyed and transferred to the eldest son of John on his attaining twenty-one, with limitations over in like manner, if there was no such son of John, to two other nephews of the testator and their sons successively; and in case none of them (the said three nephews) should have a son who should survive the survivor of them, and attain twenty-one, the testator then devised the estate in like manner to a fourth nephew and his sons, with remainders over to their respective daughters:—Held, that the words of devise over to the fourth nephew took effect only in case none of the first three nephews should leave a son surviving his parent and attaining twenty-one, a different construction being repugnant to specific directions as well as to the general scheme of the will; and that, therefore, a son of John, surviving his father and attaining twenty-one, was entitled to an absolute conveyance and transfer of the real and personal estate. Ib.

A devise to A., B., and C. in fee, as tenants in common, "and in the event of any of them dying before having heirs of their body, or making a particular disposition of his or her property," then over:—Held, that "or" was to be read "and," and that the gift over was void for repugnancy. Greated v. Greated, 26 Beav. 621; 28 L. J., Ch. 756; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 454; 7 W. R. 367.

A. and B. having died in the lifetime of the testator, their shares held to have lapsed, and fallen into the residue. Ib.

—— Whole Will to Stand when possible.]—A testator gave various specific portions of personal estate to his wife for and during her natural life, if she should so long continue his widow; but at her death, or in case she should marry again, then he gave all the things before given, adding the words, "and effects, and also all my household furniture, which I hereby give to her for her sole use and benefit for and during the term of her natural life, if she shall so long continue my widow," to be equally divided among the children that he then had, or might thereafter have, by his said wife; but in case his wife should not marry again after his decease, he gave her "all and every his personal estate and effects whatsoever" for her life, and the same to be equally divided to and amongst such of his children as should be living at her decease, share and share alike. The testator died within three weeks after making his will:—Held, that the two clauses were not repugnant, but the first was intended to apply to the case of the widow marrying again, and the second to the case of her not marrying again; and the latter event being that which happened, the children living at the death of the widow were alone entitled, to the exclusion of representatives of deceased children. Wiggins v. Wiggins, 2 Sim. (N.S.) 226; 21 L. J., Ch. 742.

Devise on Condition void for Remoteness.]—A testator bequeathed a sum of 2,000*l.* to the trustees of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church for the erection of a mission-hall, and if the trustees of certain premises would sell them and hand the proceeds to the Assembly trustees for purposes specified in the will, then he further devised certain freeholds to the said Assembly trustees:—Held, that the devise was void for remoteness. Kingham v. Kingham, [1897] 1 Ir. R. 170.

Gift on Condition which becomes Impossible.] A legacy charged on the real estate of a testatrix, conditional on the marriage of the legatee with the sanction of the testatrix, does not fail because the performance of the condition has become impossible by reason of the death of the testatrix before the marriage of the legatee, the condition being applicable only in the event of marriage in the lifetime of the testatrix. Curren v. Corbet, [1897] 1 Ir. R. 343.

—— Condition which is Illegal.]—Where a testator, having by his will given certain property to his daughter for life and afterwards to her children, in a codicil expressed a wish that his daughter should not marry, and directed that on her marriage or death the gifts to her and her children should go over:—Held, on the construction of the will and codicil, that the gift over of the children's interest was a conditional gift in general restraint of marriage, and therefore void,

The principle of Morley v. Rennoldson (2 Hare, 570) applied. Morley v. Rennoldson, 64 L. J., Ch. 485; [1895] 1 Ch. 449; 12 R. 158; 72 L. T. 308; 43 W. R. 518—C. A. And see CONDITION.

F. CHANGING, TRANSPOSING, OR SUPPLYING WORDS.

1. IN GENERAL.

Changing.]—One name may be substituted for another in the construction of a will where it is manifest not only that the name used was not intended, but that a certain other name was necessarily intended. Dent v. Pepys, 6 Madd. 350; 23 R. R. 239.

Notwithstanding all the parties are volunteers under a will, it is not necessary that the words must be taken as they are, but in many cases they may be varied. Bagshaw v. Spencer, 2 Atk. 577.

Where the court is obliged to depart from the words of a will, it should rather be to support than to frustrate the intention of the testator. Ib.

Though real and personal estates are joined in the same devise, yet the same words may be taken in a different sense with regard to the different estates to support the intention of the party, ut res magis valeat quam pereat. Shelfield v. Orrery (Lord), 3 Atk. 288. And see Forth v. Chapman, 1 P. Wms. 663.

In the construction of wills, the court will consider the intention of the testator, the state of the parties provided for, and, to remove inconsistencies, will read the word "future" as "former." Pasmore v. Huggins, 21 Beav. 103; 25 L. J., Ch. 251; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 1060: 4 W. R. 33.

The words "the said fourth schedule," in a will:—Held, to mean "the said fifth schedule," upon a consideration of all the provisions of the will and of the state of testator's property and family when the will was made, although the actual words involved no contradiction nor repugnancy to the other provisions of the will, except by making in one instance insufficient provision for the charges thereby created, having regard to the value of the property, and by making capricious and improbable dispositions, at variance with what appeared to be the general intention. Hart v. Tulk, 2 De G. M. & G. 300; 22 L. J., Ch. 649.

Testator gave the interest of a fund to his wife for life, and after her death to such of his four daughters as should be then living, in equal shares, during their respective lives; and from and after the several deceases of his four daughters, he gave one-fourth of the capital to their respective children. One of the daughters died before the widow, leaving a child:—Held, that the child became entitled, on the widow's death, to have one-fourth of the capital transferred to her. Woodstock v. Shillito, 6 Sim. 416.

A testatrix gave her real estate in trust for her grandchildren (by name) and their issue, as F. should appoint, and in default of such appointment, upon trust for "my aforesaid nephews and nieces and their respective lawful issue, and also the issue (if any) of F., and their several and respective heirs and assigns, for ever," as tenants in common. No nephews or nieces were mentioned in the will. F. died without appointing:—Held, that there was no gift by implication to the grandchildren and their issue; secondly, that the words "my aforesaid nephews and nieces" could not be read "my aforesaid grandsons and granddaughters"; thirdly, that the gift to the nephews and nieces was not void for uncertainty; and lastly, that they took in tail. Campbell v. Bouskell, 27 Beav. 325.

Striking out.]—The court may expound the words in a will, but cannot strike them out. Southcot v. Wilson, 3 Atk. 233.

In construing the autograph will of an illiterate man, the meaning of technical language may be disregarded, but no word which has a clear and definite operation can be struck out. Hall v. Warren, 9 H. L. Cas. 420.

Where the testator appointed three parties and their respective assigns his executors, and throughout the will all acts done were to be theirs and their respective assigns', etc., one having died, and the survivors having agreed to sell the real estate:—Held, that the word respective might, in order to carry into effect the intention of the testator, be rejected, and the survivors might convey and give a valid receipt for the purchase-money. Jones v. Price, 11 Sim. 557; 10 L. J., Ch. 195; 5 Jur. 719.

Transposing.]—The court will not, save in the last resource, transpose the words in a will. Therefore, when a possible but remote and improbable sense could be attributed to the testator in the will as it stood, the court refused to transpose the order of the words in order to give effect to a much more natural and probable intention. Brown v. Walker (2 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 82) commented on. Key v. Key, 1 Jur. (N.S.) 372.

Courts of law and of equity will equally transpose words in instruments to make the limitation intelligible, and attain the party's clear intent, but never to defeat the instruments given, or let in more than expressed. Marlborough (Duke) v. Godolphin (Lord), 2 Ves. 74.

Order of words in wills not considered; if the intent better answered, it is otherwise. East v. Cook, 2 Ves. 32.

The words of a clause in a will are not to be added to, nor transposed, if they are susceptible of a reasonable construction as they stand. Amongst several gifts of sums of 300*l.* each to the grandnephews and nieces of the testator, some of which were to be paid at different ages, and others to be sunk in annuities for the lives of the respective legatees, occurred two bequests as follows: "Joseph Walker, 300*l.* annuity for life; Martha, 300*l.* an annuity for life":—Held, that Joseph and Martha were each entitled to annuities of 300*l.* for life. Walker v. Tipping, 9 Hare, 800; 16 Jur. 442.

It is a common rule of construction, that if the words of a gift are of themselves plain, distinct, and capable of having a legal effect, effect must be given to them, notwithstanding any improbabil ty which may arise from looking at the other parts of the will. On the other hand, if the words are ambiguous in expression or effect, they are not to be rejected for uncertainty, but you must collect, if you can, from the other parts of the will, an indication of what the testator meant by those words which by themselves appear to be ambiguous. Wilson v. Eden, 11 Beav. 289.

Where the words of a will are capable of a construction which will give effect to every word, it is not within the competency of the court to alter their collocation. S. C., 12 Beav. 454.

Supplying.]—When the testator expresses his intention incorrectly, the court will effect it by supplying proper words. Dodson v. Hay, 3 Bro. C. C. 404. And see Gordon v. Gordon, L. R. 5 H. L. 254.

The court may supply words in a will, where the context shews, by a necessary implication, what are the words omitted, and unless they are supplied there would be an intestacy. Hope v. Potter, 3 K. & J. 206; 5 W. R. 389.

So where there is a gift by will, and then a gift over, not commensurate with the original gift, the court will curtail the general words of the gift over, by supplying words of reference: as where the first gift is to A.'s children and the gift over is in default of issue of A. The court will read the gift over as though it were in default of "such" issue. Ib.

But where there was a devise of a particular property to the testator's daughter A., her heirs and assigns, and if she should die under the age of twenty-five years, "without having left any child or children," over, and subsequently, a devise of other real estate to trustees in fee, in trust for A., for her separate use; and after her death, in trust to convey the same "unto and equally amongst such children of A., as tenants in common, the rents and profits in the meantime to be applied for their maintenance; and in case A. should die without leaving any child or children, or leaving such child or children, all should die under twenty-one," over:—Held, that the court could not, after "such children of A," supply the words, "as should attain twenty-one," but was at liberty, as against the testator's heir, to construe the word "such," as relating to all the children of A., as they had been mentioned in the previous limitation. Ib.

In construing a will words may be supplied, changed, and transposed, whenever the context requires it. Abbott v. Middleton, 21 Beav. 143; 25 L. J., Ch. 113; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 1126; 4 W. R. 69. Affirmed, 7 H. L. Cas. 68; 28 L. J., Ch. 110; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 717.

Bequest to testator's widow for life, and on her decease to his son for life, and on his demise the principal to become the property of any children he might leave. Then followed a gift over, in case the son died before his mother (omitting the words "without leaving children"). The son predeceased both his father and mother, leaving an only child, who survived them:—Held, that such child was entitled to the principal sum after the grandmother's death; and that to effectuate the intention of the testator, the words "without leaving any child" must be implied, after the word "dying." Ib.

The principles on which the court acts in supplying by inference an omission in a will discussed. An omission may be supplied in the case of independent gifts to strangers, as well as in the case of a series of gifts to children of a testator, or to members of a class. Mellor v. Daintree, 56 L. J., Ch. 33; 33 Ch. D. 198; 55 L. T. 175.

A testator devised and bequeathed his real and residuary personal estate to trustees, on trust as to one moiety of the personalty and a specific part (being about half in value) of his realty to accumulate the income until B. should attain twenty-five or die, whichever should first happen in case either of such events should happen within twenty-one years from his own death, but, in case that period should expire before either of such events should happen, upon trust to pay the income to B., if living, from the expiration of such period until he should attain twenty-five or die, whichever should first happen, and, subject as aforesaid, the testator directed that the moiety should be held in trust for B. absolutely in case he should attain twenty-five, and in case he should die under twenty-five, leaving a son or sons him surviving, who, or any one of them, should attain twenty-one, the moiety was, subject as aforesaid, to be held in trust for the only, or, if more than one, the first surviving son of B. who should attain twenty-one. And the testator directed that the second moiety of the personalty and the rest of the realty should be held on trust to accumulate the income until D. should attain twenty-five or die, whichever should first happen within the period of twenty-one years from his own death, and in case that period should expire before either of such events should happen, then upon trust to pay the income to D. (if living) from the expiration of such period until he should attain twenty-five or die, whichever should first happen, and, subject as aforesaid, the testator directed that the moiety should be held in trust "for such only surviving son, or, if more than one surviving son, for the eldest of such surviving sons absolutely." But, in case D. should leave no son him surviving, the property was to be held in trust for R. absolutely. B. was a stranger in blood to the testator; D. was the testator's nephew. D. attained twenty-five:—Held, that, having regard to the whole scheme of the will, an absolute gift of the second moiety to D. at twenty-five must be implied. Ib.

When it appeared beyond doubt from the general scope of a will that there had been an unintentional omission of words carrying over the share of the testator's estate in which one of his daughters took a life interest to her children, the court supplied the omission. Redfern, In re, Redfern v. Bryning, 47 L. J., Ch. 17; 6 Ch. D. 133; 37 L. T. 241; 25 W. R. 902.

A father, having two sons and five daughters, by his will directed the residue of his real and personal estates to be divided, as a mixed fund, into sevenths, and bequeathed one-seventh to one son, and another to the other son. He then bequeathed the remaining five-sevenths upon trust during the respective lives of his daughters, Elizabeth, Sarah, Eliza, Mary, and Hannah, to invest and pay the income into the proper and respective hands of his daughters (again naming them) in equal shares for their separate use. He then, from and after the death of Elizabeth, gave one-fifth of the fund to the children of Elizabeth; from and after the death of Sarah, another fifth to the children of Sarah; from and after the death of Eliza, another fifth to the children (not of Eliza, but) of Mary; and from and after the death of Hannah, another fifth to the children of Hannah. He further gave directions until the part or share of the trust moneys of the issue of any of his said daughters should become payable, to apply the same by way of maintenance. The court, holding that a clause giving to the children of Eliza an interest in one-fifth of the trust fund similar to that which was given to the children of the other four daughters, and giving the children of Mary a like interest on the death not of Eliza but of Mary, had been accidentally omitted, declared that the will must be read as if it contained the omitted clause. Ib.

A husband directed his trustees to convert his property and invest the proceeds, then went on: "And I declare that the trustees or trustee may vary the stocks, funds, shares and securities at their or his discretion, and shall pay the moneys and the investment for the time being representing the same to my wife during her life upon trust for all my children or any child who being sons or a son shall attain the age of twenty-one, or being daughters or a daughter shall attain that age or marry, and if more than one in equal shares." He then empowered the trustees, after the death of his wife or previously by her direction, to raise any sums not exceeding half the expectant share of any child for his or her advancement, and to apply the income of each child's expectant share for maintenance after the death of his wife; and if no child, being a son, should attain twenty-one, or, being a daughter, attain that age or marry, the fund was given over after the death of the widow:—Held, that the widow took a beneficial interest for life in the fund. Greenwood v. Greenwood, 47 L. J., Ch. 298; 5 Ch. D. 954; 37 L. T. 305; 26 W. R. 5.

Upon a will devising lands to be conveyed and settled to the use of the devisor's eldest son for his life, remainder to his second, third, fourth, fifth, and all and every other the son and sons of the body of L. lawfully to be begotten, severally and successively and in remainder, one after another, as they and every one of them should be in seniority of age and priority of birth, and the heirs male of their bodies respectively:—Held, upon the words and context of the will, making provision inconsistent with the intention that a first son of L. should be excluded, such first son took an estate in tail male. Langston v. Langston, 8 Bligh (N.S.) 167; 2 Cl. & F. 194.

Where a will gave to A. an estate for life, with remainder to the first son of the body of A. lawfully begotten, severally and successively, in tail male, the words "and other sons" were introduced, in order to prevent the words "severally and successively" from being struck out of the will; and A. took an estate tail by implication. Parker v. Tootal, 11 H. L. Cas. 143; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 185; 12 L. T. 89; 13 W. R. 442.

A testatrix, in making her will, used a law stationer's form, which was partly in print, blanks being left in it which were to be filled up by the person who made use of it. After directing that her debts and funeral and testamentary expenses should be paid by her executrix thereinafter named, the testatrix gave all her property, both real and personal, "unto to and for her own use and benefit absolutely, and I nominate, constitute, and appoint my niece, Catherine Hellard, to be executrix of this my last will and testament":—Held, that there was an effectual gift of the residue to Catherine Hellard. Harrison, In re, Turner v. Hellard, 55 L. J., Ch. 799; 30 Ch. D. 390; 53 L. T. 799; 34 W. R. 420—C. A.

By his will dated in 1860, a testator, who died in 1861, gave certain property to trustees upon trust to pay the income thereof to the widow of the testator's son for life, and after her death "in trust for all the children of my said son, who being a son or sons shall live to attain twenty-one years, or being a daughter or daughters shall marry under that age with their mother's consent, to be divided between them share and share alike." The will contained powers of maintenance and advancement applicable to all children:—Held, that daughters who attained twenty-one were entitled to share in the fund, although they had not married under that age; for even if the admission in the common form did not render the remainder of the clause meaningless, still, the intention dominating the form was the expression of the limitation of attaining twenty-one, and the powers of maintenance and advancement afforded some indication that this was the testator's intention. Hunt, In re, Davies v. Hetherington, 62 L. T. 753.

W. by will gave all residuary estate to trustees upon trust to pay and divide equally amongst all the children of his deceased father's brothers and sisters, and proceeded, "I desire that the child or children of any one of such brothers and sisters as may be dead shall take his, her, or their deceased parent's share":—Held, that the testator's intention clearly was that the children of the children of his cousins should take their parents' share, and that the words of the residuary gift as they stood, without supplying any words, could be construed as if the word "child" were inserted after the words "any one." Wroe, In re, Frith v. Wilson, 74 L. T. 302.

—— Particular Word — "Respective."] — Bequest of residue, the interest to be paid to C. and J. equally for their lives, and "at their death" the principal to be divided between the children of C. and J.:—Held, that the words "at their death" meant "at their respective deaths," and that, on the death of C., the moiety to the interest of which C. had been entitled became divisible among his children. Wills v. Wills, 44 L. J., Ch. 582; L. R. 20 Eq. 342; 23 W. R. 784.

—— Where either of Two Words Possible.] —Residuary bequest "to all the children of my brother R. and my sister M., to be equally divided amongst them." This brother and sister were placed in exactly the same position in other parts of the will. The court, therefore, preferred to introduce the word "of" rather than the word "to" before the words "my sister," and held accordingly, that the children of M., and not M. herself, took equally with the children of R. Mason v. Baker, 2 K. & J. 567.

—— Limitation to avoid Intestacy.] — A testator gave legacies upon certain trusts for each of his daughters for life, and, after her death, for her husband and children, and subject thereto he directed that each legacy should "sink into and form part of my residuary estate and be applied and disposed of as hereinafter mentioned." He gave his residue to his children equally, "the shares of daughters to be paid to the same trustees respectively and to be settled upon the same trusts" as their respective legacies. One of the daughters having died unmarried:—Held, that the direction for settlement of daughters' shares of residue being executory, the court, in framing a settlement of such a share, would modify the ultimate gift over by inserting a limitation in favour of the other residuary legatees excluding the particular daughter, and that the share of the deceased daughter of the testator was divisible accordingly among the other residuary legatees.

Humble v. Shore (7 Hare, 247; 1 H. & M. 550, n.), Crawshaw v. Crawshaw (14 Ch. D. 817), and other cases considered. Ballance, In re, Ballance v. Lamphier, 58 L. J., Ch. 534; 42 Ch. D. 62; 61 L. T. 158; 37 W. R. 600.

Testator by his will bequeathed an absolute interest in his residuary estate amongst four persons, including M., in certain shares. By a codicil he altered the gift in the will as to M.'s share by restricting it to an interest for her life only, and directed that, upon M.'s death, "the same should fall into and form part of" his residuary estate; and in all other respects he confirmed his will:—Held, that there was no intestacy as to the remainder expectant on the death of M. in her one-fifth share of the residue, because, on the true construction of the will and codicil read together, such remainder had been effectually given to the other residuary legatees. Humble v. Shore (7 Hare, 247) overruled. Palmer, In re, Palmer v. Ainsworth, 62 L. J., Ch. 988; [1893] 3 Ch. 369; 2 R. 619; 69 L. T. 477; 42 W. R. 151—C. A.

When Words imported from preceding Clause.]—A testator devised his real estate to his three daughters equally in remainder, and he provided that "if any of them should die and leave issue, then such issue should succeed to the mother's share in that his will." He afterwards gave the residue of his estate and effects to the same daughters and to his two sons in possession:—Held, that the issue of the daughters took no interest in the daughters' share in the residue. Tibbs v. Elliott, 34 Beav. 424.

A testator seised of houses and lands for lives, renewable for ever, and of no other real estate, devised to trustees all his freehold messuages, lands, tenements, and hereditaments, whatsoever and wheresoever, upon certain trusts, viz. to permit and suffer his daughter during her life to receive an annuity of 100*l.*, to be issuing and payable out of all and every other his freehold estate or estates situate (here the houses and lands above named were mentioned), to her separate use, and without power to alien or mortgage it, and after her decease the annuity was to stand to the heirs of her body lawfully issuing, in such shares as she should by will appoint, and in default of appointment, then to her said children share and share alike. And the testator directed that 50*l.* per annum should be applied in the maintenance of his daughter until she attained twenty-one or married, and that upon either of those events, the trustees were to assign the annuity of 100*l.* and all interests and dividends due thereon, and all securities wherein the same should be placed out or invested, to her, for her own sole use and benefit absolutely for ever, with the usual powers of distress and entry upon the devised premises, and every or any part thereof. After a bequest of certain plate and household furniture to his daughter, and of a small annuity to another person, the will contained this clause: "And in further trust, that in case my said daughter shall happen to die before she attain twenty-one and unmarried, I give, devise, and bequeath said annuity of 100*l.*, and all and every other my freehold estates wheresoever, as aforesaid, unto my brother E. C. for and during the term of his natural life; and from and immediately after his decease, unto and to the use of his right heirs for ever, in such manner as by his last will he should direct, limit, and appoint"; and the testator bequeathed all his personal estate, subject to his debts, to E. C. The testator's daughter survived him, and attained twenty-one. Upon a petition presented under the eleventh section of the Court of Chancery Regulation Act, on behalf of the children and devisees of E. C., who died almost immediately after his brother the testator, the court was of opinion, that upon the context of the will the words of contingency "in case my daughter should happen to die before she attain twenty-one, or marriage," must be confined to the annuity of 100*l.*, and that accordingly E. C. and his children took estates, to the exclusion of the testator's daughter, in the freehold property of the testator immediately upon his death; but the case was sent for the opinion of a court of law. Campbell v. Campbell, 1 Ir. Ch. R. 503.

Testatrix gave the residue of her personal estate to twelve persons, or such of them as should be living at her decease; she then directed her real estate to be sold at a certain time, and gave the produce to the same twelve persons and three others, or such of them as should be then living; she then added a proviso, that the share or proportion of S., one of the twelve legatees, should be settled to her separate use for life:—Held, upon the construction of the whole will, that the proviso applied as well to S.'s share in the residue of the personalty as to her share in the produce of the realty. Cockrill v. Pitchforth, 1 Coll. C. C. 626; 9 Jur. 223.

Testatrix, being obliged to secure an annuity to A. for life, purchased an annuity on the life of B., and insured the latter life, and by her will, reciting that on the death of B. the amount of the policy would be recovered to her estate, directed that in the event of B. dying before A., the executors should provide for A.'s annuity out of her estate, but in the event of A. dying before B., she gave the purchased annuity to C., he paying the premium, and on the death of B. she gave the amount of the policy to C.; B. died in the lifetime of A.:—Held, that C. was not entitled to the policy. Leckie v. Hogben, 7 Beav. 502.

A. devises to B. and C., his wife's children, as he called them (not owning them to be his), ten shillings apiece and no more; and gave the children that he owned considerable legacies. B. and C. shall come in for a share of the undisposed surplus, for the words of exclusion must be taken strictly. Vachell v. Jefferys, Pre. Ch. 170.

Devise to the children of A., B. and C., who should be living when the youngest attained twenty-one, with a direction that "the present yearly rents" should be paid to the persons who brought up the children of C.:—Held, upon the context, that until the contingency happened, the rents were to be paid to such person in trust not only for the children of C., but of A. and B. Sanders v. Miller, 25 Beav. 154.

When Application confined to last Antecedent Clause.]—Two bequests were made to the same person in successive sentences, and in the latter the words "for life" were added:—Held, that the limitation applied to the second gift only, and that the legatee took the first absolutely. Gower v. Towers, 26 Beav. 81.

Devise to A., so long as she remains unmarried, and, after her decease or marriage, in trust to sell and divide the proceeds between "B., C. and A., if living":—Held, that the words "if living" applied to A. only. Bellamy's Trust, In re, 1 N. R. 191.

On construing an appointment of stock in these words: "Unto and among my said brother and my sisters and my nephews and nieces living at the decease of my wife, in equal shares and proportions"; it was held, that the qualification of living at the death of his wife attached only to the nephews and nieces, the last antecedent. The direction as to the shares and proportions in which the legatees are to take the property does not affect the construction of the words which describe the persons who are to take. The legatees took per capita. Baker v. Baker, 6 Hare, 269; 11 Jur. 585.

Where no Indication to Justify Addition.]—A testator devised his freehold estates to certain uses. The will contained a name and arms clause and powers of leasing and sale and exchange. He then devised his copyhold and leasehold estates upon trusts to correspond with the uses declared of the freeholds. By a codicil to his will he varied the uses declared concerning the freeholds, but made no mention of the copyholds and leaseholds. He directed that the codicil should be taken as a part of and added to his will. All the circumstances of the case rendered it exceedingly inconvenient that the copyholds and leaseholds should devolve in a different way from the freeholds:—Held, that the trusts of the copyholds and leaseholds declared by the will were not revoked by the codicil, and that the copyholds and leaseholds passed according to the trusts declared by the will, and the freeholds according to the uses declared by the codicil. Martineau v. Briggs, 45 L. J., Ch. 674; 33 L. T. 283; 23 W. R. 899—H. L. (E.)

Held, that though it was in the highest degree probable that the testator intended the copyholds and leaseholds to go with the freeholds, and it was productive of great inconvenience that they should not do so, yet, as there were no words in the codicil to give effect to such intention, the court could not supply them, and the copyholds and leaseholds must go as originally declared by the will. Ib. S. P., Langdale v. Briggs, Bacon, Ex parte, 28 L. T. 467; 21 W. R. 620.

A testator, after giving specified legacies to his "brother D., his sister M., the widow of his late brother J. C., and the eight children of D. J.," gave the residue of his estate upon trust for the "said D. M. and J. C. and the eight children of the said D. J. in equal shares as tenants in common":—Held, that the words "the widow of" could not be inserted before J. C. in the gift of the residue, although the testator had noticed the fact of J. C.'s death in the preceding bequest. Clarke v. Clemmans, 36 L. J., Ch. 171; 15 W. R. 250.

2. "AND" CONSTRUED "OR."

Principle—To effect Intention.]—Whether the instrument in which the word occurs is a will or a deed, "or" may be construed to mean "and," and "and" may be construed to mean "or," if such a construction is necessary to give effect to the intentions of the party by whom the word is used. White v. Supple, 2 Dr. & War. 471; 1 Con. & L. 525.

"And" is construed "or" where one member of the compound sentence is included in the other, and would be superfluous unless disjoined. This construction is generally made in favour of vesting, not to defeat a previously vested gift. Day v. Day, 1 Kay, 703; 18 Jur. 1013; 2 W. R. 700.

If the court can give a possible sense to the words used by a testator, it will not transpose the words actually used by him so as to give to his will a more natural and probable intention. Observations upon the case of Brown v. Walker (infra, col. 716); and remarks as to the words "or" and "and." Key v. Key, 1 Jur. (N.S.) 372.

The construction of the word "and" as "or" is only admissible when the context of a will makes it evident, or, at all events, furnishes very strong grounds for presuming, that it was so intended. Coates v. Hart, 3 De G. J. & S. 504. And see S. C., 32 Beav. 349.

In a residuary clause, "and" read "or," to effectuate the plain intention of the testatrix. Stubbs v. Sargon, 2 Keen, 255; 6 L. J., Ch. 254; Affirmed, 3 Myl. & Cr. 507; 7 L. J., Ch. 95; 2 Jur. 150.

The word "and" construed "or," in order to give effect to the obvious meaning. Maynard v. Wright, 26 Beav. 285.

A testator devised a freehold in trust, to accumulate the rents for periods of not less than ten years successively at a time, at the expiration of which the accumulations to be paid to the testator's sons and daughters, or such of them as should be living at the respective periods of division; and the issue of such of them as shall have died leaving lawful issue, such issue taking their deceased parents' share to be vested interests in the same respectively, at the age of twenty-one, and so on from time to time until the expiration of twenty-one years after the decease of the survivor of his children. And from and after the expiration of the term of twenty-one years he devised the same premises unto such of his grandchildren, and their issue, as should then stand, in respect to him, in equal degree of consanguinity, and their heirs, as tenants in common:—Held, that "issue" was to be read "children," and the word "and" to be read "or," and that the devise was neither void for remoteness nor uncertainty. Ib.

A testator bequeathed a sum of money to his wife for life, and after her decease for A., M. and W., or such of them as shall be then living, and shall attain twenty-one or marry; and there was a power to the trustees to advance to A., M. and W., "not exceeding the share of each of them, my said three children." A., M. and W. all survived the testator, and attained twenty-one; but A. died in the lifetime of the tenant for life:—Held, that she took nothing under the above gift, the court declining to construe "and" as equivalent to "or." Malden v. Maine, 2 Jur. (N.S.) 206.

A testator (tenant for life under a settlement of the B. H. estate, and other lands, remainder to his first and other sons in tail male, with several limitations over), by his will gave certain specific things to be enjoyed by the person or persons who, for the time being, should be entitled to the freehold "or" inheritance of the family estate at Stapleton, as and in the nature of heirlooms. He gave his furniture, plate, &c., to his brother A. He directed a sum of 1,000*l.*, secured to him on the B. H. estate and other estates, to sink into the freehold and inheritance of the said estates, that the same might merge them, and the rents, and arrears of rent, with timber felled and other annual profits due to him at the time of his decease from the B. H. estate, unto the person or persons who should be entitled to the freehold "and" inheritance of the same estate in possession on his decease. He gave his residue to his two brothers, B. and C., and he appointed his brother A. his sole executor. B. died in the testator's lifetime:—Held, that in the gift of the rents, &c., the word "and" must be read "or"; and that they passed to A., although he was entitled only to the freehold. Stapleton v. Stapleton, 2 Sim. (N.S.) 212; 21 L. J., Ch. 434.

A power of sale and exchange was given to trustees of a settlement, at the request of the person for the time being "seised of the freehold and inheritance of the manors":—Held, that reading the word "and" conjunctively, the power could not be exercised at the request of a tenant for life who (subject to intervening limitations) had the ultimate remainder in fee. Malmesbury (Earl) v. Malmesbury (Countess), Phillipson v. Turner, 31 Beav. 407.

Held, also, that the word "and" could not be read disjunctively as "or." Ib.

Power to testator's widow to appoint to children if they conduct themselves to her satisfaction up to the age of twenty-five, and marry with her approbation:—Held, she had a discretionary power which she might exercise after a child attained twenty-five, though unmarried. Davidson v. Rook, 22 Beav. 206.

In Gift over—On Death unmarried and under Age.]—A testator gave his trustees all his residuary estate for his two daughters in equal shares, subject as thereinafter mentioned. He declared that the shares of his children should be vested interests in them at the age of twenty-four or marriage with consent. The trustees were to pay the dividends to his daughters during their lives without anticipation. Each daughter was to have power to dispose of her share by will on attaining twenty-four. In case of the death of a daughter intestate her share was to go to the other. The trustees were to apply the dividends of the share of a daughter whose interest had not become vested for her maintenance, &c. The testator then declared that in case his daughters should both die under twenty-four and unmarried as aforesaid, then he gave the whole of his residuary estate equally amongst his brothers and sisters. One of the daughters died an infant, and without having been married. The other attained twenty-one and married, but had not attained twenty-four:—Held, that the gift over could not any longer by possibility take effect, the court refusing to change "and" into "or" or to give "unmarried" any other than its primary sense of never having been married. Gonne v. Cook, 15 W. R. 576.

—— On Death unmarried and without Issue.]—Limitation over the death of a person unmarried and without issue, unmarried, in its usual sense, meaning never having been married: "and" was construed "or," to afford a reasonable construction. Maberly v. Strode, 3 Ves. 450; 4 R. R. 61.

Words of a survivorship, added to a tenancy in common in a will, are to be applied to the death of the testator, unless an intention to postpone the vesting is apparent. Ib., 451.

Bequest to testator's three children, to be equally divided between them, share and share alike; but in case of the death of any, without being married and having children, the share of such child so dying to be divided between the surviving children; and so if one only should survive. One having been married, and having had a child, her share vested: "and" construed "or," to give effect to all the words. Bell v. Phyn, 7 Ves. 453, 458; 6 R. R. 148.

Testator gave legacies to his three children, payable after the death of his executrix, and directed that if any of the children should die unmarried and without issue, before the death of the executrix, the legacy should go to the surviving children. One of the daughters married, but died without issue in the lifetime of the executrix. The legacy survived to the other children. Hepworth v. Taylor, 1 Cox, 112.

Gift over, in case A. should die "before marriage and leave no issue":—Held, to take effect only on the happening of both events. Seccombe v. Edwards, 28 Beav. 440; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 642; 8 W. R. 595.

Gift of a legacy upon trust for A., a son of the testator, for life, remainder to any wife he might marry, for life, remainder to his children absolutely, with a gift over, "in case he should die unmarried and without issue, to B., C. and D., or such of them as should be living at his decease absolutely." A. died a widower, and without having had any children. B., C. and D. all died in A.'s lifetime:—Held, that "and" would not, without absolute necessity, be read "or." Sanders, In re, L. R. 1 Eq. 675; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 351; 14 W. R. 576.

Held, that the interests of B., C. and D., though depending on a contingency, were transmissible, and that their representatives were entitled to their shares. Ib.

A settlement contained a gift over of the children's shares of accumulations arising from the settled property in the event of all the children but one "dying unmarried and without issue." If there were more children than one, the children's shares were to be as the husband and wife, or the survivor of them, should appoint; and in default of appointment, in equal shares, and to vest at twenty-one or marriage. There were fourteen children of the marriage. Two of them married, four died infants and unmarried, and all the surviving children but one had attained twenty-one. The wife died. The father appointed a share to the plaintiff, one of his sons who had attained twenty-one:—Held, that the words "dying unmarried" meant dying without having been ever married. Heywood v. Heywood, 29 Beav. 9; 30 L. J., Ch. 155; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 228; 3 L. T. 429; 9 W. R. 62.

Held, also, that the plaintiff's share was vested, and that he was entitled to a transfer of it to him. Ib.

A testator made his will as follows:—"I leave to my son S. all my landed property in the county K., also the policy of assurance effected on the life of my sister C. for 1,500*l.* It is my desire that should the said S. die unmarried and without legal issue, that all my property bequeathed to him should go share and share alike between my daughters J. and E. I give power to my son S. to settle a jointure out of the said property not exceeding 100*l.* a year on the woman he may marry. . . . I do appoint my son S. as residuary legatee." The testator made a codicil to his will as follows: "I hereby give and bequeath to my daughter E. the sum of 400*l.*, to be paid to her when the insurance on the life of my sister C. is paid in." S. died leaving a widow, and never had any issue:—Held, that in the executory gift to testator's daughters, "should the said S. die unmarried and without legal issue," the word "and" must be read "or," and that, therefore, upon S.'s death without issue, though leaving a widow, the testator's lands in the county K. passed under the executory gift to J. and E. subject to a jointure of 100*l.* a year which S. had charged thereon for his widow. Long v. Lane, 17 L. R., Ir. 11—C. A.

—— On Death under Age and without Issue.]—Devise to trustees in fee, if B. attains twenty-one, or has issue, to B. and heirs of his body; but if B. dies before twenty-one, and without issue, over; B. attains twenty-one, and dies without issue; an estate tail vested in B. at twenty-one, on having issue, and the limitation over, a remainder which takes place on failure of issue of B. Brownsword v. Edwards, 2 Ves. 245. This case may be considered as overruled by Doe d. Usher v. Jessep, 12 East, 288; 11 R. R. 380. See Malcolm v. Taylor, 2 Russ. & M. 416, where Lord Brougham says the reading of "or" for "and" is rarely sanctioned. Ib., 446.

A testator devised to trustees his estates at H. and S., subject to annuities, &c., upon trust for R. and the heirs of his body; but in case he should die under the age of twenty-one, and without issue, then the estate at H. should be in trust for A. and the heirs of her body; but in case she should die under the age of twenty-one, and without issue, the last-mentioned premises should be upon such and the same trusts as thereinafter declared concerning his (the testator's) estate at S.; and the testator directed that if R. should die under the age of twenty-one, and without issue, then that his trustees should stand seised of the estate at S. for the benefit of the testator's son R. for his life, and after his decease for the benefit of his daughter-in-law M. during her life; and subject thereto the estate at S. should be in trust for D., R. W. D. and E. D., in equal shares, as tenants in common. R. and A. both attained twenty-one, but died without issue:—Held, that R. took absolutely on attaining twenty-one, and that such a limitation over would not take effect unless the double contingency happened, that he died both under twenty-one and without issue; that to read it otherwise would be to reject the words "under the age of twenty-one" entirely, and thereby withhold the natural ordinary meaning from the testator's words. Doe v. Jessop (12 East, 288; 11 R. R. 380) and Brownsword v. Edwards (supra) discussed and commented upon. Grey v. Pearson, 6 H. L. Cas. 61; 26 L. J., Ch. 473; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 823; 5 W. R. 454.

Bequest to A. for life, then to his eldest son, but in case A. should die under age and without issue then to B.:—Held, that "and" was not to be read as "or," and that A. having attained twenty-one, a son of his then living had acquired an indefeasible interest. Malcolm v. Malcolm, 21 Beav. 225.

A testator gave to each of four persons, when and as they respectively attained twenty-one, one-fourth of his residue for life, and in case either of them "should happen to die under the age of twenty-one years, and without leaving lawful issue," then he gave his share to the survivors for life. And from and after the decease of either of the legatees leaving lawful issue surviving, he bequeathed his share to such issue. And if all four legatees should die without leaving lawful issue, there was a gift over. One of the legatees attained twenty-one and died without issue:—Held, that her share was undisposed of, the court being of opinion that "and" could not be read "or." Coates v. Hart, 32 Beav. 349.

A testator directed his residuary estate to be invested, and when and as A., B., C. and D. severally attained their respective ages of twenty-one, he gave to each of them severally the interest of one-fourth of the invested residue for their lives, and in case either of them should die under twenty-one, and without leaving lawful issue, then he gave the interest to which such deceased legatee was entitled to the survivors or survivor of them for her, his, and their several and respective lives; and from and after the decease of either of these four legatees leaving lawful issue her or him surviving, the testator bequeathed the principal to the interest whereof such deceased legatee had been entitled in her or his lifetime amongst such issue; and he also gave to such issue the share and interest of the principal to the interest whereof their deceased parent would have been entitled in case he or she had lived to survive any other of the four legatees who should afterwards die without issue. And in case all the four legatees should die without either of them leaving lawful issue, he gave the whole of his residuary estate over. A. died in the testator's lifetime a minor and without having been married. B. survived the testator, attained majority, married, and died without having had a child:—Held, that C. and D. were entitled by force of the will to the entire income of the residue for their joint lives as from the death of B., and that there was no intestacy as to such income. S. C., 3 De G. J. & S. 504.

A testator devises leaseholds upon trust for his son T. D., and all his (the testator's) children, by his then wife, who should be living at his decease, as tenants in common; but if T. D. should die under twenty-one, and without leaving issue, and if the testator should have no other children by his then wife, living at his decease, who should attain twenty-one, then upon trust for J. C. D. for life, and after his decease for his children in equal shares; and if J. C. D. should die under twenty-one, and without leaving issue living at his decease, then upon certain trusts over. T. D. dies under twenty-one, and without issue: afterwards J. C. D. dies, having attained twenty-one, but not leaving issue:—Held, that, there being a balance of intention upon the words of the will, the court will not change "and" into "or"; and, therefore, that the ultimate limitations over did not take effct. Brown v. Walker, 2 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 82.

A testator, by will made in 1850, directed that all his real and personal estate (after payment of his funeral and testamentary expenses) should, at the time his youngest child had attained twenty-one, be valued, and divided into three equal parts, "one part to be for my wife, one part for my daughter Mary Ann, and one part to my daughter Maria"; and after his wife's decease he directed that her share should be divided between them equally; and then the will proceeded: "And provided that either of my two children named should die before a division of the property shall have been made as above described, and having no surviving issue, then the part of the deceased shall be given to her surviving sister; but if either of them shall die, and leave surviving issue, then the part of her so dying shall be equally divided amongst her surviving children, in equal shares." By a codicil to his will, without date, he provided as follows:—"Should both my children die in their minority, and leave no issue, then in such case, and in such case only, I give to my wife the whole of my property for her life, or so long as she shall remain my widow, and at my wife's decease or marriage, which shall first happen," there was a gift over. One of the daughters attained twenty-one, and died without leaving issue, and the other died under that age, also without leaving issue:—Held (affirming 4 Kay & J. 709) that the gift over had failed. Maddison v. Chapman, 28 L. J., Ch. 450; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 277; 7 W. R. 214—L.JJ.

On Death without leaving Issue and without Appointing.]—A testator bequeathed his residuary real and personal estate to trustees for his nephew, C., for life, and after his decease, "providing he shall leave any child or children him surviving, upon trust for such persons, and for such ends and purposes as my nephew shall by his will direct or appoint, give, devise, or bequeath the same; but if my nephew shall die without leaving any child or children him surviving, and shall not previous to his decease make any such appointment, gift, or bequest as aforesaid, then upon trust for other persons. C., by will appointed, or assumed to appoint, the whole real and personal estate mentioned in his uncle's will to trustees, upon the trusts declared respecting his own residuary estate. Upon the decease of C., without leaving any child or children surviving:—Held (following Seccombe v. Edwards, 28 Beav. 440), that the word "and" could not be read as "or"; but that as the nephew had died without leaving a child, no power had arisen, and therefore no appointment had been made, and consequently that the gift over took effect in favour of the persons named in the uncle's will. Barker v. Young, 33 Beav. 353; 3 N. R. 350; 33 L. J., Ch. 279; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 163; 12 W. R. 659.

—— On Death in Testator's Lifetime and before receiving Benefit.]—A testator bequeathed personalty for his wife for life, and after her death to be divided between his brothers and sisters; and he declared, that in case any or either of his brothers or sisters should die in his lifetime, and before they should have received any benefit from the bequest, then the share of him or her so dying should go over. The court refused to change the word "and" into "or," but held the second clause of the declaration to be explanatory of the first. Kirkbride, In re, L. R. 2 Eq. 400; 15 L. T. 51; 14 W. R. 728.

—— On Death in Lifetime of A. and without Issue.]—A gift over in case A. dies in the lifetime of the testator's wife and without issue will fail, if A. survives the wife, though he dies without issue. Reed v. Brathwaite, 40 L. J., Ch. 355.

—— On Death in Lifetime of A. and B.]—Testator, after giving legacies to nephews and nieces, provided that in case any or either of them died in the lifetime of his wife and his brother without leaving lawful issue, the legacy given to such nephew or niece should lapse and be absolutely void:—Held, that "and" could not be read as "or" in the disjunctive, and that the period in which the limitation over was to take effect was the joint lives of the testator's wife and brother. Day v. Day, 1 Kay, 703; 18 Jur. 1013; 2 W. R. 700.

3. "OR" CONSTRUED "AND."

Principles.]—In what case the disjunctive "or" shall be taken to mean the conjunctive "and." Walsh v. Patterson, 9 Mod. 444.

Difference between this and changing "or" into "and." Key v. Key, 1 Jur. (N.S.) 372. See also Pawson v. Pawson, 19 Beav. 146; 23 L. J., Ch. 954.

The word "or" in a will may be read "and" to give effect to the manifest intention, and where the literal reading would be unjust and repugnant to the intention and object of the testator. Maude v. Maude, 22 Beav. 290.

Whether the instrument in which the word occurs is a will or a deed, "or" may be construed to mean "and," and "and" may be construed to mean "or," if such a construction is necessary to give effect to the intention of the party by whom the word is used. White v. Supple, 2 Dr. & War. 471; 1 Con. & L. 525.

Testatrix directed the interest of her residuary estate to be applied in defraying the expenses of the education of her nephews, George and Charles, and the principal to be applied either in binding them apprentices at the age of fourteen, or to be reserved till they attained twenty-one, to commence business. "In the event of George and Charles (both or either of them) being settled before this will comes in force, I provide that the next boy (James or Henry) have the benefit, and so on." George and Charles survived the testatrix, but died under twenty-one:—Held, that James and Henry were entitled to the residue. Prestwidge v. Groombridge, 6 Sim. 171.

A disjunctive, at the end of a period, shall not make all the precedent sentences so, if the intention appears against it. Framlingham v. Brand, 3 Atk. 391. See also Nichols v. Tolley, 2 Vern. 389.

Gift to A. or his Children.]—Devise of a trust to all his daughters or their children, living at the testator's son's death; some of the daughters were living at the son's death, and had children, and others of the daughters were dead, leaving children:—Decreed, all the children, as well of the living daughters as of the dead, should take. Richardson v. Spraag, 1 P. Wms. 434.

A testator bequeathed his residue to his three sons in trust, to be divided between his three sons and his daughter, and he directed his daughter's share to be kept in the hands of his sons, for her "or" her children's sole use, free from the control of her husband. The daughter survived:—Held, that she took absolutely. Whitcher v. Penley, 9 Beav. 477.

Bequest to two persons or their children:—Held, to give children an interest by way of substitution only, not concurrent. Crooke v. De Vandes, 9 Ves. 197.

Bequest to "my son William or his children": —Held, that the son who survived was absolutely entitled, and that the children could only take by substitution, in case of the death of their parent. Penley v. Penley, 12 Beav. 547.

Bequest of stock to trustees in trust, after the death of A., to transfer the same to and amongst all and every the nephews and nieces that should be then living; to wit, the said J. B. or her children, and the said P. B. or his children, and D. L. or his children, and P. L. or his children; under this bequest a nephew not expressly named is not entitled to any share; and the fund is equally divisible amongst such nephews and nieces, and their children, as were living at the time of the death of A. Eccard v. Brooke, 2 Cox, 213; 2 R. R. 31.

A testator bequeaths a sum of stock to each of five nephews and nieces, or to their respective child or children; should any die without child, such share to revert to the residuary legatee; each of the nephews and nieces who survive the testator takes his or her legacy of stock absolutely. Montagu v. Nucella, 1 Russ. 165; 25 R. R. 25.

The same testator appoints as a residuary legatee E. P. M., his child or children; in case of his death, without any such, the residuary interest to invest in the other five nephews and nieces then alive, share and share alike, and as before to each of their respective child or children, and in case of either of their deaths without any such issue, then his or her share to be divided amongst the survivors: E. P. M., having survived the testator, takes the residue absolutely. Ib.

A testator, by his will, gave 1,000*l.* to his sister for her "or" for her children's sole use and benefit for ever. By a codicil to his will he recited that he was desirous of making further bequests in relation to his sister and her family, and then gave, amongst other benefits, a further sum of 1,000*l.* to his trustees to pay the dividends to his sister for life, and then for her children: —Held, that the word "or" was to be taken disjunctively, and that the 1,000*l.* bequeathed by the will was given absolutely to the testator's sister, but not for her separate use. Chipchase v. Simpson, 16 Sim. 485; 18 L. J., Ch. 145; 13 Jur. 90.

Bequest to A. of an annuity for her life, and after her death the annuity or the value unto B. and C. or their children, share and share alike. B. and C. survived A.:—Held, that their children took no interest in the annuity. Sparks v. Restall, 24 Beav. 218.

Devise of real estate to A. for life, subject to payment of 2,000*l.* apiece to B., C. and D., or to their respective lawful issue, twelve months after the death of the testator, and devise of the same estate in remainder on the death of A. to his children, as he should appoint, charged with a further sum of 3,000*l.* apiece to B. and D., or to their respective lawful issue; B., C. and D. survived the testator; B. died without issue in the lifetime of A.; and C. and D. died in the lifetime of A., leaving issue:—Held, that the legacies to B., C. and D. vested in the legatees, subject to be divested in favour of their children, in case of their death, leaving children, and therefore that B. took both the legacies absolutely, and C. and D. took the legacies of 2,000*l.* each absolutely, and the children of C. and D. took the legacies of 3,000*l.* by substitution for their parents. Salisbury v. Petty, 3 Hare, 86; 7 Jur. 1011.

Bequest to a class equally, with a substituted gift, as to the shares of any who predeceased the testator, to his "children or remoter issue," per stirpes of "their parents' or grandparents'" shares:—Held, that the grandchildren could not claim a share, by substitution, in competition with children, but that the children alone were entitled, to the exclusion of grandchildren. Amson v. Harris, 19 Beav. 210.

A testator gave his real and personal estate to his wife for life, and then to be divided equally between his four children, "or their child or children, share and share alike." But in case any of his children should die without leaving any child or children, then his, her or their share or shares to be divided between "the survivor or survivors of him, her or them, or his, her or their child or children, share and share alike":—Held, that the gift to the grandchildren was substitutionary; and upon the death of one of the children, unmarried, in the lifetime of the widow, the surviving children took as tenants in common. Blundell v. Chapman, 34 Beav. 648; 33 L. J., Ch. 660; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 332; 10 L. T. 152; 12 W. R. 540.

A gift to the children or grandchildren of A.:—Held, substitutional, so that all the children being in esse the children only were entitled to the trust funds. Margitson v. Hall, 10 Jur. (N.S.) 89; 9 L. T. 755; 12 W. R. 334.

A testator gave 1,600*l.* unto and amongst such one or more of the children "or" grandchildren of his daughter A. as should be living at her death, equally to be divided among them, share and share alike. The testator's brother afterwards made a voluntary increase in the above provision by a bond in favour of all and every the child and children "or" grandchildren of A. that should be living at her decease, in such shares and proportions as she should by will appoint; with a proviso that each and every the children "and" grandchildren of A. that should be living at her decease, should be entitled under such will to receive a share at least equal to the amount of the share to which he or she would have been entitled under the will of the testator. A., by will, appointed to her four daughters (three of whom were married and the fourth of whom married before her death), who were her only children, in equal shares; and in the event of the death of any one of her married daughters, her share to be divided between the children of such daughter. At her death all four were living, and three had issue living:—Held, that the word "or" in the will must be construed strictly as excluding the grandchildren of A., and that the four daughters took absolutely in equal shares. Ib.

A father devised lands to his daughter in fee, and by codicil he ordered that the lands given by his will to his daughter should be not so given, but to all her children, or legal issue, to be divided amongst them in equal shares, after the death of his daughter and her husband. She had ten children, one of whom died in the lifetime of the testator, and three, who survived him, died in her lifetime:—Held, that the children of the daughter who were living at the death of the testator, and those who were born afterwards, took vested interests in fee, to the exclusion of grandchildren and great-grandchildren. Holland v. Wood, L. R. 11 Eq. 91.

Gift to A. or his Heirs.]—On appeal, devise of land on contingency to R. or "his heirs." R., before the contingency happens, conveys "all his right, title, claim, and demand" therein by deed to his younger son and his heirs as a provision, and dies. The contingency happening, R.'s heir cannot claim this against his father's act. "Or" construed "and." Wright v. Wright, 1 Ves. 409.

Testator, by a will made since the statute 1 Vict. c. 26, after directing payment of his debts, and bequeathing several specific articles of plate to his sister L., desired that all his other plate, jewellery, books, pictures, and other property, except freehold and leasehold property, should be sold, and the produce, after deducting funeral and other expenses, be divided in equal parts amongst L., M., N., O. and P. He then directed that his freehold house and his leaseholds, some of which were held for years, and others for years determinable on lives, should be kept in hand and let to the best advantage, and the produce be divided every half-year among the above-named L., M, N., O. and P., or to their lawful heirs; and in case of there being no heirs, the share or shares to be divided in equal parts among the surviving legatees. The testator at his death left L. his heiress-at-law and sole next of kin; M., N., O. and P. were not related to L., but were related to and capable of inheriting from each other; M. died unmarried in the testator's lifetime:—Held, first, that M.'s share of the residuary personal estate lapsed for the benefit of the next of kin; secondly, that M.'s share of the freehold property did not lapse, but went to the surviving devisees, the words "heir and lawful heirs" referring to heirs of the body, and "or" being construed "and"; thirdly, that M.'s share of the leaseholds for years lapsed and fell into the residue, the words "there being no heir" referring to an indefinite failure of issue, and the word "surviving" meaning "other." Harris v. Davis, 1 Coll. C. C. 416; 9 Jur. 269.

A testator devised one-fifth share of his freeholds to each of his five children in fee. He then bequeathed personal estate to them, share and share alike, and he said, "Should either of my children die without issue, I give and bequeath such share and shares amongst my surviving children equally," and should either depart this life leaving children or child, then that child "to inherit his parent's share," and if more than one, "the share" to be equally divided amongst their "heirs" and assigns:—Held, that the gift over referred to the last antecedent, the personalty, and did not affect the realty. Adshead v. Willets, 29 Beav. 358; 9 W. R. 405.

A testator devised all his manors "to my son for his natural life, and at his decease" to trustees, "their heirs and assigns, in trust to preserve" (this devise in trust was repeated whenever necessary) "for the son or sons, daughter or daughters, the males taking first of my said son till they attain the age of twenty-one years, or the days of their marriage, and no farther; the elder son to inherit before the younger, but the daughters to take equally and in common as joint heiresses." He empowered his son to give "any part, or even the whole, of these estates" to any or either of his sons, but not to his daughters, "as my said son may, from their conduct to him (their father), think deserving of preference." But if the eldest grandson should turn out ill, the testator left him an annuity of 200*l.* chargeable on his landed property, "and to the eldest son of such undeserving grandson I leave and bequeath my landed property, estates," &c. "I will, therefore, that the before-mentioned estates should in such instance descend to my son's grandson, but still subject to any entail of the same which my son may make." If the son died without issue, the trustees were to preserve the estates for the testator's four daughters during their lives, free from the control, &c., "the estates being equally divided between them or their heirs," and he gave the "estates and property to them through the said trustees," &c., whom he empowered to raise 10,000*l.* for the daughters, chargeable on all his estate:—Held, that the son took only an estate for life; that the trustees took an estate in fee in remainder expectant on the determination of the life estate of the son, and that on the son's death without issue the estates went over to the daughters as tenants in common in tail. No gift in the will was void for uncertainty or remoteness. Watkins v. Frederick, 11 H. L. Cas. 358.

Bequest of 40*l.* per annum to A. for life, and after her decease to B. or his heirs:—Held, that "or" must be construed disjunctively, and that therefore B. did not take an absolute interest in the annuity. Girdlestone v. Doe, 2 Sim. 225.

Gift to A. or the Heirs of his Body.]—"And" must be construed "or" where it is necessary to put a reasonable construction on the will. As where the interest with the principal of the residue of a testator's estate was directed to be settled on his daughter "or" the heirs of her body, as the executors shall think fit; the word "or" shall be construed "and," for the executors are not empowered to give it from the daughter to the grandchildren. Read v. Snell, 2 Atk. 643.

Testator devised his estate to A. in case his daughter should die leaving no heirs of her body:—Held, a gift to the daughter for life, with contingent remainder to such heir of her body as should be living at the time of her death. Ib., 646.

"Leaving" is a participle of the present tense, and relates to the time of the daughter's dying. Ib.

No weight has been laid on the want of the words "for life" when the intention of the testator has otherwise appeared, especially in the case of a trust executory, for then a court of equity is bound to see a settlement made agreeably to the intention of the testator. Ib., 648.

Gift to A. or his Issue.]—Testator gave in trust to his brother E. the remainder of his property of whatsoever kind to assist him to bring up, educate, and provide for the children of his late brother J., whom he named. "When my youngest nephew attains his age of twenty-one years, it is my will that all my property be equally divided amongst my nephews or their lawful issue, share and share alike; the division, however, is not to take place, although my youngest nephew have attained the age of twenty-one years, until the decease of my wife, my sister J., and my brother E.":—Held, that the interests of the nephews were not contingent on their living until the youngest of them should attain twenty-one, but vested on the testator's death; and that the word "or" was to be construed conjunctively, and consequently that the nephews took estates tail in their shares of the testator's real property, and absolute interests in their shares of his personal property. Parkin v. Knight, 15 Sim. 83; 15 L. J., Ch. 209; 10 Jur. 23.

The testator directed the application of the surplus income of his estate for the maintenance of his children during their minority or apprenticeship, and the application of certain sums for their advancement; and after his youngest child should have attained twenty-one years, he directed his executors to divide any surplus in their hands every three years during his wife's life or widowhood, and, after her death or marriage, every year equally amongst his children or their heirs, instead of any one that might happen to be dead, until the expiration of fifty years from the time of his death; and that at the end of the said fifty years his executors should sell his remaining estate, and pay, discharge, or divide the money for the same amongst his children (naming them), or any of their heirs in their stead; and if any of his said children should die without lawful issue, such share or shares of those so dying to belong to the survivors or their lawful heirs equally:—Held, that the court could not read "or" as "and" where the purpose was manifestly substitution of objects, and not succession; that the word "heirs" must be construed "issue," and not "children"; and that it was not a ground for departing from such meaning that the consequence of adhering to it would be to render the will void for remoteness. Speakman v. Speakman, 8 Hare, 180.

A gift to the sisters of the testator living at a particular time, or the issue of any or either then dead, is not a substitutionary, but a substantive gift to the issue. Attwood v. Alford, L. R. 2 Eq. 479; 14 W. R. 956.

Gift to such of the children of A., B. and C. as should be living at the testatrix's death, or the issue of such of them as should be married, in equal shares. The word "or" construed to mean "and," and the children and grandchildren held to be equally entitled. Horridge v. Ferguson, Jac. 583; 23 R. R. 148.

Bequest to a class of objects with a proviso expressive of the testator's intention that "the children or remoter issue" of any of the class who should die in the lifetime of the testator should stand in their parents' or grandparents' place, and take per stirpes the share which their parents or grandparents would have taken:—Held, that where one of the class had died in the lifetime of the testator, leaving children and grandchildren, the children were alone entitled to the parents' share. Amson v. Harris, 19 Beav. 210.

Legacy to A. or her issue:—Held, all descendants of A. entitled per capita. Davenport v. Hanbury, 3 Ves. 257; 3 R. R. 91.

Gift in Remainder to a Class or their Heirs.]—Gift by the testator to his wife for her life, or until her second marriage, of the interest of his real and personal estate, which, whether arising from rents or public securities, was to be applied for the benefit of herself and children; and if she married again, he declared that her power and benefit under his will should cease; and when thirty years were expired, he ordered all his property, both freehold and leasehold, to be sold, and two-thirds to be divided among his children living at that period or their heirs, and one-third to be invested for the benefit of his wife; and after her decease he bequeathed such third to his children then living and to their heirs:—Held, that the gift at the end of thirty years was not liable to objection on the ground of remoteness; that there was no substitution of the legatee created by the gift to the children, "or to their heirs," but that the word "or" must be read "and"; and that the children of the testator living at the end of thirty years (who were also the same children as were living at the death of the widow) were entitled to the proceeds of the sale of the estate, and also to the intermediate rents after the death of the widow and before the expiration of the thirty years. Lachlan v. Reynolds, 9 Hare, 796.

A testator directed that certain stock should after the death of his wife be divided among his "children then living, or their heirs." Two of the children were dead at the date of the will; three survived the testator and died in the lifetime of his wife; and two survived her:—Held, first, that the "heirs" of the children who predeceased the wife (including the two who were dead at the date of the will) were entitled to share in the fund along with the children who survived her. Philps, In re, L. R. 7 Eq. 151; 19 L. T. 713.

Held, secondly, that by "heirs" were meant the statutory next of kin of the children. Ib.

Held, thirdly, that such next of kin were to be ascertained, in the case of the children who survived the testator, at the time of the death of each child, but in the case of the children who predeceased the testator at the time of the testator's death. Ib.

A testatrix by her will, dated in 1836, gave all her personal property and also her real property to trustees on trust for payment of her debts and legacies, and subject thereto she gave "all her personal and real property as aforesaid" between her five sisters, nominatim, and the survivors of them, in equal shares during their lives and spinsterhood, and upon the death or marriage of all her said sisters she directed that her "property should be divided into equal proportions or shares between her brothers and sisters then living or their heirs." She had twelve brothers and sisters, of whom one brother died before the testatrix was born, one sister died before the date of the will, two brothers and one sister died in her lifetime after the date of the will, and the rest survived her. The last survivor was one of the five sisters named in the will, who died a spinster:—Held, first, that (notwithstanding the will was before the date of the Wills Act) the word "or" in the gift in remainder could not be read "and," and that there was no intestacy. Wingfield v. Wingfield, 47 L. J., Ch. 768; 9 Ch. D. 658; 39 L. T. 227; 26 W. R. 711.

Held, secondly, that the word "heirs" must be construed distributively so as to mean heirs-at-law as to the real estate, and statutory next of kin (including widows) as to the personal estate. Ib.

Held, thirdly, that such heirs-at-law and next of kin were to be respectively ascertained as regarded brothers and sisters who predeceased the testatrix at the death of the testatrix, and as regarded those who survived her at their respective deaths. Ib.

—— To a Class or their Issue.]—A testator gave his residuary estate to trustees upon trust to pay the income thereof to all his brothers and sisters living at the time of his decease equally during their lives, and from and after the decease of the survivor of them to pay the principal unto, between, and amongst all the lawful issue of his said brothers and sisters who should attain twenty-one, &c., or unto, between, and amongst the issue (if any) of such of them as should be then deceased, so that such [each ?] class of issue, whether in the first or second degree, should take only as amongst themselves the share or shares to which his, her, or their deceased parent or parents would have been entitled if living :—Held, first, that the children of the brothers and sisters took per stirpes ; secondly, that the word "or" must be read as "and," and that therefore a son of one of the testator's brothers (who survived the testator) having died in the testator's lifetime leaving children living at the time of distribution, these children took their grandfather's share. Shand v. Kidd, 19 Beav. 310.

—— To a Class or their Families.]—A husband, who died in 1854, gave all his property to his wife for life, and after giving pecuniary legacies and annuities, devised and bequeathed to his son C. all the residue after his mother's death, and to his heirs ; and in case his son should die leaving no issue, then his freehold estate was to be equally divided between his (testator's) surviving children or their families. All the children of the testator survived their mother, who died in 1861, and, excepting one, all (two without issue, two leaving children, one leaving a child, and the issue of another child) died in the lifetime of C., who died, in 1869, a bachelor and intestate :—Held, a gift on the death of C., without leaving issue living at his death, to the other children of the testator then living, and to the families of such of them as were dead. Burt v. Hellyar, 41 L. J., Ch. 430 ; L. R. 14 Eq. 160 ; 26 L. T. 833.

—— To a Class or their Personal Representatives.]—Stock was bequeathed in trust for testator's brother and the brother's wife for their lives successively, and after their decease in trust to be divided equally amongst the testator's nephews and nieces, children of the brother then living, or their legal personal representatives :—Held, that the representatives of nephews and nieces, dying in the lifetime of the surviving tenant for life, took shares, and that such representatives were the next of kin, and not the executors or administrators of the nephews and nieces. King v. Cleaveland, 4 De G. & J. 477 ; 28 L. J., Ch. 835 ; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 702 ; 6 W. R. 602.

Power to Appoint to A. or B.—Implied Gift to A. and B. in Default of Appointment.]—Testator bequeathed a leasehold estate after an estate for life to his nephew A., and the heirs male of his body lawfully begotten, and in default of such heirs to one of the sons of his nephew B., as A. shall direct by a conveyance in his life, or by his last will. Another leasehold estate he bequeathed to A. upon trust, subject to certain charges, to employ the remainder of the rent to such children of B. as A. shall think most deserving, and that will make the best use of it, or to the children of his nephew C., if any such there are or shall be. A. dying in the testator's life, the bequest of the latter estate was established in favour of all the children ; quære, as to the former. Brown v. Higgs, 4 Ves. 708. Affirmed, 5 Ves. 495 ; 8 Ves. 561 ; 4 R. R. 323.

Bequest to executors in trust, that they shall pay, &c., unto and amongst the testator's two brothers and his sisters, or their children, in such shares, &c., as the trustees or the major part of them, or the survivor, his executors, &c., shall think fit. All the children living at the death of the testator held entitled with the parents, per capita, the court not having a discretion. Longmore v. Broom, 7 Ves. 124.

Testator bequeathed a sum of 6,000*l.* in trust for his daughter for life, "and on her decease I give the said 6,000*l.* to the children, or their descendants, of T. F. in such proportions to each as my daughter may direct." The daughter died without having made any appointment :—Held, that the children of T. F. were entitled to the fund, to the exclusion of their issue. Jones v. Torin, 6 Sim. 255.

Testator gave all his property to his mother for life, and directed that at her decease it should be divided amongst his three sisters, or their children, in such proportions as she should appoint. The mother and one of the sisters died in the testator's lifetime ; the deceased sister left no issue, but one of those that survived had children :—Held, that "or" must be read "and," and that, under the circumstances of the case, the property must be considered as given to the three sisters and their children in equal shares. Penny v. Turner, 15 Sim. 368 ; 2 Ph. 493 ; 17 L. J., Ch. 133 ; 10 Jur. 768.

Bequest to trustees for A. for life, and if he should die childless, upon trust to apply the sum to the benefit of such of the testator's children, or their issue, as the trustees should think fit, for the interest and good of the testator's family, with no gift in default of appointment. No appointment having been made, and the tenant for life having survived the donees of the power and died childless :—Held, that children and remoter issue took in equal shares per capita, and that the period for ascertaining the class was the death of the tenant for life. White's Trusts, In re, Johns. 656.

Power to appoint amongst testator's present or future grandchildren, or their respective issues, does not authorise the donee to exclude the children of a deceased grandchild, who were living at the donee's death. Garthwaite v. Robinson, 2 Sim. 43 ; 29 R. R. 54.

A testator directed that certain stock should stand in his name, and certain real estates remain unalienated "until the following contingencies are completed" ; and, after giving life interests in such stock and estates to his two children, with remainder to their issue, he declared that, in case his two children should both die without leaving lawful issue, the same should be disposed of as after mentioned ; that was to say, the survivor of his two children should have power to dispose by will of his real and personal estate "amongst my nephews and nieces, or their children, either all to one of them, or to as many of them as my surviving child shall think proper" :—Held, that a trust was created in favour of the testator's nephews and nieces and their children, subject to a power of selection and distribution in his surviving child. Burrough v. Philcox, 5 Myl. & Cr. 72 ; 5 Jur. 453.

Where a fund is given to A. to be applied for the benefit of B. or C., as A. shall think fit, and A. does not make any appointment, the bequest is void for uncertainty. Salusbury v. Denton, 3 Jur. (N.S.) 740.

A mother bequeathed a fund to her daughter for life, and after her death "to and amongst my other children or their issue in such parts, shares, and proportions, manner and form, as my daughter shall by deed or will appoint":—Held, that the daughter's power was exclusive, and not distributive merely. Veale, In re, 25 W. R. 122. Affirmed, 46 L. J., Ch. 799; 5 Ch. D. 622; 36 L. T. 634—C. A.

In Gift Over—On Death or want of Issue.]—Bequest to J. A. for life, remainder to his eldest son for life, and to remain entailed on the eldest son of J. A. and his posterity for ever, but in case of the death or want of issue of J. A. to M. (a brother of J. A.) and his descendants as above mentioned from one generation to another for ever. J. A. survived the testator and died a bachelor:—Held, that the bequest over to M. and his descendants was void for remoteness. Monkhouse v. Monkhouse, 3 Sim. 119; 30 R. R. 135.

—— In event of not Marrying, or Dying.]—Testator gave a sum of money to trustees, in trust only and for the use and benefit of his daughter, which he desired might be paid to her, and be settled on her during her life, in case of her marriage; or, in case she did not marry, then the interest of the money, being vested in government securities, to be paid to her, and in the event of her not marrying or dying then the money to go to his nephews. The daughter married, and shortly afterwards died without issue:—Held, that her husband, who had taken out administration to her, and not the testator's nephews, was entitled to the fund. Hawkins v. Hawkins, 7 Sim. 173.

—— In event of not Intermarrying nor having Children.]—A testator gave a fund to A. absolutely, but that only the interest should be paid to her for her separate use for life, and after her death the property should go to her children, and in the event of her not intermarrying, nor having children, the property to be at her disposal by will or otherwise. A. being a widow, sixty-four years of age, and never having had any children, filed a bill for the transfer of the fund:—Held, that she was entitled to it. Mackenzie v. King, 17 L. J., Ch. 448; 12 Jur. 787.

—— On Death Unmarried or without Issue.]—A testator gave a share of his estate to L., subject to the condition that L. should receive for professional services 150*l.* in some one year, and the executors were to invest the principal, and pay L. the interest; "and in the event of his death, he being at the time unmarried, or not leaving legal issue, or not having fulfilled the above condition," then there was a gift over. L. never fulfilled the condition, but died leaving lawful issue:—Held, that his representatives took the share. Law v. Thorp, 25 L. J., Ch. 75; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 1082; 4 W. R. 69.

—— On Death without having Issue or making Disposition of Share.]—A testator devised real estate to his children and their heirs as tenants in common, with a gift over to the survivors "in the event of any of them dying before having heirs of their body, 'or' making a particular disposition" of his share:—Held, that "or" must be read "and," and that the children took in fee, but that the gift over in the event of making no disposition was repugnant and void. Greated v. Greated, 26 Beav. 621; 28 L. J., Ch. 756; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 454; 7 W. R. 367.

—— On Death without Heir or Will.]—The testator bequeathed a leasehold house and premises, with the furniture and plate, to his son, and added, "and should he die without heir or will, the profits of the said house to be equally divided between all my grandchildren, by the consent of his mother":—Held, that "or" should be read "and," and that the son took an absolute interest in the house. Green v. Harvey, 1 Hare, 428; 11 L. J., Ch. 290; 6 Jur. 704.

—— On Death or Neglect to Claim.]—A testatrix, after bequeathing certain legacies, directed that if these legatees should be dead at the time of her decease, or should not be heard of to be then living, or should not respectively claim their respective legacies within twelve months after her decease, then the legacies given to such of the legatees as should be dead, or should neglect to claim within the time aforesaid, should sink into the residue:—Held, that one of the legatees, who did not claim her legacy within the time limited by the will, had no right thereto after that time, although she lived at a distance from the residence of the testatrix, and had not previously heard of the bequest in her favour, or of the testatrix's decease. Hawkes v. Baldwin, 9 Sim. 355; 7 L. J., Ch. 297; 2 Jur. 698.

—— On Death of A. or B.]—Gift of an annuity "after the death of my mother, 'or' the second marriage, death, or forfeiture of my wife." The mother predeceased the testator:—Held, that the annuity was payable from the testator's death, and that "or" could not be read "and." Hawksworth v. Hawksworth, 27 Beav. 1.

—— On Death before A. or under Age.]—Bequest of residuary personal estate in trust for testator's wife for life, and on her death to pay, &c., to his son A. on his attaining twenty-one; but if he should depart this life before the wife, "or" before attaining twenty-one, then in trust for the defendant. Maintenance to and a power to advance A. were also given. A. attained twenty-one, but died in the wife's lifetime:—Held, that "or" was to be read "and," and that the son took an absolute vested interest on attaining twenty-one. Bentley v. Meech, 25 Beav. 197.

—— On Death in Lifetime of A. or under Age and without Issue.]—Testator bequeathed his real and personal estate to trustees, in trust to pay an annuity to his wife, and to raise and pay to each of his children 2,000*l.* on their attaining twenty-one, and to accumulate the surplus income of the trust property during the life of his wife, and, after her death, to sell the property, and divide the proceeds among his children on their attaining twenty-one, and in case all his children should die in the lifetime of his wife, or under twenty-one, and without leaving issue, then, after his wife's death, to sell the trust property and divide the proceeds amongst certain other persons:—Held, that "or" ought to be read as "and," and that the children, having attained twenty-one, were absolutely entitled to the property, though their mother was living. Miles v. Dyer, 5 Sim. 435; 8 Sim. 330.

—— On Death under Age or without Issue.]—A testator, after certain legacies, devised as follows:—"In case my daughter should have no lawful issue, after her death I will that my property that shall be remaining do return to my relations, viz. to my nephew J. 100*l.*; likewise I leave, in case my daughter has no issue, to my nephew S. and my niece A. 80*l.* each; the remainder of my personalty I leave to my daughter's disposal, if she lives to maturity. As to my real estate, if my daughter dies before she arrives at lawful age, or have no lawful issue, then I leave my real and all my other property to my brothers, equally between them; but in case my daughter shall have lawful issue, then I leave the whole of my property, real and personal, to her and her heirs":—Held, that the word "or" should be read "and," and that the daughter, on attaining twenty-one, took an estate in fee simple. Johnson v. Simcox, 31 L. J., Ex. 38; 4 L. T. 836; 9 W. R. 895—Ex. Ch. Affirming 6 H. & N. 6.

A. B. devised to his son J. M. an estate in fee, and willed that he should have possession of the property on his attaining twenty-one. By a codicil, the testator "willed that if his son J. M. should die without issue, or before he should attain the age of twenty-one, then the estate which he had devised to him should go over to his son W. M. and his heirs." J. M. attained twenty-one years of age, and contracted to sell the estate:—Held, that the word "or" must be read "and"; and that in the event which had happened, of J. M. having attained twenty-one years of age, he took an indefeasible estate in fee simple. Morris v. Morris, 1 Eq. R. 167; 17 Beav. 198; 17 Jur. 966; 1 W. R. 377.

A testator, W., devised his real estates to trustees, upon trust, to receive the rents, and on his son John arriving at the age of twenty-five years, to let him into possession, but neither he nor his heirs to the third generation were to sell or mortgage the same, it being the testator's desire that the property should remain in the W. name. If John should die without leaving lawful issue, it was the testator's will that his daughter Ann should have his share, subject to the same limitations. If John and Ann should die under age, or without leaving issue, the testator devised the property, after deducting a certain sum from the produce in favour of his (the testator's) daughter Elizabeth, to and for the benefit of the plaintiffs. The testator had the three children named in his will living at his death, and no more. Elizabeth died at the age of two years: Ann survived her, and died at the age of nineteen years, unmarried; and John, the last survivor, died, aged thirty years, leaving children, who all died unmarried, and without issue. John, by his will, devised part of the father's real estate to the defendants:—Held, first, that the devisees of John, the son, took no estate in the hereditaments of W., the father, devised by his will; and, secondly, that the plaintiffs took the estates in the hereditaments of W., the father, and in such manner as given to them by the will of W., the father. Mortimer v. Hartley, 3 De G. & Sm. 316.

One devises, if his son die before twenty-one, or without issue, that the land shall go to J.: the son dies before twenty-one, but leaves issue. J. shall have the land. Jenning v. Hellier, cited 2 Vern. 377.

—— Issue male.]—Devise to A. for life, when he attains thirty-one, and after his death to his eldest son in fee. In case A. should not live to that age "or" not have any son, then in trust for B. for life, on attaining thirty-one, and after his death to his eldest son in fee, and in case of failure, to the eldest son of the testator's daughter in fee. A. attained thirty-one, and died without having had issue:—Held, that "or" could not be read "and," and that the eldest son of the daughter took the estate. Cooke v. Mirehouse, 34 Beav. 27.

Testator bequeathed 5,000*l.* to A. if he attained twenty-one, but if he should not attain that age, or die without leaving issue male, then over:—Held, that the 5,000*l.* vested, absolutely, in A. on his attaining twenty-one. Mytton v. Boodle, 6 Sim. 457.

—— On Death under Age or Unmarried.]—One devises several parcels of land to his several children in tail, and if any of them die before twenty-one or unmarried, such child's part to go to the surviving children; if any of the children die unmarried, though above the age of twenty-one, his share shall go to the surviving child, but such survivor shall have such share for life only; what goes over on one child's death shall not go over again a second time. Woodworth v. Glassbrook, 2 Vern. 388.

Gift over if A. died under thirty-one or unmarried. Word "or" construed as if it were "and," where requisite to give effect to intent of testator. Grant v. Dyer, 2 Dow, 73, 87; 14 R. R. 118.

A testator gave a share of his residuary real and personal estate to his daughter, her heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, to be paid at twenty-one or on the day of her marriage, provided it should take place with the consent of his widow. There was a gift over in case of death "without having attained twenty-one years or being so married as aforesaid." The word "or" construed "and." Collett v. Collett, 35 Beav. 312, 315; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 180; 14 L. T. 94; 14 W. R. 446.

Residuary bequest for A. and B., in trust till they come of age, or marry, the interest to be received in the meantime and paid to them, but if one of them die before marriage, or twenty-one, then to survivor and children; if both die, leaving no issue, then I give them power to leave it by will as they think proper. One legatee married, and the other attained twenty-one:—Held, that both acquired vested interest. Thackeray v. Hampson, 2 Sim. & S. 214; 25 R. R. 186. S. C., nom. Thackeray v. Dorrien, 3 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 89.

Devise to the use of my son "if he shall attain the age of twenty-three years, or shall be married with consent of the trustees for the time being of my will, which shall first happen, and to his heirs and assigns absolutely for ever":—Held, that the word "or" might be construed "and," and that the son took an estate tail or in fee (but a case sent for the opinion of C. P.). Grimshaw v. Pickup, 9 Sim. 591; 3 Jur. 286.

A testator devised and bequeathed his interest in his freehold and chattel property to his grandson, C.; "but in case my grandson should happen to die before he attains the age of twenty-one, or married," then over:—Held, that "or" should be read "and," that C. had acquired an absolute estate, having attained twenty-one, though he had not been married. Clegg, In re, 14 Ir. Ch. R. 70.

A testator bequeathed a sum of money to his two daughters, share and share alike, to be paid to them by his executors in twelve months after their respective marriages, with the consent of his executors; and he directed that his daughters should be paid a yearly sum, less than the interest of their shares, until their respective marriages; and that from their respective marriages, each of them should be paid the full legal interest; the remainder of the interests on their fortunes to go to his son until their respective marriages; and in case his daughters, or either of them, should die before twenty-one or day of marriage, her share of the sum bequeathed to her should go to his son; and in case both should die, the entirety of the sum to go to his son:—Semble, the legacies to the daughters did not vest till marriage. Cantillon, In re, 16 Ir. Ch. R. 301.

Held, that "or" should be read "and," and therefore that the legacies did not go over to the son on the death of the daughters unmarried, but were undisposed of by the will, and divisible among the testator's next of kin. Ib.

A father bequeathed his residuary estate in trust for all his children in equal shares as tenants in common, as to sons absolutely, and to daughters in the manner thereinafter specified, and the will contained a clause of accruer in the event of sons dying under twenty-one, and daughters dying under that age or without having been married. And the father directed that the share or shares of any daughter should be held in trust for such daughter for her separate use for life, and after her death for a surviving husband for his life, and after the death of such daughter and her husband for the benefit of the children of such daughter. The testator left five children, all of whom attained twenty-one. A daughter died without having been married:—Held, that she took one-fifth of the residuary estate absolutely. Carter v. Smith, 25 L. T. 555.

—— Under Age or without Husband living.]—Bequest to A., her executors, &c., provided that, in case she shall die under twenty-one, or without having any husband living, it shall go over:—Held, vested at twenty-one, upon intention, the word "or" being construed "and". Weddell v. Mundy, 6 Ves. 341.

—— On Death under Age or Marriage without Consent.]—Legacy to be paid on marriage with consent, and given over in case of death before twenty-five "or" such marriage with consent:—Held, that the legacy was only intended to go over, in the event of death before twenty-five "and" such marriage with consent. Malcolm v. O'Callaghan, Coop. t. Brough. 73.

A testator by his will gave to each of two daughters the sum of 1,000*l.*, as and when they should respectively attain the age of twenty-five years, or be married with the consent of his executors; but in case either should die under the age of twenty-five years, or should marry without consent, he directed that the legacy to such one as should die under that age or marry without consent should, after such decease of them respectively, or their respectively marrying without consent, fall into the residue of his estate:—Held, that the legacies vested respectively on the happening of either alternative, and were not contingent on the happening of both alternatives, namely, marrying with consent, and attaining twenty-five. Thompson v. Teulon, 9 Hare (App.) xlix.; 22 L. J., Ch. 243; 1 W. R. 12, 97.

G. PARTICULAR WORDS.

Accumulation.]—A testator having appointed trustees for the purpose of carrying on his trade of a bleacher, directed them to pay the profits of his business into a bank for accumulation and investment, until his daughters and their issue could have along with the other sums he had directed to be invested on their behalf 5,000*l.* each for their portions. He afterwards directed that any money which might be paid into the bank on account of such portions should be for the equal benefit of his daughters and their issue, and the interest should be equally divided amongst his daughters:—Held, that the testator used the word accumulation as meaning not the addition of income to the capital, but the constant addition of fresh amounts from the profits de anno in annum arising from the business. Pilkington v. Myers, 8 L. T. 720.

Trust of Heirlooms for Person entitled to "Actual" Possession of Realty.] — Chattels bequeathed as heirlooms upon trust to go along with, and be enjoyed by the person for the time being entitled under a settlement to the "actual" possession of, settled real estate do not vest absolutely in a tenant in tail of the real estate who dies in the lifetime of the tenant for life. Lord Scarsdale v. Curzon (1 J. & H. 40; 29 L. J., Ch. 249) considered and applied. Angerstein, In re, Angerstein v. Angerstein, 65 L. J., Ch. 57; [1895] 2 Ch. 883; 73 L. T. 500; 44 W. R. 152.

In Addition.]—Whether the words "in addition," in any case, add to the effect of a bequest without those words. Lee v. Pain, 4 Hare, 218.

The argument on the omission of the words "in addition" answered by referring to the words "in substitution." Ib., 221.

Aforesaid, As before, and other Referential Expressions.]—See post, cols. 1398, et seq.

Along with.]—"Along with other sums" construed to mean "in addition to those sums," not "including those sums." Pilkington v. Myers, 8 L. T. 720.

And—Or.]—See ante, col. 711.

"Are" in Future Sense.]—A testatrix gave money to the children of her brother B. living at his decease, and gave benefits to other nieces, some married and some not, and afterwards directed that "the legacies of such of my nieces as are married shall be to their separate use." One of the daughters of B. was unmarried at her death, but was married at the death of B.:—Held, that the testatrix had used the word "are" in a future sense, and that she intended that such of her nieces as should be married at the time when their legacies and shares became payable should take to their separate use. Bayliss's Trusts, In re, 17 Sim. 178; 13 Jur. 1090.

As to.]—The recurring use of the words "as to" at the commencement of several devises is not necessarily an indication of the commencement of a devise complete in itself, and separate and independent from other limitations. Gordon v. Gordon, L. R. 5 H. L. 254.

Bankruptcy—Colonial Bankruptcy—Domicil.] Where a legacy is vested in trustees upon trust for a domiciled Englishman for life, or until he shall become a bankrupt or do or suffer anything whereby the same would become payable to some other person, and he is adjudicated a bankrupt in New Zealand, but the legacy never becomes payable to the official assignee in that colony, no forfeiture of the life interest will be effected by such a bankruptcy. Blithman, In re (35 L. J., Ch. 255; L. R. 2 Eq. 23), applied and followed. Hayward, In re, Hayward v. Hayward, 66 L. J., Ch. 392; [1897] 1 Ch. 905; 76 L. T. 383; 45 W. R. 439; 4 Manson, 130.

Begotten.]—See post, col. 890.

Bequeathed.] — The word "bequeathed" (though not in itself a technical word) is primarily applicable only to property passing under a testamentary disposition. The testatrix, a married woman, had under her marriage settlement an absolute power of appointment over certain funds. By her will in 1867 she specifically appointed such funds, and then proceeded as follows: "I constitute and appoint E. M. my residuary legatee to any property which has been bequeathed to me and which is not mentioned in this will." The father of the testatrix, by his will in 1873, bequeathed to her a certain sum of stock, but he subsequently determined to give it to her in his lifetime, and accordingly transferred it to the trustees of her marriage settlement:—Held, that this sum of stock did not pass to E. M. under the residuary gift contained in the will of the testatrix. Armstrong, In re, Marescaux v. Armstrong, 49 L. J., Ch. 53; 42 L. T., 823.

Born.]—See post, col. 890.

"By"—Expression of Trust.]—Devise of all real and personal estate "in trust," "by" "B., C., D.," &c., must be construed by the subsequent acts to be done by them, and amounted here to a devise "to" them. Bullock v. Stones, 2 Ves. 521.

"Charging"—Appointment of Receiver by Court where Costs ordered to be paid.]—The fact that a contingent reversionary interest to an estate was acquired under a will which contained a forfeiture clause upon the reversioner charging the same, or upon becoming bankrupt, is not sufficient ground for discharging a receiver appointed in respect of the reversioner's interest, and such appointment does not, of itself, constitute a charge within the clause. Campbell v. Campbell, 72 L. T. 294.

"Be Deprived or be liable to be Deprived"—Act of Bankruptcy—Death of prior Tenant for Life—Adjudication and subsequent Annulment of Bankruptcy.]—Property was by will given, subject to a prior life interest therein, upon trust to pay the income thereof to a person for his life, with a proviso that if he should do or suffer anything whereby or in consequence whereof, either directly or by operation of law, he would, if absolutely entitled for life to such income, "be deprived or be liable to be deprived" of the beneficial enjoyment thereof, the trustees should apply the income as in the will mentioned. He committed during the lifetime of his father, the first tenant for life, an act of bankruptcy on which a bankruptcy petition was presented. After the death of the father the son was adjudicated a bankrupt, but on appeal the petition was dismissed. In the interval between the death of the father and the adjudication in bankruptcy the trustees had in hand income applicable under the trusts of the will in favour of the son:—Held, that the forfeiture clause thereupon came into operation. White v. Chitty (L. R. 1 Eq. 372) followed; Samuel v. Samuel (12 Ch. D. 153) discussed. Loftus-Otway, In re, Otway v. Otway, 64 L. J., Ch. 529; [1895] 2 Ch. 235; 13 R. 536; 72 L. T. 656; 43 W. R. 501.

"Dying."]—The word "dying" held not to import futurity in regard to the date of the will, or death of the testatrix, but a contrary interpretation was given to the expression "shall die." Coulthurst v. Carter, 15 Beav. 421; 21 L. J., Ch. 555; 16 Jur. 532.

Ejusdem generis.]—See post, col. 1245.

Elder—Eldest.]—See YOUNGER CHILDREN.

Become entitled.]—These words mean primâ facie "entitled in possession, and have the beneficial enjoyment of the estate." Chorley v. Loveland, 33 Beav. 189; 9 L. T. 596; 12 W. R. 187.

Equally—Equal Shares.]—See post, cols. 1367–70, 1382.

Et cætera.]—See post, col. 1248.

"Free" from Liabilities of other Persons—"Full Power" of disposing.]—A testator declared that any money to which any of his daughters should become entitled under his will should be settled free from any liabilities of any other person, and with full power of disposing of same by will:—Held, that each daughter's share should be settled upon her for life for her separate use, with restraint on anticipation, and on her death her share should be held for such person or persons as she should by will appoint, and, in default, for her next of kin as if she had died unmarried. Kingham v. Kingham, [1897] 1 Ir. R. 170.

Hereinafter.]—The word "hereinafter" construed "herein." Bengough v. Eldridge, 1 Sim. 173; 27 R. R. 184.

Testatrix gives, by her will, legacies to all her nephews and nieces, except those thereinafter named; she desires her executors to look upon all memorandums, &c., in her own hand as parts of or a codicil to her will, and bequeaths by will her residue to the children of her sisters, E., J., &c. By a codicil she gives legacies to some other nephews and nieces:—Held, that the children of E., J., &c., the residuary legatees under the will, were excluded from the legacies; but that the legatees under the codicil were not, and were entitled to both. Fuller v. Hooper, 2 Ves. 242.

If.]—See VESTED, CONTINGENT, AND FUTURE INTERESTS.

Improvements.]—A testator devised his estates, in trust, after deducting out of the rents, taxes, repairs, "improvements," &c., and "all other necessary outgoings," to divide the surplus between A. B. and other persons for life:—Held, that an expenditure for new farm buildings, &c., not stated to be with a view of improving the rents or to secure the continuance of the old tenants, was not within the term "improvements." Walpole v. Boughton, 12 Beav. 622.

In estimating lasting improvements, old buildings pulled down, if incapable of repair, to be valued as old materials only. Robinson v. Ridley, 6 Madd. 2.

In the first place.]—The words in a will in trust "in the first place" are merely words of method and order, and do not imply priority of payment. Nash v. Dillon, 1 Moll. 236.

Inherit.]—Construed in the sense of succession by descent. East v. Twyford, 9 Hare, 729.

Issue living—Child "en ventre sa mère."]—A testator, by his will, gave real and personal estate to his wife for life, and after her death one-half of the same to his daughter, Mrs. C., absolutely, in case she had issue living at the death of his wife. Mrs. C.'s first child was born one day after the death of the testator's wife:—Held, that Mrs. C.'s child en ventre sa mère was issue living at the death of the testator's wife, and that Mrs. C. took absolutely. Dictum of Lord Eldon in Thellusson v. Woodford (post, col. 751) adopted, and Blasson v. Blasson (post, col. 893) distinguished. Burrows, In re, Cleghorn v. Burrows, 65 L. Ch. 52; [1895] 2 Ch. 497; 13 R. 689; 73 T. 148; 43 W. R. 683.

Item.]—W. devised his lands to his wife for life, and after her decease to D., his wife's niece, and then said: "Item, I give the use of 500*l.* stock for her natural life, but after her decease I give the 500*l.* among my wife's brothers and sisters":—Held, the wife, and not the niece, is entitled to the 500*l.* stock for life, for it is not necessary the word "item" should be construed as independent of the preceding clause, and the wife is the person the testator naturally meant by the word "her," and is also the person the testator was principally taking care of. Castledon v. Turner, 3 Atk. 257. Tomkins v. Tomkins, cited 2 Ves. Sen. 564. Sleech v. Thorington, 2 Ves. Sen. 564. Stebbing v. Walkey, 2 Bro. C. C. 85.

A testator, after giving several annuities for lives, each gift commencing with the word "item," proceeds thus: "Item, I give to my wife 1,200*l.* a year during her life, and also my furniture and house, and after her decease to S. S. and his heirs":—Held, that S. S. was entitled to the fund for payment of the annuity, as well as the house and furniture. Oldman v. Slater, 3 Sim. 84.

Legacy—What is.]—The word "legacy," primâ facie, has reference to personal estate only, unless the context clearly shows that the testator intended to apply it to real estate. Windus v. Windus, 6 De G. M. & G. 549; 26 L. J., Ch. 185; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 1101.

"Residue" is not a "legacy" in the ordinary sense of the term, though the person taking it is a residuary legatee. Ward v. Grey, 26 Beav. 485.

A testatrix directed a sum which she said she owed to A. and B. on her promissory note, and her other debts, to be paid. She directed the residue of her estate to be applied towards establishing a school in connection with a certain chapel for the time being, and to pay the same over to the treasurer, for the time being, of such school now or hereafter to be built. The testatrix did not in fact owe the money to A. and B., but intended it to be held by them on a secret trust for the use of the existing chapel. She did not tell them of this in her lifetime, but told her executor, and A. and B. never knew of the intention till after the testatrix's death:—Held, that whether there was a valid debt or not on the promissory note to A. and B. was a question of law, but if there was no debt, it was good as a legacy. Longstaff v. Rennison, 1 Drew. 28; 21 L. J., Ch. 622; 16 Jur. 557.

Such a question is not one which can be decided by the assistance of a common law judge. Ib.

Bequest of annuity of 200*l.* for use of A. and her children, to be paid out of general effects, until it is convenient to executors to invest 5,000*l.* in funds, in lieu thereof, for her and their use, and to longest liver, subject to an equal division of the interest while more than one alive:—Held, an annuity, and not an absolute legacy. Innes v. Mitchell, 9 Ves. 212.

Testator by his will declared that one-fifth of the residue of his personal estate should be divided amongst certain of his creditors named in a schedule to his will. The schedule contained both the names of the creditors and the debts due to them respectively:—Held, that the parties so named in the schedule were not to be considered as legatees, but strictly as creditors, and consequently that the representatives of such as died in the testator's lifetime, were entitled to the benefit of the will. Williamson v. Naylor, 3 Y. & C. 208.

A. mortgaged an estate in 1774; he left by his will in 1775 an annuity to his widow, in lieu of dower. W., the original mortgagee, subsequently mortgaged his interest in this estate to Messrs. R. & Co. In 1786 Messrs. R. & Co. filed a bill against W., and the real and personal representatives of A., for the purpose of obtaining a foreclosure. By a decree in this suit in 1791, a declaration was made that the widow having relinquished her title to dower, became a bonâ fide purchaser of the annuity, and was entitled to be paid it out of the mortgaged estate. This suit not having been prosecuted, and the widow having died in 1794, her representatives in 1822 filed a bill against the heir of W., and other persons claiming under him, and the heirs and devisees of A., for the payment of the arrears of the annuity during her lifetime, or that the estate should be sold and the arrears paid out of the proceeds:—Held, on appeal, that the annuity not having been expressly charged on the real estate of A., was a mere pecuniary legacy, and that the decree of 1791 was erroneous, in declaring that the widow was entitled to be paid it out of the mortgaged estate. White v. Parnther, 1 Knapp, 179.

A legacy payable as soon as legal proceedings connected with the fund out of which it is to be paid should be terminated, is neither a reversionary interest nor a contingent legacy. Luff v. Lord, 34 Beav. 220.

In an abstract of legacies bequeathed by will, the testator added in the outer margin to his daughter's legacies, "I intend to make this up British money":—Held, this is an immediate gift in augmentation of the legacies, and not merely a memorandum indicating intention to augment them by future acts. The words contain the essential requisites of a gift; the amount of the bounty and the objects are certain; they do not import fluctuation of mind, or future deliberation, as suspending testator's purpose: they are therefore capable of being considered a declaration of his immediate and fixed intention that the legacies should be augmented, and that is sufficient to constitute a bequest. Mason v. Mason, Beat. 322.

Legatee.]—Where the will bequeathed the residue proportionally amongst the legatees, legatees under a codicil were held not to be entitled to share in the residue. Hall v. Severne, 9 Sim. 515.

A gift of one shilling to a brother followed by a direction to pay him a certain sum annually, if he should ever be unfortunate, does not make him a legatee. Taniere v. Perks, 1 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 79.

"Legal Disability"—Bankruptcy subsequently annulled—Beneficial Interest liable to make good Breach of Trust.]—A testator gave a share of his residuary estate, subject to the life interest of his wife, to his son, but in case of the son being at the death of the survivor of the testator and his wife "under any legal disability in consequence whereof he would be hindered in or prevented from taking the same for his own personal and exclusive benefit," then he gave the same to the wife and children of the son:—Held, that "legal disability" meant some disability imposed on the legatee by law, in consequence of which he would be deprived of his property, such as that caused by bankruptcy, or conviction for felony, or (per Lindley, L.J., and Lopes, L.J.) attainder for treason, or lunacy; and did not include an inability to receive the property caused by a charge created by the legatee, or imposed by a judgment of a court in respect of a debt due from him. Carew, In re, Carew v. Carew, 65 L. J., Ch. 686; [1896] 2 Ch. 311; 74 L. T. 501; 44 W. R. 700—C. A.

An adjudication in bankruptcy obtained by the legatee on his own petition a few hours before the death of the tenant for life, and subsequently annulled on the ground that it ought never to have been made, would not be regarded as causing a disability within the meaning of the clause. Ib.

Likewise.]—A devise commencing with the word "likewise":—Held, to be subject to the contingency mentioned in the preceding gifts of the same estate. Paylor v. Pegg, 24 Beav. 105.

Living.]—See Issue living, supra, col. 735.

Maturity.]—Testator gave to his daughter M. 1,000*l.*, and the residue of his property to the child with whom his wife was then pregnant; and in case said child should not be born alive, or not arrive at the age of maturity, he directed the property allotted to it to be given to his daughter M.; and in case M. should die before marriage, then her portion to the child with whom his wife was pregnant; and in case they both died without arriving at the age of maturity, then over to the third persons. The posthumous child was born alive, and M., who survived, died before sixteen, and both unmarried:—Held, that in this case maturity meant marriage, and that the gift over took effect. Bergin v. Woodlock, Ll. & G. t. Sugd. 140.

"Named" meaning "Described."]—A testator gave legacies to various legatees by name, and some to classes described, but the persons composing which were not named; he gave his residue to his legatees specially named, except one of the classes described:—Held, that this shewed that by the words specially named the testator meant described or mentioned; and that all the legatees, whether named or only described, took shares. Holmes' Trusts, In re, 1 Drew. 321; 22 L. J., Ch. 393.

Now.]—See post, col. 1266.

Or, And.]—See ante, cols. 711, 718.

Other.]—Trustees who had a power to sell and mortgage and manage and receive the rents of an estate were directed to pay a life annuity out of the rents or any other moneys held by them upon the trusts:—Held, that "other moneys" referred to those ejusdem generis, and that the annuity was payable out of the income only, and not out of capital. Clifford v. Arundell, 27 Beav. 209.

A testator bequeathed to his wife absolutely 100*l.*, his leasehold furniture, &c., and then bequeathed to her the interest of moneys invested by him in certain loan societies, and all his other property, during her life. He afterwards bequeathed all moneys belonging to him in a friendly society, and in all other societies, to his wife absolutely:—Held, that the expression "all other societies" meant societies ejusdem generis with that which had been just mentioned, and that as to the moneys payable by the loan societies the widow took a life interest only in them. Marks v. Solomons, 2 Hall & Tw. 323; 19 L. J., Ch. 555.

Outgoings.]—A testator by his will settled certain estates and bequeathed to each person who at his death should become entitled to the possession or the receipt of the rents and profits of any of such estates all arrears of rents and profits which at the testator's death might be due to his estate, and also all proportions of the same accruing due before but payable after his death, but so nevertheless that all outgoings properly chargeable against such arrears and proportions, and not discharged in his lifetime, should be paid out of such arrears and proportions. The court of appeal held that such outgoings were not confined to rates, taxes, tithes, tithe rent-charge, and other outgoings (if any) recoverable by process of law as against or in respect of the hereditaments out of which the rents were derived, as Kekewich, J., had decided, but included agents' salaries, the costs of repairs and improvements and other wages of workmen employed on the estates, and, in fact, all expenses which in the ordinary course of management would require to be made in order to maintain the estates in a fit state to earn rent or which would be proper deductions before ascertaining the net rents receivable as income. Cleveland's (Duke) Estate, In re, Wolmer v. Forester, 63 L. J., Ch. 115; [1894] 1 Ch. 164; 7 R. 328; 69 L. T. 807—C. A.

Precatory Words.]—See post, TRUSTS.

Premises.]—The word "premises," where it is not used in its primary meaning of "præmissa," is equivalent to appurtenances. Read v. Read, 15 W. R. 165.

Provided always.]—The words "provided always" are to be considered as words of reference to all that has gone before them. They constitute a qualification of the preceding limitations. Martelli v. Holloway, 42 L. J., Ch. 26; L. R. 5 H. L. 532.

Residue.]—A residuary bequest following upon a gift of the remainder of an estate does not operate to defeat the gift of the remainder, the word "residue" meaning anything or nothing, as the event may prove. Kilvington v. Parker, 21 W. R. 121.

"Residue" is not a "legacy" in the ordinary sense of the term, though a person taking it is a residuary legatee. Ward v. Grey, 26 Beav. 485.

"Residue" of personal estate is that which remains after payment of the testator's debts, funeral and testamentary expenses, and the cost of the administration of his estate, including the costs of an administration suit. Trethewy v. Helyar, 46 L. J., Ch. 125; 4 Ch. D. 53.

Residuary Legatee.]—The term "residuary legatee" is not of an invariable nature; it must be fashioned and moulded by the context of the will. Singleton v. Tomlinson, 3 App. Cas. 404; 38 L. T. 653; 26 W. R. 722—H. L. (Ir.)

Respectively.]—See VESTED, CONTINGENT, AND FUTURE INTERESTS.

Said.]—This word applies to the immediate antecedent. Willomier, In re, 16 Ir. Ch. R. 389.

A testator directed his household furniture, &c., to be sold, and the produce, with other moneys, to be laid out in stock, the interest to be paid to his wife for her life, and after her death the stock to be sold, and the half of the produce to be paid to C., eldest son of his niece E., and the other half to be divided equally between the children of E. Secondly, he left all stock, &c., of which he should die possessed, to his wife during her life, and after her death he directed the same to be sold, and 3,000*l.* of the produce to be paid to C., and the remainder to be divided equally between all the other children of his niece E., and he appointed executors. Thirdly, he devised his lands in France to his wife for life, and after her death the one-half to go to C., and the other half to be divided equally between all the other children of his niece E., and he appointed an executor of his property in France; and he directed that his executors should not be liable for any loss which might happen in placing out his property according to the direction of his will, except for wilful neglect; and in case C. should die before he attained twenty-one, he directed that the said property and effects should go to his (the testator's) nearest heirs on his mother's side equally. E., the testator's niece, was his nearest heir both on his father's and mother's side, and his next of kin. C. died under age:—Held, that "my said property and effects" in the third clause did not mean all the property of the testator, but was confined to the portion of it bequeathed and devised to C. Ib.

Held, secondly, that it applied to all the property which C. would have taken, and was not confined to the third clause. Ib.

There is no invariable rule of construction which refers the word "said" to the last antecedent, if it be at variance with the context of the will so to apply it. Healy v. Healy, Ir. R. 9 Eq. 418.

A. gave all his real and personal estate to U. and A., whom he appointed his executors. He then gave a house in B. to the inhabitants for a hospital, with one or two directions relating to the management, and directed that his executors should call a meeting of the inhabitants to appoint a committee and trustees to carry out the same, appointing his godson one of the trustees, and leaving the inhabitants to appoint as many more as they pleased; but in the event of the inhabitants not appointing a committee, or not being willing to carry out the scheme, he gave all his property so given to such asylum to his godson absolutely. The testator appointed the "said trustee or trustees" to be his residuary legatees, and made several gifts of houses to different persons for life, with remainder to his "trustee or trustees," or his "said legatee or legatees," for the asylum. The devises to charity being void ab initio, and in 9 Geo. 2, c. 36, the meeting of the inhabitants was never held, nor any committee appointed:—Held, that the gift over to the godson did not comprise the whole of his residuary real and personal estate, but only the house in B. Hall v. Warren, 7 Jur. (N.S.) 1089; 5 L. T. 190; 10 W. R. 66—L.JJ. Reversing 28 L. J., Ch. 70.

Same, Same time, Same manner as.]—See post, cols. 1398 et seq.

Seised.]—"Seised," being a purely technical word, can have no other than its technical meaning in a will if no contrary intention is expressed by the testator; and therefore a devise of land of which the testatrix may die seised does not pass land to which she was entitled, but into possession of which she has never entered, and which is at her death in the wrongful possession of strangers. Leach v. Jay, 47 L. J., Ch. 876; 9 Ch. D. 42; 39 L. T. 242; 27 W. R. 99.

Shall.]—Devise to A. until B. shall attain forty years; B. dies before forty; A.'s estate ceases; secus if the devise to A. be made a fund to pay debts or portions which cannot be raised until B. shall have attained his age of forty, in which case the word "shall" is taken for "should." Lomax v. Holmeden, 3 P. Wms. 176.

Sole.]—The word "sole" in a will has not a fixed technical meaning, throwing on the person who contests that meaning the necessity of shewing, by implication, that it is not used in the particular instrument in its strict technical sense. Massy v. Rowen, L. R. 3 H. L. 288.

In a marriage settlement it may, from the circumstances of the case, have a particular and exclusive meaning attached to it. Ib.

"Sole and Unmarried."]—A testatrix, by her will made in 1860, bequeathed a fund to trustees, on trust to pay the income to her husband for his life, and on his death to divide the fund into four equal parts, and, as to one of the parts, "upon trust to pay the same to J. H., spinster, if she be then sole and unmarried, but, if she be then married," the testatrix directed her trustees to pay the income of the fourth part to J. H. for her life, for her separate use, and after her death to hold it on trust for her children. In June, 1878, the testatrix died, and her husband died in April, 1883. In April, 1861, J. H. married, and in November, 1878, a decree absolute was made for the dissolution of her marriage. There were three children of the marriage. J. H. did not marry again :—Held, that the words "then sole and unmarried" meant "not having a husband" at the time of the death of the tenant for life, and that, in the events which had happened, J. H. was absolutely entitled to the one-fourth share. Lesingham's Trusts, In re, 53 L. J., Ch. 333 ; 24 Ch. D. 703 ; 49 L. T. 235 ; 32 W. R. 116.

So specifically.]—The proviso in a will is a limitation, and must be so construed. "Specifically" means the same thing, whether used in a devise of land or of chattels. "So" is merely descriptive, and is the same as "hereinbefore." "So specifically" is therefore merely descriptive. Giles v. Melsom, 42 L. J., C. P. 122 ; L. R. 6 H. L. 24 ; 28 L. T. 789 ; 21 W. R. 417.

A proviso being at the end of all the devises in a will must have a meaning applicable to all, and not be treated as if placed at the end of one, and thus made applicable to one only. Ib.

"Specifically Bequeathed."] — "Specifically bequeathed" may be construed "bequeathed expressly, and not by reference." Jackson v. Hosie, 27 L. R., Ir. 450—C. A.

"Such."]—Bequest for benefit of testator's three daughters, and in case either of them should leave issue, then she should appoint her share unto such child or children in such manner and form as she should choose ; and in default of any child or children of any of his daughters, then, &c. ; and in case all his daughters should die without issue, then, &c. :—Held, that the expression "such child or children" did not refer to the preceding phrase so as to limit the objects to issue left by a daughter, but meant such child, &c., as she should choose. Harley v. Mitford, 21 Beav. 280.

"Tenant for Life"—Where Joint Tenants for Life.]—A testator devised his freehold estate to M. and B. (two married female relatives) in such terms as to constitute each of them tenant for life of an undivided moiety of the estate, with remainder, as to the share of each, to her first or other son in tail male, and in default of such issue of either, then to the survivor, with remainder to her first or other son in tail male. Then, "as to the entirety of said real and freehold estate on failure of all the limitations hereinbefore expressed," the testator devised same to H. for her life, and after her death to her son C. for life, with remainder to his first or other son in tail male. In default of such issue there followed similar limitations in succession in favour of the other sons of H. and the sons of X. On the failure of the issue of such persons, the testator provided that the estate should go back to the female line, with limitations in tail to the daughters of M. and B., with cross-remainders ; then there were remainders to the daughters of H. and X., with an ultimate remainder in fee to the testator's right heirs. The testator devised his lands and tenements held for terms of years to trustees, to pay rents, &c., and subject thereto to permit the same to be enjoyed as nearly as allowable according to the limitations and provisions declared of his real and freehold lands. After giving a power of jointuring to every tenant for life in possession, the will provided :—"I also empower every tenant for life of my lands and tenements, whether freehold or chattel, when in possession . . . by deed or will to charge same with any sum or sums, not exceeding in the whole by any one tenant for life the sum of 5,000*l.*, for the portion or portions of his younger child or children." The testator also empowered "every such tenant for life when in possession" to grant certain leases. There was also a "name and arms" clause in the will :—Held, that B. as tenant for life in possession of the moiety of the lands, &c., had power to charge the same with a sum of 5,000*l.* in favour of her children, and that she had power to appoint, in unequal shares or exclusively in favour of one or more child or children, such sum or sums not to exceed in the whole 5,000*l.* Wybrants v. Maude, [1895] 1 Ir. R. 214.

Testament.] — This word includes a will, codicils, &c. "Instrument" signifies the will alone. Fuller v. Hooper, 2 Ves. Sen. 242.

Then.]—The word "then" used twice in the same sentence in a will construed in the first instance as pointing to the event, and in the second as an adverb of time. Gill v. Barrett, 29 Beav. 372.

The word "then" construed as pointing to the event, and not to the time. Gundry v. Pinniger, 14 Beav. 94 ; 20 L. J., Ch. 635 ; 15 Jur. 1147. And see S. C., 1 De G. M. & G. 502 ; 21 L. J., Ch. 405 ; 16 Jur. 483.

Bequest of personalty to A. for life, remainder to B., and in the event of B., or any heir of his, not being living, then between the brothers of testator equally ; the remainder over on the death of B. in the lifetime of A. supported as not too remote against the claim of B.'s personal representative. The court availing itself of slight expressions to effectuate the intention, the word "then" was construed as an adverb of time, not of contingency. Baker v. Lucas, 1 Moll. 481.

Then Living.]—See VESTED, CONTINGENT, AND FUTURE INTERESTS.

Thereafter.]—A married woman, having a power of appointment by will, appoints 4,000*l.* to her husband or such persons as he should by will appoint ; and he appoints to his nephews and niece equally at twenty-one or marriage, to be transferred to them within twelve months after the same should happen, without the dividends due thereon, provided neither event happened within such twelve months, and if so, in twelve months next thereafter, with a gift of the residue :—Held, that the intention was that the legatees should not take the first year's dividends, "thereafter" applying to testator's death. Rose's Settlement, In re, 2 W. R. 629.

Unmarried—"Unmarried and without leaving Lawful Issue."]—By his will, dated in 1838, a testator, who died in 1840, bequeathed a fund upon trust to pay the income to his two daughters for their respective lives for their separate use without power of anticipation, and after their respective deceases the principal of their respective shares was to be in trust for the children or child of each daughter, as she might appoint, and in default of appointment equally ; and if there should be no such child, then in trust for the executors, administrators, and assigns of each of his said daughters respectively; but in case of the decease of either of his said daughters "unmarried and without leaving lawful issue," then the testator bequeathed the share of the one so dying unmarried and without issue to the surviving sister. The plaintiff, one of the testator's two daughters, had married, but had had no children, and she was a widow over seventy years of age. The question was, whether she was now absolutely entitled to her share of the fund:—Held, that the plaintiff was not absolutely entitled, the words "unmarried and without leaving lawful issue" meaning not under coverture at the time of her death. King, In re, Salisbury v. Ridley, 62 L. T. 789. And see ante, cols. 727–30, and post, cols. 828 and 880.

"Which" construed "as."]—Direction in a will that "all such and every such sums of money which I have already advanced or may hereafter advance to my children as will appear in a statement in my handwriting" should be brought into hotchpot:—Held, that a subsequent unattested statement in the testator's handwriting was admissible in evidence of advances; the court construing "which" as meaning "as," and the clause "as will appear, &c.," as mere words of reference forming no part of the identification of the subject. Whateley v. Spooner, 3 K. & J. 542.

With.]—A. gives by a codicil to B., during her natural life, his house in G., with all the household goods found therein at the time of his decease. The word "with" so conjoins the house and goods that the devisee can have no larger interest in the one than in the other. Leeke v. Bennett, 1 Atk. 470.

H. DEVISEES AND LEGATEES.

1. GIFT TO WHAT PERSONS.

a. Wife or Husband.

Wife of Testator.]—A testator domiciled in Jamaica became, during a temporary residence at Frankfort, engaged and betrothed to a lady; and by a codicil, after mentioning her name, and alluding to his intended marriage with her, he gave 3,000*l.* to his wife. During the engagement, but before the marriage, the testator died:—Held, that the lady was entitled to the legacy. Schloss v. Stiebel, 6 Sim. 1.

A bequest by a husband "to his beloved wife," not mentioning her by name, applies exclusively to the individual who answers the description at the date of the will, and is not to be extended to an after-taken wife. Garratt v. Niblock, 1 Russ. & M. 629.

A testator by his will gave the proceeds of sale of his residuary estate to trustees, on trust to pay to his wife E. C., within one month after his decease, a legacy of 200*l.*, and in addition thereto to pay to his said wife, "so long as she shall continue my widow and unmarried," an annuity of 300*l.*, commencing from the date of his decease, "or otherwise in lieu and in substitution of the said annuity, at the option of my said wife, if she shall prefer it, a legacy of 2,000*l.*; and I direct that the provision hereby made for my said wife shall be in lieu and satisfaction of any dower or thirds to which she might be entitled out of my estate." After the date of the will the marriage was, in a suit in the divorce court instituted by the wife, declared void ab initio, on the ground of the impotency of the testator. He died without altering his will:—Held, that the late wife was entitled to a legacy of 200*l.*, but that she could not claim the annuity, inasmuch as she, never having been in law the wife of the testator, never could be or continue his widow, and the annuity was therefore given for a period which could never come into existence. Boddington, In re, Boddington v. Clairat, 53 L. J., Ch. 475; 25 Ch. D. 685; 50 L. T. 761; 32 W. R. 448—C. A.

Held, also, that she could not take the 2,000*l.* which was given in substitution for the annuity to which she was not entitled. Ib.

Reputed Wife.]—A wrong description of a legatee will not defeat a legacy; but where the character, on account of which the legacy is given, has been fraudulently imposed upon the testator, the legacy will fail. A testator gave certain legacies "to his wife Anne." In the year 1817 the testator had married the plaintiff, who was the person thus alluded to; but it turned out that her first husband was then, and at the hearing of this cause, still living. The court, being of opinion that no fraud had been practised on the testator, determined that the plaintiff, notwithstanding the misdescription, was entitled to the benefits given her by the will. Penfold v. Giles, 6 L. J., Ch. 4.

C. E., in the lifetime of her husband, contracted a second marriage with the testator, and after his death with J. C. The testator, believing C. E. to be his wife, bequeathed to her all his property, and appointed her his executrix; she proved his will, and J. C., as her husband, possessed part of the estate of the testator. The next of kin having filed a bill against C. E. and her real husband, impugning the validity of the will and seeking an account of the testator's estate:—Held, that the husband of C. E., though he had not interfered, was a necessary party, but that J. C., her supposed husband, was not. M'Kenna v. Everitt, 1 Beav. 134; 8 L. J., Ch. 42.

Where a legacy has been given to a legatee in a character which has been fraudulently assumed by her, and the existence of which character may be considered to be the sole motive of the testator's bounty, the legacy fails. Wilkinson v. Joughin, 35 L. J., Ch. 684; L. R. 2 Eq. 319; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 330; 14 L. T. 394.

A testator gave the income of his real and personal estate to a woman whom he described in his will as, and supposed to be, his wife. A marriage ceremony had been performed between the testator and such woman, but when it took place she knew she had a husband living:—Held, that the bequest was void by reason of the fraud practised on the testator. Ib.

A testator also gave a legacy to his stepdaughter S. W., the daughter of the above woman:—Held, that such legacy was valid, the supposed motive for the gift not being due to any fault on the part of S. W. Ib.

A false character, attributed by a testator to a legatee, will not affect the validity of the legacy, unless the false character has been acquired by a fraud which has deceived the testator; and where the testator and legatee have a common knowledge of an immoral or criminal act, by which the legatee has acquired the false character, the rights of the legatee, as such, will not be affected, it being no part of the duty of courts of equity to punish parties for immoral conduct, by depriving them of their civil rights. Giles v. Giles, 1 Keen, 685; 5 L. J., Ch. 46.

A married woman, who had been separated for nineteen years from her husband, married the testator by the description of a widow. She had about that time heard a report that her husband was living and had made some loose inquiries, but believed he was dead. The testator having made bequests "to his wife," and the court being of opinion that the evidence showed no fraud on her part towards the testator:—Held, that she was entitled to the legacies. Petts, In re, 27 Beav. 576; 29 L. J., Ch. 168; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1235; 1 L. T. 153; 8 W. R. 157.

A testator had been separated from his lawful wife, whose name was Elizabeth. He subsequently went through the marriage ceremony with another female, whose name was Sarah. At the time of his death he was cohabiting with the latter as his wife. He bequeathed the income of his property to "his wife Sarah" for life:—Held, that although not his lawful wife, Sarah was entitled to the yearly income. Dilley v. Matthews, 2 N. R. 60; 8 L. T. 762; 11 W. R. 614.

A testator bequeathed the residue of his property to "my wife." He had separated from his wife by mutual consent, and in her lifetime went through the ceremony of marriage with another woman whom he always treated as his wife:—Held, that the second "wife" took under the words "my wife." Howe, In goods of, 33 W. R. 48; 48 J. P. 743.

A testator, who had gone through the form of marriage with his deceased wife's sister in 1851, gave his plate, &c., "unto my wife" for her own use. He then devised and bequeathed his real and personal estate in trust "to my wife" for her life, and after her decease, "for all and every my children hereafter to be born." He had no children at the date of his will, but his reputed wife had a child by him two days afterwards. Both the reputed wife and child survived him:—Held, that the reputed wife was entitled, but that the gift to the child as one of a class of children "hereafter to be born" was void. Pratt v. Mathew, 22 Beav. 328. Affirmed, 25 L. J., Ch. 686; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 1055; 4 W. R. 772—L.JJ.

Effect of Decree of Nullity.]—A testator, after giving a legacy of 200*l.* to his wife, directed his trustees "in addition thereto to pay to my said wife, so long as she shall continue my widow and unmarried, an annuity of 300*l.*, or otherwise in lieu and in substitution of the said annuity, at the option of my said wife, if she shall prefer it, a legacy of 2,000*l.*" After the date of the will the marriage was declared null by the divorce court in a suit brought by the wife against the testator. After this the testator died leaving the lady surviving. Fry, J., held that she was entitled to the legacy of 200*l.*, but she was not entitled either to the annuity or the 2,000*l.* She appealed from this decision so far as it was unfavourable to her:—Held, that although if the lady had been the testator's wife at his decease the words "shall continue my widow and unmarried," might have been in substance the same as "shall continue unmarried," the reference to widowhood could not on that ground be treated as surplusage, but was the principal part of the condition, and that, as the lady did not at the testator's death fill the position of the testator's widow, she could not take the annuity. Held, further, that she could not take the 2,000*l.*, for that an option to take a legacy instead of an annuity could not exist if there was no right to take the annuity; and, moreover, that a gift by way of substitution for another is subject to the same conditions as the original gift. Rishton v. Cobb (infra) doubted. Boddington, In re, Boddington v. Clairat, 53 L. J., Ch. 475; 25 Ch. D. 685; 50 L. T. 761; 32 W. R. 448—C. A.

Husband of Testatrix.]—If a legacy is given to a person under a particular character, which he has falsely assumed, and which alone can be supposed the motive of the bounty, the rule of the civil law is adopted, and the legacy fails; therefore, where a legacy was given by a woman to a man, in the character of her husband, which she supposed him to be and described as such, but who, at the time of the marriage ceremony with her, had a wife living, the court, in respect of his conduct, held him not entitled; but inclined to think it would be otherwise, where from circumstances not moving from the legatee himself, the description is inapplicable, as where a testator gives a legacy to a child from motives of affection, supposing it his own, but is imposed upon in that respect. Kennell v. Abbott, 4 Ves. 802; 4 R. R. 351.

Wife of Third Party—Reputed Wife.]—A legacy was given to Lady F. C., widow of Sir N. C., so long as she shall continue single and unmarried. At the date of the will she had married again, but her husband was abroad, and she continued to use her former name, and kept the testator in ignorance of her real situation:—Held, that the wrong description did not invalidate the legacy. Rishton v. Cobb, 9 Sim. 615; 9 L. J., Ch. 110. Affirmed, 5 Myl. & Cr. 145; 4 Jur. 261.

A testator bequeathed a life interest in a legacy to H. the present wife of his son, J. B. There was a woman named C. H. living with J. B., and they had falsely represented to the testator that they were married:—Held, that C. H. was entitled to the legacy, there being no evidence that the representation had been made for the purpose of obtaining the legacy. Turner v. Brittain, 3 N. R. 21.

Gift to the wife of A. B. held not to pass the subject-matter to a woman who had cohabited with A. B., and been introduced by him to testator's family as his wife, though never personally known to testator. Davenport's Trust Estate, In re, 1 Sm. & G. 126; 17 Jur. 314; 1 W. R. 103.

Bequest of stock, after the death of the testator's widow, upon trust to pay the dividends to G. for life, and then to his wife for life, and after the decease of the survivor to divide the capital among the children of G. G. had, from a time previous to the date of the will up to the death of the testator, been living with a woman who was believed to be his wife, and by whom he had several children. G. was never married; he died after the death of the testator, in the lifetime of the testator's widow :—Held, that the description in the will applied to a lawful wife and children whom G. might have had after the date of the will, and to no others. Ib.

—— Second Wife.]—Devise to trustee to pay the rents to F. for life, and after his death, leaving his wife surviving, to pay the rents to such wife. The first wife of F., who was married at the date of the will, died after the testator's death, and F. married a second wife who survived him :—Held, that she was not entitled to the rents. Firth v. Fielden, 22 W. R. 622.

Held, the gift to the wife of B. applied to the wife who was living at the time of the will, and not to any wife whom B. might at any time afterwards marry. Burrow's Trust, In re, 10 L. T. 184.

A bequest of annuity to the testator's nephew for life, or until his bankruptcy or insolvency, and after his decease, bankruptcy, or insolvency, to be paid to his wife for the personal support of herself, her husband, and his children, during the life of his nephew and his wife, and the survivor of them : and in case they, or either of them, should attempt to alienate the annuity, the trustees to be empowered to apply it towards the support of the children. The first wife of the nephew, to whom he was married before the date of the will, survived the testator, and the gift of the annuity was held not to extend to the widow of the nephew, who was his second wife. Boreham v. Bignall, 8 Hare, 131 ; 19 L. J., Ch. 461 ; 14 Jur. 265.

Money bequeathed to be laid out in land to be settled upon the testator's nephew A. for life, remainder to the wife of A. for life, with remainders in tail to the sons and daughters of A. by such wife. A. was not married till after the death of the testator :—Held, to extend to a second wife. Peppin v. Bickford, 3 Ves. 570 ; 4 R. R. 103.

A testator left his property to trustees in trust, as to different portions of it for each of his children for life, and after the death of each child for its issue, with a gift over of the share of any child dying without issue to the other children and their issue, and declared that if any of his sons should become bankrupt, his life estate should cease as if he were dead, and during the remainder of his life the trustees should apply the income to which, but for such forfeiture, he would have been entitled, for the benefit of the wife and children of such son in such manner as the said trustees should think fit. One of the testator's sons was married at the time of his death ; he subsequently became bankrupt ; his wife died, leaving him without issue ; and he married again and had two children :—Held, that the trust for the wife and children of the bankrupt son revived as soon as there came to be any wife or child to to take under it. Longworth v. Bellamy, 40 L. J., Ch. 513.

Under a bequest of a fund to the testator's son (then married) for life, and after his decease the fund to be divided equally between the wife of the said son, if she should survive him, and all and every the child or children of the said son :—Held, that no particular wife was designated, and that an after-taken wife who survived the son was entitled to share in the gift over. Lyne, In re, 38 L. J., Ch. 471 ; L. R. 8 Eq. 65 ; 20 L. T. 735 ; 17 W. R. 840.

Husband of Third Person.]—A testator bequeathed money to trustees in trust for his daughter E. for her separate use independent of her husband, and after the death of E. to her husband for his life, with remainder to all and every the children of E. by her present or any future husband. After the testator's death E.'s husband died, and she married again. E. died, leaving her second husband surviving. On a bill filed by him against the trustee of the will :—Held, that the benefit of the gift was confined to the husband living at the date of the will, and the death of the testator, and did not extend to the second husband. Franks v. Brooker, 27 Beav. 635 ; 29 L. J., Ch. 292 ; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 87 ; 8 W. R. 205.

Testatrix gave legacies to her son, John Bryan, and to her daughters, Ann, the wife of James Winson, Harriet, the wife of William Darnborough, and Mary, the wife of William Dadley, and she gave her stock in the bank to her said daughter, Mary Dadley, for life, and, after her death, to be equally divided between the husbands of her said daughters and her son, or such of them as might be living at Mary Dadley's decease. All the husbands named in the will survived the testatrix, but William Darnborough was the only one of them who survived Mary Dadley. Ann Winson, however, married a second time, and her second husband was living at Mary Dadley's death, and he claimed a share of the stock. But the court held, that by the words "the husbands of my said daughters," the testatrix meant their husbands whom she had named ; and, therefore, that William Darnborough was exclusively entitled to the stock. Bryan's Trust, In re, 2 Sim. (N.S.) 103 ; 21 L. J., Ch. 7.

A gift to an unmarried woman for life, with remainder in fee to her husband, gives an indefeasible vested remainder to her first husband. Radford v. Willis, L. R. 7 Ch. 25 ; 25 L. T. 720 ; 20 W. R. 132. Reversing 40 L. J., Ch. 484.

A father gave his estates and the rents upon trust for his two daughters A. and L., to receive the same equally as tenants in common for their lives independent of the control of any husband or husbands with whom they might intermarry ; and after their death, he directed that the trustees should stand seised of the estates, and convey the whole unto the respective husbands of his daughters, provided that if either daughter should die unmarried the share of such daughter should accrue and belong to the survivor for life, and on her death the whole should devolve on and be conveyed to her husband. A. died, leaving a husband surviving. L. married P., who by his will gave to his wife all the estate to which he was entitled under the will of her father absolutely. P. died, leaving his wife surviving. A party at an auction purchased three lots of the estates, but refused to complete on the ground that P. was not entitled to an absolute interest in remainder on the death of L. :—Held, that the title of L. was such as could be forced on a purchaser. Ib.

Effect of Divorce.]—A testator devised property to his daughter for life, and after her death in trust for "any husband with whom she might intermarry, if he should survive her, for his life." The daughter married the defendant, and was divorced from him on his petition, and he married again and survived her :—Held, that the defendant was entitled to the property devised for his life. Bullmore v. Wynter, Bullmore, In re, 52

A testator bequeathed a share of his residuary personal estate in trust for his son for life, and after his decease in trust to pay unto or permit any wife of his son to receive the annual income of his share during her life. The son married a woman from whom he was afterwards divorced on his petition. He died without having married again:—Held, that the woman was not entitled to the income of the son's share. Bullmore v. Wynter (supra) observed upon. Morrieson, In re, Hitchins v. Morrieson, 58 L. J., Ch. 80; 40 Ch. D. 30; 59 L. T. 847; 37 W. R. 91.

Husband and Wife—Unity of Person.]—A testator gave his residue to A. and B. his wife, C. the wife of X., D. the wife of Y., E., F. and G. his wife:—Held, that the residue was divisible into sevenths, A. and B. his wife, and F. and G. his wife taking separately. Warrington v. Warrington (2 Hare, 54) followed. Jupp, In re (39 Ch. D. 148) commented on. Dixon, In re, Byram v. Tull, 42 Ch. D. 306; 61 L. T. 718; 38 W. R. 91.

b. Children.

i. Legitimate.

Of what Marriage.]—Bequest of 3,000*l.* of stock to W., the testator's son by a first marriage (his second wife and a son by her being living), the interest to be appropriated to his maintenance, under the direction of trustees, till he attained twenty-four, and of the residue of the testator's personal estate (the interest being given to his wife during her widowhood), after her decease or marriage, "unto any child or children I may have by my wife, to be equally divided between them that attain the age of twenty-one years, the survivor of my children to possess what is here bequeathed to the other; but should not either of my children attain the age of twenty-one years, or live to possess what is here bequeathed to them, I then bequeath to the children of my sister the 3,000*l.* stock": the son of the second marriage dying in the life of the testator, and there being no other issue of that marriage, W. is entitled to the stock and to the residue. Hill v. Smith, 1 Swanst. 195; 1 Wils. Ch. 154.

A testator having made gifts to the three children of his first marriage, gave his residue to his wife for life, with remainder to the five children of his second marriage (by name) "and such other child or children as should be living at the time of his death":—Held, that the children of the first marriage were not included in the residuary gift. Lovejoy v. Crafter, 35 Beav. 149.

A testatrix by a codicil to her will bequeathed 1,500*l.* upon trust "for the child, or, if more than one, for all and every the children of A., whether by her present or any future husband." A., at the death of the testatrix, had a child living by a former husband. She was then married to a second husband, but there had been no children of that marriage:—Held, that the word "whether" was not be read as exclusive, and that the child by the former husband took the legacy. Pickup, In re, 1 J. & H. 389; 30 L. J., Ch. 278; 4 L. T. 85; 9 W. R. 251.

After a bequest of residue, except certain settled property in favour of H. and her children, whether by her present or any former husband, testator appointed the settled property to his sister G. H. for life, and the capital to go to her children "whether by her present or any future husband." At the date of the will G. H. had a family by her then present husband, and also two children by a former husband. She was then at the age of sixty-five:—Held, that the two children by the first marriage were entitled to share in the settled property. Passmore v. Huggins, 21 Beav. 103; 25 L. J., Ch. 251; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 1060; 4 W. R. 33.

A. devises several leasehold estates to two trustees in trust if his granddaughter married without their consent to convey the premises to two other trustees in trust for her separate use during her life, and after her death for the use and benefit of her issue. Though she has no children by the first husband, whom she married without the consent of the first trustees, she has only a right for her life, for the issue of any husband are provided for by this settlement. Champion v. Pickax, 1 Atk. 472.

A devise of real estate to all the younger children of the testator's daughter, as tenants in common, with a devise over in case they should all die under twenty-one, or be married without consent, would give a vested interest, subject to be devested in that event, unless a different intent appeared from the subsequent part of the will. The first husband of the daughter was living at the time of making the will, and at the death of the testator, and although it was plain that the testator had not in his contemplation a second marriage of his daughter, yet, the gift over being in case the daughter should leave no issue behind her, the children of the second marriage took equally with the children of the first marriage. Critchett v. Taynton, 1 Russ. & M. 541; 8 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 143.

Bequest to a married daughter for life, and if she survived her husband and children to transfer it to her; but if she left children, then to her husband, Captain U., for life, with remainder to her children, with a gift over in the event of her dying in the life of her husband without having children. She died, leaving children by Captain U., and by a second marriage:—Held, that the latter were not entitled to participate in the fund. Stopford v. Chaworth, 8 Beav. 331; 9 Jur. 639.

A. B., a widower, settles lands to raise 100*l.* a year for his eldest son, and 100*l.* apiece for his younger children, and afterwards he marries again and has children by his second wife; decreed, the children by the second wife were equally entitled with the other younger children; though the portions of the younger children were by the settlement to be paid according to their seniority, yet, in case of a deficiency, they shall be paid in average. The portions of the younger children, who died in the life of their father, not to be raised in favour of the administrators; otherwise, if any of the daughters had married in the lifetime of their father and afterwards died. Brathwaite v. Brathwaite, 1 Vern. 334.

Testator bequeathed a residuary personal fund to trustees, upon trust to apply the dividends for the maintenance of his children, until the youngest should attain twenty-one, and then to divide the same equally between B., D., E., and F., children by his former wife, and G. and H., children by his present wife, and such other child or children as might be living or as his said wife might be enceinte with at his decease. The testator, at his death, left two other children besides those named in his will, viz. A. and C., who were children by his first marriage :—Held, under all the circumstances of the case, that they took no interest in the fund. Stavers v. Barnard, 2 Y. & C. C. C. 539 ; 7 Jur. 1080.

A bequest to all and every the child and children of A., includes every child born before the period of distribution ; which in this case was the attainment of twenty-one by the eldest, the marriage of daughter, or death of child under twenty-one leaving issue. Upon the general rule, a child by subsequent marriage was included notwithstanding strong implication in favour of children of prior marriage. Barrington v. Tristram, 6 Ves. 345 ; 5 R. R. 322.

A testator, in 1877, left to his trustees a sum of 10,000*l*. railway stock, in trust for the "children" living at his decease of his deceased niece Margaret Kerr. Some years before the date of the will the niece mentioned had married a second time, under circumstances which very much displeased the testator, who had in consequence declined to hold any communication with her, and always refused to recognise her by any other surname than that of Kerr, her first husband's. There were five children of the first marriage, and one of the second, who survived the testator. Within three weeks after the date of the will the testator wrote a letter to one of the five children of the first marriage, from which it appeared that he intended to confine the gift of the 10,000*l*. to them, as he stated therein that he had by his will left them 2,000*l*. each. He also caused a similar letter to be written and sent about four years later. The testator died in 1883 :—Held, that the word "children" must bear its primâ facie meaning, so as to include the children of both marriages, and that there was no latent ambiguity as to its signification. Andrews v. Andrews, 15 L. R., Ir. 199—C. A.

Infant en ventre sa mère.]—The law is clear that a devise to an infant en ventre sa mère is good, though he be born after the death of the testator, and he shall take by way of executory devise when he is born. Anon., 1 Freem. 293. S. P., Taylor v. Bydall, Id. 243.

A child en ventre sa mère may be vouched, may be an executor, may take under the statute of distributions, by devise, under a charge for portions, may have an injunction and a guardian. Thellusson v. Woodford, 11 Ves. 112 ; 8 R. R. 104—C. A.

One devises, in case he have no son at the time of his death, to S. The testator dies, leaving his wife privement enceinte with a son ; this posthumous son is a son living at the testator's death, and S. not entitled. Burdet v. Hopegood, 1 P. Wms. 486.

Testator devised freehold fee-simple estates to trustees during the life of his son J., upon certain trusts, remainder to his son's children, and their issue, in the same words as in the above devise, to his daughter's children, and in default of such issue, to all and every the child and children of his daughter S., &c. (in the same words as before) :—Held, that only six of the nine children of S. took under the devise ; viz. five who were born, and one who was en ventre at the death of J. Mogg v. Mogg, 1 Mer. 655 ; 15 R. R. 185.

Children construed to include Grandchildren.]—Under bequest to children, grandchildren are not entitled, except from necessity ; as if the will would otherwise be inoperative ; or when by other word, as "issue," it clearly appears that the word "children" was used not in the proper but in the more extensive sense. Radcliffe v. Buckley, 10 Ves. 195 ; 7 R. R. 383.

Grandchildren entitled under the description of children in a will, the intention upon the whole clause being children, or the issue of those who should be dead. Royle v. Hamilton, 4 Ves. 437.

Grandchildren may take under the description of children, if there can be no other construction ; not otherwise. Reeves v. Brymer, 4 Ves. 693.

Devise of 1,500*l*. in trust for the children of A., A. has only one child, and several grandchildren, the child only shall take, and not the grandchildren ; but if there had been no child of A. living, the grandchildren might have taken. Crooke v. Brooking, 2 Vern. 107.

Bequest to children, held to extend to grandchildren, there being no children. Gale v. Bennet, Ambl. 681.

Clear words in the operative part of a clause, not controlled by ambiguous words in the introduction. Oxford (Earl) v. Churchill, 3 V. & B. 67.

Where there is a total want of persons properly answering the description, others, who do not so completely answer it, may be let in ; grandchildren, for instance, under a liberal construction of the word "children," if there are none ; but no such instance, if there are children. Ib.

Where a testator bequeathed a fund in trust for the children of his late sister A. (the issue of her daughter B. excepted), and of his sisters C. and D. per stirpes :—Held, that grandchildren of C. were entitled to participate. Crawhall's Trusts, In re, 8 De G. M. & G. 480.

A testator, having appointed three trustees, and made moderate provisions for his three sons, directed all the furniture, &c., in his mansion-house at B. to be sold, "except such parts thereof as his said trustees should think necessary to be kept for receiving any of them, or of the testator's sons, who should choose to go and spend a little time there occasionally" ; and he bequeathed the great bulk of his property upon land to be accumulated, and at the end of the period of accumulation to be divided between the eldest male lineal descendants of his three sons respectively. In a subsequent clause a power of appointing new trustees was given under the direction of the court. A liberal establishment had been maintained at B., at the expense of the estate :—Held, that the privilege of residing occasionally at the mansion-house at B., and of enjoying the benefit of the establishment there, was confined to trustees and to the sons of the testator, and could not be extended to a grandson of the testator, nor to an infant great-grandson, who was the person presumptively entitled to a share of the property at the expiration of the period of accumulation ; and that this privilege was not confined to the individuals named as trustees in the will, but extended to trustees substituted in the place of those individuals. Thellusson v. Woodford, 5 Russ. 100.

The word "children" in a will containing bequests by a testator to his children primâ facie does not include grandchildren, unless the context shews that such was the intention. Martin v. Lee, 4 L. T. 657 ; 9 W. R. 522.

Gift by a testator to the children of his late brother John, and in another clause there was a gift to the issue of his said brother. The brother

John had only one son, who died in the testator's lifetime, leaving four children :—Held, that these four grandchildren were entitled, there being no children. Berry v. Berry, 3 Giff. 134 ; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 752 ; 4 L. T. 635 ; 9 W. R. 889.

Testatrix bequeathed 1,300*l.* to trustees in trust, as to one-third, for such of the children of A. S., then deceased, as should be living at the testator's death ; and in trust, as to the remaining two-thirds, for the children of S. T. and T. P. living at the same time. S. T. had grandchildren, but no child living either at the date of the will or at the testator's death ; but A. S. and T. P. had, each of them, children living at those times : —Held, that the grandchildren of S. T. could not claim under the description of children. Moor v. Raisbeck, 12 Sim. 123.

A devise to the children of A. All the children were dead at the date of the will, but there were several grandchildren and great-grandchildren : —Held, that the grandchildren were entitled, to the exclusion of the great-grandchildren. Fenn v. Death, 23 Beav. 73 ; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 700 ; 4 W. R. 828.

The case of Moor v. Raisbeck (supra) observed upon. Ib.

Where there was a proof that a testatrix was aware of the state of the family :—Held, that the word "children" would not include grandchildren. Loring v. Thomas, 1 Dr. & Sm. 497 ; 30 L. J., Ch. 789 ; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 1116 ; 5 L. T. 269 ; 9 W. R. 919.

A. the grandchild of C., and B., the widow of a child of C. : — Held, under the circumstances, entitled to a bequest made to A. and B., widow, described as "children of C." Blackman, In re, 16 Beav. 377.

Gift by will, made in 1805, of a testator's residuary personal estate, upon trusts for investment and accumulation, for the benefit of such child or children as his nephews W. and T., and his niece D., should leave at the time of their deceases, the child or children of each taking one-third ; and in case either of them (his said nephews and niece) should die without leaving any children or child, then he directed that such third part should be paid to the children or child of the other or others leaving children or a child, in equal proportions ; "and in case all of them (his said nephews and niece) should happen to die without leaving any issue lawfully begotten," then he directed that the whole of the residue of his estate should be paid to the three children of G. in equal shares. W., T. and D. all survived the testator, but W. and T. both died without leaving any issue, while D. died without leaving any child living at her death, but she left grandchildren surviving her :—Held, that the words "children" and "child" must be read in their ordinary acceptation, and that they did not mean grandchildren or remoter issue. Pride v. Fooks, 3 De G. & J. 275 ; 28 L. J., Ch. 81 ; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 158 ; 7 W. R. 109.

It is a rule that in a will the word "children" must be construed in its literal sense, unless from the will itself and the context it appears that the word is intended to have a wider meaning ; and for this purpose it is not right to take into consideration outside circumstances. A testator left residue to trustees upon trust to divide it into four parts, and pay one part "to the children of his late brother W. equally" ; the other part "to the children of his late brother J. equally" ; the other part "to the daughters of his late brother A. equally" ; and the remaining part to a certain nephew. J. had had three children, and no more, all of whom were dead at the date of the will. The testator knew this. J. left, however, both grandchildren and great-grandchildren who survived the testator :—Held, on the above principle, that there was an intestacy as to the share given to J.'s "children," there being nothing in the context or within the four corners of the will to justify the meaning being extended ; it being clear, on the contrary, that the word "children" was used in its literal sense in the gift to W.'s children. Kirk, In re, Nicholson v. Kirk, 52 L. T. 346.

A testator gave his residuary real and personal estate to trustees in trust for sale, and to divide the proceeds into six shares, and to pay one of such shares to the "children" of his deceased sister ; and he gave the other five-sixths in similar terms to the "children" of five deceased persons. At the date of the will there were no children of the sister living, but there were two grandchildren, and these facts were well known to the testator. Both the grandchildren survived the testator :—Held, that the two grandchildren took the one-sixth given to the "children" of the deceased sister. Radcliffe v. Buckley (supra, col. 752) distinguished. Smith, In re, Lord v. Hayward, 56 L. J., Ch. 771 ; 35 Ch. D. 558 ; 56 L. T. 878 ; 35 W. R. 663.

Grandchildren Construed to include Great-grandchildren.]—Construction of a will and settlement as not comprehending great-grandchildren under the description of children and grandchildren. Orford (Earl) v. Churchill, 3 V. & B. 59.

Devise to grandchildren, great-grandchildren held under the circumstances to take ; but held the devise will not extend to grandchildren by marriage. Hussey v. Dillon. Ambl. 603. S. C. nom. Hussey v. Berkeley, 2 Eden, 194.

The term grandchildren, in a clause of a will devesting legacies in a given event, extended so as to include great-grandchildren who had been previously named. Strutt v. Finch, 7 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 176.

Bequest to the children of A. equally. A. and all his children were dead at the date of the will, but there were grandchildren and great-grandchildren of A. living :—Held, that the grandchildren living at the death of the testatrix, to the excluding the great-grandchildren, were entitled. Fenn v. Death, 23 Beav. 73 ; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 700 ; 4 W. R. 828.

Children construed Issue.] — Grandchildren and great-grandchildren included by the term "issue," and the word "children" following it, explained as meaning issue likewise. Wyth v. Blackman, 1 Ves. Sen. 196.

The word "issue" may be restricted so as to mean children, and conversely the word "children" may, from the context, be enlarged so as to be construed "issue" ; each case depends on the peculiar expressions used, and the structure of the sentences. If the case be doubtful, the court prefers that construction which will most benefit the testator's family, on the supposition that this must more nearly correspond with his intentions. Farrant v. Nichols, 9 Beav. 327 ; 15 L. J., Ch. 259.

"Child or children" may mean "issue." A testator bequeathed property to trustees upon trust to pay the income thereof to his daughter during her life, and directed that, in case she should leave any issue living at her death, the property should be disposed of, and the produce thereof paid to and amongst such child or children as she should appoint, and in default of appointment to and amongst such issue as tenants in common, or if there should be but one child the whole to be paid to such one; and if there should be no issue of his daughter living at her decease, or they should die infants, then over:—Held, that the words "child or children" must be construed "issue," and therefore that an appointment to the exclusion of the grandchildren was void. Dalzell v. Welch, 2 Sim. 319; 29 R. R. 110.

Where the words "children" and "issue" are used interchangeably in a will, the operation of the word "children" may be extended to issue generally, to effectuate the intention. Harley v. Mitford, 21 Beav. 280.

A testator declared, that in case his daughters should "leave issue" they might appoint a fund "unto such children" in "such manner" as they should choose, and in default of any child, they might appoint it to their sisters and their children; "and in case all his daughters should die without issue," then over:—Held, that "children" must be construed "issue," and that an appointment to a grandchild was within the power. Ib.

Held, also, that the word "such" did not refer to the issue a daughter might leave, but to such of the class as she might choose. Ib.

"Children" — Word not used in Primary Meaning — Surrounding Circumstances — Stepchildren.]— Although primâ facie the word "children" in a will means legitimate children, there may be sufficient explanation in the light of surrounding circumstances that the word is not used in its primary meaning. "Children" held to mean stepchildren. Haseldine, In re, Grange v. Sturdy (31 Ch. D. 511), Deakin, In re, Starkey v. Eyres ([1894] 3 Ch. 565), followed. Jeans, In re, Upton v. Jeans, 13 R. 627; 72 L. T. 835.

Children, Class of, when Ascertained.]—See post, col. 896.

ii. Illegitimate.

Primâ facie not included under Children.]— "Child," &c., primâ facie, means legitimate. Wilkinson v. Adam, 1 V. & B. 462; 12 R. R. 255.

The word "children," legally construed, is confined to legitimate children. Bell v. Phyn, 7 Ves. 458; 6 R. R. 148.

The word "children" in a will means primâ facie "legitimate children," as much so as if the word "legitimate" had been introduced before it, unless, when the facts are ascertained, some repugnancy or inconsistency would result from so interpreting it, and not merely some violation of a moral obligation, or of a probable intention, would result from their exclusion. The probable intention of the testator cannot be taken into account. Dorin v. Dorin, 45 L. J., Ch. 652; L. R. 7 H. L. 568; 31 L. T. 281; 23 W. R. 570.

When, therefore, a person who had two illegitimate children by a certain woman married her, and the day after his marriage made a will in which, after leaving her his real and personal property for life, he said, "I leave her at liberty to direct the disposal of the property amongst our children by will at her death in such manner as she shall think fit, and should she make no will, I desire that the property existing at her death shall be divided, as far as it may be practicable to do so, equally between my children by her," and had not any child born after the date of the will, but lived for some time after making it, and always treated the two illegitimate children as his own children:—Held, that the real and personal estate of the testator was, subject to the interest given to the widow for her life, undisposed of by the will. Ib.

A testator bequeathed a portion of his estate in trust for C. P. W. for life, and, after his death, "the interest for the maintenance of C. P. W.'s wife and education of his children; at his wife's death the principal to be equally divided among his children then living." C. P. W., at the date of the codicil, was unmarried, but had illegitimate children, of which fact it was assumed the testator was cognisant:—Held, that such children were excluded. Warner v. Warner, 20 L. J., Ch. 273; 15 Jur. 141.

An illegitimate child not entitled under the description of a child in a will, though testator knew there were no legitimate children in the family. Godfrey v. Davis, 6 Ves. 43; 5 R. R. 204.

Testator gave legacies with maintenance to his two illegitimate children, naming them, by C. B., and to all the other children he might have by her 6,000*l.* each, and, after other bequests, the residue among his said children. By codicil he directed maintenance of another child born since, also interlining his name with those of the other children, in the first part of the will only. That child entitled only to maintenance and a share of the residue, not the legacy of 6,000*l.* Arnold v. Preston, 18 Ves. 288.

A father, in 1839, gave property to trustees in trust to pay the income to his "daughter A., the wife of J. H.," for life, and to divide the principal between all the children of his daughter when they should attain twenty-one in equal shares, and in case all the children of his daughter should die under twenty-one without issue there was a gift over in favour of a son. For some time prior to the date of the will and the death of the testator in 1840, J. H. and the daughter were living together as man and wife at B., where the testator resided until within a few months of his death. They were married in 1845. Three children were born before the marriage, one before the testator's will and two after his death. One child was born after the marriage:—Held, that the legitimate child only was entitled to the bequest. Ayles's Trusts, In re, 45 L. J., Ch. 223; 1 Ch. D. 282; 24 W. R. 202.

Illegitimate children, unless expressly mentioned, cannot be included in a class. Edmunds v. Fessey, 29 Beav. 233; 30 L. J., Ch. 279; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 282; 3 L. T. 765; 9 W. R. 365.

Bequest to "A. and her daughters" equally. A. had an illegitimate daughter at the date of the will, and never had any other daughter. A. predeceased the testator:—Held, that legitimate daughters alone could take under this bequest, and that the construction was not altered by the circumstance that, in the same will, there was a bequest to B. and her son John, the son John being illegitimate. Kelly v. Hammond, 26 Beav. 36.

A testator made a bequest to his illegitimate son T. by name, and he divided the proceeds of his residuary estate into seven parts, one of which he gave to his wife for life, with remainder among his children, to whom he gave the other six parts; and he gave such six parts among all his children, except his son T. Besides T. the testator left six children, of whom one daughter, A., was also illegitimate:—Held, that she was not entitled to a share as one of the testator's children. Wells, In re, 37 L. J., Ch. 553; L. R. 6 Eq. 599; 18 L. T. 462; 16 W. R. 784.

An illegitimate child not entitled to a share under a devise to children generally, notwithstanding a strong implication in the will in favour of that child. Cartwright v. Vawdry, 5 Ves. 530; 5 R. R. 108.

A testatrix left a fund upon trust to pay the income to E. S. for life, and after her death for "all and every the child and children of E. S." E. S. left one legitimate and two illegitimate children living at the date of the will and of the testatrix's death. The trustee, after the death of E. S., was about to pay the fund to the three children, but on his solicitor's advice paid the fund into court, as there were adverse claims. The eldest illegitimate child offered to send the certificates of birth of all the children, but the trustee did not accept the offer, and made no inquiries:—Held, that as there was no evidence from the words of the will to include the illegitimate children, the legitimate child only was entitled. The fund was improperly paid into court, and the trustee ordered to pay costs of the petition, for which he had his remedy against the solicitor for improper advice. M'Naughtan, In re, 33 L. T. 774.

A. married B. on the 6th July, 1865. In September, 1865, they voluntarily separated, but the marriage was never dissolved by sentence of divorce, nor was there any judicial separation. A child was born on the 13th May, 1866. B. went to live with another man, R., in November, 1866, and lived with him as his wife until shortly before her death in April, 1876. She had three children, born in 1868, 1870, and 1873 respectively, who were described in their baptismal certificates with the surname of R., and were supported by him and reputed his children. On a petition by the child born in May, 1866, to have a fund in court carried over to his separate account as being solely entitled under a gift in a will "in trust for all the children or any the child of B.":—Held, that though all the children above mentioned were alive at the date of the will, yet, it being possible for B. to have future legitimate children, only legitimate children could take, so that the petitioner, being the only legitimate child, was entitled to the whole of the trust fund. Yearwood, In re, 46 L. J., Ch. 478; 5 Ch. D. 545; 25 W. R. 461.

Where Legitimate Children could not take.]—Illegitimate children cannot take under a gift to a class of children, unless it is clear that legitimate children never could have taken under the gift. Pratt v. Mathew, 22 Beav. 328. Affirmed, 25 L. J., Ch. 686; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 1055; 4 W. R. 772—L.JJ.

Where there is a gift to children as a class, unless the words necessarily apply to and include illegitimate children, or exclude any but such children, the gift includes legitimate children only. Where, therefore, a gift by will was to divide a capital sum after the death of a legatee for life between all his children and the children of M., the wife of W. B., and M. had six illegitimate children only:—Held, that they were not entitled, and that it made no difference that the testatrix knew that M. had children whom she believed to be legitimate, and that M. was aged forty-nine at the date of the will; held, also, that Beachcroft v. Beachcroft (1 Madd. 430; 16 R. R. 242) and Fraser v. Pigott (1 Younge, 354) have been overruled by other authorities. Overhill's Trust, In re, 1 Sm. & G. 362; 22 L. J., Ch. 485; 17 Jur. 342; 1 W. R. 208.

Wherever the general description of children in a will would include legitimate children, it cannot also be extended to illegitimate children. A testator devised a leasehold in trust for his grandchild, Elizabeth, the only surviving child of his son William, and gave the residue of his property, after the death of his wife and daughter, to all the children of his sons James and William, and of his daughter Sarah, in equal share; Elizabeth was illegitimate, and William had no other child:—Held, that Elizabeth did not take any share of the residue. Bagley v. Mollard, 1 Russ. & M. 581; 8 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 145. And see Lery v. Solomon, 37 L. T. 263.

A. by his will bequeathed a sum of stock in certain events to his grandchildren, being children of his sons, William and John, whether born in wedlock or not; and, after certain specific bequests, he gave the residue of his personal estate to his sons William and John, as tenants in common; but if either of them should die in his (the testator's) lifetime, the moiety of such deceased son should go to his children; but if both his sons should die in his lifetime, then he gave such residue to and among all their children, as tenants in common. The testator's two sons died in his lifetime, one leaving legitimate and illegitimate children, the other illegitimate children only:—Held, that the legitimate children of the son having both descriptions of children, and the illegitimate children of the other son, took the residue; and that the illegitimate children of the first-mentioned son took no interest. Fraser v. Pigott, 1 Younge, 354.

Illegitimate children, born at the date of the will, are entitled under a bequest to children as a class, the testator having had no other children. Dilley v. Matthews, 11 Jur. (N.S.) 425; 12 L. T. 488; 13 W. R. 676.

Rule not applied to Gift Over.]—A testator by his will, made in 1847, gave to his eldest daughter, naming her, a freehold estate. The testator in the will twice called her his eldest daughter. He disposed of his furniture and continued, "I particularly direct that, should any of my children die without having any children of their own lawfully begotten, their share, whether land or money, shall be divided equally among my surviving children, and none of the land shall ever be sold." The testator died on the 14th December, 1854; his eldest daughter was illegitimate, and died intestate without having had any children. An action was brought for partition of the real estate, and the chief clerk found that the persons entitled to the interest of the eldest daughter in the freehold estate devised to her were the surviving children of the testator. On summons issued by the attorney-general claiming the estate on behalf of the crown:—Held, that the rule of law, that where there is a gift to children an illegitimate child cannot take pari passu with legitimate children in the absence of special directions, does not apply to a gift over; and that on the death of the eldest daughter the estate went to the other children of the testator. Smith v. Jobson, 59 L. T. 397.

Where Intention Clear.]—In construing a will, a gift to "children" may include existing illegitimate children, if from expressions in the will, or from the state of testator's family at the date of the will, the probability that he intended them to take is sufficiently strong, and this although the gift may be capable of being extended to future legitimate children, so that such future legitimate children would take with the illegitimate children as a class under the same gift. Hill v. Crook, 42 L. J., Ch. 702; L. R. 6 H. L. 265; 22 W. R. 137. Affirming 24 L. T. 488.

A father by his will left property for his daughter, whom he described as Mary the wife of John Crook. Mary was not in law the wife of John Crook, though she had gone through the ceremony of marriage with him, he being the widower of her deceased sister. The property was to be held in trust for her for life to her separate use, "independent of her present or any future husband," with remainder to her "children." There was issue of the union between Mary and John Crook four children, of whom two were living at the date of the will, and were always recognised by the testator as his grandchildren:—Held, that the two children living at the date of the will took under the bequest to the children of Mary Crook. Ib.

Evidence of Intention—What is Sufficient.]—By his will, dated in 1862, a testator divided his residuary estate into certain shares, and gave one of such shares in trust for his son G. for life, and after his death in trust "for the children" of G. In 1845 G. had married abroad, and lived with his wife until 1848. In that year he came to England, where he remained until his death in 1888. His wife refused to accompany him, and he never saw her again. She died in 1878, aged seventy-four. She never had any children, and at the date of the testator's will was fifty-eight years of age, and therefore past child-bearing. In 1851 G. cohabited with a woman, by whom he had four illegitimate children, born between the years 1851 and 1858. In 1851, after the birth of G.'s eldest illegitimate child, the testator became aware of the condition in which G. was living, but the testator recognised and treated all the four children as the children of his son:—Held, that, although it was possible that the testator might have intended to include the illegitimate children, mere probability was not sufficient, and that, if he had the intention, he had failed to express it adequately, and, therefore, that the four illegitimate children did not take any interest under the residuary gift. Browne, In re, Raggett v. Browne, 61 L. T. 463.

To enable an illegitimate daughter to take under a bequest in favour of daughters as a class, it is not sufficient to shew that there was, at the date of the will, no possibility of legitimate daughters, and that the claimant was a reputed daughter; but evidence must be given from which the testator's knowledge of these facts may be inferred. Herbert, In re, 1 J. & H. 121; 29 L. J., Ch. 870; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 1027; 8 W. R. 660.

A testator bequeathed trust funds and moneys "in trust for all the children, to be equally divided amongst them, their respective executors, administrators, and assigns, of my brother H. M. W., of my nephew A. W. D., of my sister H. C. D., and of my niece M. B., of Jamaica, and my nephew G. D. himself (if he shall be then living, but not otherwise, G. D. taking a share with all such children), and the respective shares of such children to be absolutely vested on my decease." H. M. W. was dead at the date of the will. He left three illegitimate children only, who survived testator. There was enough in the case to enable the court to presume that the testator was aware of the state of H. M. W.'s family:—Held, that the children of H. M. W. could take under the bequest. Milne v. Wood, 42 L. J., Ch. 545.

A testatrix by her will, dated in 1867, gave to her executors a sum of stock upon trust to pay the income to her niece Martha M. (wife of Walter John M.) during her life, and after her death to pay the same income to the said Walter John M. during his life, and after the death of the survivor to divide the stock between the children of her said niece, the same to be vested interests at twenty-one. At the date of the will Martha M. had eight children. She had for many years prior to the date of the will lived with Walter John M. as his wife, and all the children were born before her marriage with him, which took place shortly before the date of the will. The testatrix always believed that her niece and her husband were married before they commenced living together, and that the children were legitimate. She always took great interest in the children, and paid their school and other expenses. At the date of the will Martha M. was fifty years of age, and she had not had a child for six years:—Held, that the children were not entitled to the fund. Brown, In re, Penrose v. Manning, 63 L. T. 159.

A direction in a will that the testator's brother should be his executor to arrange, dispose of, and settle his affairs, and the appointment of the brother to be the guardian of the testator's daughter and only child, who was afterwards discovered to be illegitimate, do not amount by implication to a bequest of the personal estate in favour of the daughter. Davis v. Davis, 1 Russ. & M. 645; 1 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 155.

A testator gave the residue of his estate to B., the interest to be paid to her until her first-born son should attain the age of twenty-one years, one-half of the said principal sum then to be paid to her aforesaid son, the other half to be paid to his mother. Should his mother die before the said son, the whole to be paid to him; should the aforesaid son die before his mother, his share to go to her. B. had one illegitimate son at the date of the will, who was maintained by the testator:—Held, that this son was not entitled under the above bequest. Durrant v. Friend, 5 De G. & Sm. 343; 21 L. J., Ch. 353; 16 Jur. 709.

The testator, in 1860, was seized with paralysis at the house of his sister-in-law, M. A. L., and her husband, and remained there till his death. M. A. L. had been married seven years, and had by her husband three children, aged sixteen, thirteen, and eleven, born before her marriage with him, but treated as legitimate. The testator was intimate with them. Being worse, he was advised by his medical attendant to make his will, and made one dated the 7th of October, 1860, containing the following dispositions :—"I give and bequeath the following legacies to the following persons (that is to say)," after which followed gifts of legacies to persons named, "and to each of the children of M. A. L. the sum of 5*l.* for mourning, the same to be paid into the hands and on the receipt of the said M. A. L., their mother, for them, notwithstanding their coverture and their minority." On the 5th of August, 1861, he made a codicil, by which he bequeathed 400*l.*, on the death of an annuitant, "unto and equally between all the children who shall be then living of M. A. L., share and share alike," and confirmed his will except as varied by the codicil. He died two days afterwards. M. A. L., who was aged forty-four when the will was made, never had any legitimate child. On the death of the annuitant in 1884, the three children claimed the 400*l.*, and the executors, one of whom was the residuary legatee, took out an originating summons to have the point decided. It was held that the children were not entitled, but gave the costs of all parties out of the 400*l.* The children appealed :—Held, by Cotton, L.J., that the appellants were not entitled, for that no repugnancy or inconsistency in the will would result from giving to the word "children" its proper sense of legitimate children; that the three children, therefore, were not entitled to the 5*l.* legacies, and whether, if they had been so entitled, the word "children" in the distinct gift in the codicil ought to be construed in the same way as in the will, quære. But held, by Bowen and Fry, L.JJ., that there was enough in the will, as explained by the surrounding circumstances, to shew that the testator used the word "children" in a sense which would apply (whether exclusively or not) to the existing children, and that the word must have a similar interpretation in the codicil, and that the appellants, therefore, were entitled to the 400*l.* :—Held, that the costs of the proceedings must be borne by the residuary estate. Haseldine, In re, Grange v. Sturdy, 31 Ch. D. 511; 54 L. T. 322; 34 W. R. 327; 50 J. P. 390—C. A.

Illegitimate children not entitled, under the description of "children" in a will, the intention not being sufficiently apparent upon the face of the will. Harris v. Lloyd, Turn. & R. 310; 24 R. R. 68.

Bequest to the children of A. described "spinster," and nothing on the face of the will shewing that illegitimate children were intended, inquiry whether she left illegitimate children refused. Osmond v. Tindall, 5 Ves. 534.

Illegitimate children of an unmarried sister of the testator described in the will by her maiden name are entitled to shares in a legacy to her "and her two youngest daughters." Savage v. Robertson, L. R. 7 Eq. 176.

A testatrix, who was never married, describing herself as a spinster, bequeathed her property in trust for her children. She had four illegitimate children at the date of will, three of whom and an after-born child were living at her death, and in a codicil she described her children by name :—Held, that the children, and not the next of kin of the testatrix, were entitled to her property. Clifton v. Goodbun, L. R. 6 Eq. 278.

Description, how far sufficient.]—A natural daughter being included by description in a prior class of daughters was held entitled to take with legitimate daughters under a subsequent general gift to "my daughters." Worts v. Cubitt, 19 Beav. 421; 2 W. R. 633.

Under a first bequest of a fund in moieties to the children of A. and B. respectively, at the death of the testator A. had six legitimate and two illegitimate children, and B. had one legitimate and three illegitimate children, who, in relation to another bequest, were named :—Held, that the illegitimate children of A. were not entitled, but that the children of B., as well legitimate as illegitimate, were entitled to share in the bequest. Under a second bequest to A. and her children, including a daughter by name who was illegitimate, but A. had no other daughter of that name :—Held, that the daughter was entitled to share in the fund. Meredith v. Farr, 2 Y. & C. C. C. 525; 7 Jur. 797.

A testator, after appointing J. L. B. one of his executors and trustees, describing him as "my son-in-law," and making various devises and bequests of his property to his three sons nominatim, gave other property to his trustees upon certain trusts for his two daughters respectively, describing them as "my daughter M. A. M., the wife of the said J. L. B.," and "my daughter A., the wife of W. W." He then devised and bequeathed his residuary real and personal estate to his trustees upon trust for such of his "children" living at his decease, and such of the issue then living of any child or children of his dying in his lifetime. M. A. M. B. was illegitimate :—Held, that the will shewed a sufficient expression of intention on the part of the testator to include M. A. M. B. under the term "children," and that she was therefore entitled to a share in the residue. Brown, In re, Walsh v. Browne, 62 L. T. 899.

A testator described R. W. and another person (who was a legitimate nephew of the testator) as "my two nephews." He gave his residuary estate upon trust for the "children" of his brothers E. H. and T. H., and of his sister J. W., and of his late sister S. B., in equal shares, with a gift over if any one or more of his "nephews and nieces" should die before him leaving children. R. W. was an illegitimate child of J. W., who had four legitimate children, three sons and one daughter :—Held, that the circumstance that R. W. was described by the testator as "nephew" was not sufficient to entitle him to share under the gift to the children of J. W. Hall, In re, Branston v. Weightman, 56 L. J., Ch. 780; 35 Ch. D. 551; 57 L. T. 42; 35 W. R. 797.

A testatrix bequeathed to A., "the eldest daughter of my deceased daughter, S., my gold watch." And she bequeathed other property to trustees "in trust for such of the children of my said deceased daughter, S., who shall attain twenty-one, absolutely, equally, share and share alike, the shares of such of them as shall be daughters to be for their sole and separate use." S. had two legitimate children, a son and a daughter, and she had also an illegitimate daughter, who was the person spoken of in the will as "A., the eldest daughter of S." :—Held, that there was a sufficient indication of an intention that A. should be included in the description of "the children of S." Humphries, In re, Smith v. Millidge, 24 Ch. D. 691; 49 L. T. 594.

A testator gave specific legacies and the residue of his personal estate to his children nominatim, payable to them at twenty-one or marriage. He also gave the residue of his real estate, subject to the payment of an annuity to his wife, and other trusts, between all his said children (not naming them), share and share alike; and directed, in case any of his children by his second wife should die without issue, before he or she should attain twenty-one, that the interest of each in his, the testator's, last-mentioned real and personal estate, together with the therein-before-mentioned legacies bequeathed to them respectively, should go between his said second wife and such of his children by her as should be living, &c.:—Held, that one of the said legatees, who was an illegitimate daughter of the testator by his second wife, was entitled to share with their legitimate children in the residue of the testator's property. Evans v. Davies, 7 Hare, 498; 18 L. J., Ch. 180.

A testator, by his fourth codicil, made gifts to M., his wife, and E., their child, and also to a boy, F., and in this codicil he spoke of E. and F. as "the children," and appointed his wife their guardian. By the fifth codicil he bequeathed 4,000*l.* to M. "for her own and the children's benefit." The marriage of the testator with M. turned out to be invalid:—Held, that by the term "children" in the fifth codicil E. and F. were meant. Hartley v. Tribber, 16 Beav. 510.

Gift to a woman, designated by the testator as his wife, for herself and the children's benefit:—Held, by reference to a previous codicil, to include the child of another woman, though that woman repudiated the guardian appointed by the testator for her child. Hart v. Tribe, 22 L. J., Ch. 890.

A testator gave a legacy to a woman whom he had deceived by pretended ceremonies of marriage, to be used for her own and the children's benefit, and he appointed her their guardian:—Held, with reference to a former codicil, to comprise her child and the child of another woman, both of whom were specifically named in the former codicil. Ib.

A testator, at the date of his will, had a wife living by whom he never had issue, but by another woman who was commonly supposed to be his wife he had then had three children (only one of whom survived him), and after the date of his will he had by her another child who survived him. All these children were known by his name, and were supposed to be legitimate. By his will, in which the mother of these natural children was throughout referred to as his wife, he directed his residuary estate after her death or "second" marriage to be divided among all his children equally, and in case there should be only one, then the whole to go to such child:—Held, that the child, born before the date of the will and surviving the testator, was sufficiently designated, and was entitled to the whole fund. Lepine v. Bean, 39 L. J., Ch. 847; L. R. 10 Eq. 160; 22 L. T. 833; 18 W. R. 797.

A father bequeathed moneys in trust after the decease of his daughter for "all the children of his daughter, whether by her present putative husband or by any other person whom she might marry, who should attain the age of twenty-one, their executors, administrators, and assigns. But in case his daughter should die leaving no issue either by her putative husband or by any other person, who should attain the age of twenty-one," then over. The father, at the date of his will, knew that his daughter had an illegitimate son by B., with whom she was then living, and he recognised this son as his grandchild. After his death his daughter married B., but had no other child:—Held, that the illegitimate child was sufficiently designated by the will, and he having acquired a vested interest on attaining twenty-one, and his mother being sixty-seven years of age, that they were entitled to have the fund transferred to them. Brown, In re, 43 L. J., Ch. 84; L. R. 16 Eq. 239; 28 L. T. 616; 21 W. R. 721.

A testator gave to "my grandson J. (the son of my daughter Alice Jane, and who is now residing with me)" the sum of 500*l.*, to be paid to him if and when he should attain twenty-one, with power to apply the income in the meantime for his maintenance; but if he died under twenty-one the 500*l.* and the unapplied income was to go in augmentation of the legacy of 2,000*l.* "hereinafter bequeathed in favour of the children and issue of my said daughter Alice Jane." The testator gave to trustees 2,000*l.* to be accumulated till the expiration of twenty-one years, or the death of Alice Jane, whichever might first happen, and then directed the fund and its accumulations to be divided amongst all the children of Alice Jane who should be then living, and the issue of such of them as should be then dead per stirpes. He gave two sums of 2,500*l.* upon trust for the children and the issue of his two other daughters respectively, corresponding with the trusts of the 2,000*l.* The grandson was illegitimate. He attained twenty-one, and survived his mother:—Held, by the Master of the Rolls, and by the court of appeal, that the grandson J. was not entitled to participate in the 2,000*l.* Meyson v. Hindle, Hindle, In re, 15 Ch. D. 198; 43 L. T. 551; 28 W. R. 866.

Testator by his will bequeathed to M. B. B., "daughter of my nephew, J. B.," 200*l.*; and to T. B., "son of the said J. B.," 100*l.* He directed his trustees to stand possessed of his residue upon trust for "all and every the children and child" of R. C. and J. B. respectively. By a codicil testator revoked the bequest of 200*l.* "to my great-niece," M. B. B., and the bequest of 100*l.* "to my great-nephew," T. B., and instead thereof bequeathed to M. B. B. 100*l.*; to T. B. 100*l.*; and to A. B., "another daughter of my nephew, J. B.," 100*l.* M. B. B. was illegitimate; T. B. and A. B. were legitimate:—Held, that M. B. B. was sufficiently indicated as one of the persons who was to participate in the residue. Meyson v. Hindle (supra) distinguished. Bryon, In re, Drummond v. Leigh, 55 L. J., Ch. 30; 30 Ch. D. 110.

A testator by his will, dated in 1868, directed his trustees to pay the income of a certain share in a trust fund "to my sister Charlotte, the wife of Thomas H.," during her life, and after her death to pay and divide the share unto, between and amongst "all her children" who should be living at her death, and the "representatives" of such of them as should have died in her lifetime who should have attained twenty-one, equally, share and share alike. Charlotte never was the wife of Thomas H., he having previously to 1845 married another woman who at the date of the will and down to his death in 1875 was his lawful wife. In 1845 Charlotte left her home, and thenceforth cohabited with Thomas H. until he died. At the date of the will she had had four illegitimate children by him, the two survivors of whom were then living, aged respectively twenty and eighteen; and she had not had a child for seventeen years, and was presumably past child-bearing. Charlotte died in 1885. These were the only children she ever had, and only one of them survived her. The testator was well aware of the connection of his sister with Thomas H., visited at the house where they resided, and recognised the children of his sister by Thomas H. as his own nephews and nieces:—Held, that the testator in describing his sister Charlotte as the "wife" of Thomas H., when he knew she was not so, and in using correlatively with that the expression "children" to describe the offspring of a woman whom he knew not to be lawfully married, had shewn that he did not use the term "children" in its strict legal sense; and that, applying the principles laid down in Hill v. Crook, supra, col. 759, the illegitimate children of Charlotte were intended, and were entitled to take under the gift in the testator's will. Hill v. Crook and Dorin v. Dorin (supra, col. 755) explained. Ayles' Trusts, In re (supra, col. 756), Ellis v. Houstoun (infra), and Megson v. Hindle (supra), considered. Horner, In re, Eagleton v. Horner. 57 L. J., Ch. 211; 37 Ch. D. 695; 58 L. T. 103; 36 W. R. 348.

A testator bequeathed his residuary estate in trust for his four children by name, including "A. J. H. the wife of J. H.," and declared that his trustees should stand possessed of the share thereinbefore given to the said A. J. H., upon trust to invest the same and pay the income to the said A. J. H. during her life, and so that "during any coverture" she should not have power to anticipate the same, and, after her death, in trust for "the children or child of the said A. J. H.," who being a son or sons should attain twenty-one, or being a daughter or daughters, attain that age or marry, and if more than one, equally. J. H. had married a sister of the testator, who died in the testator's lifetime, and after her death had gone through the ceremony of marriage with the testator's daughter A. J., and had had a child by her. The testator was aware of these facts. After the death of the testator, two other children of J. H. by the testator's daughter A. J. were born. She afterwards died:—Held, on the authority of Horner, In re (supra), that the child born before the date of the will was entitled to the share. Harrison, In re, Harrison v. Higson, 63 L. J., Ch. 385; [1894] 1 Ch. 561; 70 L. T. 868.

Reputed Children.]—Under a devise by a married man, having no legitimate children, "to the children which I may have by A., and living at my decease," natural children who had acquired the reputation of being his children by her before the date of the will, entitled, as upon the whole will intended, and sufficiently described; rejected as a description of the devisees passages in a written book, unattested, of which probate was admitted under a reference in the will to "the observations and directions which I shall leave in a written book." Whether, if there were also legitimate children by the same mother, they could take together under the same description, and whether future illegitimate children can take under any description in a will, quære. Wilkinson v. Adams, 1 V. & B. 422. Affirmed, 12 Price, 470; 12 R. R. 255.

Bastard may take by purchase, if sufficiently described, and having acquired the reputation of the child of that person. S. C., 1 V. & B. 466.

But cannot take by the description of child of his reputed father, until he has acquired the reputation of being such child. S. C., 1 V. & B. 452; 12 R. R. 255.

A testator devised certain property to his wife for life, and after her death to A. L., who then lived with him, for life, provided she so long continued single and unmarried. Then he devised part of his estate (except what he had given to his wife and A. L.) to trustees for thirty-one years, upon certain trusts, and after the expiration of such term to the children which he might have by A. L., and living at his death, or born six months after, and in default of such children, to his nephew. The wife died, and the testator published his will after her death:—Held, by the judges and house of lords, that the children of A. L. who had previously acquired the character of reputed children of the testator by A. L. took an estate in the lands demised. S. C., 12 Price, 478; 12 R. R. 255.

Where J. S., who had contracted a marriage, which was void ab initio, and had from that marriage one son, made his will, and gave the residue of his personal estate to all his children by his reputed wife:—Held, that a son born at the time of the making of the will, having the reputation of being the testator's child, was entitled, although illegitimate. Bailey v. Snelham, 1 Sim. & S. 78; 1 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 35.

Parol Evidence, when admitted.]—A testatrix gave a sum of stock to trustees to pay the dividends to her brother Charles and his wife Elizabeth for their lives, and after the decease of the survivor the capital to be divided between all the children of her brother. The brother had three children by his first wife, two children by his second wife Elizabeth before marriage, and one child after marriage, which were facts well known to the testatrix, who promised, as the claim alleged, that if he married his wife Elizabeth she would provide for all his children by her, and she in fact treated all the children equally as her nephews and nieces, and it was further alleged that the testatrix gave instructions that her will should be so drawn as to provide equally for both classes of children, and that she believed such to be the effect of the words of the will:—Held, upon demurrer, that the illegitimate children must be excluded from the bequest; and that the words of the will being distinct, no extrinsic evidence could be received to shew what the intention of the testatrix was. Ellis v. Houstoun, 10 Ch. D. 236; 27 W. R. 501.

Under a bequest by unmarried man "to my children, &c., each," parol evidence allowed to shew who testator considered in character of children, and they having obtained a name by reputation admitted to take as a class, though illegitimate and not named in the will. Beachcroft v. Beachcroft, 1 Madd. 430; 16 R. R. 242.

Under the description of "children" in a will illegitimate children existing at the date of the will not entitled, unless proved by the will itself to be intended, and evidence can be received only for the purpose of collecting who had acquired the reputation of children. An only legitimate son therefore held entitled as devisee. Swaine v. Kennerley, 1 V. & B. 469; 12 R. R. 269.

Where there are not, nor ever were, nor can by any possibility be, any persons strictly answering the description of children, it is necessary to resort to evidence dehors the will for the purpose of finding whether there were any who had acquired the reputation of children, and it is possible for illegitimate children to acquire that reputation. Woodhouselee (Lord) v. Dalrymple, 2 Mer. 419; 16 R. R. 193.

Gift to "Natural" Children.]—A. B., in 1857, bequeathed the whole of her estate to E. B., then living with her as her husband, for his use for life; and after his death to be equally divided between the natural children of E. B. which might be then living. E. B. lived with the testatrix as her husband, but was not married, and there were living with him and the testatrix two natural or illegitimate children which she had had by him, and he had no other natural children:—Held, that the description of the objects of the testatrix's bounty was sufficient, and that the two natural children of the testatrix, in case they survived E. B., would be entitled to the fund. Bentley v. Blizard, 4 Jur. (N.S.) 652.

Bequest to A. and B. for life, and afterwards to their surviving children (which gift failed), and in default to the "children legitimate or illegitimate, of my brother H.," equally. H. had five illegitimate children at the date of the will, two of whom predeceased the testator, and he had nine legitimate children after the testator's death:—Held, that the gift was valid, and that the property was divisible amongst the three illegitimate and the nine legitimate children. Barnett v. Tugwell, 31 Beav. 232; 31 L. J., Ch. 629; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 787; 7 L. T. 121; 10 W. R. 679.

Gift of income for "my wife Ann, my natural daughter Ann, and all my other daughters," followed by a gift of the capital "to be divided among my said wife and all my daughters":—Held, that the latter gift included the natural daughter. Worts v. Cubitt, 19 Beav. 421; 2 W. R. 633.

Gift to Children not In Esse at Date of Will.]—It is settled that a bequest cannot be made by a man to his future illegitimate children, for they can have acquired no title by repute; but it is not settled whether a gift can be made to the future illegitimate children of a woman. Pratt v. Mathew, 22 Beav. 328. Affirmed, 25 L. J., Ch. 686; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 1055; 4 W. R. 772—L.JJ.

A testator having married his deceased wife's sister, and while living with her as his wife made his will, whereby he gave all his real and personal estate "to my wife" for life, and after her death, upon trust "for all and every my children hereafter to be born." At the date of the will he had no children whatever, but two days after a son was born:—Held, that the gift "to my wife" was good, but that the son could not take under the gift to his children hereafter to be born." Ib.

Bequests to illegitimate children, in esse, will take effect when they are appropriately described; but a prospective gift to future illegitimate children of a woman is wholly void. Medworth v. Pope, 27 Beav. 71; 28 L. J., Ch. 905; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 996.

A devise of two houses and hereditaments to "such other child, if any, that may be born of my housekeeper, in my lifetime, or in due time after my death":—Held, that a natural child of the testator by his housekeeper, born after the date of the will, could not take. Ib.

The children of a marriage between a man and his deceased wife's sister, born after the date of the instrument of gift, are equally, with any other illegitimate children, excluded from participating under a gift to a class. Howarth, otherwise Mills v. Mills, L. R. 2 Eq. 389; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 794; 14 L. T. 544.

Semble, a bequest to future illegitimate children is void; and there is no distinction between illegitimate children described as the children of a particular mother, without reference to their paternity, and those who are described as the children of a particular father.

Bequest of a sum of money to a trustee in trust to pay to A. N. the interest during her life, or until she married, for the support of her children, W. and R., and in case of her death or marriage to apply it to the use of her children; and on their coming to the age of twenty-one, to divide the said sum between them. The children of A. N. born after the date of the will, and in the lifetime of the testator, do not take under this bequest. Connor, In re, 2 Jo. & Lat. 456; 8 Ir. Eq. R. 401.

A testator by his will gave to trustees 1,000*l.* stock on trust to pay the dividends to his nephew for life: and after his decease, in case his nephew's wife should survive him, to pay the same to her for life, and afterwards on trust to pay the capital among his nephew's children. The nephew died unmarried, but left surviving a woman with whom he had cohabited for many years, who was supposed by the testator to be his wife, and was frequently referred to as such:—Held, the gift was void. Davenport's Trust, In re, 1 Sm. & G. 126; 17 Jur. 314; 1 W. R. 103.

One devises 3,000*l.* to all the natural children of his son by J. S.: the bastards born after making the will shall not take; though in the principal case the money was to be paid by the executors, as the testator by deed should appoint, and the testator afterwards made the deed of appointment, the deed of appointment referring to the will was held as part of the will. Metham v. Devonshire (Duke), 1 P. Wms. 529. See 8 Price, 22; 22 R. R. 691.

A testator devises his real and personal property to trustees upon trust for four children of M. D., whom he described by their respective names, "together with every other child or children of the body of M. D., alive at my decease, or born within nine months afterwards, share and share alike." M. D. had two other children born after the date of the will, but before the date of a codicil to it, and these, as well as the four previously born, were all illegitimate. The children born after the date of the will are not entitled to any share of the property. Mortimer v. West, 3 Russ. 370; 5 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 181; 27 R. R. 98.

Testator, believing that his brother J. was married to B., gave to each of J.'s children, "except his eldest son E. J., and his daughter, M. L., 100*l.*" He gave a fund on trust to apply the income for the benefit of J., "or of his wife, or all or any of his children," during J.'s life, and after his death to pay the income to the "present wife," of J., "if she shall become his widow," for life, with remainder in trust for all the children of J., "except his eldest son E. J., and his daughter M. L." Elsewhere in his will he spoke of his "nephew E. J.," and of the "brother of the said E. J.," and "all the other children" of J. He gave his residuary personalty to his "niece M. L., daughter of" J. The will was dated in 1889. J. died in 1890. The testator died in 1891. J. had been married many years before, and his wife died in 1875, leaving two daughters, M. L. and another, who both survived the testator. J. subsequently cohabited with B., by whom he had seven illegitimate children, including E. J., one of whom was born after the will, and all of whom survived the testator:—Held, that all the gifts were valid, except that the illegitimate child born after the date of the will could not take. Lowe, In re, Danily v. Platt, 61 L. J., Ch. 415; 40 W. R. 475.

Children to be in esse at Testator's Death.]—An illegitimate child or illegitimate children in esse as a class may take under a gift to a child or children as a class, if it appears certainly from the context, or proper evidence, that they are the persons meant by the word "child" or "children." But illegitimate children unbegotten at the time of the testator's death cannot under any circumstances be entitled under such a description. Holt v. Sindrey, 38 L. J., Ch. 126; L. R. 7 Eq. 170; 19 L. T. 669; 17 W. R. 249.

A person who had gone through the ceremony of marriage with M. L., his deceased wife's sister, who had two daughters, C. and E., by him, and who was enceinte with a third at the date of the will, gave a moiety of his property to trustees in trust for M. L. for life, and after her death for his reputed children C. and E., and all other children which he might have or be reputed to have by M. L., then born or thereafter to be born. The third child was born before the testator's death, and was acknowledged by him as his child:—Held, that the after-born child was entitled to share with her sisters under the will. Occleston v. Fullalove, 43 L. J., Ch. 297; L. R. 9 Ch. 147; 29 L. T. 785; 22 W. R. 305.

H. by his will gave a trust fund "in trust for my four natural children by M. E. M., viz., J., C., E., and J. H., and all and every other children and child which may be born of the said M. E. M. previous to and of which she may be pregnant at the time of my death, share and share alike." Besides the four children named in the will, there were three other children born of M. E. M. after the date of the will and before the death of the testator, all of whom were known by his surname:—Held, (1) that upon the construction of the will the word "children" must be taken to include illegitimate children, and was not void for uncertainty; and (2) that, being a gift by will to illegitimate children of the testator to be in esse before the death of the testator, it was a good gift within the rule laid down in Occleston v. Fullalove (supra), and that the children who came into esse after the date of the will and before the death of the testator were entitled to share in the gift. Hastie's Trusts, In re, 56 L. J., Ch. 792; 35 Ch. D. 728; 57 L. T. 168; 35 W. R. 692.

A gift by a testator or testatrix to his or her unborn child by a particular person, not being the wife or husband of the testator or testatrix, is good provided the child has acquired the reputation of being such before the death of the testator or testatrix. Goodwin, In re, 43 L. J., Ch. 258; L. R. 17 Eq. 345; 22 W. R. 619.

When, therefore, a testatrix who had gone through the ceremony of marriage with the husband of her deceased sister bequeathed her residuary estate upon trust for all her children by him, and died eight years after the date of the will, leaving two children, one of whom was born at the date of the will, and the other only a few weeks before the death of the testatrix:—Held, that the second child, having before the death of the testatrix acquired the reputation of being her child by the husband of her deceased sister, was entitled to share in the estate. Ib.

The ultimate limitation in a settlement was to all the children, as well those already born as hereafter to be born, of A. and B., his wife. B. was the settlor's sister, who had been married to A. five years before the date of the settlement. They never had any legitimate children, but before their marriage B. had several children still living, who were reputed to be children by A.:—Held, that these children were entitled to the property under the limitation. Gabb v. Prendergast, 1 K. & J. 439; 3 Eq. R. 648; 24 L. J., Ch. 431; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 900; 3 W. R. 395.

Semble, the construction of these words in a will would exclude illegitimate children born at the date of the will, because of the possibility that legitimate children might have been born before the testator's death. Ib.

C., after the death of his second wife, went through the ceremony of marriage with M. L., her niece, by whom he had two children, one posthumous. By his will he gave to trustees all his estate, to sell and convert, and pay the interest of 3,000*l.* to his wife, M. L. C., for her life, in case she should so long continue his widow, and subject thereto to all and every his children (naming them), and all and every other child and children that he might have by his said wife M. L. C. The testator left children by each wife:—Held, that M. L. C. and her child born before the testator's death took, but not the posthumous child. Smith v. Charles, 11 L. T. 533; 13 W. R. 224.

A testator bequeathed money upon trust for his reputed daughter for life, and after her death to her children. He was aware that she was living in concubinage and had illegitimate children:—Held, that her illegitimate children, one of whom was born after the testator's death, took under the will. Williams, In re, 10 L. T. 405; 12 W. R. 818.

A testatrix gave all her property to trustees, in trust for life, and then to pay and divide the fund "to and among all the children of N., born or to be born," who should live to attain twenty-one or marry. N. could not be proved to have been married. At the time of the will she was living with a man supposed to be her husband, and by common reputation in the neighbourhood they were man and wife. There were three children of N. living at the date of the will, and also at the death of the tenant for life, all well known to the testatrix, and all of whom lived to attain twenty-one. N. never had any other child. On the application of these three children, after notice to all persons claiming in default of them, and no opposition nor suggestion as to their illegitimacy, the fund was ordered to be paid to them, without any further proof of N.'s marriage beyond common reputation. Nixon, In re, 2 Jur. (N.S.) 970.

Children en ventre sa mère.]—Bequest to a natural child en ventre sa mère:—Held, good if there is not affixed to gift by construction of will a condition precedent that it must be ascertained to be the child of testator. Evans v. Massey, 8 Price, 22; 22 R. R. 691.

Under a bequest "to such child or children, if more than one, as A. may happen to be enceinte of by me," a natural child of which she was then pregnant cannot take, though a bequest to the natural child of which a woman was enceinte, without reference to any person as the father, would probably be good, having no uncertainty. Earle v. Wilson, 17 Ves. 528; 11 R. R. 130.

Bequest to the natural child of which a woman was enceinte, without reference to any person as the father:—Held, good, there being no uncertainty in the object described. Gordon v. Gordon, 1 Mer. 141; 15 R. R. 88.

An illegitimate child may take by particular description before its birth. Dawson v. Dawson, 6 Madd. 292.

One devises 3,000*l.* to all the natural children of his son by J. S.; the bastards born after making the will shall not take; nay, the child en ventre sa mère shall not take. And though in the principal case the money was to be paid by the executors, as the testator by deed should appoint, and the testator afterwards made the deed of appointment, the deed of appointment referring to the will was held as part of the will. Metham v. Devonshire (Duke), 1 P. Wms. 529. And see 8 Price, 22; 22 R. R. 691.

A testator, who had married his deceased wife's sister, gave his real and personal estate to trustees for "my wife" for life, and after her decease for all and every "my children" hereafter to be born. The testator had no children at the date of his will, but his then wife was enceinte, and shortly afterwards a son was born:—Held, that there was a sufficient designation in the will to entitle the wife to a life interest in the estate; but that, the gift being to a class, the restrictions upon such marriages did not permit his son to be considered one of that class, and that there was no sufficient designation by which he could take. Pratt v. Mathew, 22 Beav. 328; 4 W. R. 418. Affirmed 25 L. J., Ch. 686; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 1055; 4 W. R. 772—L.JJ.

A gift to "children" (meaning illegitimate children) includes a child en ventre sa mère at the date of the gift. Crook v. Hill, 46 L. J., Ch. 119; 3 Ch. D. 773; 24 W. R. 876.

A bequest in favour of a woman's illegitimate child en ventre sa mère at the date of the will, though not born until after the testator's death, is not contrary to public policy. Ib.

A father, whose daughter M. had with his knowledge gone through the ceremony of marriage with J. C., her deceased sister's husband, and had had two children by him, made his will at a time when he knew she was again enceinte. He thereby gave leaseholds to trustees on trust for "my daughter M., the wife of J. C.," for her life, with remainder to "the child or children of my daughter M. C." as she should appoint, and in default for her child or children equally, and if none, then over. The testator died three months before the third child was born. M. appointed to the two children born at the date of the will, the child of which she was then enceinte, and a former child begotten and born after the testator's death. The house of lords having decided that the two children born at the date of the will were sufficiently designated, and that they took under the gift in the will:—Held, that the child en ventre sa mère at the date of the will also took under the gift, but that the child begotten and born after the testator's death could not take. Ib.

A father directed the income of one-half of his residuary estate to be paid to his son during his life and afterwards to his lawful issue; one of the issue was en ventre sa mère at the date of the death of the tenant for life, but his parents were not married till after that date, though before the birth of the child:—Held, that such child was not entitled to share in the distribution of the half of the residue. Corlass, In re, 45 L. J., Ch. 118; 1 Ch. D. 460; 33 L. T. 630; 24 W. R. 204.

O., by his will, dated the 9th July, 1868, bequeathed property to trustees for his reputed children, C. O. and E. O., "and all other the children which he might have, or be reputed to have, by M. L." (his deceased wife's sister, with whom he had gone through the ceremony of marriage), "then born or thereafter to be born." At the date of the will M. L. was enceinte; and six months later she had a child, who was named M. O., otherwise M. L., and was born on the 6th January, 1869. The testator died on the 25th December, 1870:—Held, that M. O., otherwise M. L., was entitled to share in the bequest. Occleston v. Fullalove, 43 L. J., Ch. 297; L. R. 9 Ch. 147; 29 L. T. 785; 22 W. R. 305.

G. B. went through the ceremony of marriage with J. A. C., whose husband had deserted her and gone abroad many years before and was believed to be dead, but G. B. was aware that there was no certain information of his death. Shortly afterwards G. B. made his will, by which he gave "to my dear wife J. A. B., formerly J. A. C.," an interest in certain chattels during her widowhood, and also gave to her the income of his residuary personalty during widowhood, and after her decease or remarriage he gave the corpus to "all and every my child and children," as therein mentioned, and in default of children to his nephews and nieces. G. B. and J. A. C. cohabited for more than a year and a half after the date of the will, when G. B. died leaving J. A. C. enceinte of her only child. She enjoyed the income of the residue till her death, upon which event the nephews and nieces claimed the property under the gift over, and proved that J. A. C.'s child was illegitimate, her former husband having been alive at the time of her marriage to the testator:—Held, that the child could not take. Occleston v. Fullalove (supra) leaves untouched the rule that there cannot be a valid gift to a future illegitimate child described solely by reference to its paternity. Goodwin's Trust, In re (L. R. 17 Eq. 345), observed upon. Bolton, In re, Brown v. Bolton, 55 L. J., Ch. 398; 31 Ch. D. 542; 54 L. T. 396; 34 W. R. 325; 50 J. P. 532—C. A.

Children of Women past Child-bearing.]—Bequest of stock upon trust to pay the dividends to one for life, and then to divide the capital equally "between all the children of G. and the children of M., the wife of W. B., who should be alive at the respective deaths of the said G. and M." M. was married at the date of the will; she died after the testatrix without lawful issue, but leaving several illegitimate children, all born before the date of the will, and whom the testatrix believed to be legitimate. The court admitted evidence of all facts in the testatrix's knowledge at the time she made her will; but upon the result of this evidence, there being a possibility that M. might have had legitimate children after the date of the will, and there being nothing on the face of the will to confine the description to the illegitimate children who were in existence at the date of it:—Held, that the illegitimate children took nothing. Overhill's Trusts, In re, 1 Sm. & G. 362; 22 L. J., Ch. 485; 17 Jur. 342; 1 W. R. 208.

A testator, after giving a share of his property by his will upon trust for his niece B. and her husband, and for her child, if only one, or all her children, if more than one, gave another share upon such trusts in favour of his niece C. and her husband, and her child or children, as should correspond with the preceding trusts in favour of B. C. had only one child, born before her marriage, and illegitimate. She was fifty years old at the date of the will, and fifty-seven years old at the date of a subsequent codicil:—Held, that, on the death of C., her illegitimate child was not entitled. Paul v. Children, L. R. 12 Eq. 16; 25 L. T. 82; 19 W. R. 941.

H., having been married to R. (who was ignorant that his first wife was alive), had nine children by him. S., the sister of H., knowing that H. was fifty-seven years old, made her will, leaving certain property to the children of H., mentioning one by name as her niece, and referring to them as "born or to be born":—Held, that there was a sufficient indication of an intention, upon the knowledge which the testatrix had, to entitle the children of H. to the benefit of the gift as personæ designatæ. Robinson v. Neal, 19 L. T. 142.

Children of a Deceased Person.]—Legacy "to the children of the late C. K. who shall be living at the testator's decease"; C. K. being dead at the date of the will, leaving illegitimate children (of whom three were living at the death of testator), and not having at the date of the will, nor having ever had, any legitimate children, the three illegitimate children were held to be entitled. Woodhouselee (Lord) v. Dalrymple, 2 Mer. 419; 16 R. R. 193.

Where there are not, nor ever were, nor can by possibility be, any persons strictly answering the description of children, it is necessary to resort to evidence dehors the will for the purpose of finding whether there were any who had acquired the reputation of children; and it is possible for illegitimate children to acquire that reputation. Ib.

A testator gave a legacy to "every of the sons and daughters of his late cousin"; his cousin left one legitimate daughter, and one son and one daughter illegitimate; the latter are not entitled under the will, nor is evidence admissible of the intention of the testator. Hart v. Durand, 3 Anstr. 684.

Under the description of children in a will, illegitimate children, existing at the date of the will, not entitled unless proved by the will itself to be intended, and evidence can be received only for the purpose of collecting who had acquired the reputation of children. An only legitimate son, therefore, held entitled as devisee. Swaine v. Kennerley, 1 V. & B. 469; 12 R. R. 269.

A testatrix gave a share of her residuary estate to the children of M. G., deceased. M. G. left two children, one legitimate and the other illegitimate. Evidence was admitted to prove that the illegitimate child had acquired the reputation of being the child of M. G., that the testatrix well knew that fact, and that M. G. left only those two children. Gill v. Shelley, 2 Russ. & M. 336.

A. gave "to each of the sons and daughters of his late cousin 100*l.* apiece." There were three sons and a daughter, one son and the daughter being illegitimate:—Held, that the gifts were made to a class, and that the illegitimate son could not take any legacy, as there were sons to answer the description; but that the daughter, being the only one, was entitled to her legacy by express description. Edmunds v. Fessey, 29 Beav. 233; 30 L. J., Ch. 279; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 282; 3 L. T. 765; 9 W. R. 365.

A testator gave his property equally among all the children of his late nephew L. who should be living at the testator's decease, and who should attain twenty-one or marry; and if but one such child, to such child solely. Three children of L., two illegitimate and one legitimate, survived the testator. He had treated all three as being equally the children of L., and they were generally so received:—Held, that, L. being dead at the date of the will, there could never be legitimate "children" to answer the description; and that the gift was to the two illegitimate children, as well as the one legitimate child; but that the case would have been different if L. had been living at the date of the will. Leigh v. Byron, 1 Sm. & G. 486; 1 Eq. R. 519; 22 L. J., Ch. 1064; 17 Jur. 822; 1 W. R. 407.

A testator gave property by will to B., and after his death to B.'s children, "share and share alike; the two children of the late Ann B. to take the share that would have fallen to their mother had she been living, to be divided between them, share and share alike, if more than one survive; but if only one of them be then surviving, then and in such case the surviving child to take the whole of the mother's share." The testator also directed that if the wife of B. survived her husband, she should enjoy the property for her life, and the division should not take place till after her death. After the testator's death B. married a second wife, who survived him. He had three children, viz., George, Mary, and Ann, the first of whom only survived him. Ann died unmarried before the date of the testator's will, leaving two illegitimate children:—Held, that the gift to the children of Ann applied to her illegitimate children; that the words of survivorship in the will applied exclusively to the children of Ann, and that all the children of B. took vested interests. Burrow's Trusts, In re, 10 L. T. 184.

Held, also, that the gift to the wife of B. applied to the wife who was living at the time of the will, and not to any wife whom B. might at any time afterwards marry. Ib.

A testatrix bequeathed to A., "the eldest daughter of my deceased daughter S., my gold watch"; and she bequeathed other property to trustees "in trust for such of the children of my said deceased daughter S. who shall attain twenty-one, absolutely, equally, share and share alike, the shares of such of them as shall be daughters to be for their sole and separate use." S. had two legitimate children, a son and a daughter, and she had also an illegitimate daughter, who was the person spoken of in the will as "A., the eldest daughter of S.":—Held, that there was a sufficient indication of an intention that A. should be included in the description of "the children of S." Humphries, In re, Smith v. Millidge, 24 Ch. D. 691; 49 L. T. 594.

Children of Illegitimate Children.]—Where a testator in his will calls the son of his own illegitimate son his grandson, having no legitimate son, after giving his property to be divided between his son and daughter's children, and if there should be no grandchildren, then a gift to his nephew:—Held, that a legitimate daughter of the testator's illegitimate son was within the description of grandchildren. Allen v. Webster, 2 Giff. 177; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 574; 2 L. T. 206.

R. S. bequeathed the residue of his personal estate upon trust after the death of his wife for "all and every the children lawfully begotten of my nephews and nieces, equally to be divided between them share and share alike." The testator had only one nephew, W. A., who was legitimate, but there was another child of the same parents, namely J. A., who was born before the marriage of the parents; and the testator had no nieces properly so called, the only persons who could be so called being the wives of W. A. and J. A. In part of the will J. A. was spoken of as the testator's nephew. On the question of what class of persons took the residue:—Held, that the children of J. A. as well as the children of W. A. were entitled. Tugwell v. Scott, 3 Jur. (N.S.) 653.

iii. Son, Eldest Son, &c., as Words of Limitation.

Realty—Where Gift Over on Default of Sons.]—Devise to L. for his natural life, and no longer, provided he takes the name of R., and after his decease to such son as he should have lawfully begotten, and for default of such issue to W. and his heirs for ever:—Held, that upon the true construction of the will, and to effectuate the manifest general intent of the testator, L. must be construed to take an estate in tail male. Robinson v. Hicks, 3 Bro. P. C. 180.

A. devised all his lands, &c., to his wife, and if it should happen that she should have no son nor daughter by him begotten upon her body, and for want of such issue, then the said premises to return to his heirs for ever, paying to two other brothers 150*l.* within a year after the wife's death. Decreed to be an estate tail in the wife, and not an estate for life only; that by "no son nor daughter" must be understood "no issue"; and that she ought not to be restrained from committing waste. Wyld v. Lewis, 1 Atk. 432.

Under a devise to trustees upon trust to permit A. to receive the rents for his life, and after his decease upon trust to permit his first son and the heirs of his body "to receive the rents for their respective lives, severally and successively in tail male," and in default of such issue over, A. takes an estate in tail male, and not merely a life estate. Hugo v. Williams, 41 L. J., Ch. 661; L. R. 14 Eq. 224; 26 L. T. 901.

Devise in trust for A. for life, and after the decease of A. in trust to permit such one child of A., and the heirs of his or her body, to receive the rents as A. should appoint by deed or will, and in default of appointment to go to his eldest son and the heirs of his body; and in case there should be no son, to and amongst his daughters, and to the heirs of their bodies, share and share alike; and in default of such issue, in trust for B., C., and D. successively for their lives, with similar remainders respectively to them as to A.'s sons and daughters, with remainder over in fee, and a residuary devise to A. A. by will appointed to his eldest son, who died without issue in his lifetime:—Held, first, that A. took an estate tail in remainder, after the estate devised to his eldest son, in default of appointment. Bell v. Bell, 15 Ir. Ch. R. 517.

Held, secondly, that the words, "in case there shall be no son," did not give an estate by implication to the other sons of A. Ib.

Direction that any property might be sold except Glencoe, which was to remain in the family as long as there was a lineal son descendant of before-named sons, and if no lineal male descendant from the eldest, the next to be entitled, and so on:—Held, that this clause created an estate tail in possession in the eldest named son. Mannox v. Greener, L. R. 14 Eq. 456; 27 L. T. 408.

A testator by his will directed the trustees therein appointed to call in a certain sum of money to which he was entitled, and invest the same in the purchase of freehold estates in lands or hereditaments of a clear estate of inheritance for the use of his son A. for and during his natural life, and after his death to the use of his first and other sons according to seniority of age and priority of birth; and in case A. should happen to die without issue male, then in trust for his second son, B., and the heirs male of his body, according to seniority of age and priority of birth; and desired that his sons and the several persons who should be in possession of such estates should have a power to make leases not exceeding three lives or thirty-one years:—Held, that A. was entitled to an estate tail in the lands to be purchased. Herbert v. Blunden, 1 Dr. & Wal. 78.

—— Where Estate for Life expressly given.]—A. devised his real estate to his son F. during his life, remainder after his decease to his eldest son that should be then living, remainder over; F. suffered a recovery, and declared the use to himself in fee:—Held, that F. took only an estate for life, and that the recovery was bad: for where a particular estate is expressly given, it shall not be altered by any implication from subsequent words, especially where such implication, if admitted, defeats the general intent of the will. Foord v. Foord, 3 Bro. P. C. 124. And see East v. Twyford, 4 H. L. Cas. 517.

Where Words used importing Succession.]—A testator declared his will to be, that his property be inherited by his nephews, C. and T., and the sons of his late brother A. during their lives, and after the decease of C. and T. that the eldest son of C. and the eldest son of T. inherit the said property during their lives, and so on, the eldest son of each of the two families to inherit the same for ever; and that each two of the succeeding inheritors should inherit the said property free from incumbrances:—Held, that C. and T. took estates for their lives, with remainder to their eldest sons respectively for their lives, with remainder to C. and T. in tail male. Forsbrook v. Forsbrook, L. R. 3 Ch. 93; 16 W. R. 290. Affirming 12 Jur. (N.S.) 285; 14 L. T. 282.

Bequest of property (moneys to be laid out in land) to L., and afterwards to his eldest lawfully begotten son, &c., remainder to others in succession, with a direction that in case of the decease of an eldest son in any of the cases, then the property to go to the second son, and so on according to primogeniture; but in every case a grandson to inherit before a younger son, and before next named in the entail, or any of his sons:—Held, upon the language of the whole will, that the testator did not regard L. as the stock or stirps, but looked to the sons of L. as the parties from whom the property was to devolve in succession; and that L. took an estate for life only. East v. Twyford, 9 Hare, 713; 4 H. L. Cas. 517.

The fact, that wherever a limitation occurred in the will in favour of sons, it was accompanied by the provision that they should take in order of primogeniture, and that there was no such provision as to grandsons:—Held, to indicate that the sons were intended to take by particular description, and the grandsons as a class. Ib.

The authorities which establish that a son or sons may be construed as a word of limitation, to effectuate the intention of a testator, do not therefore or necessarily lay down any rule by which the court can be guided in determining upon such intention. Id., 9 Hare, 730.

The question is, whether "son" or "sons" be be used as nomen collectivum; upon which a subsequent limitation in favour of grandsons has an important bearing. Ib.

Personalty—Life Interest—Remainder to First and other Sons.]—Bequest of personal estate to A., "and to his first and other sons after him, in the usual mode of succession:"—Held, that A. took for life only. Sparling v. Parker, 29 Beav. 450.

A testator bequeathed moneys, lent on mortgage, to A. for life, with remainder to his "first and other sons." The will also contained devises of fee simple, freehold and chattel lands to the first and other sons of A. successively:—Held, that the first son of A. took the whole mortgage money absolutely. Staunton, In re, 14 Ir. Ch. R. 98.

—— To A. and B.—Remainder to their respective Eldest Sons, and so on in Succession.]—A testator bequeathed the life use of all his funded property, moneys, and securities for money, to his sons A. and B., share and share alike for their lives, with power to them to invest it; and after their respective deaths he directed the issues and profits to arise therefrom to go to their respective eldest sons born in wedlock, share and share alike, for and during each of their natural lives and life, and so on to the eldest sons of the eldest sons born in wedlock in succession, share and share alike, on their attaining their respective ages of twenty-one, subject to certain bequests, with cross limitations to A. and B., if they both died without male issue, among their female issue as they should respectively appoint. There was no son of A. born at the testator's death:—Held, to carry out the general intent, that the will must be construed to give the eldest son of A., who was born after the testator's death, an estate tail in real estate, and therefore that he took an absolute interest in his share of the testator's personal property. Cleary, In re, 16 Ir. Ch. R. 438.

iv. Children as a Word of Limitation.

Realty—Gift to Parent and Children—Rule in Wild's Case.]—A devise to J. and his children; if he has then children, they take with their father; but if he has none, it is an estate tail. Cook v. Cook, 2 Vern. 545.

When there is a devise of land to "A. B. and his children," and at the time of the devise he has no child, the word children is primâ facie a word of limitation, and the first taker shall have an estate tail; if he has children it is primâ facie a word of purchase, and gives a joint estate to him and his children as purchasers. But either of these constructions may be defeated by the plain intention of the testator, to be collected from the whole of the will. Byng v. Byng, 10 H. L. Cas. 171; 31 L. J., Ch. 470; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 1135; 7 L. T. 1; 10 W. R. 633. Affirming S. C., nom. Webb v. Byng, 8 De G. M. & G. 633; 2 K. & J. 669.

A testatrix, in a holograph will, gave "in trust to my executors for my niece, B., and her children, all my Quendon Hall estates in Essex, provided she takes the name of Cranmer and arms, and her children, with my mansion-house, furniture, plate, books, linen, Archbishop Cranmer's portrait by Holbein, India cabinet, striking watch, and my diamond earrings as heirlooms, with my estate." The niece died before the testatrix, leaving several children:—Held, that children was a word of flexible meaning, and that on the whole context of this will it must be read as a word of limitation, so that the eldest son of the niece took an estate tail in the devised property. Ib.

Observations on Wild's Case (6 Co. Rep. 17). Ib.

A testator by a will made in 1823 gave "the whole of my landed property, situate, &c., to my eldest son H. W., and to his children lawfully begotten. In case of his dying without issue male or female I give the same landed property to my second son C. In case of C. dying without children or child lawfully begotten, I give the same landed property to my daughter Harriet and to her child or children lawfully begotten; and should she have no children, she shall have a power of bequeathing it to whomsoever she pleases. I do hereby give and leave a full discretionary power to each of my children arriving at the possession of this landed property, to dispose of it by their will and testament to one, or to each, of their children, in such manner and in such proportions as to each of them, my children, shall seem meet and right and proper. My reason for this is that as there is a title of baronet in the family the eldest son ought to possess something more than the others, and also that I never wished to encourage disobedient children, therefore I leave the power of punishing or rewarding, as each of them coming into possession of the property, and having children, shall think right." H. W. never had a child. C. died during the life of his elder brother, but left a daughter. H. W. after entering into possession disentailed the estate, and devised it to his wife's nephew:—Held, that H. W., by virtue of the rule in Wild's Case (6 Co. Rep. 17) took an estate tail under the will; that the existence of the power did not affect the application of the rule, nor was it affected by the use of the word "children"—in one instance applicable to the sons and daughter of the testator, and in the other instance meaning their sons and daughters. Seale v. Barter (2 Bos. & P. 485; 5 R. R. 676) approved. Clifford v. Koe, 5 App. Cas. 447; 43 L. T. 322; 28 W. R. 633—H. L. (Ir.)

The rule in Wild's Case (6 Co. Rep. 17), even if only a rule of construction, is not now to be departed from. Ib.

It is consistent with that case that the primary sense of the word "children" is issue of the first generation. That primary sense is displaced when circumstances render the rule in Wild's Case (6 Co. Rep. 17) applicable, on which the word becomes a word of limitation and not of purchase. Ib.

The rule in Wild's Case (6 Co. Rep. 17) is not inflexible, and will not be applied where its application would defeat the manifest intention of the testator as collected from the whole will. Grieve v. Grieve, 36 L. J., Ch. 932; L. R. 4 Eq. 180: 16 L. T. 201; 15 W. R. 577.

Devise of house to A. and B., and to their children, and if they have not any, to C. and his children, the furniture to go with the house. A. and B. had no children at the date of the will:—Held, that having regard to the terms of the will, and particularly to the direction as to the furniture, to apply the rule in Wild's Case, and thereby give A. and B. estates tail, would defeat the intention of the testatrix; that in such case it was not imperative to apply the rule; and that A. and B. took the house and furniture for their respective lives, with remainder to the children of each coming into esse during such lives. Ib.

—— Where construed Estate for Life and Remainder.]—Devise to M. J., and to all and every the child and children, whether male or female, of her body lawfully issuing, and unto his, her, and their heirs as tenants in common:—Held, M. J. took estate for life, with remainder to her children as tenants in common. Jeffery v. Honywood, 4 Madd. 398.

On a devise of lands to testator's sisters, M. and L., share and share alike, "and, in case of their demise, their respective shares to be equally divided amongst their children or lawful heirs":—Held, that they took an estate only for life, with the remainder to their children in fee as tenants in common, and as to one of them, not married, her share, not being disposed of, would, in the event of her not having any child, descend to the heir-at-law. Bowen v. Scowcroft, 2 Y. & C. 640; 7 L. J., Ex. Eq. 25.

Lands held under leases for lives perpetually renewable were devised in 1853 to M. (who did not marry till after the death of the testatrix), and to any child or children she might have, in such shares, &c., as she should appoint; and in default of appointment, among such children equally, if more than one, as tenants in common, "and to their respective heirs and assigns," and if but one, to such one, his or her heirs and assigns, upon sons attaining twenty-one, and daughters twenty-one or marriage; "and in default of any such issue," or, there being such, all should die under age or unmarried as aforesaid, over absolutely. By a codicil the testatrix vested her lands in trustees "to preserve the several contingent remainders in my will mentioned," and to procure renewals or fee-farm grants of the premises:—Held, that M. took only an estate for life. Moyles, In re, 1 L. R. Ir. 155.

A testator bequeathed all his estate (which consisted wholly of personalty, or of real estate distributable as personalty) to his wife absolutely, "for the benefit of herself and children"; and appointed her executrix. He left his wife and six children surviving. The widow proved the will and died. During her lifetime one of the children, a daughter, married and died:—Held, that the children took as joint tenants whether in remainder or otherwise, and semble, that the wife took only an estate for life. Armstrong v. Armstrong, 38 L. J., Ch. 463; L. R. 7 Eq. 518; 20 L. T. 776; 17 W. R. 570.

Where a testator devises property to his wife, for the benefit of his wife and children, the court will anxiously lay hold of any slight circumstance which will enable it to construe the gift as an estate for life to the wife, remainder to the children, and not as creating a joint tenancy. McVickers' Contract, In re, 25 L. R. Ir. 307.

—— Fee Simple and Executory Devise.]—Where there was a devise to R. B. and J. B., as tenants in common, "and in their respective proportions to their children, or according to their wills"; and at the date of the will J. B. had children, but R. B. had none:—Held, not to be a devise of estate tail, or a gift to the children together with their parent, but to be a gift in fee simple to R. B. and J. B. as tenants in common, with a superadded executory devise at the death of each to his children or to his devisees. Buckmaster's Estate, In re, 47 L. T. 514.

Personalty—Gift to Parent and Children—Rule.]—Where there is a gift to parents and children, and there are children living at the time, it is a gift to all (per capita) as tenants in common. If there be no children living, the parents take for life, with remainder to the children. Paine v. Wagner, 12 Sim. 184.

Where a testator gives property to a parent and his children simpliciter, and he has children then in esse, the parent and children take together, either jointly or in common; but if there be superadded words importing a settlement, the parent takes for life, with remainder to his children. Mason v. Clarke, 17 Beav. 126; 22 L. J., Ch. 956; 17 Jur. 479; 1 W. R. 297.

Bequest "to A." (who was enceinte at the time) "and her children":—Held, that A. and her children took as joint tenants, and no child having survived the testator, that A. was absolutely entitled to the legacy. Ib.

Children is a word of purchase, and not of limitation, except it is to comply with a testator's intention, and it can take effect no other way.

Where testator devised four parts of his personal estate to B., and the children born of her body, and B. had no child at the date of the will, but had one child born afterwards, and B. died in testator's lifetime:—Held, that the legacy was not lapsed, for B. did not take an estate tail but as a joint tenant with the child, and that the child took the whole by survivorship. Buffar v. Bradford, 2 Atk. 220.

—— When Parent and Children take Jointly.]—Where the will contained a clause, "observing that F. B. and his family are my residuary legatees for all but cash or moneys so called":—Held, that F. B. and his children took the residue as joint tenants, and that long annuities, Columbian bonds, and a promissory note were not within the exception of cash, &c. Beales v. Crisford, 13 Sim. 593; 13 L. J., Ch. 26; 7 Jur. 1076.

A husband gave all his real and personal estate to his wife for the use and benefit of herself and all his children, whether born of his former or of his present wife, and he appointed his wife and three other persons his executors:—Held, that the wife and children took as joint tenants. Newill v. Newill, 41 L. J., Ch. 432; L. R. 7 Ch. 253; 26 L. T. 175; 20 W. R. 308.

Held, that a bequest of 30*l.* a year to A., together with her children B., C. and D., and for their joint maintenance, was a bequest of that annual sum to the mother and her children, as joint tenants, for the life of the longest liver of them. Wilson v. Maddison, 2 Y. & C. C. C. 372; 12 L. J., Ch. 420; 7 Jur. 572.

A testator gave to his wife all his copyhold, freehold, and personal estate for her absolute fee for ever and ever, and to her heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, also all his personal, leasehold, and general possessions to and for her use, and for the use of his children, and authorised her to appropriate any part for her immediate use, and for that of her children:—Held, that the wife and children were joint tenants, with a power to the wife to appropriate the property on the testator's death for a pressing exigency. Curtis v. Graham, 10 L. T. 734; 12 W. R. 993.

A testator gave all his property for the use and benefit of his wife and children, as his trustees should think proper, during the widowhood of his wife; nevertheless it was his desire, subject to a sum to be set apart for his daughters, that all the rest should be equally divided between his wife and children on their severally attaining the age of twenty-one, and his wife continuing his widow and unmarried. The testator left his wife and nine children:—Held, that the property was divisible into tenths, each of the children being entitled to one-tenth upon their respectively attaining twenty-one, the widow during widowhood receiving the income of the shares of minors, and applying them for their benefit. Salmon v. Tidmarsh, 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1380.

—— When Parent takes for Life.]—The rule in Wild's Case (6 Co. Rep. 17) is not applicable to personal estate. Audsley v. Horn, 1 De G. F. & J. 226; 29 L. J., Ch. 201; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 205; 8 W. R. 150. Affirming 26 Beav. 195.

Personalty was bequeathed to the testator's daughter during her life, and at her death, to her daughter, and to the granddaughter's children, but if they should die without issue then over. The granddaughter was unmarried at the dates of the will and of the testator's death, and had no child till after the death of the testator's daughter:—Held, that the granddaughter took a life interest in the subject-matter of the bequest, with remainder to her children. Ib.

Where both a parent and his children are objects of a bequest of personalty the tendency of modern decisions is to construe the limitations as a gift to the parent for life, with remainder to his children. S. C., 26 Beav. 195.

Testator by his will, which was not attested so as to pass real estates, declared that his property, with what she was entitled to, should produce for his wife an annuity of 100*l.*; to each of his two daughters 100*l.* per annum, for "themselves and their children"; and bequeathed the residue of his property to his son W. Subsequently M., one of the daughters, died, and by a codicil the testator directed the 100*l.* per annum, &c., provided for M., to be equally divided between W. and J. L., the other daughter. By a second codicil he directed that, in the event of W.'s death without issue male, then after the decease of his (the testator's) wife and J. L., his remaining property should go over. J. L. had no children at the date of the will, or at the time of the testator's death, nor did she take any other benefit under the will and codicil than those mentioned:—Held, that J. L. took only a life interest in the respective gifts to her. Semble, that if it had rested on the will alone she would have taken a perpetual interest in it. Heron v. Stokes, 3 Dr. & War. 89; 1 Con. & L. 270; 4 Ir. Eq. R. 284.

Semble, the rule in Wild's Case (6 Co. Rep. 17) is inapplicable to bequests of personal estate. Ib.

Bequests "to A. and her children," expressed in another part of the will as a gift "to A. and her family":—Held, that A. took for life. Ward v. Grey, 26 Beav. 485; 29 L. J., Ch. 74; 7 W. R. 569.

Legacies to A. and "to the heirs of his body"; to B., "to be secured to her and the heirs of her body"; to T., and "to her issue," are absolute legacies; but legacies to S., and "to her heirs (say children)," give S. only a life interest. Crawford v. Trotter, 4 Madd. 361; 20 R. R. 312.

Testator gave to his daughter and her children 5,000*l.*, 3,000*l.* to be paid in one year after his decease, and 2,000*l.* after the decease of his wife, and appointed A. B. trustee of those sums for his daughter and her children. The court declared the 5,000*l.* to be in trust for the daughter for life, and after her decease for all her children, whether born in the testator's lifetime or after his decease. Morse v. Morse, 2 Sim. 485; 29 R. R. 147.

Held, that under a bequest of 40,000*l.* to Lord H., and his children, to be secured for their benefit, Lord H. took for life with remainder to his children, and not as joint tenant with them. Vaughan v. Headfort (Marquis), 10 Sim. 639; 9 L. J., Ch. 271; 4 Jur. 649.

A father directed that the share of his daughter should accumulate during the life of her husband and after his death, if there should be any children living, "it should be secured for their benefit and that of their mother;" if no children, that it should go to the daughter absolutely:—Held, that after the death of her husband the daughter was entitled to the income for life, and with remainder to her children. Combe v. Hughes, 41 L. J., Ch. 693; L. R. 14 Eq. 415; 27 L. T. 366; 20 W. R. 793.

A mother gave 1,400*l.* to trustees in trust to pay the income to M. for life, and the capital to her children (excluding her two eldest sons) who should survive her and attain twenty-one. She also gave 1,500*l.* to each of her two eldest sons, and the residue to M. and such of her children, including the two eldest sons, as should attain twenty-one:—Held, that the wife took a life estate in the residue, with remainder to such of her children as should attain twenty-one. Owen, In re, L. R. 12 Eq. 316; 25 L. T. 489.

Bequest of money in the funds to A., in trust for B., an infant, and for such younger son or sons as B. shall have, equally to be divided between them; and, in case there shall be but one younger son, then the whole to him:—Held, that B. took only a life interest, subject to which his younger children took the whole. Garden v. Pulteney, 2 Eden, 323; Ambl. 499.

A husband who died in 1853, possessed of chattels real, and leaving a widow and seven children, of whom six were minors, by his will of 1837 bequeathed all his property to her, should she continue unmarried, for the benefit of herself and his family. If she married again, she was to receive 100*l.*, and the remainder of his property was to be divided share and share alike among his children and the survivors of them. He appointed his wife to execute his will according to the real meaning and spirit of what was thus specified, and recommended her to be guided by the advice of the Rev. H. H. in all matters relating to the disposal of his property and the education of the children, and the advancement of their well-being in society :—Held, that the children took no interest in possession, but that the widow took a life interest during widowhood, with a power of appointment, among the children, who, in default of appointment, would take as tenants in common. Mill v. Mill, Ir. R. 11 Eq. 158—C. A.

H. devised an estate at L. to M. for life, with remainders over (which failed), with an ultimate remainder to M.'s own right heirs. On the death of H., M. entered into possession, and in 1839 part of the estate was taken by a poor-law union, under the compulsory powers of the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 69, and the purchase-money paid into court. M. devised her estates at L. to W. for life, with remainder to her own right heirs, W. being such right heir ; and M. then bequeathed the dividends of the fund in court to W. for life, and after bequeathing legacies, and referring to the surplus of her effects and moneys, she, subject to the payment of debts and to the life estate, bequeathed the same to the children of W., as tenants in common, to be paid to them at twenty-one :—Held, that W. had only a life interest in the fund in court, and that on his death his nine children were entitled to it. Horner's Estate, In re, 5 Jur. (N.S.) 996 ; 7 W. R. 595.

—— When Parent takes Absolute Interest.] —Bequest of 1,000*l.* to A. S., and the children that may be lawfully begotten of her body ; A. S., being unmarried at the death of the testatrix, takes the legacy absolutely. Read v. Willis, 1 Coll. C. C. 86 ; 8 Jur. 165.

On a bequest to the testator's daughter for life, and on her death to his son and his children ; the son had no child at the death of the testator but had children living at the death of the daughter :—Held, that the son was entitled absolutely, and that his children were neither joint tenants nor entitled in remainder after him. Scott v. Scott, 15 Sim. 47 ; 14 L. J., Ch. 439 ; 9 Jur. 580.

Testator gave 200*l.* to each of his nieces and their children, to be paid within nine months after the death of his wife, amongst his nieces and their children as his wife should by will appoint. The wife died without having made any appointment. The executors, within nine months after her death, paid the legacies to her nieces. They afterwards died without having had any children :—Held, that the payment was properly made. Pyne v. Franklyn, 5 Sim. 458 ; 2 L. J., Ch. 41. And see Crawford v. Trotter, supra, col. 782.

Personalty—Gift to Parent for Separate Use.] —Testator gave 500*l.* "to the sole uses of N., or of her children for ever." N. took an interest for life in the 500*l.*, and it belonged to her children after her death. Newman v. Nightingale, 1 Cox, 341.

A testator gave a sum of money in trust for his daughter, a married woman, so as not to be subject to the debts, acts, or control of her husband ; and gave an equal sum to a second daughter (also married), "in trust, as aforesaid, for the use of herself and children" :—Held, that the second daughter took an estate for her separate use for life, with remainder to her children. French v. French, 11 Sim. 257.

Testator directed that the legacies given by his will to females, married or single, should be for their own benefit and their children, and should never be subject to the control of their respective husbands :—Held, that the females took for their lives, for their separate use, with remainder to their children. Bain v. Lescher, 11 Sim. 397.

The testator, by his will, gave to his niece E. G., wife of Captain G., the sum of 7,000*l.*, and "to her heirs, for her separate use ; this sum of 7,000*l.* to be invested in consols in the names of A. and B., who were appointed trustees of the donation, to receive the interest of the stock, and to be answerable for the stock, for the use of E. G. and her children, and to apply it most conducive to their interest ; E. G. to pay her mother during her life the sum of 40*l.* per annum" :—Held, that E. G. was entitled for life, with remainder to her children born at and after the death of the testator. Ogle v. Corthorn, 14 L. J., Ch. 337 ; 9 Jur. 325.

Bequest to a married woman for the benefit of herself and such children as she then had, or might thereafter have by her then husband, free from the control of her husband :—Held, that she took for life, with remainder to such children. Jeffery v. De Vitre, 24 Beav. 296.

A testator, having by her will given a legacy of 5,000*l.* to a married daughter, made a codicil revoking the legacy, and, in lieu thereof, gave 2,500*l.* to her husband, and 2,500*l.* in trust for the daughter and her children, free from all debts or liabilities of her husband :—Held, that the daughter was entitled to the income of 2,500*l.* for her life, with remainder to all her children as to the capital. Froggatt v. Wardell, 3 De G. & Sm. 685 ; 14 Jur. 1101.

Bequest of the interest of 500*l.* to A. for life, and as to the principal after the death of A., and as "to all other property belonging to me that I may die seised and possessed of or entitled unto, in trust for the use, benefit, and behoof of" B. and her children, "without the control or intermeddling of her husband, and to be paid in such manner as my trustees shall in their discretion think fit" :—Held, that B. took a life interest in all the property, with remainder to all her children born in A.'s lifetime, before and after the death of the testatrix. Scott v. Scott, 11 Ir. Ch. R. 114.

Testator bequeathed his residue in trust for his daughter Sarah and her children, independently of her husband, and her receipts alone, notwithstanding her coverture, to be from time to time a sufficient discharge :—Held, that the daughter and her children living at the testator's death were entitled to the residue in joint tenancy. De Witte v. De Witte, 11 Sim. 41 ; 9 L. J., Ch. 270 ; 4 Jur. 625.

A gift of residue to A., subject to the life interest in B., "for her own benefit and her children, or one only child, if she should have any," creates a joint tenancy between A. and her children, and not a life interest to her with remainder to children. Fisher v. Webster, 42

A testator directed the trustees of his will to convert and hold the proceeds of his residuary estate upon trust as to one moiety to pay one-fifth to each of four persons respectively, and the remaining one-fifth to the widow of his nephew, "for the sole and separate use of herself and her family by my late nephew," and directed that their, his, or her receipt in writing should be a sufficient discharge for the payments aforesaid; the trustees brought into court the share left to the widow, and she petitioned for payment out of the fund:—Held, that she and her children took as joint tenants, and that she was entitled to only one-fifth of the fund, and to be paid the income of the remaining four-fifths for the maintenance and education of the children. Newsom, In re, 1 L. R. Ir. 373.

—— When Words used importing Succession.]—Devise of a copyhold to trustees and the survivor of them, and the executors and administrators of such survivor for ever, upon trust, out of the rents and profits, to pay certain yearly charges, and the residue to T. for life; and from and after his decease, to pay the residue as aforesaid to T.'s children, and so on for ever; and for want of children lawfully begotten, to the testatrix's daughters:—Held, that T. took an equitable estate tail under this devise. Trash v. Wood, 4 Myl. & Cr. 324; 9 L. J., Ch. 105; 4 Jur. 669.

Testator, by his will, directed that the profits of his share of a leasehold colliery should, during the time that the same was worked or workable, be equally divided amongst "his wife and children, and their children after them respectively":—Held, upon the construction of the whole will, that the words "their children after them respectively" were words of limitation. Snowball v. Procter, 2 Y. & C. C. C. 478; 7 Jur. 619.

Under a testamentary gift "to my brother B. and to his children in succession":—Held, that B. took an estate tail in the freeholds, and an absolute interest in the leaseholds and general personal estate. Tyrone (Earl) v. Waterford (Marquis), 1 De G. F. & J. 613; 29 L. J., Ch. 486; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 567; 8 W. R. 454.

A father gave freehold, copyhold, and leasehold estates to his daughter for life, and should she live to become marriageable, leaving a child or children, for the support and maintenance of such child, if there was only one, and if more than one in fair and equal proportions, "for and during the term of their natural lives, and in like manner to their children and children's children, each family having among them the father's or mother's share," with a gift over on the death under twenty-one or before marriage of his daughter:—Held, that the daughter took an estate for life only, and not an estate tail. The limitations after the daughter's life estate were not all void, but her children (if she left any) would take life estates. Hampton v. Holman, 46 L. J., Ch. 248; 5 Ch. D. 183; 36 L. T. 287; 25 W. R. 459.

Bequest of money to be invested in trust to "pay the dividends and premiums to accrue therefrom for the use of the children of my brother H., share and share alike, and after their decease to be continued to their children":—Held, that the children of H. took life estates only, and there being no gift over, the grandchildren took the principal sum. Hyde v. Cullen, 1 Jur. 100.

Gift over on Death without Children.]—A devise and bequest of freehold and chattel interests to M. M. for life, and in case he should die unmarried, or without children, to revert for the residue of their different periods to T. H.:—Held, that M. M. took an estate for life only. Egan v. Morris, Ll. & G. t. Plunk. 297.

A testator, the father of two daughters, who were his only children, gave his estate, real and personal property, equally between them, with a declaration that the share of his daughter A. should devolve, in case of her dying without children, to his daughter B. and her children. A. was married at the date of the will, but had no children; B. was at that time married and had two children. A. died without ever having had a child:—Held, that she was entitled to an estate tail in the real estate, and was absolutely entitled to the personalty. Bacon v. Cosby, 4 De G. & Sm. 261; 20 L. J., Ch. 213; 15 Jur. 695.

A testator, by his will dated in 1836, gave all his leaseholds and freeholds to his three daughters, share and share alike; but if either of his daughters should die leaving no lawful child or children, their share or shares to go to his surviving daughters, share and share alike, to them and his (the testator's) heirs for ever:—Held, that each daughter took an estate tail in her share of the freeholds, and an absolute interest in her share in the leaseholds. Fenn v. Savory, 2 W. R. 345.

c. Issue.

Issue construed Children.]—"Lawful issue" in a will held, upon the context, to mean "children," and that to the exclusion of "grandchildren" born prior to the period of distribution. Edwards v. Edwards, 12 Beav. 97.

The word "issue," in a will, may be held to mean children when such is the manifest meaning of the testator. Ridgeway v. Munkittrick, 1 Dr. & War. 84.

Upon a bequest of personal estate to the testatrix's sisters, or in case of any one dying and leaving issue, the share to go to such child or children equally; all the sisters died in the lifetime of the testatrix, without leaving any issue, except one, who left two grandchildren:—Held, that the word "issue" meant child or children, and that, in the events that happened, the estate of the testatrix was undisposed of. Goldie v. Greaves, 14 Sim. 348.

A devise to the issue of A., and for want of such issue to B.; A. has a son and a daughter: they shall take as persons described, but shall take only an estate for their lives. Cook v. Cook, 2 Vern. 545.

Testator directed his trustees to sell his real and personal estate, and to pay the interest of the proceeds to his daughter for life, and, after her death, to assign the principal and the parts of his real and personal estate remaining unsold (if any) to her children when they should attain twenty-one; and if his daughter should die without leaving issue, or leaving issue, all of them should die under twenty-one and without issue, then to assign the proceeds, and the parts of his real and personal estate remaining unsold (if any), to his personal representatives, his, her, or their heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns. The daughter, who was the testator's next of kin at his death, died without having had a child:—Held, that by "issue" the testator meant "children"; and that the persons who were his next of kin at his daughter's death were entitled under the ultimate trust. Minter v. Wraith, 13 Sim. 52.

Where the testator by one clause gave one-sixth of the residue to and amongst the children of his late sister, and by a subsequent clause another one-sixth to her sister for her life, and after her death to and amongst her issue, in like manner as expressed before concerning the children of I. :—Held, that the word issue was to be construed to mean children, but that under neither clause could a grandchild take by way of substitution for its parent. Peel v. Catlow, 9 Sim. 372; 7 L. J., Ch. 273; 2 Jur. 759.

A testator provided that if "his daughter should have no issue male of her body living at her death, or no such issue male as should be entitled by the true meaning of that his will to his real estates thereby limited, then and in either of those cases he devised the estates" to the daughters of his daughter living at her death :—Held, that the daughters of the daughter did not take any estate under the limitations in the will, for that the words "living at her death" applied to both branches of the proviso, and that the contingency on which the daughters were to become entitled determined at the death of their mother. Eden v. Wilson, 4 H. L. Cas. 257. Reversing Wilson v. Eden, 12 Beav. 454.

A testator gave a moiety of his residuary estate, as well real as personal, upon trust to pay the income equally amongst all his children, who should be living when his youngest child attained twenty-one, for their respective lives, and after the death of any of them, as to an equal portion of the moiety proportionate to the number of his children then living, for the use of the issue of such child or children so dying, absolutely for ever: — Held, that the word "issue" included only children of the testator's children, to the exclusion of their more remote descendants. M'Gregor v. M'Gregor, 1 De G. F. & J. 63.

Testatrix bequeathed a fund upon trust, in the events which happened, for her son for life, and then "in trust for and to be equally divided between all and every my nephews and nieces who shall be living at the time of the death of my said son as aforesaid, and the issue of such of them as shall then be dead leaving issue as tenants in common, such issue nevertheless taking only the share or respective shares which the deceased parent or parents would have taken if living" :—Held, first, that "issue" ought to be confined to children; secondly, that the issue took as tenants in common inter se. Smith, In re, 58 L. J., Ch. 661.

A. conveyed freeholds to trustees and their heirs for his wife during widowhood, and afterwards to convey and divide "such estate and premises" amongst the children and the issue of their children who should be then living as tenants in common (the issue of any deceased child to take their parents' share) :—Held, that "issue" must be read children. Tatham v. Vernon, 29 Beav. 604; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 815; 4 L. T. 531; 9 W. R. 822.

A testator gave legacies to his nieces, with power to his executors to settle them on his nieces for life, and at their deaths for the benefit of their "issues." He also gave them his residue, with like power to settle it on his nieces, and for the benefit of "their respective children," as provided with respect to the legacies :—Held, that "issues" must be construed "children," and that the children of nieces took, to the exclusion of grandchildren. Baker v. Bayldon, 31 Beav. 209.

A testatrix gave a fund to trustees, upon trust to pay the dividends to her niece; and after her decease if her husband should survive her, and she should leave no "issue" living at her decease, then to the husband for life; but if she should leave "issue," then upon trust to pay a moiety of the dividends to the husband, and to apply the other moiety, during his life, for the benefit of "such issue" during their minorities. After the decease of the niece as to one moiety of the fund, and after the decease of the survivor of her and her husband then as to the whole of the fund, the trust was to transfer and divide the same unto and amongst the "children" of the niece, the shares of sons to be vested at twenty-one, and of daughters at that age or marriage with consent, with survivorship in case of the death of any child before his portion should become vested, with a provision for maintenance for "children" during minority; and in case the niece should die in the lifetime of the husband leaving issue, and all should die and unmarried, then the trust was to pay the whole of the dividends unto the husband, "and from and after the decease of my said niece and her husband, and the survivor of them, and failure of issue of my said niece, upon trust to transfer the fund to other persons" :—Held, that the word "issue" in previous parts of the will obviously meant "children," and that the gift over on failure of "issue" meant a failure of "children," and that the gift over took effect. Bryan v. Mansion, 5 De G. & Sm. 737; 22 L. J., Ch. 233; 17 Jur. 202.

A testator by his will gave a fund to trustees "in trust for the lawful issue of F. H. surviving him, equally to be divided between them if more than one, . . . and if but one then for such only child," with a gift over "in default of issue of F. H. becoming entitled." The issue of F. H. who survived him were a son, a daughter, four children of the son, and six children of a deceased daughter :—Held, that by the use of the word "child" the testator had himself interpreted the word "issue," and that the word "issue" must be restricted to children, and the fund go in moieties between the surviving son and daughter. Hopkins, In re, 47 L. J., Ch. 672; 9 Ch. D. 131; 26 W. R. 629.

—— Construed all Descendants.] — Upon a legacy to the issue of A., all descendants are entitled, and take per capita as joint tenants. Davenport v. Hanbury, 3 Ves. 257; 3 R. R. 91.

The word "issue," unconfined by indication of intention, includes all descendants. Intention necessary to restrain it to children; grandchildren therefore entitled with children per capita. Leigh v. Norbury, 13 Ves. 340.

Grandchildren entitled under a bequest to issue. Freeman v. Parsley, 3 Ves. 421.

Issue not confined to children, but includes grandchildren. South v. Searle, 2 Jur. (N.S.) 390; 4 W. R. 470.

Bequest to A. for life, and after her death, if she shall die leaving legitimate issue, upon trust to transfer the fund amongst such issue towards their education and maintenance at the discretion of the trustees, with a gift over if A. should die leaving no legitimate issue :—Held, that the word "issue" was not cut down to children, and that all the issue living at the death of A.

took per capita. Jones's Trusts, In re, 23 Beav. 242.

Gift to "issue" after the death of a tenant for life held to include issue of every degree. Maddock v. Legg, 25 Beav. 531.

Bequest to persons for life, and after their death unto their and each of their issue, and the survivor or the survivors of them, on their severally attaining twenty-one, in equal proportions. On the death of the last tenant for life, there were three generations of issue living:—Held, that all who survived and attained twenty-one participated in the fund. Ib.

A will made in 1794 contained the following gift over: "But if my daughter happens to die without issue, then in such case, at the decease of my daughter, I give and bequeath the said sum to my two daughters, S. and E., equally to be divided between them, share and share alike, if then living; but if either of my daughters, S. and E., should be then dead, then I give and bequeath the share of my daughter so dying to her issue, equally to be divided among them if more than one":—Held, that the word "issue" did not confine the gift to the children of the testator's daughters, but that the remoter issue were also entitled. Weldon v. Hoyland, 6 L. T. 96—L.C.

Bequest of leaseholds to four for life, remainder to their issue as tenants in common. Devise of other estates to the same four, remainder to their children as tenants in common:—Held, that "issue" must be construed children and grandchildren, and "children" confined to its strict signification. Waldron v. Boulter, 22 Beav. 284.

Bequest of a fund in trust for A. for life, and after her death to pay the capital among all the issue of A., in case she should marry, in equal shares, and in case she shall have no issue living at her death, then over:—Held, to be a gift to such of the children of A. as should survive her, and the issue of such of her children as should die before her. Courthorpe v. Wood, 2 Jur. 126.

Where there were bequests to L. for life, and after her death for her issue:—Held, that the children of the deceased children of L. were entitled to share with her surviving children in the property. Louis v. Louis, 9 Jur. (N.S.) 244; 7 L. T. 666.

A husband gave his residuary real and personal estate to trustees to convert and invest, and pay the income to his wife during widowhood, or until his son should attain twenty-two, and then to call in half the money invested and pay it to his son, and as to the other half to pay the income to the wife during widowhood, and then to his son for life, and afterwards to his lawful issue:—Held, that the children and remoter issue of the son living at his death took together as joint tenants. Corlass, In re, 45 L. J., Ch. 118; 1 Ch. D. 460; 33 L. T. 630; 24 W. R. 204.

Devise of lands to all the children of A. and B. his wife, "already or hereafter to be born" of their bodies, whether male or female, for and during their joint lives and the life of the survivor, but all the sons to take the name and arms of W. in addition to their own name, remainder to the trustees to preserve, &c.; and after their several deceases unto and equally between all their issue, male and female; and for want of such issue, over. That the word "issue" is nomen collectivum, and takes in the whole class of descendants, and that the words "in default of such issue" must refer to all such descendants; and consequently, rejecting the words which create a tenancy in common among the issue, the first taker would have an estate tail. Woodhouse v. Herrick, 1 K. & J. 352; 3 Eq. R. 817; 24 L. J., Ch. 649; 3 W. R. 303.

Bequest of leaseholds in trust for F. for life, and after his decease for the issue of the body of F. if any such there should then be. If F. died before twenty-one, or afterwards without issue, gift over:—Held, to confer a life interest in F. with a gift over to his issue, meaning descendants who should be living at his death as joint tenants. Hill v. Nalder, 22 L. J., Ch. 242; 17 Jur. 224.

B. devised copyholds to his sons G., J., and F., upon certain trusts during the life of his wife, and after her death upon trust to pay the rents equally between his three daughters, R., M., and H., or to sell the same and invest the produce as therein mentioned, and to pay it to his three daughters during their lives for their separate use, and upon further trust "that in case my daughters shall depart this life leaving lawful issue," then the trustees should appropriate "the share of such daughter or daughters to the maintenance and education of such child or children until the age of twenty-one," and directed that his copyhold estates or their produce should be divided amongst "the whole of my grandchildren, share and share alike, in case there should be no lawful issue but of one of my daughters, that is, the children of George, James, and Frederick, with the child or children of only one of my daughters, share and share alike," and directed that his trustees should then sell if they had not before done so, the produce to be divided amongst such grandchildren, share and share alike, and as they should respectively attain the age of twenty-one; but should he have no grandchildren or not one who should attain the age of twenty-one, then the estate was to go to K., and as to all the rest, residue, and remainder of his estate and effects, he devised and bequeathed the same to his wife for her own use. All the daughters survived their father; R. died without leaving children; H. died leaving children; M. died having survived her children, but leaving grandchildren:—Held, that the word "issue" was to be read in its widest sense, and would include grandchildren, and that the respective issue of M. and H. took their respective shares by implication, and that they took per capita. Mitchison v. Buckton, 32 L. T. 11; 23 W. R. 480.

A testator left property on trust for his widow for life, and after her death upon trust for his brothers and sisters A., B., C., D., and E., but in case any of them should die leaving lawful issue, he directed that the share or shares of him, her, or them so dying should go to his, her, and their respective issue. A. and B. died before the testator, leaving issue. D. and E. died after the testator, but before his widow, and left issue:—Held, that issue included remoter descendants as well as children. Hobgen v. Neale, 40 L. J., Ch. 36; L. R. 11 Eq. 48; 25 L. T. 681; 19 W. R. 144.

Issue of Issue Construed Children.]—Where, upon the decease of the testator's "children," the estate was given to the "issue" of such "children," and where it was given over in case the testator's "children" should die "without leaving issue," and in like uses of the word "issue," the word "issue" must be read "child or children," although in other parts of the will it might be necessary to read the word "issue" in a different sense. Williams v. Teale, 6 Hare, 239.

Gift of personal estate to C. during her life, and after her decease among all her children and their issue, such children and their issue to be entitled, as amongst themselves, to the benefit of survivorship, and accruer of surviving shares: —Held, that the children and grandchildren of C. took as tenants in common. Law v. Thorp, 27 L. J., Ch. 649; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 447; 6 W. R. 480.

A testator gave property unto and amongst all and every the children of his sister J. who should be then living, and the issue of such of her children as should be then dead leaving issue, share and share alike, but so as such issue should have no greater share thereof than such as their, his, or her parent would have had if living. The will contained a further proviso, that if any one or more of such issue should be then dead having left issue, then the issue of such issue as should be so dead should have and receive the part or share to which their, his, or her parent would have been entitled if living:—Held, that the issue of grandchildren of J. must be confined to children. Heasman v. Pearse, 41 L. J., Ch. 705; L. R. 7 Ch. 275; 26 L. T. 299; 20 W. R. 271.

Issue joined with Word "Parent" — Construed Children.]—Where in a will, after a bequest to certain persons and the lawful issue of such of them as should be dead, it is provided that such issue are to take only the share which their deceased parents would have been entitled to if living, "issue" will be read "children." Pruen v. Osborne, 11 Sim. 132.

Though the word "issue" will comprehend all descendants, upon construction of this will it was confined to "children." Sibley v. Perry, 7 Ves. 522; 6 R. R. 183.

The testator devised and bequeathed to eight persons by name during their respective lives, and if any of them should die leaving issue his share to go to "such issue if more than one, and if only one, to such only child"; during the life of the survivor he devised and bequeathed to the issue of the eight persons then living, and directed that they should not take equally, but only their parent's shares:—Held, that "issue" meant children, and that the children of any of the eight persons dying took an estate pur autre vie in their parent's share during the life of the survivor of the eight, and that at the death of the survivor of the eight the children of each then living took their parent's share to the exclusion of grandchildren. Bradshaw v. Melling, 19 Beav. 417; 23 L. J., Ch. 603.

The word "issue" includes all remote descendants of the person whose issue is referred to, and the burden of proof lies upon him who contends the contrary; but when the word "parent" is used in reference to his "issue," it is confined to his "children"; the word "issue" in reference to the word "parent" in a substitutional gift:—Held, from the context of the will, not limited to "children." Ross v. Ross, 20 Beav. 645.

Bequest to C. R. for life, with remainder to the children of C. R. who should be living at her decease equally, and the issue then living of such of her children as might have died in her lifetime, the issue to take the share which their parent would have been entitled to had he survived C. R.; and if but one, then to take "a child's share." There was a gift over on the death of C. R., "without leaving a child or issue" generally. One of C. R.'s children predeceased her, leaving no children, but only a grandchild, who survived C. R.:—Held, that he took a child's share with C. R.'s children. Ib.

The word "issue," when used with the word "parent" in a will:—Held, not to extend to grandchildren, but to include only children. Sims's Trusts, In re, 2 W. R. 578.

A testator devised his estate and effects to trustees to pay the proceeds to his wife for life, and "after her decease to distribute and divide the whole, &c., among such of my four nephews and two nieces" (naming them) "as shall be living at the time of her decease; but if any or either of them should then be dead leaving issue, such issue shall be entitled to their father's or mother's share":—Held, that "issue" here meant children; and that the words "should then be dead leaving issue" meant, should before then have died leaving issue. Martin v. Holgate, 35 L. J., Ch. 789; L. R. 1 H. L. 175; 15 W. R. 135. Reversing 34 Beav. 79; 5 N. R. 180; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 5; 11 L. T. 501.

A testator bequeathed his residue equally to his five cousins who should be living at the time of his decease, and to the issue of such of them as should be then dead leaving issue, share and share alike, "such issue respectively, nevertheless, taking between them a parent's share":—Held, that the word "issue" was to be construed "children," and that grandchildren were excluded. Smith v. Horsfall, 25 Beav. 628. And see Merrick's Trusts, In re, 35 L. J., Ch. 418; L. R. 1 Eq. 551; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 245; 14 L. T. 130; 14 W. R. 473.

A testator directed the interest of the residue of his property to be paid to his three surviving daughters and his son-in-law, the husband of his deceased daughter A., and as to the principal, he directed that the same should be vested (subject to certain bequests) for the issue of his late daughter A. and the issue of his other three daughters, so that after the decease of each of his respective daughters who should die and leave any issue, such issue which said daughters should leave should be entitled to receive the share of the interest of the property which his, her, or their mother respectively would be entitled to receive, and that the principal should be disposed of and given to such issue of his daughters respectively, share and share alike, on their respectively attaining the age of twenty-one years, or if female issue, on their attaining such age or marriage, with consent of their guardians thereinafter mentioned; and if any of his said daughters should happen to die without leaving any issue, then that the share of interest which said daughter so dying would be entitled to should go to the issue of his surviving daughters and the issue of his deceased daughter A.; and the share of the principal sum whereon the same arose should go to the child or children of his said daughters; and if any of his daughters should die leaving children, and any of them should die before being entitled to receive his proportion, the surviving child or children the issue of such daughter so dying should receive it; and he appointed guardians to his said grandchildren:—Held, that "issue" meant "children." Black v. Campbell, 14 Ir. Ch. R. 92.

Issue substituted for parents construed children. Lamphier v. Buck, 2 Dr. & Sm. 484; 6 N. R.

196; 34 L. J., Ch. 650; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 837; 12 L. T. 660; 13 W. R. 767.

A testator devised a freehold in trust, to accumulate the rents for periods of not less than ten years successively at a time, at the expiration of which the accumulations to be paid to the testator's sons and daughters, or such of them as should be living at the respective periods of division; and the issue of such of them as shall have died leaving lawful issue, such issue taking their deceased parents' share, to be vested interests in the same respectively, at the age of twenty-one, and so on from time to time until the expiration of twenty-one years after the decease of the survivor of the children. And from and after the expiration of the term of twenty-one years he devised the same premises unto such of his grandchildren, and their issue, as should then stand, in respect to him, in equal degree of consanguinity, and their heirs, as tenants in common:—Held, that "issue" was to be read "children," and the word "and" to be read "or," and that the devise was neither void for remoteness nor uncertainty. Maynard v. Wright, 26 Beav. 285.

The word "issue" construed "children" by force of the gift to the issue of the issue being of their "parents'" share. Pope v. Pope, 14 Beav. 591; 21 L. J., Ch. 276.

Bequest to A. for life, with remainder to B. for life, with remainder to "all and every the issue" of A. living at the death of the survivor of A. and B., but in the event of any of A.'s "issue" dying in the lifetime of A. and B. leaving "issue," such issue to stand in the place of their "parents":—Held, that the first-mentioned "issue" was to be construed "children," and there being one daughter only of A. and two of her children living at the death of the survivor of A. and B.:—Held, that such daughter was alone entitled to the fund. Ib.

Devise to A. for life, and after her decease to the lawful issue then living and the children of such of them as should be then dead, in equal shares, the children of such issue to take their parents' share:—Held, that the word issue was to be construed children, and that the children of A. and the children of A.'s children who predeceased her took for life only. Fairfield v. Bushell, 32 Beav. 158.

Gift "to survivors of a class and the issue of such survivor, such issue to take parents' share only," is a gift to the parents for life, with remainder to their children, and not a substitutionary gift. Parsons v. Coke, 4 Drew. 296.

—— Construed All Descendants.]—A. bequeathed his residuary personal estate to his nephew and niece equally, and after their respective deaths, amongst their issue, if there should be any children to take their parents' share. But in case the nephew or niece died without issue, or leaving such they should die under twenty-one without issue, then he gave his or her share to the other of them, or his or her issue, if he or she be then dead leaving issue as aforesaid. The niece died in 1811, leaving issue; the nephew died in 1862, leaving no issue:—Held, that issue in the first part of the will meant children, but in the latter part issue generally, and that on the death of the nephew all the issue of the niece then living took per capita. Corrie, In re, 32 Beav. 426.

A testator bequeathed legacies to his nephews and nieces, and directed that if any or all of his nephews and nieces should have legitimate issue, that issue respectively should have possession and enjoy the bequest which he made and intended for the parents of such issue respectively; but the sums bequeathed to such of his nephews or nieces respectively as should not leave issue should go to the survivors or survivor of his said nephews and nieces, and to the issue of the same:—Held, that "issue" meant all descendants, and that the survivors of the nephews and nieces, at the time of the death of one of them, took her share absolutely. Kavanagh, In re, 13 Ir. Ch. R. 120.

A testator bequeathed the income of his residuary estate to his wife for her life; and after her decease, the residuary estate was to be equally divided among his brothers and sisters and the brothers and sisters of his wife. And he directed that in case of the death of any of his residuary legatees before his or her share should become payable, leaving issue, such issue should take that share equally:—Held, that the grandchildren of any of the residuary legatees who died before his or her share became payable were entitled equally with the children. Dodsworth v. Addy, 11 L. J. Ch. 382; 6 Jur. 700.

Issue Male.]—In a will, the words "failing the male issue" were, upon the whole context, construed to mean "if there shall be no son then living." Murray v. Addenbrooke, 4 Russ. 407; 8 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 79; 28 R. R. 144.

In the absence of words to control the technical meaning, a gift to "issue male" must be confined to "males claiming through males," and that males claiming through females were excluded, and this whether it be of real or personal estate. Lywood v. Kimber or Warwick, 29 Beav. 38; 30 L. J., Ch. 507; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 507; 9 W. R. 88.

Issue Begotten or to be Begotten.]—Bequest to testator's brother and sisters, A., B. and C. for their several lives, share and share alike; and after the decease of either of them, then, as to the share or shares of one or either of them so dying, the testator bequeathed the same to the issue of the body or bodies of him, her, or them so dying, begotten or to be begotten by their present husbands, share and share alike for ever. Assuming that A., B. and C. took life estates only in the fund, the court was of opinion that the words "issue of the body," &c., comprehended not only children, but grandchildren, and more remote descendants of A., B. and C. Evans v. Jones, 2 Coll. C. C. 516.

Issue construed in Different Senses in the Same Will.]—The word "issue" in a will:—Held, on the context, to have two different meanings, as to two moieties of a devised estate. Carter v. Bentall, 2 Beav. 551; 9 L. J., Ch. 303; 4 Jur. 691.

Though the word "issue" be, in one clause of a will, construed "children," it does not necessarily follow that it will receive the same construction in all the other clauses. Hedges v. Harpur, 9 Beav. 479; 10 Jur. 578.

A testator gave fourteen Phœnix shares on trust, to pay the produce of ten to his daughters for life, and afterwards to his son, and afterwards to the son's "children"; and he gave the other four shares to his son for life, and afterwards to his "children"; and in default of "such issue" of his son, he gave all the shares to his "daughters" and their "issue," share and share alike, such issue not to be entitled to or take more than their deceased parents' share. The son died without issue:—Held, that the daughters took absolute interests, and that their children took only by way of substitution for their parents, and not by way of limitation or succession. Ib.

The word "issue" was used in a will on several occasions as equivalent to "children," and the issue were in some instances spoken of in reference to their "parent":—Held, that "issue" must receive the same construction throughout the will. Rhodes v. Rhodes, 27 Beav. 413.

It is a canon of construction that where a testator has affixed a particular meaning to a word in one part of his will, it shall be construed as having the same meaning in all other parts of it unless it violates the sense. Ib.

A father bequeathed a share of his residuary personalty to the issue of his daughter, and if his daughter should die without leaving "issue or issue of her issue" then over:—Held, that the word "issue" must have the same meaning throughout the will, and that as in the latter clause it was clear that "issue" meant "children," the gift to the issue must be confined to the children. Livesay v. Walpole, 23 W. R. 825.

It does not follow, because the word "issue" in one part of the will means children only, that it should have that meaning also in another part; and where, after a bequest to A. and B. and their issue, in the sense of children, the residue was given to A. and B. equally, and to be divided between them, with benefit of survivorship, upon the death of either under twenty-one; not to be subject to the control of their husbands, but to be held in trust for them and their issue respectively until they attained twenty-one, if unmarried, or if married until a proper settlement could be made upon them and their issue, so that they should receive the dividends exclusively of their husbands, and if they both died under twenty-one, and without issue, then over; both attained twenty-one, and one of them died leaving children and grandchildren:—Held, that both the children and grandchildren were entitled to her share per capita as tenants in common. Head v. Randall, 2 Y. & C. C. C. 231; 7 Jur. 298.

A testator bequeathed leaseholds equally to his four grandchildren, and after their decease, to "such lawful issue" as they, or any or either of them, should leave:—Held, that on the death of each grandchild, his issue of every degree, then living, became equally entitled to his one-fourth, and that issue was not to be read "children," though in a subsequent gift he had used that expression. Waldron v. Boulter, 22 Beav. 284.

A. bequeathed his residuary personal estate to his nephew and niece equally, and after their respective deaths, amongst their issue, if there should be any children to take their parents' share. But in case the nephew or niece died without issue, or leaving such they should die under twenty-one without issue, then he gave his or her share to the other of them, or his or her issue, if he or she be then dead leaving issue as aforesaid. The niece died in 1811, leaving issue; the nephew died in 1862 leaving no issue:—Held, that issue in the first part of the will meant children, but in the latter part issue generally, and that on the death of the nephew all the issue of the niece then living took per capita. Corrie, In re, 32 Beav. 426.

Issue as a Word of Limitation.]—Whatever be the primâ facie meaning of the word "issue" in a will, it is not a technical expression, and will yield to the intention of the testator to be collected from the words of the will; and therefore it requires a less demonstrative context to show the testator's intention in regard to the word "issue," than in regard to the technical expression "heirs of the body." Lees v. Moseley, 1 Y. & C. 589.

It is established, that in a will the word "issue" is as strong as the word "heirs." Bagshaw v. Spencer, 2 Atk. 582.

"Issue" is primâ facie equivalent to "heirs of the body"; but the court leans against so construing it when there are other expressions in the will to control that meaning. If words of limitation be superadded, as a gift to "issue and their heirs," the issue take as purchasers in fee simple, and a gift over on a general failure of issue operates nothing. Kavanagh v. Morland, 1 Kay, 16; 2 Eq. R. 771; 23 L. J., Ch. 41; 18 Jur. 165; 2 W. R. 8. And see post, cols. 1289 et seq.

Issue, Class of, when ascertained.]—See post, col. 917.

d. Descendants.

Construed All Descendants.]—Bequest to such of the children of J. as might be living at testatrix's death, and the descendants of such of them as might be dead, per stirpes, in equal shares:—Held, not J.'s grandchildren only, but his children's descendants in every degree entitled to shares. Marshall v. Scales, 3 W. R. 502.

A testator bequeathed "to each of the children, grandchildren, or other direct descendants of" A., who might be living at the testator's death, "100*l.* apiece." At the death of the testator there were living a child, grandchildren, great-grandchildren, and great-great-grandchildren of A.:—Held, that they were all entitled to receive 100*l.* apiece. Cambridge v. Rous, 25 Beav. 409.

A husband, who died in June, 1837, gave to trustees the whole of his property in trust for the payment of his debts, with full power to sell all or any part of his estates or to demise the same; and directed them out of the moneys produced or out of the rents to pay the testamentary expenses and debts, and then gave certain legacies, and directed that after the death of his wife and after the payment of all debts and legacies the whole residue of all his remaining property should be divided into twelve portions, and be given to the children of his late aunts "equally among them, the descendants, if any, of those who might have died being entitled to the benefit which their deceased parent would have received had he or she been then alive . . . and should there be no children or lawful descendants of any of his aunts remaining at the time the bequests should become payable, then the portions" were to fall into the residuary fund. The testator declared that it should not be incumbent on his executors to pay the legacies sooner than two years after his death; nor to divide the residue amongst his relatives until two years after the death of his wife, and made provision for payment of his wife's jointure. The wife died in 1876:—Held, that the substitutionary gift to "descendants" of children of an aunt was not confined to children of those children. Ralph v. Carrick, 48 L. J., Ch. 801; 11 Ch. D. 873; 40 L. T. 505—C. A. Reversing 25 W. R. 530.

The word "descendants" is less flexible than "issue," and requires a stronger context to confine it to children:—Held, that if the word used in the present case had been "issue" instead of "descendants," the gift over would have prevented the court from confining the word to children. Ib.

Legacy to the descendants of A. and B. equally: all descendants (children and grandchildren) take per capita. Butler v. Stratton, 3 Bro. C. C. 167.

Under a devise to the descendants of F. T., in a certain district, grandchildren and great-grandchildren take per capita. Crosley v. Clare, 3 Swanst. 320, n. S. C., nom. Crossly v. Clare, Ambl. 397.

Construed Children.]—Bequest to "descendants" of A., "in such proportions as each may be entitled" under the Statute of Distributions: Held, that a child of A. took in exclusion of grandchildren. Smith v. Pepper, 27 Beav. 86.

Upon a gift over, after an estate for life of residue real and personal, to "daughters of B., and their descendants, per stirpes, to hold to them, their heirs and assigns, for ever," paying an annuity to L. for her life; B. left three daughters, one of whom survived the testator, and died in the lifetime of the tenant for life without ever having had issue:—Held, that the residuary estate belonged to the two surviving daughters. The words per stirpes are to be taken in a distributive sense, and "descendants per stirpes" to be considered as words of purchase, giving an absolute estate to the children, who took, not concurrently with their parents, but by substitution. Dick v. Lacy, 8 Beav. 214; 14 L. J., Ch. 150; 9 Jur. 21.

A. bequeathed all the residue of his property, after the death of his widow, to the brothers and sisters of her and himself, and to their descendants, in such proportions as his wife should by her will appoint. The court declared that the persons entitled to take the property were those brothers and sisters of the testator and his wife who were living at the death of the tenant for life, and the children of such of them as were dead were entitled to take by way of substitution. Tucker v. Billing, 2 Jur. (N.S.) 483.

Collaterals included.]—In a will descendants mean persons upon whom an estate will descend; and failing lineals, collaterals are entitled. Best v. Stonehewer, 34 Beav. 66; 34 L. J., Ch. 26; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 1140; 11 L. T. 468; 13 W. R. 126.

A testator gave the proceeds of the sale of his estates, after the determination of certain life estates, "to such person or persons as shall at that time be the nearest in blood to me, as descendants from my great-grandfather, S., and whose kindred with me originates from him." At the date of the will the only lineal descendants of S. were the testator and his sister, a lady of about sixty years of age:—Held, that the objects of the gift were such persons as were nearest in blood to the testator out of a class composed both of the descendants of S. and the persons whose kindred with the testator originated from their being related to him. S. C. on appeal, 5 N. R. 500; 2 De G. J. & S. 537; 34 L. J., Ch. 349; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 315; 12 L. T. 195; 13 W. R. 566—C. A.

Male Descendants.]—A testator having made a provision for the necessitous "male children" of his nephews, and having shown his intention of making it a perpetual charity:—Held, that "male children" meant "male descendants." Held, also, that under the expression "male descendants," descendants claiming through the male line were alone entitled, and that those males who claimed through a female were excluded. Bernal v. Bernal, 3 Myl. & Cr. 559; C. P. Coop. 55; 7 L. J., Ch. 115; 2 Jur. 273. And see S. C., 3 Myl. & Cr. 559, n.

Direct Descendants bearing Name.]—A testatrix bequeathed stock to trustees in trust for her brother R. G. for life, and after his decease in trust for his son J. R.-G., for life, and after the decease of both of them, upon trust for any immediate or direct descendants of her said brother or nephew who should bear the name of R.-G., for life, and from and after his or her decease, or in case of failure of any such immediate or direct descendants of her said brother or nephew who should bear that name, upon trust for certain charities, with a condition of forfeiture on abandoning the name of R.-G. Both R.-G. and his son J. R.-G. survived the testatrix, and J. R.-G. survived R.-G., but died without ever having had any issue. At the death of J. R.-G. the only descendant of R.-G. who bore the name of R.-G., was a descendant in the female line, C. G. R.-G., and he had assumed the name of R.-G. by royal licence after the death of R.-G.:—Held, that the gift to descendants was not confined to those whose family name or birth name was R.-G., but included descendants who assumed that name. That the gift to descendants was void for remoteness, and that the gift, as well to the charities as to the descendant who had assumed the name of R.-G., failed. Roberts, In re, Repington v. Roberts, 19 Ch. D. 520; 45 L. T. 450. Affirming on this point 50 L. J., Ch. 265.

Held, that the limitation to descendants was a gift for life to descendants living at the determination of the life interests and bearing the name of R.-G. as joint tenants. Ib.

Eldest Male Descendants.]—The designation of "eldest male lineal descendant":—Held, to be inapplicable to a male person claiming in part through a female. Oddie v. Woodford, 3 Myl. & Cr. 584; 7 L. J., Ch. 117.

A testator who had three sons, A., B. and C., directed an accumulation of his property for a certain period, at the end of which the trustees were to divide it into three lots, one of which was to be conveyed to "the eldest male lineal descendant then living of A." When the time for making the allotment arrived, there were two persons who claimed to be entitled to the first lot, a grandson of A.'s eldest son, and a son of A.'s youngest son; the former being "eldest" in line, the latter "eldest" in years among the male descendants of A.:—Held, that the will was not void for uncertainty. Thellusson v. Rendlesham, 7 H. L. Cas. 429; 28 L. J., Ch. 948; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1031; 7 W. R. 563.

Held, also, that on the true construction of the words used by the testator, the grandson of A.'s eldest son was entitled to the first lot. Ib.

Under a devise, after the death of the survivor of several persons, to "the eldest male lineal descendant of A." then living, the court considered itself so fettered by the dicta in the house of lords, and of Lord Eldon and the judges in Oddie v. Woodford (3 Myl. & Cr. 584) as to suggest a decree without argument, which excluded male descendants claiming through females, and gave preference to a grandson of A., though younger in age, to a younger son of A., who was in age the eldest male lineal descendant of A. The decree was made accordingly. The court held the question of uncertainty and intestacy under the will of Mr. Thellusson to be already determined. *S. e. Family.

Construed Head of Family.]—Where devise is to the stock or family, the court confines it to the head of the family. Crossly v. Clare, Ambl. 397. See S. C., nom. Crosley v. Clare, 3 Swanst. 322, n.

Construed Children.]—The primary meaning of the word "family" in a will is "children." Pigg v. Clarke, 45 L. J., Ch. 849; 3 Ch. D. 672; 24 W. R. 1014.

A husband directed the interest arising from all his real and personal property to be paid to his wife during her life, and after her decease to be equally divided amongst all his family that should be then living when they should attain the age of twenty-one years. At the date of his will he had seven children living, some over and others under twenty-one, and some married, with children:—Held, that under the word "family" children alone could take. Ib.

Under a disposition by will to A.'s and B.'s families, the children are entitled, exclusive of their parents, and per capita. Barnes v. Patch, 8 Ves. 604; 7 R. R. 127.

Testator gave all his property, both real and personal, to his wife for life, "and after the death of my wife my nephew is to be considered as heir to all my property; but I direct that whatever portion of my property may hereafter be possessed by him shall be secured by my executors for the benefit of his family":—Held, taking the whole of the will together, that the testator by the word "family" meant the children but not the wife of his nephew, and that the property ought to be settled on the nephew for life, and on his children after his death. White v. Briggs, 15 Sim. 17; 9 Jur. 678.

A testatrix in her will used the following expression: "Observing that F. Beales and his family are my residuary legatees for all but cash, or moneys so called." F. Beales had nine children living at the date of the will and at the testatrix's death, and the testatrix died possessed of a promissory note payable to herself or order, some long annuities, Columbian bonds and money, in her house and at her bankers:—Held, that by "Francis Beales and his family" the testatrix meant Francis Beales and his children, and that they took the note, annuities and bonds, as joint tenants, those articles being neither cash, nor moneys so called. Beales v. Crisford, 13 Sim. 592; 13 L. J., Ch. 26; 7 Jur. 1076.

A testatrix bequeathed her house, furniture, &c., to A. for life, and directed that the same should afterwards remain in the family of A. A. died, leaving five children:—Held, that the children of A. took as tenants in common. Owen v. Penny, 14 Jur. 359.

Testator bequeathed several legacies, and among others to S. W. 14,000*l.*, "and to the latter gentleman's family, 6,000*l.*" S. W. had six children, all living at the date of the testamentary instrument and at the death of the testator, and no other issue:—Held, that such six children were, as joint tenants, exclusively entitled to the legacy of 6,000*l.* Wood v. Wood, 3 Hare, 65.

The primary meaning of the word "family" is "children," and there must be some circumstance, either in the will or in the situation of the parties, to prevent that construction. Terry, In re, 19 Beav. 510.

Legacies were given to A. and B., and in case they should predecease the testatrix, to their respective "families." A. having died before the testatrix:—Held, that her children alone took under the word "family." Ib.

Testator bequeathed the residue of his personal estate to trustees, in trust for his wife during her widowhood, and, after her death or second marriage, in trust to be divided, share and share alike, among his five sisters and their respective families, if any:—Held, that each sister and her children living at the testator's death were entitled, in remainder expectant on the death or second marriage of the widow, to one-fifth of the residue as joint tenants. Parkinson's Trust, In re, 1 Sim. (N.S.) 242; 20 L. J., Ch. 224; 15 Jur. 165.

A. devised all the estates before specified to his sister's "family," and proceeded thus: "I give to D. (who was the sister's son) my Dalton estate, and the rest to be sold and divided equally":—Held, that the children of the sister, including D., took the produce of the sale equally. Reay v. Rawlinson, 29 Beav. 88; 30 L. J., Ch. 330; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 118; 9 W. R. 134.

The word "family" construed as children, and not descendants of a testator's children. Burt v. Hellyar, 41 L. J., Ch. 430; L. R. 14 Eq. 160; 26 L. T. 833.

A devise of freeholds to C. and his heirs, and "in case he should die leaving no issue, then equally between my surviving children or their families," is a gift (on the death of C. without issue) to the children of the testator, and the children of such of them as were dead, as to such children in joint tenancy. Ib.

A testator bequeathed to his executors a sum of 450*l.*, which he directed should be held by them in trust for his brother James's family, and should be by his said executors expended for the benefit of such family, in such a manner as to them should seem most expedient. The executors having paid the 450*l.* into court:—Held, that the word "family" in the above bequest meant "children," and that the parents were not entitled to any share in the fund. Mulqueen's Trust, In re, 7 L. R. Ir. 127.

A testamentary gift by a married man to his "family" should be read as a gift to his "children" to the exclusion of his wife. Hutchinson, In re, 8 Ch. D. 540; 39 L. T. 86; 26 W. R. 904.

A testator by his will appointed two trustees, and directed that all moneys due to him should be collected and placed to his trustees' account at a certain bank, in trust for his "family":—Held, that there was nothing in the context of the will to deprive the word "family" of its primary meaning, i.e. children of the testator; and that, therefore, such children alone were entitled to share in the money in the bank. Muffett, In re, Jones v. Mason, 55 L. T. 671.

A testator bequeathed his property to his wife for life, and after her death "unto his brothers and sisters in equal shares and proportions, or unto the families of such of them as shall be then dead." All his brothers and sisters died in the lifetime of the testator's widow, leaving sons and daughters and also grandchildren:—Held, (1) that "families" did not include grandchildren; (2) that the sons and daughters of the testator's brothers and sisters took per stirpes; (3) that the words "in equal shares" applied only to the gift to the testator's brothers and sisters, and could not be extended to the substitutionary gifts, and that therefore the children of each brother and sister took as joint tenants inter se. Battersby's Trusts, In re, [1896] 1 Ir. R. 600.

See also Elgood v. Cole, 21 L. T. 880; 17 W. R. 953.

Construed All Descendants.]—Testator, by his will, gave personal property to his wife absolutely, for her own use and benefit. By a codicil, which was in the form of a letter to his wife, he said, "It is my wish that you should enjoy everything in my power to give, using your judgment as to where to dispose of it amongst your children when you can no longer enjoy it yourself; but I should be unhappy if I thought it possible that any one not of your family should be the better for what, I feel confident, you will so well direct the disposal of":—Held, that the word "family" was not confined to children, but included descendants in every degree; and that the wife was entitled to the property absolutely, and not merely for her life, with a power in the nature of a trust for her children. Williams v. Williams, 1 Sim. (N.S.) 358; 20 L. J., Ch. 280; 15 Jur. 715.

Construed Next of Kin.]—Where a donor recommends or directs that the donee, at her death, shall give personal property to such of his family, or such of his relations, as he shall think fit, the donee has a power to select the objects of her bounty amongst his relations or family, though not within the degree of next of kin; but if the donee does not exercise the power, the word "relations" or the word "family," will be construed "next of kin," unless the special expressions of the donee have a different import. Grant v. Lynam, 4 Russ. 292; 6 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 129; 28 R. R. 97.

A testator gave personalty to trustees for his wife for life, "and at her demise let the principal return to the good of my family, whoever survives the longest":—Held, a remainder vesting in the next of kin of the testator at the time of his decease. Maxton, In re, 4 Jur. (N.S.) 407.

Construed Blood Relations.]—Devise in fee to a brother of the testatrix, "on the condition that he never sells it out of the family":—Held, that "the family" meant the blood relations of the devisee, and that the condition was valid in law as a partial restraint on alienation. Macleay, In re, 44 L. J., Ch. 441; L. R. 20 Eq. 186; 32 L. T. 682; 23 W. R. 718.

"Nearest Family"—Construed Heir.]—A. devised to B. in tail, and for want of issue he empowered her to dispose of the estate to such persons as she thought fit by her will, "confiding" in her not to alienate the estate from his "nearest family." B. appointed to her husband for life, with remainders over:—Held, that B. had a power of appointing to the nearest family only, that nearest family must be construed "heir," and that the appointment to the husband was void. Griffith v. Evans, 5 Beav. 241; 11 L. J., Ch. 219.

Wife included.]—The word "family" admits of a variety of applications, and the construction to be put upon it, in a particular will, must depend upon the intention to be collected from the whole context of the will. Where a testator directed his business to be carried on by his wife and son for the mutual benefit of the family, and devised his property in trust, that, at his wife's decease, the whole of it, as well freehold as personal, should be equally divided among his children, it was held that the testator, in the words, "my family," intended to comprise his wife, and, as to the testator's property devised after his wife's decease, to his children, it was held upon the whole will, and what appeared to be the evident intention of the testator, that the wife took a life interest by implication as well in the real as in the personal estate. Blackwell v. Bull, 1 Keen, 176; 5 L. J., Ch. 251.

Father included.]—A. B., in September, 1842, devised and bequeathed, in trust for his wife, all his real and personal estate, except the real and personal estate which he might derive from his aunt, M. A. T., or any of her family. At the time of making his will, A. B. was entitled in remainder, under his maternal grandfather's will, to the C. estate, subject to the life estate of his aunt, M. A. T., and failure of her issue. In August, 1843, M. A. T. died without issue, and thereupon A. B. became absolutely entitled in possession to the C. estate. He died in November, 1843. Upon petition presented by his widow for a declaration that she was entitled to a life interest in the C. estate:—Held, that A. B. had included the C. estate in the exception under the words, "which he might derive from M. A. T. or any of her family":—Held, also, that the father of M. A. T. was a member of her family. James v. Wynford (Lord), 3 Sm. & G. 350; 23 L. J., Ch. 767; 18 Jur. 868; 2 W. R. 607.

Illegitimate Child of Son included.]—A testator gave his estate to his widow "to be at her disposal in any way she may think best, for the benefit of herself and family." The widow by her will gave a part of the estate to an illegitimate son of one of the testator's sons:—Held, that the gift was valid. Lambe v. Eames, 40 L. J., Ch. 447; L. R. 6 Ch. 597; 25 L. T. 175; 19 W. R. 659—C. A.

Family as Word of Limitation—Estate Tail in Realty.]—A testator directed his freehold estate at A. to be equally divided between his two sons, who were to enjoy the interest thereof, and then go to their respective families according to seniority:—Held, that the two sons took as tenants in common in tail general, in equal undivided shares. Lucas v. Goldsmid, 29 Beav. 657; 30 L. J., Ch. 935; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 719; 4 L. T. 632; 9 W. R. 759.

Gift of Personalty to A. and Family—A. takes Absolute Interest.]—A testator gave the residue of his estate to be equally divided among his two daughters, their husbands, and families :—Held, that the daughters took absolutely as tenants in common, the words "husbands and families" being rejected. Robinson v. Waddelow, 8 Sim. 134 ; 5 L. J., Ch. 350.

Gift to A. and B. for the good of their families :—Held, that A. and B. took absolutely as tenants in common. Alexander v. Alexander, 6 De G. M. & G. 593 ; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 28 ; 5 W. R. 28—C. A.

Gift to Family of a Particular Name.]—A bequest to the family of G. held not to be void for uncertainty ; but construed to be a gift to the children of G. (an uncle of the testator, known to and on terms of intimacy with him), as joint tenants, and not to include the parents or their grandchildren. Gregory v. Smith, 9 Hare, 708.

A. bequeathed a sum of 400*l.* to the family of G., formerly of S. :—Held, that the gift was not void for uncertainty, and that under the circumstances, the family of G., formerly of S., meant the family of Thomas G., formerly of S., who survived the testatrix. Gregory v. Smith (supra), followed. Charitable Donations Commissioners v. Deey, 27 L. R., Ir. 289.

f. Relations.

Construed Next of Kin.]—Where the word "relations" is used, the court has no other rule to go by but the Statute of Distributions. Crossly v. Clare, Ambl. 397. See S. C., nom. Crosley v. Clare, 32 Swan. 322, n.

A legacy of personal estate to testator's wife for life, and after her decease to the testator's relations who shall be then alive, confined to relations within the Statute of Distributions. Green v. Howard, 1 Bro. C. C. 31.

Gift of a residue to be divided among persons related to the testator ; confined to relations within the Statute of Distributions. Rayner v. Mowbray, 3 Bro. C. C. 234.

A man devises his personal estate to the use of his relations without specifying any in particular ; it shall be distributed according to the Statute of Distributions. Roach v. Hammond, Pre. Ch. 401 ; 1 P. Wms. 327.

Under a gift to "relations" next of kin are generally entitled. Craklow v. Norie, 7 L. J., Ch. 278.

The word "relations" construed by reference to the Statute of Distributions. Brandon v. Brandon, 3 Swan. 319 ; 2 Wils. Ch. 14.

Testator expressing his will and desire that one-third of the principal of his estate and effects be left entirely to the disposal of his wife among such of her relations as she may think proper, after the death of his sisters : a trust for her next of kin at the time of her death, having made no disposition. Birch v. Wade, 3 V. & B. 198 ; 13 R. R. 181.

Legacy for a mourning ring to each of the testator's relations, by blood or marriage, confined to the Statute of Distributions, and those who have married persons entitled under it. Devisme v. Mellish, 5 Ves. 529.

A bequest of a fund to be at the disposal of the testator's widow by her will, therewith to apply a part to the foundation of a charity school, or such other charitable endowment for the benefit of the poor of a parish as she may prefer, and under such restrictions as she may prescribe, and the remainder to be at her disposal among the testator's relatives as she may direct : —Held, that although the widow might have exercised her power in such a manner as to include more distant relatives, still, as she had died without so exercising it, none could take as "relatives" but such as were capable of taking within the Statute of Distributions. Salusbury v. Denton, 3 K & J. 529 ; 26 L. J., Ch. 851 ; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 740 ; 5 W. R. 865.

Bequest to "near relations" means those within the Statute of Distributions. Whithorne v. Harris, 2 Ves. 527.

Bequest to "relations," confined to next of kin according to Statute of Distributions. Crawys v. Coleman, 9 Ves. 323 ; 7 R. R. 210.

Though upon bequests to "relations," with a power of selection, the party may go beyond those included in Statute of Distributions ; the contrary is adhered to whenever the execution devolves on the court. Id. 324.

Bequest to testator's relations, with power of selection is, if that power is not exercised, a trust for next of kin at death of party who had the power. Id. 325.

Testator directed the residue of his estate to be parted to "his next relations as sisters, nephews, and nieces." Testator left his three sisters, A., B. and C., and D., the only child of a deceased sister, and L., the only child of a deceased brother, his next of kin ; but at the time of his death his sister A. had two children living. The residue must go according to the Statute of Distributions. Stamp v. Cooke, 1 Cox, 234.

The words "relations or near relations," from their indefinite extent, confined to the next of kin under the Statute of Distributions. Smith v. Campbell, 19 Ves. 403 ; 13 R. R. 224.

Where a donor recommends or directs that the donee, at her death, shall give personal property to such of his family, or such of his relations, as he shall think fit ; the donee has a power to select the objects of her bounty amongst his relations or family, though not within the degree of next of kin ; but if the donee does not exercise the power, the word "relations," or the word "family," will be construed "next of kin," unless the special expressions of the donee have a different import. Grant v. Lynam, 4 Russ. 292 ; 6 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 129 ; 28 R. R. 97.

Devise to three sisters for life, and subject thereto the survivor to divide and devise "to such of my nieces and other relations as shall be unprovided for at the decease of such survivor, in such proportions as she, in the goodness of her heart, shall think fit" ; appointment by survivor to all her nieces living at her decease equally :—Held, that the nieces were entitled either as appointees or as the next of kin of the first testatrix. Paelow v. Laurie, 2 Jur. 204.

A testator having given an annuity to one of his next of kin, and expressed a reason for giving nothing to the others, gave the residue of his property to his wife, recommending to her, and not doubting that she would, consider his near relations as he would have done if he had survived her :—Held, that there was no trust for the next of kin, but that the wife took the residue absolutely. Sale v. Moore, 1 Sim. 534 ; 27 R. R. 239.

Testator gave all the residue of his real and personal estate unto and equally between and amongst all his relations who might claim and prove their relationship to him by lineal descent.

He had no wife or issue at the time of making his will nor afterwards. He died leaving several first cousins his next of kin :—Held, that the first cousins were entitled to the residuary estate, both real and personal. Craik v. Lamb, 1 Coll. C. C. 489 ; 14 L. J., Ch. 84 ; 9 Jur. 6.

A father, after bequeathing a legacy to his daughter, left an annuity to his mother and sister for their lives, and directed that upon their deaths the residue of his property should be divided amongst his relations as his executors, his brothers, should think fit and most worthy to receive it. At the death of the testator, and at the deaths of his mother and sister, his daughter was his sole next of kin :—Held, that she was entitled to the residue. Lawlor v. Henderson, Ir. R. 10 Eq. 150.

Relations construed next of kin. Lees v. Massey, 3 De G. F. & J. 113 ; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 534 ; 4 L. T. 36 ; 9 W. R. 425.

Construed Blood Relations.]—An uncle, after giving legacies to various persons, describing their relationship, including a person described as his niece, but in reality illegitimate, and persons connected by affinity, directed that if the whole of his property made more than the whole amounts mentioned in his will, it should be divided "amongst my relations in proportion to their separate amounts" :—Held, that only such of the legatees as were blood relations were entitled under the residuary gift. Hibbert v. Hibbert, 42 L. J., Ch. 383 ; L. R. 15 Eq. 372 ; 28 L. T. 397 ; 21 W. R. 506.

Brother included.]—A. devised an estate to T. and his heirs, upon trust that he should convey it to such of the relations of the testator as he should think best and most reputable for his family. A. died without issue, and the heir-at-law, testator's brother, preferred a bill against defendant, praying to have the estate conveyed to him. Evidence was admitted of testator's dislike to plaintiff ; but if the trustee would give him the estate, plaintiff was not disabled to take it. Clarke v. Turner, 2 Free. C. C. 198.

Wife's Relations — Illegitimate Relations included.]—A testator by his will gave bequests to certain persons by name, describing some of them as his "cousins" and his "nieces," during their lives, and after their deaths for their children ; and directed his residuary estate "to be equally divided amongst such of my relatives hereinbefore named as by virtue of the trusts and provisions hereinbefore contained shall become entitled to a vested transmissible interest in any part of my property." Some of the persons described as "cousins" were the children of an illegitimate brother and sister of the testator's mother, and the persons described as his "nieces" were in reality his wife's nieces :—Held, that the words "relatives hereinbefore named" in the residuary clause included (1) relatives by affinity ; (2) illegitimate relatives ; (3) persons described as children of legatees specially named, though not themselves named by their christian and surnames. Seale-Hayne v. Jodrell, 61 L. J., Ch. 70 ; [1891] A. C. 304 ; 65 L. T. 57—H. L. (E.) Affirming 38 W. R. 721.

A gift of residue to "my wife's relations as she may direct" confers upon the wife a non-exclusive or distributive power, notwithstanding the provisions of the Powers Law Amendment Act, 1874. Deakin, In re, Starkey v. Eyres, 63 L. J., Ch. 779 ; [1894] 3 Ch. 565 ; 8 R. 702 ; 71 L. T. 838 ; 43 W. R. 70.

The wife being to the testator's knowledge illegitimate, the persons among whom the property was divisible were the persons being legitimate who would have been her statutory next of kin at her death if she had been legitimate. Standley's Estate, In re (L. R. 5 Eq. 303), not followed. Ib.

Illegitimate Relations excluded.]—A testator gave a legacy to his relatives in such shares as his wife should appoint. She appointed part to children of the testator's illegitimate brother : —Held, that relatives are legitimate relatives, where there is nothing on the face of the will itself to lead to a different conclusion. Saville, In re, 14 W. R. 603.

Wife and her Relations excluded.]—J., seised in fee of land, devised the same to his wife for life, and after her decease to R. and the heirs of his body, and for want of such issue to be sold, and divided among his relations according to the Statute of Distributions :—Held, that the wife being no relation, the next of kin shall take the whole in exclusion of her both by the words of the will, and the intent of the testator. So where A. gave the residue of his personal estate to trustees to permit his wife to receive the produce for her life, and after her decease to such of his relations as would have been entitled under the Statute of Distributions in case he had died intestate, the wife is not to be considered as a relation. Worseley v. Johnson, 3 Atk. 758.

Relation, in dictionaries, signifies consanguineus and affinis, but a wife is no relation either by blood or affinity ; and of a wife, Calvin, in his Lexicon, says non affinis est, sed causa affinitatis ; affinis est ab eodem stipite. The Statute of Distributions means kindred, by blood only ; but the statute 21 Hen. 8, c. 5, s. 3, distinguishes more clearly between a wife and the next of kin than the Statute of Distributions ; the word "my" relations means exactly the same as "my own" relations. Id. 761.

Where in a will a wife not included in the word relations according to the Statute of Distributions. Davies v. Baily, 1 Ves. Sen. 84.

Bequest to relations does not include those by marriage. Adair v. Maitland, 7 Bro. P. C. 587 ; 3 Ves. 231.

"Nearest Relations."—Bequest by a testator in India "to my nearest surviving relations in my native country, Ireland," confined to brothers and sisters living in Ireland or elsewhere ; the addition of a mistaken description, viz., of the place of residence, not vitiating a gift to persons otherwise sufficiently described. Nephews and nieces included. Smith v. Campbell, 19 Ves. 400 ; 13 R. R. 224.

"Such of my nearest relations as my executors shall think the greatest objects of charity" :—Held, to extend only to such as would take under the Statute of Distributions. Edge v. Salisbury, Ambl. 70 ; 1 Ves. Sen. 230.

Devise to his nearest poor relations ; parol evidence admitted to show that testator knew he had such in S., but no farther ; not to prove from declarations or instructions whom he meant by written words of the will. Goodinge v. Goodinge, 1 Ves. Sen. 231.

Bequest to such of nearest relations as A.

should think poor and objects of charity confined to those within the Statute of Distributions under A.'s advice. Ib.

Bequest to "near relations" means those within the Statute of Distributions. Whithorne v. Harris, 2 Ves. Sen. 527.

Devise of real and personal estate in trust for the nearest relation "of the Pyots"; the latter held to be "nomen collectivum," and descriptive of that particular stock, and that this mixed fund should not go to the heir-at-law of that name. A change of the name of Pyot by marriage held not to exclude. Pyot v. Pyot, 1 Ves. Sen. 335.

Poor Relations.]—Who take under words "poor relations." Anon., 2 Eq. Abr. 191.

Bequest to testator's wife for life, and after her death to his and her poorest relations:—Held, only those who were nearest of kin were entitled. Isaac v. Defriez, Ambl. 595.

Bequest "to the most necessitous of my relations" shall go according to the Statute of Distributions. Widmore v. Woodroffe, Ambl. 636; 1 Bro. C. C. 13, n.

Bequest to testator's mother's "poor relations," construed relations who are poor and objects of charity. Brunsden v. Woolredge, Ambl. 507; S. C., nom. Brunsden v. Woolridge, Dick. 380.

Bequest to such of nearest relations as A. should think poor and objects of charity, confined to those within the Statute of Distributions under A.'s advice. Goodinge v. Goodinge, 1 Ves. Sen. 231.

Legacy to executor to be distributed amongst the poor relations of testator. A relation who was poor at the time of the testator's death, but became rich before distribution, not entitled. Poor relation dying before distribution, his claim not transmissible to his personal representative. Where a person has a power of distribution among poor relations, he may distribute amongst all poor relations, however remote; but where the court is called on to distribute, in failure of the person so empowered, it will confine itself to relations within the Statute of Distributions. Mahon v. Savage, 1 Sch. & Lef. 111.

The testator having given a sum to his widow, to be distributed amongst such of his "relations" as she should deem requiring and most deserving relief:—Held, not to include in that case the widows of the testator's relations, and that a relative showing no qualifications, and to whom no part had been appropriated, was not entitled to question the distribution by the testator's widow. Harvey v. Harvey, 5 Beav. 134. And see 4 Id. 215.

J. S. gave "all his real and personal estate" to trustees on certain trusts, remainder "to such of his relations on his mother's side who were most deserving, and in such manner as they should think fit," and for such charitable uses and purposes as they should also think most proper and convenient:—Held, per Master of the Rolls, that the limitation over the personal estate was good, and his honour (deciding by the known rule of equity) directed that one half of the said estates should go to the testator's relations on his mother's side, and the other half to charitable uses; his honour could not judge of the merits of the testator's relations, nor prefer the one to the other, but he should exclude those beyond the third degree:—Held, also, that the representatives of those relations who died in testator's lifetime could have no claim. Doyley v. Att.-Gen., 4 Vin. Abr. 485 (C.) Pl. 16.

Distribution—In what Shares.]—A devise to relations is to be confined to such as would take by the Statute of Distributions, but their shares may not be the same as under that statute. Thomas v. Hole, Forrest. 251; Dick. 50.

Testator directed that a sum of stock, standing in his name, should be divided between and amongst the relations of his late wife, in such manner, shares, and proportions as would have been the case in case she had died possessed of it a spinster and intestate. The wife had sixteen next of kin living at her death. Five of them died before the testator:—Held, that the eleven survivors took only a sixteenth each, and that the other five shares lapsed into the residue, and ought to bear the costs of the petitioners and respondents. Ham's Will, In re, 2 Sim. (N.S.) 106; 21 L. J., Ch. 217; 15 Jur. 1121.

A gift of residue to be distributed "to my relatives, share and share alike, as the law directs," means a distribution under the Statute of Distributions, per stirpes and not per capita. Fielden v. Ashworth, L. R. 20 Eq. 410; 33 L. T. 197.

Relations, Class of, when Ascertained.]—See post, col. 919.

g. Cousins.

Who are included.]—Testator by his will gave legacies to several persons by name, describing each of them as his cousin. By a codicil he gave his residuary estate to all such of his cousins both on his father's and mother's side as should be living at his decease, and to all the children of such of his said cousins as might theretofore have died or might die in his lifetime. The testator left several first cousins and children of first and second cousins, and also one first cousin once removed, but all the persons named in the will were first cousins:—Held, that they alone, and the children of such of them as had died in testator's lifetime, were entitled to the residue under the codicil. Caldecott v. Harrison, 9 Sim. 457; 9 L. J., Ch. 331; 4 Jur. 885.

Bequest to "all my cousins who shall be living at my decease, in equal shares":—Held (reversing 1 Jur. (N.S.) 789; 25 L. J., Ch. 116; 3 Eq. Rep. 841; 3 W. R. 592), that in the absence of anything to explain the meaning of the testator, "cousins" must be construed to mean first cousins only. Stoddart v. Nelson, Stanger v. Nelson, 6 De G. M. & G. 68; 25 L. J., Ch. 116; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 27; 4 W. R. 109.

Under a bequest "to my cousins (descendants from my father's and mother's brothers and sisters) living at my death, and such of the issue living at my death of any cousins of mine (descendants as aforesaid) who shall have died in my lifetime leaving issue living at my death," "cousins" construed "first cousins," although the testator, by a codicil, provided by name for all his first cousins, and excluded them from all benefit under the will. Stevenson v. Abingdon, 8 Jur. (N.S.) 811; 6 L. T. 345; 10 W. R. 591.

A testator made his will in the following terms: "Knowing that without a will all relatives of equal degree would take equal shares, I wish on account of the unequal portions thus going to them to make additional gifts in favour of those hereinafter mentioned; that is to say, 3,000*l.* stock to each of those my cousins (naming six persons, who were all first cousins) in addition to and not as substitution for the shares they would otherwise equally take with my cousins (naming persons, one of whom was a first cousin, and the others first cousins once removed), in New Brunswick or elsewhere. The residue of my property I give and bequeath unto all my cousins, in all respects" :—Held, that first cousins only were entitled to take under the residuary bequest. Burbey v. Burbey, 9 Jur. (N.S.) 86 ; 6 L. T. 573.

A testatrix gave a share of her residue to her "cousin, Harriet Cloak." She had no cousin of that name, but she had a cousin, T. Cloak, whose wife's name was Harriet :—Held (Bowen, L.J., dissenting), that "cousin" might be understood in a popular sense as the wife of a cousin ; and that Harriet, the wife of T. Cloak, was entitled to the share of the residue. Taylor, In re, Cloak v. Hammond, 56 L. J., Ch. 171 ; 34 Ch. D. 255 ; 56 L. T. 648 ; 35 W. R. 186—C. A.

"First Cousins."]—A bequest to the testator's "first cousins or cousins-german" does not include the descendants of first cousins. Sanderson v. Bayley, 4 Myl. & Cr. 56 ; 8 L. J., Ch. 18 ; 2 Jur. 958.

"First and Second Cousins."]—Under a bequest of a residuary fund to the testator's first and second cousins, and the children of his kinsman, G. C., which children were first cousins of the testator, twice removed, all persons related to the testator in the degree of second cousins are entitled. Charge v. Goodyer, 3 Russ. 140 ; 27 R. R. 42.

Legacies to first and second cousins includes first cousins once removed, and a grand-niece being more distant. Mayott v. Mayott, 2 Bro. C. C. 125.

"Second Cousins."]—Testator bequeathed a fund in trust for his second cousins :—Held, that a first cousin once removed was not entitled to a share. Bridgnorth Corporation v. Collins, 15 Sim. 541.

Testatrix bequeathed her residue to her second cousins of the name of S., and the issue of such of them as were dead (per stirpes). She had no second cousins, but had had three first cousins once removed of the name of S., two of whom were living at her death, and the other had died leaving children :—Held, that these two, together with the children of the one who was dead, were entitled, to the exclusion of first cousins twice removed, i.e. grandchildren of a first cousin, though standing in the same degree of relationship as second cousins. Slade v. Fooks, 9 Sim. 386 ; 8 L. J., Ch. 41 ; 2 Jur. 981.

A testator, after giving to his sister a life interest in the whole of his property, devised and bequeathed the same after her death upon trust for sale, and to divide the proceeds amongst "my second cousins." The testator had no "second cousins" either at the date of his will or at his death, or any born afterwards :—Held, that first cousins once removed were entitled. Slade v. Fooks (supra), followed. Bonner, In re, Tucker v. Good, 51 L. J., Ch. 83 ; 19 Ch. D. 201 ; 45 L. T. 470 ; 30 W. R. 58.

A testator gave one-third of his property to his first cousins and two-thirds to his second cousins. At his death he left first cousins, second cousins, and children and grandchildren of first cousins :—Held, that the term "second cousin" did not include children or grandchildren of first cousins. Parker, In re, Bentham v. Wilson 50 L. J., Ch. 639 ; 17 Ch. D. 262 ; 44 L. T. 885 ; 29 W. R. 855—C. A.

A testator gave the residue of the proceeds of the sale of his real and personal estate equally between all such of his first and second cousins, including his "reputed cousin" A. B., and his children, or reputed children, and the children of his "reputed cousin" S. G. as should be living at the time of the determination of the two life interests given by the will, and directed that if the said A. B. should be then dead, the share to which he would have been entitled if then living should be divided amongst his then surviving children. By a codicil he gave a legacy "to each of my cousins" J. B. and G. C., in addition to any sum to which they might be entitled under his will. The testator had no second cousins either at the date of his will or his death. He had at his death first cousins, first cousins once removed, and first cousins twice removed. A. B. and S. G. would, if legitimate, have been his first cousins. J. G. and G. C. were his first cousins once removed :—Held, that the persons to take were the testator's first cousins, and first cousins once removed. Wilks v. Bannister, 54 L. J., Ch. 1139 ; 30 Ch. D. 512 ; 53 L. T. 247 ; 33 W. R. 922.

"Nearest Male Cousin."]—In an ejectment on title, the plaintiff claimed under a will (made in 1861), whereby the testator devised the lands in question, which were of freehold tenure, "to my only son, during his natural life, and after his demise it is to revert to the most deserving of his male issue lawfully begotten of him, if he shall have such male issue, otherwise it is to revert to the nearest and most deserving male cousin, and a regular Power of the family." The testator's son died sine prole, having previously devised the lands in question to his only sister, one of the defendants in the present action ; the plaintiff claimed by virtue of the limitation over on the death of the testator's son without issue, as the eldest of three brothers, the only male cousins of the testator :—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover. Power v. Queally, 4 L. R., Ir. 20.

Cousins, Class of, when Ascertained.]—See post, col. 922.

h. Nephews and Nieces.

Who Included—Parol Evidence.]—Parol evidence is admissible to explain the sense in which the word "nephew" is employed in a will. Grant v. Grant, L. R. 5 C. P. 727 ; 22 L. T. 233 ; 18 W. R. 576. Discussed in Parker, In re, Bentham v. Wilson, 50 L. J., Ch. 639 ; 17 Ch. D. 262 ; 44 L. T. 885 ; 29 W. R. 855—C. A. And see Fish, In re, Ingham v. Rayner, infra, col. 814.

—— Half-Blood.]—The description of nephews and nieces includes the child of a brother or sister of the half-blood. Grieves v. Rawley, 10 Hare, 63 ; 22 L. J., Ch. 625.

—— Grand-Nephews.] — Power to appoint among nephews and nieces does not extend to great-nephews, &c. ; and if part be appointed, not pursuant to the power, the money so appointed lapses into, and passes under, the appointment of the residue which was properly appointed. Falkner v. Butler, Ambl. 514.

Testator gives the residue, to be divided, after his sister's death, amongst his nephews and nieces, and by a codicil gives to a great-niece, whom he calls his niece, 500*l.* over and above her share after the decease of his sister, in the body of his will treated of more at large :—Held, that none of the great-nephews or nieces were entitled to share in the residue. Shelley v. Bryer, Jac. 207; 23 R. R. 32.

Devise in remainder to the said T. B. for life, and after his decease to the said T. B., the son of my nephew S., and his heirs ; a nephew of the same name, T. B., not being before mentioned, and in every other instance the devisee being pointed out by reference and particular description of the degree of relationship, the great-nephew held to be intended in both limitations. Chambers v. Brailsford, 19 Ves. 652 ; 11 R. R. 214—C. A.

Testatrix bequeathed as follows: "To my niece M. M., daughter of my nephew T. M., 30*l.*; to A. L. and M. L., son and daughter of my late niece M. L., 30*l.* each." And she gave all the residue of her property not thereafter disposed of, unto and equally to be divided amongst all her nephews and nieces. Afterwards she gave a specific legacy to M. D., and described her as her niece :—Held, that by the words "my nephews and nieces" in the residuary bequest, the testatrix meant not only her nephews and nieces, but their children also. James v. Smith, 14 Sim. 214 ; 13 L. J., Ch. 376 ; 8 Jur. 594.

A testator devised an estate to one for life, and afterwards to be sold, and the proceeds to be equally divided between "his surviving nephews and nieces." He had, in another part of his will, designated A. and B. (who were really his great-nephew and great-niece) as his nephews and nieces :—Held, that A. and B. did not participate in the proceeds. Thompson v. Robinson, 27 Beav. 486 ; 29 L. J., Ch. 280 ; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1196 ; 1 L. T. 121 ; 8 W. R. 34.

Under a gift to "nephews and nieces, being descendants of my brothers and sisters," alive at a certain period, grand-nephews and grand-nieces held not to be entitled. Williamson v. Moore, 8 Jur. (N.S.) 875 ; 10 W. R. 536.

A testator gave his residue to his nephews and nieces equally. Afterwards, by a codicil, he gave a pecuniary legacy to his great-nephew A., describing him as a nephew ; and by another codicil of even date he declared his meaning to be, that A. should have the pecuniary legacy in addition to his share of the residue :—Held, that the testator, under the words "nephew and nieces," intended to include great-nephews and great-nieces ; and consequently that A. and all other great-nephews and great-nieces were entitled to share in the residue. Weeds v. Bristow, 35 L. J., Ch. 839 ; L. R. 2 Eq. 333 ; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 446 ; 14 L. T. 587 ; 14 W. R. 726.

A testatrix gave "to each of the present nieces of A., for her own absolute benefit, the sum of 2,000*l.*, and in case any of them shall die in my lifetime, leaving a child or children who shall survive me, then and in every or any such case the legacy intended for her so dying shall go to her child or children in equal shares, if more than one." At the date of the will and death of the testatrix, there was only one niece of A. alive, but there were several grand-nieces :—Held, that the bequest was confined in its term to the niece of the first degree, and that the children of nieces who were dead at the date of the will were not entitled to take by substitution, grand-niece or grand-nephew being excluded from the term "niece." Crook v. Whitley, 7 De G. M. & G. 490 ; 26 L. J., Ch. 350 ; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 703 ; 5 W. R. 383—C. A.

A testator gave the proceeds of the sale of an estate to his grand-nephew G., and to such other of his nephews and nieces as should be living at his own or his sister's decease equally. In one place in his will the testator called one of his great-nephews his nephew, but in all other places he called them great-nephews :—Held, that nephews and nieces must be confined to their primary signification, so as not to include great-nephews and great-nieces. Blower, In re, 42 L. J., Ch. 24 ; L. R. 6 Ch. 351 ; 25 L. T. 181 ; 19 W. R. 666—C. A.

A testator gave legacies to "my niece, Elizabeth S." When he made his will he had a great-great-niece, named Elizabeth Jane S., who was known to him, and there was not then any other person at all answering the description. He formerly had had a niece, with whom he was intimate, and to whom he had, by a former will, made precisely the same bequests as those in question, but when he made his last will he knew that she had been dead some time :—Held, that Elizabeth Jane S. was entitled to the legacies. Stringer v. Gardiner, 4 De G. & J. 468 ; 28 L. J., Ch. 758 ; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 260 ; 7 W. R. 602.

—— Nephews by Affinity.]—Under a gift by a testator, who was married, to "my other nephews and nieces on both sides" :—Held, that the children of the brothers and sisters of the testator's wife were included. Frogley v. Phillips, 3 De G. F. & J. 466 ; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 349 ; 3 L. T. 718. Affirming 30 Beav. 168.

Bequest to the testator's grandchildren and nephews and nieces. The testator had no brothers or sisters, and therefore no nephews and nieces :—Held, that the nephews and nieces of his wife were entitled. Hogg v. Cook, 32 Beav. 641.

Residuary gift in trust for "my nephews and nieces living, and the issue, if any, of my nephews and nieces dead before me." The testator never had any nephew or niece of his own, nor had he any brother or sister living when he made his will :— Held, that the nephews and nieces of the testator's wife took under the gift, and that evidence of circumstances making it improbable that the testator intended to benefit them, but not tending to show that any other class was intended, was inadmissible. Sherratt v. Mountford, 42 L. J., Ch. 688 ; L. R. 8 Ch. 928 ; 29 L. T. 284 ; 21 W. R. 818—C. A.

A testator, after giving a legacy to each of several persons, whom he called respectively his nephews and nieces, gave the residue of his property to be divided between all his nephews and nieces equally, share and share alike. At the date of the will, he had one nephew and one niece, who were both mentioned in the will, and there was no possibility of his having future nephews or nieces. The other persons mentioned in the will, and therein respectively called his nephews and nieces, were, in fact, the nephews and nieces of his wife :—Held, that the nephews and nieces by affinity were included in the gift of the residue. Adney v. Greatrex, 38 L. J., Ch. 414 ; 20 L. T. 647 ; 17 W. R. 637.

A testator devised freehold property to be divided between the children of his sister-in-law and A. and B., and "my niece M." (the last-named three devisees being nieces of his deceased wife). He gave other real property to trustees upon trust for sale, and to pay the income of the proceeds of sale amongst "all my nephews and nieces," for their lives and the life of the survivors of them, and bequeathed the capital to the survivor, and he gave other real property unto "all my said nephews and nieces" as tenants in common, and he gave his residuary realty upon trust to pay the income to "all my said nephews and nieces" for their lives and the life of the survivor, and then devised such residue to the survivor, and bequeathed his residuary personal estate equally amongst "all my nephews and nieces": — Held, that the circumstance of the testator having given property to his wife's nieces, and having even called one of them his niece, was not sufficient to include any of his wife's nephews and nieces in the subsequent gifts to all his nephews and nieces; and those only who were related by consanguinity were entitled to take. Grant v. Grant (L. R. 5 C. P. 480, 727) dissented from. Foster, In re, Merrill v. Morton, 50 L. J., Ch. 249; 17 Ch. D. 382; 43 L. T. 750; 29 W. R. 394.

A testatrix having given legacies to several persons by name, describing each as her niece, bequeathed her residuary personal property upon trust for her respective "nephews and nieces," in equal shares. Two of the legatees in the will called nieces were nieces not of the testatrix, but of her late husband:—Held, that the circumstance that the testatrix had, in her will, called these two her nieces, did not enlarge the meaning of the words "nephews and nieces" in the residuary bequest, so as to make it include all the nephews and nieces of her husband living at her death, nor even to include the two legatees whom she had called her nieces in the will. Smith v. Lidiard, 3 K. & J. 252.

A testatrix, after giving a specific bequest to A. B., who was her husband's niece, but whom she there described as "my niece, A. B.," afterwards gave the residue of her property thus, "unto all my nephews and nieces":—Held, that the nephews and nieces by blood of the testatrix were entitled to the residue, to the exclusion of A. B. Wells v. Wells, 43 L. J., Ch. 681; L. R. 18 Eq. 504; 31 L. T. 16; 22 W. R. 893.

Testator gave to S. and his wife, whom he called his nephew and niece, memorial rings. He also gave to each of certain other "nephews and nieces," naming them, a legacy of nineteen guineas. He gave his residuary estate in trust for all and every his nephews and nieces living at his death, to be equally divided between them, "including my nephews and nieces to whom I have given legacies aforesaid." S. and some of the others named were nephews and nieces of the testator's wife. The wife of S. was not the niece of the testator or of his wife. The court, holding on the construction of will that S. and his wife took as nephew and niece in the gift to the class, held, further, that they took each a share. Gue, In re, Smith v. Gue, 61 L. J., Ch. 510; 40 W. R. 553. Affirmed, 67 L. T. 823—C. A.

—— Illegitimate Nephews.]—A testator had only one illegitimate nephew (John), and only one legitimate nephew (William), and he had no nieces. By his will, he gave a legacy to John, whom he described as "his nephew"; and he gave his residuary estate "to the children lawfully begotten of his nephews and nieces":—Held, that the children of John participated in the residue. Tugwell v. Scott, 24 Beav. 141; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 653.

A. bequeathed to his "niece, Louisa B., the wife of W. B., 100*l.*," and after other dispositions of his property gave the residue to be divided equally between all his "nephews and nieces." The testator had but one legitimate niece; Louisa B. was illegitimate:—Held, that she was entitled to a share of the residuary estates, as one of his nieces. Thomas v. Putt, 22 L. T. 775; 18 W. R. 987.

Pecuniary legacies of the same amount were given to three persons, each of whom was described as "my niece." One of them was illegitimate:—Held, that the illegitimate niece was not entitled to any share in the residuary estate under the gift to "all my nephews and nieces living at my death." Bryon, In re, Drummond v. Leigh (30 Ch. D. 110) distinguished. Brown, In re, Brown v. Brown, 58 L. J., Ch. 420; 37 W. R. 472.

Where a testator gives the residue of his property in favour of "my niece E. W.," having no niece of that name, his wife having two grandnieces E. W., one of whom is illegitimate, evidence is not admissible to show that the illegitimate grandniece was designated. Fish, In re, Ingham v. Rayner, 63 L. J., Ch. 437; [1894] 2 Ch. 83; 7 R. 434; 70 L. T. 825; 42 W. R. 520—C. A.

Gift to "Male Nephews."]—Under a bequest to the testator's male nephews, nephews who were children of his brothers are entitled to exclusion of nephews, children of his sisters. Lucas v. Cuday, Ir. R. 10 Eq. 514.

Nephews and Nieces, Class of, when Ascertained.]—See post, col. 922.

i. Executors and Representatives.

Executors construed Strictly.]—A sum of money was bequeathed in trust for several tenants for life in succession, with remainder to such person or persons as one of them, who was a married woman, should by will appoint, and in default of such appointment "to and for the benefit of her executors or administrators." The lady died without making any appointment:—Held, that her personal representative took the reversionary interest in the fund, not beneficially nor in trust for her next of kin, but as part of her estate. Att.-Gen. v. Malkin, 2 Ph. 64; 10 Jur. 955.

A testator bequeathed a fund to such of his grandchildren who should be living at the death of A., and the executors or administrators of such of his grandchildren as should be then dead leaving a child or children living at the death of A., in equal shares, so that such executors or administrators of any such grandchild so dying, or leaving a child or children as aforesaid, should take the same share as such grandchild would have taken if he had been living at the time of the death of A. One of the grandchildren died in the lifetime of A. leaving a child, and having in his lifetime become bankrupt:—Held, that the share of the deceased grandchild passed, under the will, neither to his executors beneficially, nor to his next of kin, but that the words "executors or administrators" were words of limitation only; and that the share of the grandchild consequently vested in his assignees. Seymour, In re, 1 Johns. 472; 28 L. J., Ch. 765; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1049; 7 W. R. 609.

A testatrix bequeathed "to the executors or executrixes of A." 100*l*. A. left an executor and two executrixes, who all died in the lifetime of the testatrix :—Held, a bequest to the legal personal representatives of A. to hold on the trusts affecting A.'s estate. Trethewy v. Helyar, 46 L. J., Ch. 125 ; 4 Ch. D. 53. And see Stocks v. Dodsley, 1 Keen, 325.

Bequest of personalty in trust for the legatee for life, with remainder to her appointees by will, with remainder, in default of appointment, to her executors and administrators :—Held, that the legatee took the capital absolutely. Devall v. Dickens, 9 Jur. 550.

Where a testator bequeathed a fund in trust for his five daughters, share and share alike, for their respective lives, and if any daughter should die without issue, or leaving issue, if such issue should die under twenty-one, then upon trust to divide and pay the share of such daughter immediately, or as soon as could be after her decease, unto and amongst his son and the survivors of his daughters, to whom he gave the same, or to their personal representatives :—Held, that "survivors" must refer to the death of the tenant for life whose share was the subject of division. And that the words "personal representatives" were used in their ordinary sense, and referred to the possible death of one of the survivors between the time of her interest vesting and the time of actual payment. On the death of the last survivor of the five daughters without issue, her entire share ordered to be paid to the executors of the son. Bates's Trust, In re, 2 N. R. 265 ; 9 L. T. 226 ; 11 W. R. 768.

A bequest of personalty to A. for life, with remainder to his issue male and the survivors for their lives, with remainder to the issue female of A. and the survivors for their lives, with remainder "to the executors, administrators and assigns of the survivors of A., or such issue, male or female, who shall happen to be such survivor," is a bequest to a class, which is necessarily ascertainable within the limits prescribed by the rule against perpetuities, confers an absolute contingent interest in such one of that class as may be the survivor, and is not void for remoteness. Avern v. Lloyd, 37 L. J., Ch. 489 ; L. R. 5 Eq. 383 ; 18 L. T. 282 ; 16 W. R. 669.

Bequests to females, some of whom were married and some single, for their separate use for their respective lives, and after their decease to such persons as they should respectively appoint, and in default of appointment to their respective executors, administrators and assigns :—Held, that the legatees, whether married or unmarried women, were each entitled upon petition, without executing any formal appointment, to an immediate transfer or payment to themselves of the corpus of their shares of the fund. Holloway v. Clarkson, 2 Hare, 521 ; 6 Jur. 923.

A gift in a will to A., and in case of his death to his executors or administrators, passes to the legatee's personal representative as part of his personal estate. Palin v. Hills (infra) overruled. Clay, In re, Clay v. Clay, 54 L. J., Ch. 648 ; 52 L. T. 641—C. A. Affirming 32 W. R. 516.

A., by his will, directed his executors to pay over all the residue of his property to B., but in case of B.'s death, then to pay over the same to the "executors or executrixes which B. by her will might appoint." B. died before A., having by her will given the residue of her property to C., and appointed D. her executrix :—Held, on a bill filed by D. against C., that D. took the residue of A.'s estate as part of the personal estate of B., and that he was to hold it upon the trusts and for the purposes of B.'s will. Long v. Watkinson, 21 L. J., Ch. 844 ; 16 Jur. 235.

Where a bequest is made by A. to the executors of B., such executors hold it in trust, and to be administered as part of B.'s assets. The persons who take it beneficially take as cestuis que trustent, and not as personæ designatæ, and it may belong either to the creditors or the pecuniary or residuary legatee or next of kin of B., according to the circumstances. S. C., 17 Beav. 471.

—— Taking Beneficially.]—A testator directed his executors to invest 200*l*., which was to arise from the sale of freeholds, in trust to pay the dividends to his brother W. D. for life, and after his death to pay and assign the same to the executor or administrator of his brother absolutely ; W. D. died in the lifetime of the testator :—Held, that W. D.'s administrator took the 200*l*. absolutely and beneficially. Nurse v. Oldmeadow, 5 L. J., Ch. 300.

Executors construed Next of Kin.]—A testator gave a legacy of 2,000*l*. to S. B., and, in case S. B. should die in his lifetime, he directed that the legacy should go and be paid to her executors or administrators. S. B. died in the lifetime of the testator, having made a will by which she appointed R. P. her residuary legatee :—Held, upon appeal, that at the death of the testator S. B.'s next of kin were entitled to the beneficial interest in the legacy of 2,000*l*., and not S. B.'s residuary legatee. Palin v. Hills, 1 Myl. & K. 470 ; 2 L. J., Ch. 142.

A testatrix bequeathed certain personal property to trustees in trust for her daughter for life, for her separate use ; and after the daughter's decease, upon trust to transfer the fund to the daughter's "executors or administrators, for his, her or their own use and benefit absolutely." The daughter, who lived separate from her husband, made a will and appointed executors, who, however, did not prove the will, but her husband obtained letters of administration to her effects :—Held, that the wife had no power to dispose of the stock, and that the husband was entitled to the trust fund, to the exclusion of his wife's executors, and also of her next of kin. Wallis v. Taylor, 8 Sim. 241 ; 6 L. J., Ch. 68.

Under a gift for the sole and separate use of A., independently of any husband she might marry, during her life, and in case she died without issue, "unto the executors or administrators or other legal representatives of A. of her proper own blood and kindred" :—Held, that the next of kin of A. took at her death, the intention being to confine the gift to the family of A. to the exclusion of any husband she might marry. Morgan's Trusts, In re, 2 W. R. 439.

Legal or Personal Representatives construed Executors.]—"Legal representatives" means "executors or administrators," unless contrary intention is manifest. Price v. Strange, 6 Madd. 159. And see Crawford's Trusts, In re, 2 Drew. 230 ; 2 Eq. R. 553 ; 23 L. J., Ch. 625 ; 18 Jur. 616 ; 2 W. R. 341.

The words "personal representatives" are to be understood in the ordinary sense of executors and administrators, unless controlled by the context of the will. Saberton v. Sheels, 1 Russ. & M. 587 ; Tam. 383.

E. compounded with his creditors; his widow, by her will, left a fund to pay the residue of the debts to the compounding creditors, "or their personal representatives"; the administratrix of a deceased creditor is entitled beneficially to his bequest, and not the next of kin, nor residuary legatee of the creditor. Evans v. Charles, 1 Anstr. 128.

The words "personal representative" or the words "legal personal representative" must ordinarily and primâ facie be taken to mean "executors or administrators." Smith v. Barneby, 2 Coll. C. C. 728; 10 Jur. 748.

Testator, after devising certain freehold estates in trust for A. in strict settlement, with remainder to B. in strict settlement, with remainder to his own right heirs, gave leasehold and copyhold property (of the nature of personalty) upon trusts similar thereto, yet so that the same should not vest absolutely in any child of a tenant for life, unless such child should attain twenty-one, "and so that in default of any person becoming entitled thereto under this my will, the same shall be in trust for my personal and not my real representative." And the testator gave the residue of his personal estate to his wife, and appointed her sole executrix of his will. Upon the death of all the tenants for life without issue, a question arose as to the devolution of the leasehold and copyhold estates between the next of kin of the testator at the time of his death, his next of kin at the time of the surviving tenant for life, and the representative of the widow:—Held, that the representative of the widow was entitled to the exclusion of both classes of next of kin. Ib.

The expressions "personal representatives" and "legal representatives" have in some cases been held to be identical in meaning, but they are not necessarily so. Kilner v. Leech, 10 Beav. 362; 16 L. J., Ch. 503; 11 Jur. 859.

A bequest of a sum, after the death of S., to such of testator's other children as should be living at her death, equally, if more than one, and if only one to such only child, "and if all his other children should be then dead" (which was the event), then to his personal representatives, with directions to the trustees to transfer accordingly. S. and his other children survived, and were his next of kin at his death:—Held, that their personal representatives, and not his next of kin at S.'s death, were entitled under the ultimate bequest after the death of S. Nicholson v. Wilson, 14 Sim. 549; 14 L. J., Ch. 351; 9 Jur. 389.

By a gift to "personal representatives" the executors and administrators are primâ facie entitled. Atherton v. Crowther, 19 Beav. 448; 2 W. R. 639.

A testator, in 1841, bequeathed 200 guineas to such of the representatives as might be alive at his death of Messrs. P. and H., then both dead, with whom, in 1793, he had had some business by which they were losers to the amount of about 200 guineas:—Held, that the legal personal representatives of P. and H. and not the partners in the firm at the death of the testator, were entitled; and, secondly, that such representatives took in equal moieties and not in the proportion of their shares in the partnership. Leak v. M'Dowell, 33 Beav. 238; 3 N. R. 185.

A bequest to the representatives of the late mercantile house of A. and K., or to such persons as should be entitled at testator's decease to their personal property, in satisfaction of a debt due by testator's father:—Held, claimable by the legal representative of the surviving partner, and not by the parties beneficially entitled to the properties of A. and K. Kerrison v. Reddington, 11 Ir. Eq. R. 451.

A testator, after the death of his daughter, gave real and personal estate to her "legal personal representative or representatives," to hold to them, their "heirs," executors, administrators and assigns, according to the nature of the property. She left a husband, who took out administration, and an only child:—Held, that the husband took both the real and personal estate. Dixon v. Dixon, 24 Beav. 129.

A husband bequeathed a fund to his wife and four children for their lives, and after the death of the survivor to his four other children for their lives and the life of the survivor, and then the fund was to be divided among "the legal representatives" of the last four, "to be equally divided among them, share and share alike":—Held, that the executors or administrators of the last-mentioned children were entitled, and not their next of kin. Wing v. Wing, 34 L. T. 941; 24 W. R. 878.

—— Words of Limitation.]—Testator, by will, directed his executors to place out upon government securities such a sum of money out of the interest thereof as should be sufficient to produce an annuity of 50*l.*, which he gave unto his daughter J. for her life; and after her decease, in case she should leave issue, he gave the principal unto and equally amongst his surviving children and their legal representatives, share and share alike. The testator had four children living at the date of his will and of his death, of whom the daughter J. was the survivor; she died without leaving issue:—Held, that the words "surviving children" meant children surviving the daughter J., and that the words "legal personal representatives" must be construed in their ordinary sense, and not as importing kindred or representatives in blood; consequently, that the fund, of which the testator's daughter was the tenant for life, fell into the testator's residuary estate. Taylor v. Beverley, 1 Coll. C. C. 108; 13 L. J., Ch. 240; 8 Jur. 265.

A testatrix directed the interest of 1,000*l.* stock to be paid to D. for life, and at D.'s decease directed the stock to be transferred to D.'s personal representatives:—Held, that D. took an absolute interest. Alger v. Parrott, L. R. 3 Eq. 328.

A testator directed real estate to be sold, the proceeds to go in equal moieties between A. and B. as tenants in common, and their respective heirs or representatives:—Held, that these were words of limitation, and that the share of A., who predeceased the testator, lapsed. Appleton v. Rowley, 38 L. J., Ch. 689; L. R. 8 Eq. 139; 20 L. T. 600.

A bequest of residue to be divided equally "amongst all the children of my late cousin E. and my cousin P. and their lawful representatives" is a bequest to the children of E. and to P. himself, and not to the children of P. Lugar v. Harman, 1 Cox, 540; 2 Bro. C. C. 85.

—— Gift by Substitution after Life Interest.]—Reversionary bequest to the testator's sons by name, and in case of the decease of all, or any of them, in the lifetime of the tenant for life, to their legal personal representatives:—Held, to take effect in favour of their executors, and not in favour of their next of kin, although the words "executors and administrators" occurred in other parts of the will. Hinchcliffe v. Westwood, 2 De G. & Sm. 205; 17 L. J., Ch. 167; 12 Jur. 618.

In a bequest to brothers and sisters or their representatives in equal shares, representatives mean executors or administrators, and not the next of kin. Chapman v. Chapman, 33 Beav. 556.

A testator gave 500*l.* upon trust to pay income thereof to a daughter for life, and if she died without issue, then to pay the same sum and interest to his four sons (naming them), share and share alike; but in case any of his sons should be then dead, the testator directed that the part or share of him or them so being dead should be paid to his or their child or children, share and share alike if more than one; or if but one, then to such only child; but if there should be no child, then to his or their legal representatives. One of the sons died a bachelor, and the others leaving children, some of whom died in their parents' lifetime; others survived their parent, but died before the tenant for life; and others survived both their parent and the tenant for life:—Held, that legal representatives meant executors and administrators. Turner, In re, 2 Dr. & Sm. 501; 34 L. J., Ch. 660; 12 L. T. 695; 13 W. R. 770.

A. bequeathed stock to his aunt for life, and, after her death, to his father, "and in case of his death then to devolve on his brothers and sisters, or their representatives." The father and two brothers predeceased the aunt:—Held, that "representatives" meant executors or administrators, and not next of kin, and that they took as trustees, and not beneficially. Henderson, In re, 28 Beav. 656.

Investigation of the authorities, and general doctrine on the construction of the word representatives in a will. Testator gave a life interest in certain funds, with remainder "to be equally divided between all my cousins-german now existing, or their representatives":—Held, there being nothing in the rest of the will to control the primary legal meaning of the word representatives, that it meant executors, and not next of kin; and the fund went to the executors or administrators of the testator's cousins-german, as part of their personal estate. Crawford's Trusts, In re, 2 Drew. 230; 2 Eq. R. 553; 23 L. J., Ch. 625; 18 Jur. 616; 4 W. R. 341.

Legacy given to A., with a declaration that if he should depart this life in the lifetime of the testator the legacy "should not lapse, but should go to or devolve upon his personal representative":—Held, A., having died in the testator's lifetime, that the legacy went to A.'s personal representative, who was also his residuary legatee. Hewitson v. Todhunter, 22 L. J., Ch. 76; 1 W. R. 78.

Legal or Personal Representatives Construed Next of Kin.]—A testatrix, who died in 1885, by her will dated in 1884, after bequeathing certain specific legacies, gave all her real and residuary personal estate to her trustees upon trust to convert and to stand possessed of the proceeds to pay the legacies following, which she thereby bequeathed to the persons thereinafter mentioned "or to their respective legal personal representatives." Then followed numerous legacies. The testatrix disposed of the residue of her property by giving it to each of several persons named "or the legal personal representatives" of such of them respectively as might then be dead or should die in her lifetime. In the commencement of the will the testatrix had made a specific bequest of certain portraits to a legatee there named, "or to his executors or administrators." One of the pecuniary legatees having died in the lifetime of the testatrix, the question was who was entitled to his legacy under the words "legal personal representatives":—Held, that the primâ facie meaning of "legal personal representatives" was executors or administrators; but that there was reason here for departing from the primâ facie meaning of the words, because the testatrix had, in one instance, used the words executors or administrators in a similar alternate gift, and it was legitimate to infer a change of meaning where different words were used:—Held, therefore, that the legacy belonged to the next of kin of the deceased legatee; and that such next of kin were to be those who would have been next of kin, according to the Statutes of Distribution, if the legatee had died at the time of the death of the testatrix. Thompson, In re, Machell v. Newman, 55 L. T. 85.

—— Where Direction to Distribute.]—A testatrix gave real and personal estate to trustees in trust for M. for life, with remainder as she should appoint; and in default of appointment, in trust to convey the real estate to such person or persons as would be the heir-at-law of M., and to transfer and assign the personal estate to or amongst such person or persons as would be the personal representative of M. M. appointed only a part of the personal estate. The next of kin, and not the executors, were held to be entitled to the unappointed part of the personal estate. Baines v. Ottey, 1 Myl. & K. 465; 1 L. J., Ch. 210.

E. D., by settlement, declared that trustees should stand possessed of 4,000*l.*, as to a moiety for his daughter, A. J. D., and her children; and as to the other moiety for his other daughter, H. D., and her children; and that if both A. J. D. and H. D. should die without leaving issue living at the time or respective times of their decease, then that the trustees should divide the trust moneys among the personal representatives of E. D. in a legal course of administration. Both daughters died without having been married. E. D. did not leave a widow:—Held, that the persons intended to be benefited were the next of kin of E. D. living at his death. Wilson v. Pilkington, 16 L. J., Ch. 169; 11 Jur. 537.

The testator, after directing his personal estate to be invested, gave the income of the same and of his real estate to his wife for her life; and directed that after her death his trustees should sell his real estate, "and pay, distribute, and divide" the money thence arising and the money at interest; and he thereby gave and bequeathed one-third thereof unto his cousin J. S. "if he should be then living; but if he should be then dead, unto his legal representative or representatives, if more than one, share and share alike." J. S. died in the lifetime of the testator's widow, leaving a widow and children:—Held, that upon the death of J. S. his widow and children, as the persons who would, in case of intestacy, be entitled to his personal estate, according to the Statute of Distributions, took vested interests in the third of the residue in equal shares as tenants in common. Smith v. Palmer, 7 Hare, 225; 13 Jur. 94.

Stock was bequeathed in trust for testator's brother and the brother's wife for their lives successively, and after their decease in trust to be divided equally share and share alike, amongst the testator's nephews and nieces, children of the brother then living, or their legal personal representatives:—Held, that the representatives of nephews and nieces dying in the lifetime of the surviving tenant for life took shares, and that such representatives were the next of kin, and not the executors or administrators of the nephews and nieces. King v. Clearland, 4 De G. & J. 477; 28 L. J., Ch. 835; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 1044; 7 W. R. 602. Affirming 26 Beav. 166.

The words "legal representatives" held to mean next of kin, not executors or administrators. Walker v. Camden (Marquis), 16 Sim. 329; 17 L. J., Ch. 488; 12 Jur. 932.

A devise of real estate to a testator's widow for life, with remainder to his son if he should attain twenty-one; but in case he should die in the lifetime of his mother, then he directed his real estate to be sold, and one moiety of the proceeds he gave and bequeathed unto and equally amongst his (the testator's) legal personal representatives, in such and the like manner as if the same had been to be paid under the Statute of Distributions. He gave the other moiety unto and equally amongst the legal personal representatives of his wife. He left his widow and son alone surviving him. The son died in the lifetime of his mother:—Held, that under the gift to his legal personal representatives, the widow took one-third and the son two-thirds of the moiety. Holloway v. Radcliffe, 23 Beav. 163; 26 L. J., Ch. 401; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 198; 5 W. R. 271.

—— Where Direction to Pay, and Executors appointed.]—Testator gave 450*l.* to trustees, their executors, &c., in trust for his son for life, and after his son's decease to pay thereout two legacies of 100*l.* each to two of his daughters, and to pay the residue to the legal representatives of his son; and he gave the residue of his personal estate to his son, his executors, &c.:—Held, that the words "legal representatives" meant "next of kin." Walter v. Meakin, 6 Sim. 148; 2 L. J., Ch. 173.

Testator bequeathed 700*l.* to his daughter's husband, his executors, &c., in trust, to pay the interest to his daughter for her separate use for life, and after her death to such persons as she should appoint by will, and in default of appointment to her personal representatives. The daughter died without having made any appointment:—Held, that her next of kin, to the exclusion of her husband, were entitled to the 700*l.* Robinson v. Smith, 6 Sim. 47; 2 L. J., Ch. 76. S. P., Styth v. Monro, 6 Sim. 49.

Money settled in trust, to be paid according to the appointment of A., and in default thereof to his legal representatives, according to the course of administration. A., by will, in pursuance of the power, appoints to his legal representatives, according to the course of administration, and makes a residuary legatee, whom he appoints one of his executors. Upon the will, the next of kin are entitled. Jennings v. Gallimore, 3 Ves. 146; 3 R. R. 147.

—— Substitutional Gift.]—Bequest to A. or his legal representatives, A. being dead at the date of the will (which the testator did not know), having bequeathed his property on certain trusts:—Held, that A.'s next of kin, according to the Statute of Distributions, were entitled, to the exclusion of his legatees or executors. Cotton v. Cotton, 2 Beav. 67; 8 L. J., Ch. 349; 3 Jur. 886.

Bequest of residue to certain persons, and if they should die in the lifetime of the testatrix to their legal representatives. One died; his next of kin shall take the share of the residue; not his executor beneficially, or his residuary legatee. Bridge v. Abbott, 3 Bro. C. C. 224.

—— Effect of Explanatory Words.]—Leasehold property bequeathed in remainder, in trust for a child en ventre, if a son for life, and after his decease for such of his issue male as should be his heir-at-law at his death; if no such then living, for such persons as should then be the legal representatives of the testator. A son being born and dying without issue, the limitation over was established in favour of the next of kin according to the statute at the time of the distribution. Long v. Blackall, 3 Ves. 486; 4 R. R. 73.

A fund was settled upon a wife for life, with remainder to her husband for life, with remainder to her children, with remainder in default of children to the person or persons who should happen to be her legal personal representative or representatives at the time of her death:—Held, that "legal personal representative or representatives" meant next of kin according to the Statute of Distributions. Robinson v. Evans, 43 L. J., Ch. 82; 29 L. T. 715; 22 W. R. 199.

A testator bequeathed a legacy of 2,000*l.* upon trust for a married daughter, F., for life, then for her husband for life, and after the death of the survivor for such persons related by blood to F. as she should appoint; and in default of appointment to transfer the same to such persons as would be the personal representatives of F. in case she had died sole and unmarried. By a codicil the testator, in reciting the bequest, referred to these trusts as being trusts for the benefit of his daughter's relations and next of kin. F. died in testator's lifetime:—Held, that by the personal representatives of F. were meant the persons who were her statutory next of kin at the testator's death. Grylls, In re, L. R. 6 Eq. 589.

An appointment to the grandchildren of persons named, with a direction that in the event of their death their shares should, for the purpose of transmission, and not as conferring an interest in such deceased grandchild, go and belong to the person or persons who would be entitled thereto in case such share had formed part of the personal estate of such deceased grandchild immediately before his or her death, and to the intent that the same might follow the destination of such personal estate, but only as a disposition by virtue of the deed of appointment:—Held, a gift of each deceased grandchild's share to the persons who would have been entitled to his personal estate if he had died intestate. Jackson v. Crick, 19 W. R. 547.

Bequest of three several sums to the testator's three daughters for life, and in default of appointment the same to go and be paid to their next personal representatives:—Held, that by reason of the word "next" the ultimate limitation could not signify executors or administrators; and that the nearest of kin, and not the next of kin according to the Statute of Distributions, took as joint tenants. Stockdale v. Nicholson, 36 L. J., Ch. 793; L. R. 4 Eq. 359; 16 L. T. 767; 15 W. R. 986.

"Representatives" Construed Legal Personal Representatives.]—A gift in a will to the "representatives" of a person is a gift to his legal personal representatives, in the absence of any context in the will showing that the word is to have a different meaning. Crawford's Trusts, In re (supra, col. 819), followed. Ware, In re, Cumberlege v. Cumberlege-Ware, 59 L. J., Ch. 717; 45 Ch. D. 269; 63 L. T. 52; 38 W. R. 767.

—— Construed Descendants.]—The word "representatives" construed to mean "descendants," the context of the will requiring it. Styth v. Monro, 6 Sim. 49.

Under a bequest to "personal representatives" of children to take per stirpes:—Held, first, that their executors and administrators were not entitled. Held, secondly, principally upon the terms of the gift over to the testator's "next of kin," if there should be no "representatives," that the descendants of the children were intended. Atherton v. Crowther, 19 Beav. 448; 2 W. R. 639.

Devise to A. and his wife for life, and after the death of the survivor upon trust to sell and apply the produce to and among all and every the same child or children of A. by his said wife, and their representatives equally; the fund belongs to the children surviving the testator, but the issue of a daughter who died in the life of A. are entitled as representatives against the claim of their father as administrator. Horsepool v. Watson, 3 Ves. 383.

A testator by his will, dated in 1868, directed his trustees to pay the income of a certain share in a trust fund "to my sister Charlotte, the wife of Thomas H.," during her life, and after her death to pay and divide the share unto, between and amongst "all her children" who should be living at her death, and the "representatives" of such of them as should have died in her lifetime who should have attained twenty-one, equally share and share alike:—Held, that the word "representatives" in the gift must be construed either as "next of kin" or as "descendants," and not as "executors or administrators." Horner, In re, Eagleton v. Horner, 57 L. J., Ch. 211; 37 Ch. D. 695; 58 L. T. 103; 36 W. R. 348.

"Personal Representatives" Construed Descendants.]—A testatrix, who died in 1827, by her will, dated in 1815, devised to her trustees therein named certain freehold hereditaments upon trust to apply the rents and profits thereof, in the first place, towards the discharge of certain debts and her funeral and testamentary expenses, and then to pay, apply, appropriate, and divide all and every such rents and profits unto and for the equal benefit and advantage of all her children and their respective families from time to time so long as any of her children should live; and from and after the death of the youngest liver of her children, upon further trusts, and she did thereby order and direct the heirs of her surviving trustee to sell and absolutely dispose of all her said real estate, and the moneys arising from such sale or sales to pay and divide unto and equally amongst all and every the "personal representatives" of her several children per stirpes:—Held, that the words "personal representatives" here meant the descendants of the testatrix's children; and that the issue living at the testatrix's death, and born before the death of the last surviving child of the testatrix, were entitled to share per stirpes. Knowles, In re, Rainford v. Knowles, 59 L. T. 359.

Gift to Executor Virtute Officii.]—The mere fact that the gift of the legacy precedes the appointment of the legatee as executor—or that the legacies to several persons appointed executors differ either in their amount or subject-matter—is not enough by itself to rebut the presumption, that a legacy given to a person who is appointed executor is annexed to the office. Jervis v. Lawrence (L. R. 8 Eq. 345) questioned. Wildes v. Davies (1 Sm. & Giff. 475) explained. Appleton, In re, Barber v. Tebbit, 54 L. J., Ch. 954; 29 Ch. D. 893; 52 L. T. 906; 49 J. P. 708—C. A.

—— Whether Beneficial or not.]—A testator died unmarried possessed of real and personal estate, his only next of kin being children of a deceased brother. By his will, after reciting that his lands could not be held by his heir without large capital, he devised them to his brother's eldest son on condition of his executing the injunctions of his will, of which he made him executor; he desired his successor to his lands to recover the arrears of rent from the tenants, and left legacies to certain persons on their giving up to his heir chattels which were in their care:—Held, that a sufficient intention appeared to satisfy the statute, and that the executor took the undisposed-of residue beneficially. Harrison v. Harrison (2 H. & M. 237) followed. Fuge v. Fuge, 27 L. R., Ir. 59.

Testator gave to each of his three executors a legacy for the trouble of carrying out his will, and also to mark his friendship and regard for them. He gave his residue among certain charities or such others "as my executors herein named may select." One executor renounced:—Held, that he was entitled to the legacy, and also to join in the selection of the charities. Mainwaring, In re, Crawford v. Forshaw or Royal Infirmary, 59 L. J., Ch. 348; 43 Ch. D. 643; 62 L. T. 63; 38 W. R. 412.

A testator, by his will, bequeathed legacies to three charities, and also to some individuals, after which he appointed E. N. and J. G. C. executors, to whom he bequeathed legacies of 50*l.* each. He then directed his houses and the stock in his shop to be sold, and then added the clause: "I will my executors shall apply the overplus, if any, as they think fit":—Held, that the executors did not take beneficially. Fenton v. Nevin, 31 L. R., Ir. 478—C. A.

A testator bequeathed the lands of K. (building ground) to his son F. J. N., whom he appointed executor. He directed the land to be built on according to certain plans, with power to F. J. N. to alter them, and power to make building leases. He appropriated the rents of the lettings for building and of other property for carrying out his general trust, which he did not clearly define, and gave his executors duties to perform of a continuing character, to keep the furniture and the house in which he had resided for his daughters and sisters-in-law, and supply the latter with clothes and pocket-money; and to continue to carry on a certain business in which he had himself been engaged, &c.:—Held, that the lands of K. were bequeathed to F. J. N. as executor, and not beneficially. Nugent v. Nugent, 15 L. R., Ir. 321.

And see EXECUTOR AND ADMINISTRATOR.

k. Next of Kin.

Construed Nearest of Kin.]—A., by will, bequeathed a fund to trustees, upon trust to divide the same "equally amongst his next of kin":—Held, that the nearest of kindred in blood, and not the next of kin under the Statute of Distributions, were entitled. Avison v. Simpson, 1 John. 43; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 594; 7 W. R. 277.

The Master was directed to inquire who were the nearest in blood of a testator, ex parte paternâ, at a certain period:—Held, that "nearest of blood" and "next of kin" were synonymous terms; and as the suit related to personal estate, that the Master ought to follow the civil, and not the canon, law mode of computation in prosecuting the inquiry. Cooper v. Denison, 13 Sim. 290; 12 L. J., Ch. 404.

The words "next of kin" used simpliciter, and without explanatory context, must be taken to mean "nearest of kin." Elmsley v. Young, 2 Myl. & K. 780; 4 L. J., Ch. 200. Overruling Phillips v. Garth, 3 Bro. C. C. 64, and Hinckley v. Maclarens, 1 Myl. & K. 27.

Under a residuary bequest to the next of kin in equal degree, brothers entitled, excluding nephews and nieces. Wimbles v. Pitcher, 12 Ves. 433. See also Anon., 1 Madd. 36.

A. gave his property, after the death of his wife, to his or her next of kin, in equal shares. The testator was illegitimate, and died without any next of kin:—Held, that the next of kin of the wife took to the exclusion of the Crown, and the nearest of kin to the exclusion of the more remote, and that the only surviving brother of the wife was entitled to the fund. Rook v. Att.-Gen., 31 Beav. 313; 31 L. J., Ch. 791; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 9; 10 W. R. 745.

A testatrix by her will gave 2,000*l.* to trustees upon trust to pay the interest to H. during her life for her separate use, and after her death to pay the fund to such persons as H. should by will appoint, and in default of appointment to the next of kin of the testatrix living at the death of H.; and the testatrix directed that, in case H. should die without leaving issue who should attain twenty-one, the trustees should divide the 2,000*l.* between certain persons therein mentioned. H. died leaving one son who attained twenty-one, and without having exercised the power of appointment:—Held, that there was no gift by implication to the son, nor to H. absolutely; but that in the events which had happened the nearest in blood to the testatrix living at the death of H. were entitled to the fund as joint tenants under the first gift over in default of appointment. Hayton's Trusts, In re, 4 N. R. 55; 10 L. T. 336.

A husband bequeathed his personal estate equally between his wife and children, and directed that the share of his daughters should be vested in the bank in their own names, and the interest for life to be received by them, to remain as a jointure for their use in case of their marrying, untouchable by their husbands, "but to descend to their legal or next of kin":—Held, that "legal or next of kin" meant nearest of kin without regard to the Statute of Distributions, and that the daughters took only life estates. Harris v. Newton, 46 L. J., Ch. 268; 36 L. T. 173; 25 W. R. 228

Gift to "Nearest of Kin in the Male Line."]—A testator directed that a portion of his property should be invested, and the dividends paid among his brothers and sisters and their children; that the residue should accumulate for twenty-one years after his death, at the end of which time the accumulated fund (to which he gave the name of his "capital property") was to become the property of "the then nearest of kin to myself in the male line in preference to the female line." The inheritor of this capital property was to assume the testator's surname, "if not of that surname." At the date of the will and at the death of the testator he had two brothers and several sisters living. The brothers (unmarried), the unmarried sisters, and two of the married sisters, died within the twenty-one years, leaving one married sister and the sons and daughters of her married sisters and of herself surviving. B., the son of a paternal uncle of the testator, claimed the capital property of the testator, as being the only person who answered the description of "nearest of kin in the male line":—Held, that he was not entitled, the words of the will not restricting the gift to a male claiming through males; and the married sister was held entitled to the "capital property." Sayer v. Bradly or Boys, 5 H. L. Cas. 873; 25 L. J., Ch. 593; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 887; 4 W. R. 808.

—— "Next Male Kin."]—C. devised the rents of certain real estate to his wife for life, and after her death in certain proportions to H. and G. during their lives, and in the event of either dying, the deceased's share to revert to the next male kin:—Held, that next male kin must be taken to mean those of the testator's next of kin at his death who were males. Chapman, In re, Ellick v. Cox, 49 L. T. 673; 32 W. R. 424.

—— "Nearest of Kin by way of Heirship."]—Under a devise of land "to my nearest of kin by way of heirship":—Held, that the heir was entitled. Williams v. Ashton, 1 J. & H. 115; 3 L. T. 177.

—— Next of Kin ex parte maternâ.]—Bequest to A. B. for life, and afterwards to her children, but in default of children "to pay or assign and transfer" to C. D. if living, but if dead to his next of kin ex parte maternâ. C. D. died before A. B.:—Held, that the next of kin ex parte maternâ were not excluded because they also filled the character of next of kin ex parte paternâ. Gundry v. Pinniger, 14 Beav. 94. Affirmed 1 De G. M. & G. 502; 21 L. J., Ch. 405; 16 Jur. 488.

The testatrix devised and bequeathed the rents, issues, and profits of her real and personal estate to her sister for life, and upon and after her decease upon trust to sell the real estate and pay the money arising therefrom to such persons as the testatrix should by any codicil direct, and if she should not bequeath the same by any codicil, then to pay the same unto and amongst her next of kin; and by her codicil the testatrix revoked the former devise and bequest made by her will, and devised and bequeathed all the said real and personal estate to other trustees upon the like trusts, but directed that all the said residue should be paid to her next of kin on the part of her mother, and not to any of her next of kin on the part of her father:—Held, that the testatrix died intestate as to the residuary personal estate; that the next of kin of the testatrix ex parte maternâ, at the death of the tenant for life, were under the codicil entitled to the proceeds of the real estate. Say v. Creed, 5 Hare, 580; 16 L. J., Ch. 361; 11 Jur. 603.

—— Next of Kin of a Particular Name or Blood.]—Devise to the devisor's sister A., then unmarried, for life, with remainder to her first and other sons in tail male; to her daughters in tail, as tenants in common; to his sister B., then married, for life, and to her first and other sons in tail; remainder to the first and nearest of his kindred, being male and of his name and blood, that shall be living at the determination of the estates before devised, and to the heirs of his body. A person claiming under the last limitation must be of the name as well as the blood; and the qualification as to the name is not satisfied by having the name taken by the King's licence previous to the determination of the preceding estates. Leigh v. Leigh, 15 Ves. 92; 10 R. R. 31.

A. M. devised certain estates to his nephew R. M. and his heirs, "not entertaining the least doubt but that he would in due time, and upon the first proper occasion, take care not only to have the said estates so devised to him by me, but my paternal estates, settled in such manner, that the said estates may continue in the male line of our family, and in our name and blood." At the death of the testator there were seven persons of the male line of his family and of his name and blood alive, one of whom was the plaintiff's paternal grandfather, who was descended from the paternal great-grandfather of the testator:—Held, that the objects were sufficiently defined and certain to enable the court to execute the trusts created by the words of recommendation in the will, and that the court, in executing the trust, might go into the ascending line, and was not confined to the descendants of the father of the testator; a general demurrer to the bill for want of equity was therefore overruled. Malone v. O'Connor, Ll. & G. t. Plunk. 465.

Under a bequest to next of kin of the surname of C. living at decease of A.:—Held, that a person whose maiden name was C., and who was sole next of kin at A.'s decease, but who had married after the death of the testator, was entitled. Carpenter v. Bott, 15 Sim. 606; 16 L. J., Ch. 433; 11 Jur. 723.

Devise of real and personal estate in trust for the nearest relation "of the Pyots"; the latter held to be nomen collectivum, and descriptive of that particular stock, and that this mixed fund should not go to the heir-at-law of that name. A change of the name of Pyot by marriage not to exclude. Pyot v. Pyot, 1 Ves. 335.

The testatrix, Miss R., had a brother, a widower advanced in life, who had assumed the name of R. G., and had two children, one a bachelor of unsound mind, the other a daughter. By her will she bequeathed a fund to trustees in trust to pay the income to her brother for life, then to his son for life, and from and after the decease of both of them upon trust to pay the income "for life unto any immediate or direct descendants of my said brother or nephew who shall bear the name of R. G. only, and from and after his or her decease, or in case of failure of any such immediate or direct descendants of my said brother or nephew who shall bear the name of R. G. only," upon trust for certain specified charitable societies. There was a clause for determining the interest of any descendants who, after becoming entitled to the receipt of the income, should abandon the name of R. G. Before the death of the nephew, a son, born after the death of the testatrix, of the daughter of the testatrix's brother, assumed by royal licence the name of R. G., and at the decease of the survivor of the brother and nephew there was no other descendant of either of them who bore that name:—Held, that the gift was not, as in Leigh v. Leigh (15 Ves. 92; 10 R. R. 31), confined to persons entitled to the name of R. G. by birth, and that the brother's grandson, as he bore the name of R. G. at the determination of the life interests, was entitled for life, and that on his decease the gift to the charities would take effect. Roberts, In re, Repington v. Roberts-Gawen, 19 Ch. D. 520; 45 L. T. 450—C. A. Affirming on this point 50 L. J., Ch. 265.

Claim of Illegitimate Next of Kin.]—A testator, who had none but illegitimate children, by his will, made five months before his death, devised and bequeathed all his real and personal estate to trustees, on the arrival of a future event, to sell the realty, and to divide the residue of the proceeds and of the personalty into four parts, and pay one to his son J., and if his son should die under twenty-one, and should not leave any child who should attain twenty-one or marry, the share was to be held in trust for such persons as would at his son's decease be his next of kin under the Statute of Distributions. The testator directed another share to be held upon certain trusts for the benefit of his daughter A. (a married woman), her husband, appointees, and children; and if she should leave no child or issue who should become entitled, he directed the share to be paid or assigned to such persons as would at A.'s death be her next of kin under the Statute of Distributions in case she had died intestate and unmarried. He directed the third and fourth shares to be held upon similar trusts for the benefit of his two other daughters, H. and E., then unmarried, their husbands, appointees, children, and next of kin. He then provided that any shares or moneys to which any or either of his three daughters should become entitled "by virtue of the provisions hereinbefore contained, as next of kin of the others or other of them," or of his son, should be held upon the like trusts as the original shares. The daughter H. having married and died without having had a child, and without having made any appointment, and her husband being also dead:—Held, that the phrase "next of kin" of H. could not be read as designating the surviving illegitimate children of the testator, and that there was an intestacy as to the share of H. Standley, In re, L. R. 5 Eq. 303.

Gift to Next of Kin of A. as if Dead Unmarried.]—A fund was devised to A. for life, and after her death to such persons as she should appoint, and in default of appointment to such persons as at the time of the death of A. would be entitled to her personal estate under the Statute for the Distribution of Intestates' Estates as if she had died intestate and unmarried. A.

subsequently married, and had eight children, but died a widow, and without having appointed the fund:—Held, that "unmarried" meant not having a husband at the time of her death, and therefore that the children of A., and not the persons who would have been entitled to A.'s personal estate if she had died without ever having been married, were entitled to the fund. Day v. Barnard, 1 Dr. & Sm. 351; 30 L. J., Ch. 220; 3 L. T. 537; 9 W. R. 136.

A testatrix gave a legacy to the sole and separate use of her daughter for life, with a power of appointment, and in default of appointment to her next of kin, "as if she had died sole and intestate, to the utter exclusion of her husband." This expression will not exclude a child of the daughter, but is to be considered as used for the sole purpose of excluding the husband. Hardwick v. Thurston, 4 Russ. 380; 6 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 124; 28 R. R. 130.

A married woman by her will bequeathed her separate property upon trusts for the benefit of her son and daughter and their children; and in case her said son and daughter should die without leaving children who should attain a vested interest under the will, upon trust for the person or persons of the blood and kindred of the testatrix who would be entitled to the same as her next of kin in case she had died intestate and unmarried. Upon the death of the testatrix, leaving her son and daughter surviving:—Held, that the word "unmarried" was not to be construed "without having been married," so as to exclude the testatrix's children; and that, consequently, the next of kin of the testatrix other than her children were not necessary parties to a suit for the administration of the estate. Coventry v. Lauderdale (Earl), 10 Jur. 793.

A testator bequeathed the residue of his moneys to trustees, in trust as to one-fourth for such person as his daughter C., notwithstanding her coverture, should by deed or will appoint; and in default, in trust to pay the interest to C. for her separate use for life; and after her decease, in trust for such persons as at the time of her decease should have been entitled thereto as her next of kin in case she had died possessed or entitled to the same intestate and unmarried. C. was married at the date of the will. She died leaving her husband and three children her surviving. No appointment of the fund was ever made in pursuance of the power. The husband and the brothers and sisters of C. claimed the fund, and thereupon the trustees paid it into court:—Held, that the word "unmarried" was used by the testator only to exclude the husband from taking any benefit under the will, and that the children of C. were absolutely entitled. Gratton, In re, 26 L. J., Ch. 648; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 684; 5 W. R. 795.

A testator bequeathed the residue to his wife for life, with remainder to his children living at his death; and if there should be none (which happened), then he directed, "that immediately after his wife's decease it should become the property of the person who should then become entitled to take out administration to his effects, as his personal representative," according to the Statute of Distributions, and in the proportions thereby pointed out, in case he had died intestate and unmarried:—Held, that the next of kin at the death of the testator, and not those at the death of the tenant for life, were entitled. Cable v. Cable, 16 Beav. 507.

A testator gave a legacy to his daughter for life, and in default of issue in trust "for her next of kin in blood as if she had died unmarried." The daughter died without issue:—Held, that the only surviving sister of the daughter was entitled to the legacy in exclusion of children of deceased brothers and sisters, for that the words "as if she had died unmarried" did not point to the mode of distribution in cases of intestacy, and that next of kin, therefore, must be taken as meaning nearest relations, and not persons entitled as next of kin according to the statute. Halton v. Foster, 37 L. J., Ch. 547; L. R. 3 Ch. 505; 18 L. T. 623; 16 W. R. 683.

A bequest was made, in a certain event, which happened, to "A.'s next of kin in blood, as if A. had died unmarried." A. left surviving her a sister and several nephews and nieces:—Held, that the sister, being A.'s next of kin in blood, was solely entitled, to the exclusion of the nephews and nieces. Ib.

To entitle the next of kin according to the Statute of Distributions there must, in order to take the case out of the authority of Withy v. Mangles (10 Cl. & F. 215; 10 L. J., Ch. 391), be an express reference to the statute, and not one which has to be spelt out of the words of the will. Ib.

A testator by his will dated in 1883, after disposing of a sum of 20,000*l.* in favour of his son and others, made an ultimate gift of that sum to the persons who would be the next of kin of his (the testator's) late mother if she had "died intestate without having ever been married." The trustees of the will paid the 20,000*l.* into court under the Trustee Relief Acts. In the events which happened the whole of the fund was claimed by the first cousin once removed of the testator's mother. She had died leaving one lineal descendant only, who opposed the claims of her first cousins once removed:—Held, that the words "died intestate without ever having been married" were clear and unambiguous; and that effect must be given to them by directing that the lineal descendant of the testator's late mother was, by the terms of the bequest, excluded in favour of her collateral next of kin. Watson's Trusts, In re, 55 L. T. 316.

Next of Kin construed Statutory Next of Kin.]—M. M. gave and bequeathed all her real and personal estate to her daughter L. for her separate use for life, remainder to L.'s husband for life, and after the decease of both of them, then to such persons as L. should by deed or will appoint, and in default "unto and to the use of the person or persons who at the decease of my said daughter shall be her next of kin according to the Statute of Distributions of Personal Estate, and in the like shares and proportions as if she had died without being married." The will further directed L. to appoint two trustees for the purposes of the will in whom the property was to be vested, and power to appoint new trustees was given to L. L. died in the lifetime of her mother, M. M., leaving her husband her survivor, but leaving no issue. At the death of L. her next of kin according to the statute were her mother and a nephew, who was thereby child of the only sister of L.; and upon the death of M. M. this nephew was the only next of kin of L. then living, and as such he claimed the whole real and personal estate of M. M.:—Held, on demurrer to a bill filed by the nephew, that the gift to the next of kin of L. had not lapsed; that the gift to the "next of kin" did not mean nearest of kin, and that the nephew was entitled to one-half of the property. Nichols v. Haviland, 1 K. & J. 504; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 891.

The term "nearest of kindred," with reference to the Statute of Distributions, has the same meaning as "next of kin." Markham v. Ivatt, 20 Beav. 57.

Testator, by will unattested, after, among others, charitable legacies, to be distributed by his executors, gave the remainder and residue of his estate, if any, and effects of what nature soever and wheresoever which he should be seised or possessed of, &c., "to next of kin or heir-at-law, whom I appoint my executor," after debts, &c., paid. He left one brother, and by deceased brothers a niece and several nephews, one of whom was heir-at-law. Distribution decreed according to the statute. Lowndes v. Stone, 4 Ves. 649; 4 R. R. 316.

Under a gift of residue to the testator's wife for life to her separate use, with an absolute power of appointing the principal by deed or will, and a gift, in default of such appointment, to her next of kin as in case of intestacy:—Held, that the gift of the principal had not lapsed by the death of the wife in the testator's lifetime, but that her next of kin according to the statute were entitled to the benefit of it. Edwards v. Salaway, 2 Ph. 625; 12 Jur. 487. Affirming 17 L. J., Ch. 329.

Exclusion of Husband or Wife.]—Residuary clause "to be divided amongst my next of kin as if I had died intestate" is a bequest to the next of kin as they would take under an intestacy; and the widow is not one of the next of kin in the ordinary sense, or in the sense in which the testator used the words. Garrick v. Camden (Lord), 14 Ves. 372; 9 R. R. 297.

Primâ facie bequest by a husband to his next of kin does not include his wife, nor does a similar bequest by a wife, under a power, include her husband. Id. 382.

Testator bequeathed 700*l.* to his daughter's husband, his executors, &c., in trust to pay the interest to his daughter for her separate use for life, and after her death to such persons as she should appoint by will, and in default of appointment to her personal representatives. The daughter died without having made any appointment:—Held, that her next of kin, to the exclusion of her husband, were entitled to the 700*l.* Robinson v. Smith, 6 Sim. 47; 2 L. J., Ch. 76.

Testator bequeathed the interest of 1,000*l.* stock to his granddaughter for life, and gave the residue of his personal estate to his wife. He then, after giving certain benefits to his daughter and granddaughter out of his real estate, directed that, in case both of them (his said daughter and granddaughter) should die without leaving children to attain twenty-one, the proceeds of the sale of the real estate, together with the said 1,000*l.* stock, should go to the persons who would have been entitled to his personal estate under the Statute of Distributions in case he had died intestate:—Held, that the right of the widow to the 1,000*l.* stock under the residuary clause was divested by the subsequent clause, although she was herself one of the persons who, by virtue of that clause, and in the event therein mentioned, were to share the 1,000*l.*; but held, also, that, until the event happened on which the gift was divested, she was entitled to all the dividends. Martin v. Glover, 1 Coll. C. C. 269; 8 Jur. 640.

Under a bequest, in the event of daughters dying without leaving issue, in trust for the persons who would at the time of the decease of such daughters respectively be entitled, as next of kin or otherwise, to the personal estate of such daughters respectively, under the statutes made for the distribution of intestates' effects:—Held, that the husbands of the daughters did not take. Milne v. Gilbart, 2 De G. M. & G. 715; 5 De G. M. & G. 510; 2 Eq. Rep. 999; 23 L. J., Ch. 828; 18 Jur. 611; 2 W. R. 611.

A testator disposed of his residue as follows: "The residue of my personal estate and effects not hereinbefore disposed of I propose to bequeath by a codicil to this my will, or otherwise to allow the same to go, to my next of kin, according to the Statute for the Distribution of Estates of Intestates." The testator made no codicil to his will. He left a widow and brothers and sisters, and the children of a deceased sister, surviving:—Held, that the testator showed an intention to die intestate in case he made no codicil, and that his widow took her moiety under the statute. Ash v. Ash, 33 Beav. 187; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 142; 9 L. T. 673; 12 W. R. 185.

Wife is not one of the next of kin under the Statute of Distributions. Horn v. Coleman, 1 Sm. & G. 169; 22 L. J., Ch. 779; 17 Jur. 408; 1 W. R. 194.

Bequest to A. for life, and afterwards to his children, and in default, "then" unto the persons "of the blood, or next of kin," of the testator "as would, by virtue of the Statute of Distributions, have become then entitled thereto in case the testator had died intestate." A. died without issue:—Held, that the class comprising the ultimate gift was to be ascertained on the death of the testator, and not of A., and that the class took as tenants in common, notwithstanding the exclusion of the testator's widow. Downes v. Bullock, 25 Beav. 54. Affirmed sub nom. Bullock v Downes, 9 H. L. Cas. 1.

Bequest upon trust for the testator's only child A. for her life, and after her death to be equally divided between his next of kin according to the Statute of Distributions:—Held, that the testator's widow did not take any share as one of the next of kin. Lee v. Lee, 1 Dr. & Sm. 85; 29 L. J., Ch. 788; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 621; 8 W. R. 443.

A father bequeathed a fund in trust for his daughter for life, with remainder to her next of kin according to the statute, but in exclusion of any husband. He also bequeathed a fund in trust for his son for life, with remainder to his next of kin according to the statute. The son died, leaving a widow and brothers and sisters:—Held, that as the testator had expressly excluded the husband of his daughter from sharing with her next of kin, but had not excluded the widow of his son, she was entitled to share with her husband's next of kin. Collins, In re, 36 L. T. 437.

Exclusion of one of Next of Kin taking Life Interest.]—A testator, after bequests of personal estate with a direction to convert, and a life estate to his daughter, gave as follows: "If there should be no child of my daughter who should live to attain twenty-one, or die under that age leaving lawful issue, then I give, devise, and bequeath the trust moneys and dividends unto my own personal representatives and next of kin for ever, to be assigned, distributed, and paid according to the directions of the statute passed for the distribution of the estates of persons dying intestate." The daughter was the sole next of kin at his death. On her death:—Held, that her administrator was entitled to the fund. Lang, In re, 4 L. T. 577; 9 W. R. 589.

Where, after specific limitations, a testator gives his property to his next of kin, much weight is not to be attached to that, which is supposed to be the testator's intention in favour of or against particular persons as his next of kin; for infinite variations may take place in that class between his will and his death. It is probable that a testator in such cases means to provide for particular persons, and then adds that, if they fail, then the law may take its course. Seifferth v. Badham, 9 Beav. 370; 15 L. J., Ch. 345; 10 Jur. 892.

Testator devised and bequeathed his real and personal estate to D. and G. upon trust to pay the income to D. for life, and after his death to pay the income to F. for life; and at her decease he directed the principal to be divided between his (the testator's) next of kin; but if no claimant appeared within twelve calendar months after deaths of D. and F., he directed the money to be paid to certain charities. D. and F. survived the testator, and at his death were his next of kin; excluding them, G. was his next of kin. On the question as to which of the persons would be entitled under the gift to the next of kin:—Held, that D. and F. were not excluded from taking under the gift. Gorbell v. Davison, 18 Beav. 556.

Testator bequeathed his residue to his wife for life, remainder to his daughter absolutely; but if his wife survived his daughter, then, at his wife's death, one-third of the capital was to go according to her will, and the other two-thirds were to go and be paid "to any other of the next of kin of my paternal line." The daughter was the testator's sole next of kin at his death; and exclusive of her, the testator's brothers were his next of kin at the same time; at the death of the widow (who survived his daughter) the daughter's children were the testator's next of kin according to the statute, but they and the testator's brothers were his nearest of kin, all of them being his relations in the second degree:—Held, that the brothers as well as the children were entitled to the two-thirds of the residue. Cooper v. Denison, 13 Sim. 290; 12 L. J., Ch. 404.

Bequest upon trust for testator's only child A. for life, and after her death to be equally divided between his next of kin according to the Statute of Distributions:—Held, that A. was not precluded from taking as next of kin, and that A., as next of kin at the testator's death, was entitled to the reversion. Lee v. Lee, 1 Dr. & Sm. 85; 29 L. J., Ch. 788; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 621; 8 W. R. 443.

Exclusion of Named Persons.]—Certain property was bequeathed by will to be held by trustees, in events which happened, "in trust for such person or persons as under the statutes for the distribution of the estates of intestates shall, exclusive of my said daughter C. L., and of my said grandchild C. G. and her issue (if any), then be my next of kin; such persons, if more than one, to take in equal shares as tenants in common." When the events happened, there were living the above-named daughter and grandchild, and a sister of the testator, and two nephews, sons of his deceased brother:—Held, that the effect of the will was to exclude the daughter and grandchild, and that the sister and nephews took in equal shares per capita. Taylor, In re, Taylor v. Ley, 52 L. T. 839—C. A.

Whose Next of Kin intended.] — Testatrix devised lands "to the next of kin of her father and mother, both deceased, his or her heirs and assigns, and if more than one, in equal shares." The testatrix being unmarried, and the only child of her parents, and the parents being strangers in blood to each other, there could be no person who was next of kin to both:—Held, however, that the testatrix meant the next of kin of both parents. Pycroft v. Gregory, 4 Russ. 526; 6 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 121.

A testator made certain bequests on the death of his wife, and directed that if the person entitled to claim any property by virtue of his will should die before he could prosecute his claim thereto, the property so falling to the deceased person should be divided amongst the nearest relations and next of kin:—Held, that the testator thereby intended not his own, but the next of kin of such legatee. Robson v. Ibbs, 6 L. J., Ch. 213.

Shares taken by Persons entitled.]—Where there is a bequest to persons who would have been entitled under the Statute of Distributions they take as if there had been an intestacy. Bullock v. Downes, 9 H. L. Cas. 1. Affirming 25 Beav. 54.

A father gave one-fourth of a fund to one of his four daughters by name for life, and after her death to her children then living; but if she left no child, then he directed that the interest should be paid to his other daughters then living and the survivors and survivor of them, and after the decease of the last survivor he directed the same fourth share to be divided among her children, "or if there be no such children, that the same be paid to such person or persons as will then be entitled to receive the same as my next of kin under the statutes for the distribution of intestates' estates." He declared similar trusts of the other fourth shares respectively in favour of his other three daughters respectively and their respective children, with the same ultimate limitations. One daughter died after the testator, leaving children; the other three afterwards died without issue:—Held, that the shares of the daughters who died without issue were divisible in fourths among the persons representing the four daughters. Mortimore v. Slater, 47 L. J., Ch. 134; 7 Ch. D. 322; 37 L. T. 520; 26 W. R. 134. Affirmed, sub nom. Mortimore v. Mortimore, 48 L. J., Ch. 470; 4 App. Cas. 448; 27 W. R. 575—H. L. (E.)

Bequest of 1,000*l.* stock in a certain event "to the person or persons who would, under the statute of distribution of intestates' effects, have been entitled to my personal estate in case I had not disposed of the same by will." The description of the legatees is not one of persons, but of interest, and therefore their shares will not be equal, but according to the statute. Martin v. Glover, 1 Coll. C. C. 262; 8 Jur. 640.

—— As Joint Tenants.]—Real estates were limited in remainder in trust for the next of kin of a married woman as if she had not been married:—Held, that next of kin took as joint tenants. Lucas v. Brandreth, 6 Jur. (N.S.) 945.

A bequest, after the termination of a life estate, to "such person or persons as shall happen to be my next of kin according to the statute for the distribution of intestates' effects" :—Held, that those persons took who were next of kin at the testator's death, and did so as joint tenants. Greenwood's Trusts, In re, 3 Giff. 390 ; 31 L. J., Ch. 119 ; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 907 ; 5 L. T. 487 ; 10 W. R. 117.

A testatrix having three daughters, gave one-third of a fund to each for life, with remainder to their children respectively, with cross-remainders between them, with an ultimate limitation to her own "next of kin and legal personal representatives" :—Held, that the class of next of kin was to be ascertained at the death of the testatrix, and that they took as joint tenants. Baker v. Gibson, 12 Beav. 101.

A., after giving all his real and personal estate to trustees for his children, directed his trustees, when any of his daughters should attain twenty-one or marry, to raise and settle, not exceeding 5,000*l*., upon each such daughter, in part of her presumptive share, in trustees of her own nomination, in trust for her for life, with remainder for her children ; and if all such children should die under twenty-one, in trust for the testator's next of kin. One of the daughters, having attained twenty-one, settled her 5,000*l*. upon herself and children, with a trust in default of children for the next of kin of the testator, according to his will. She died without having had any child :—Held, that the next of kin of the testator living at his death were entitled to the fund as joint tenants. Aspinall, In re, 30 L. J., Ch. 321 ; 4 L. T. 176 ; 9 W. R. 269.

—— As Tenants in Common.]—On a devise of copyhold and leasehold in trust for the son for life, and afterwards to assign "unto and among the person or persons who at the son's death would be entitled to his personal estate in case he should die intestate":—Held, that the widow and four children of the son took as tenants in common in equal parts. Richardson v. Richardson, 14 Sim. 526 ; 9 Jur. 322.

A testator bequeaths personal estate upon trust for A. for life, and afterwards to B. (if he shall survive) for life, after the death of the survivor upon trust for such person or persons as should at A.'s death be entitled thereto as the testator's next of kin under the Statute of Distributions. At A.'s death there were two next of kin to the testator :—Held, that they took as tenants in common, and not as joint tenants, the statute 22 Car. 2, c. 10, in this respect determining the mode of taking as well as the persons entitled. Horn v. Coleman, 1 Sm. & G. 169 ; 22 L. J., Ch. 779 ; 17 Jur. 408 ; 1 W. R. 194.

Next of Kin, Class of, when Ascertained.]—See post, col. 924.

1. Heirs.

Rule of Construction.]—The meaning to be given to the word "heirs" when it is used by a testator in a signification other than its ordinary one, must be gathered from the words and tenor of the will. Where a will, in which the word "heir" is used in different places, is only intelligible by interpreting the word "heirs" differently in different places, such interpretation will be given in order to give effect to the will. Powell v. Boggis, 14 W. R. 670.

Heir at Common Law or in Gavelkind.]—A testator seised of lands in common socage, and of other lands in gavelkind, desired everything to remain in its then present position during his wife's life, for her use ; and after her decease, devised his real estate to his then male heir and his heirs, in strict tail male :—Held, that the lands in gavelkind, as well as those in common socage, passed to the testator's heir at common law. Thorp v. Owen, 2 Sm. & G. 90 ; 2 Eq. R. 392 ; 23 L. J., Ch. 286 ; 18 Jur. 641 ; 2 W. R. 208.

Devise of leaseholds of gavelkind premises of inheritance (in one gift) to the "right heirs" of the testator :—Held, that the heir-at-law was entitled. Sladen v. Sladen, 8 Jur. (N.S.) 1075 ; 10 W. R. 597.

A testator made devise of gavelkind lands for lives and in tail, with remainder to his right heirs :—Held, that on failure of the particular estates the lands passed to the heir at common law, and not to the gavelkind heirs. Garland v. Beverley, 47 L. J., Ch. 711 ; 9 Ch. D. 213 ; 38 L. T. 911 ; 26 W. R. 718.

Heir Male.]—A. devises lands in trust, after debts paid, to convey the premises to the heirs male of the body of B. ; the testator's great-grandfather C. is the heir male of the body of B., but not heir general, there being a daughter of an elder brother who is heir general :—Decreed trustees to convey to C. Newcomen v. Barkham, 2 Vern. 729 ; Pre. Ch. 442, 461 ; Gilb. Eq. Rep. 116.

On construction of a devise :—Held, that the words "heirs male of the body of his great-grandfather" are good words of purchase to pass the estate to him who is heir male, though not heir general. Brown v. Barkham, 1 Stra. 35 ; 2 Eq. Ca. Abr. 215, pl. 14.

Heir male takes by purchase, though he is not heir general from the manifest intention of the will. Newcoman v. Bethlem Hospital, Ambl. 8.

The general rule is, that a person who claims as heir male to another by purchase must be complete heir male ; but in the case of a devise there may be exceptions to this rule from manifest intention of the testator. Id. 785.

Where there is a devise to the heirs male of the body of any person, he shall take an estate tail. Id. 793.

Where a person may take by the name of heir, though not heir general. Starling v. Ettrick, Pre. Ch. 54.

One seised in fee, devised land to his granddaughter for life, remainder to his right heirs male for ever, and dies, leaving his granddaughter heir-at-law, and his deceased brother's son his next heir male ; the devise of the remainder is void. Dawes v. Ferrers, 2 P. Wms. 1 ; Pre. Ch. 589.

Heir of a Particular Name.]—A. devised his estates to B., his son, for life, remainder to the first and other sons of B. in tail, remainder to his daughters as tenants in common, remainder to C. for life, remainder to D., the son of C., if living at C.'s death, for life, remainder to the first and other sons of D. in tail, remainder to the male heir for the time being entitled to a certain family estate, remainder to the first and other sons of such male heir, remainder to the testator's own right heirs of his name ; and he directed the residue of his personal estates to be laid out in lands to be conveyed to the same uses as his devised estates. B., his son and executor, did not lay out the personal estate as directed by the will, but by his will he directed that certain real and personal estates should be conveyed and assigned to the trustees under the will of A., upon the trusts of that will or such of them as could then be executed, adding, that he deemed such property an equivalent in value for the residuum of his father's personal estate; and he directed that the same should be settled and accepted accordingly. The real and personal estate were not conveyed or assigned according to the will. On the death of B. without issue, C. entered into possession of the real estate devised by both wills, and the personal estate bequeathed by the will of B. At the death of C. D. entered into possession of the same real and personal estate. D. died without issue, and at his death there was no male heir entitled to the said family estate:—Held, that the ultimate limitation in the will of A. to his right heirs of his name vested at his death, and not at the death of D.; that the co-heiresses-at-law of B. (or the parties claiming under them) were entitled to the real estate so devised by the wills of A. and B.; that, inasmuch as the estates were made equitable by the will of B., the court might properly send a case to a court of law, to try at the same time the right under the will of A. as well as under the will of B.; that the personal estate bequeathed by the will of B., though not actually converted, must be deemed to be converted into and to have descended as real estate. Wrightson v. Macaulay, 4 Hare, 487. And see S. C. at law, 14 M. & W. 214; 15 L. J., Exch. 121.

A testator having devised, after two life estates, "to my own right heirs of the name of H. T., if any such there shall then be":—Held, that a great-great-nephew named H. T., not being absolutely his right heir, though grandson of the right heir, did not take under the devise on the expiration of the life estates. Thorpe v. Thorpe, 8 Jur. (N.S.) 871; 10 W. R. 778.

Heir ex parte maternâ.]—One seised in fee, as heir of the mother's mother, devises the land to trustees in fee, in trust to pay several annuities, and the residue to go to the testator's right heirs on his mother's side for ever; the heirs of the mother's mother's side entitled to the estate and surplus of the profits after the annuities paid. Harris v. Lincoln (Bishop), 2 P. Wms. 135.

Parol evidence admitted to prove which heir was intended, viz., whether the heir of the mother's mother's side, or the heir of the mother's father's side. Id. 136.

F., having an estate which came to her ex parte maternâ, on her marriage conveyed the same to trustees to such uses as she should direct, with remainder to her own right heirs. By will she directed the estate to be sold, the money to be laid out in the funds, and the trustees to permit the husband to receive the interest for life; then, after the deduction of 3,500*l.* to uses which vested in the plaintiff A., and after payment of 1,000*l.* to G., to pay the residue of the purchase-money to the three defendants, H.; by codicil, she gave the plaintiff, her husband, a power of appointing the 3,500*l.* in case A. should marry without his consent. G. died, living the testatrix, before the codicil made, but F. in the codicil took no notice thereof. The 1,000*l.* is real, not personal, and shall not go to the executors of G. (though given to her executors), nor to the personal representative of the testatrix, nor yet to the residuary legatee of the purchase-money, but to the heir-at-law ex parte maternâ (the side from which the estate came). Hutcheson v. Hammond, 3 Bro. C. C. 128.

H. devised all his freehold and copyhold estates to D., his heirs and assigns, upon trust to sell certain specified parts thereof, and to apply the proceeds as therein mentioned, and as to all the rest, residue, and remainder of such real estate, upon trust to pay the rents, &c., to A. for life, and after her death upon trust to convey such residue to such person as should answer the description of his (H.'s) heir-at-law. At the time of H.'s death he was seised of certain copyholds not specifically mentioned in the will, which had descended to him ex parte maternâ. On the question between the heir-at-law and the heir ex parte maternâ of the testator as to who was entitled to those lands:—Held, that the descent was broken by the devise of the whole fee-simple to a trustee upon trust to convey to the testator's heir; the trustee was bound to convey to the person who was heir of the testator according to the common law. Davis v. Kirk, 2 K. & J. 391; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 875.

Under a residuary disposition to the testator's right heirs on the part of his mother, his sister and a nephew by a deceased sister were held entitled against remoter relations claiming on the ground of an express provision, by an annuity for the separate use of the sister. Forster v. Sierra, 4 Ves. 766.

Devise and bequest of real and personal estate to trustees, upon trust for the testator's daughter for her life (with power of sale on her consent), and, after her decease, for such person or persons as his daughter should by will appoint; and in default of such appointment, a devise and bequest of such real and personal estate to the testator's heirs and assigns ex parte maternâ, as if he had died intestate; and power (by a codicil) to sink any part of the personal estate, or proceeds of the sale of the real estate, in the purchase of an annuity for the daughter:—Held, upon a claim of the daughter against the trustees for the conveyance of the real estate to her, that the heir ex parte maternâ was the heir at the death of the testator, and that the daughter was such heir; and the court directed a conveyance to her accordingly. Rawlinson v. Wass, 9 Hare, 673; 16 Jur. 282.

A testator directed his household furniture, &c., to be sold, and the produce, with other moneys, to be laid out in stock, the interest to be paid to his wife for her life, and after her death the stock to be sold, and the half of the produce to be paid to C., eldest son of his niece E., and the other half to be divided equally between the children of E. Secondly, he left all stock, &c., of which he should die possessed, to his wife during her life, and after her death he directed the same to be sold, and 3,000*l.* of the produce to be paid to C., and the remainder to be divided equally between all the other children of his niece E., and he appointed executors. Thirdly, he devised his lands in France to his wife for life, and after her death the one half to go to C., and the other half to be divided equally between all the other children of his niece E., and he appointed an executor of his property in France; and he directed that his executors should not be liable for any loss which might happen in placing out his property according to the direction of his will, except for wilful neglect; and in case C. should die before he attained twenty-one, he directed that the said property and effects should go to his (the testator's) nearest heirs on his mother's side equally. E., the testator's niece, was his nearest heir both on his father's and mother's side, and his next of kin. C. died under age:—Held, that E., though heir and next-of-kin both on the father's and mother's side, took H. C.'s share under the third clause. Willomier, In re, 16 Ir. Ch. R. 389.

Held, also, "my said property and effects" in the third clause did not mean all the property of the testator, but was confined to the portion of it bequeathed and devised to C. Ib.

Held, also, that it applied to all the property which C. would have taken, and was not confined to the third clause. Ib.

Heir by Acknowledgment.]—The words in a will, "I acknowledge N., my second cousin, to be my next of kin and heir-at-law to all my real and personal property situate in the parish of M.":—Held, to be an effectual gift to N., who was, in fact, neither heir nor next of kin of the testator. Parker v. Nickson, 1 De G. J. & S. 177; 1 N. R. 298; 32 L. J., Ch. 397; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 451; 7 L. T. 813; 11 W. R. 533.

A codicil contained the following expression: "T. N., my second cousin, is my next of kin and heir-at-law, as my brother J. is dead, and has left no issue":—Held, that it could not be inferred from this that the testator was ignorant of the state of the family of another brother, who had left issue. Ib.

Heir Construed as a Persona Designata.]—Devise to the heirs male of S. begotten; S. having a son, and the testator taking notice that S. was then living, a sufficient description of the testator's meaning, and such son shall take, though, strictly speaking, he be not heir. Darbison v. Beaumont, 1 P. Wms. 229; Fortesc. 18.

Devise and bequest of real and leasehold estates to the devisor's widow and her heirs for ever, "in the fullest confidence that after her decease she will devise the property to my family":—Held, an estate for life only, with remainder in trust for the devisor's heir, as persona designata. Wright v. Atkyns, 19 Ves. 299—C. A. See also S. C., Coop. 111; 1 V. & B. 313; Turn. & R. 143; 13 R. R. 199.

Lands are limited to the second son in fee, provided that, if the eldest son die without issue, the second son should, within six months after such death of the eldest son, pay 1,500*l.* to the sister, or in default thereof the lands should go to the sister and her heirs. The eldest son dies without issue; the sister dies within the six months; her heir, and not her executor, shall have the benefit of this devise over. Winchelsea v. Wentworth, 1 Vern. 402.

A man having mortgages, one of which was a mortgage in fee of lands in D., on which he had entered, devises those lands to his two daughters and their heirs, and the other mortgages to them, their executors, &c. One of the daughters dies; her share of the land in D. shall go to her heir, and not to her administrator. Noys v. Mordaunt, 2 Vern. 582. And see Forrester v. Cotten, Ambl. 388; 1 Eden, 532. But see 1 Swan. 408, n.

Construction of a will, giving to the testator's daughter by the description of heir under his will the legacy of a legatee, who died during the testator's life, by way of special substitution, not merely by lapse to her, as the residuary legatee. Rose v. Rose, 17 Ves. 347.

Where in a will the word "heir" is used in a popular sense as a word of description, so as that the capacity to inherit is not of the essence of the description, the want of capacity to inherit is immaterial if the person meant is otherwise ascertained. Rittson v. Stordy, 3 Sm. & G. 230; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 771; 3 W. R. 627.

An infant en ventre sa mère, under a devise to heirs of the body of the devisor, begotten and to be begotten, cannot take by purchase the legal fee, the terms of description not amounting to a legal designation of him; but is entitled in equity, by virtue of the apparent intention, to the trust of a term attendant on the inheritance, though merged at law. Nurse v. Yerworth, 3 Swan. 608.

A testator gave a legacy of 2,000*l.* stock to his two daughters, each of them 1,000*l.*, the interest to be paid to them in equal shares for life; the rest of his property to his children in equal proportions. By a codicil he directed that, after the decease of his two daughters, "the property for which they are to receive during their lives the interest, which is to be for their sole and separate use, independent of any connections they may form, the stock shall become the joint property of the lawful heirs of my said children and executors in equal proportions, viz., one-fourth part to the heirs of my daughter Nancy; one-fourth part to the heirs of my daughter Lydia; one-fourth part to the heirs of my son John; one-fourth part to the heirs of my daughter Sarah":—Held, that the gift was a tenancy in common, and that on the death of Sarah the moiety of the legacy became distributable in four equal shares to the heirs of the parties named as personæ designatæ. Hansley v. Wills, 14 L. T. 162.

The words "next heir" occurring in a will in a bequest of an annuity for life to be enjoyed by the next heir to a certain title and estate:—Held, by reference to the context, not to have been used in their strict sense, but to mean the person next presumptively entitled to succeed to the title and estate. Dormer v. Phillips, 4 De G. M. & G. 855.

Lord Dormer by will gave successive estates for life, with remainder in tail male, in his mansion and hereditaments to E. P. D., J. T. D., J. D., R. D., C. D., M. D., and R. D., with the ultimate remainder to his own right heirs. The testator by a codicil gave to J. T. D., "his next heir after the death of E. P. D. without issue, an annuity of 150*l.* for life, to become due from the day of the testator's death; but in case he should become possessed of the title and estate, then the annuity should be paid to his next male heir for life, and so on successively to all the sons of the testator's brother J. D., so that the next heir to the title and estate should always enjoy this annuity. To his cousin R. D., eldest son of J. D., 50*l.* a year, from the day of the testator's death, for life, to devolve to his next brother, and so on, in case of his becoming possessed of the annuity of 150*l.*" The annuity of 50*l.* was paid up to 1826, when E. P. D., the first tenant for life, died without issue, and J. T. became Lord Dormer, and C. D. became next heir after him, and the annuity of 150*l.* was paid to him till 1852, when he died, and M. D., son of J. D., the testator's brother, claimed it, as also did J. B. D., son of J. T. Lord Dormer, and the bill was filed to determine that question:—Held, that neither the plaintiff nor the son of J. T. Lord Dormer was entitled, the annuities having both determined. S. C., 3 Drew. 39; 24 L. J., Ch. 168; 3 W. R. 92, 337.

A testator devised certain land to his sons successively for life, beginning with the youngest, "and so on from son to son till it arrives to the oldest son, then the said estate to be for ever enjoyed by the oldest surviving heir of his oldest surviving son then living for their life or lives for ever":—Held, that upon the true construction of the will, the intention of the testator was to give a life estate to the "heir;" that the word "heir" was not to be regarded as a word of limitation, and therefore that the rule in Shelley's Case (1 Rep. 93) did not apply, and that the testator's oldest surviving son took only a life estate. Pedder v. Hunt, 56 L. J., Q. B. 212; 18 Q. B. D. 565; 56 L. T. 687; 35 W. R. 371—C. A.

Devise to J., "to hold to him and the heir male of his body lawfully begotten, and the heirs and assigns of such heir male for ever":—Held, an estate for life to J., with contingent remainder to the person, if any, who should answer the description of heir male of his body at his death. Chamberlayne v. Chamberlayne, 6 El. & Bl. 625; 25 L. J., Q. B. 357; 4 W. R. 614—Ex. Ch.

Heirs Construed Children.]—Devise of freeholds to six persons, equally, for life, and after the death of the survivor to sell, "and the money to be equally divided amongst their several heirs":—Held, that their children, and not their heirs-at-law, were intended. Bull v. Comberbach, 25 Beav. 540; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 526.

A testator gave his residuary real and personal estate to his wife for life, and after her decease to his brothers T. and E., "or their heirs in proportion to the number of children each might have then living, share and share alike." At the death of the wife both the brothers were dead; and there were then living four children of T. and two of E.:—Held, that the word "heirs" meant children, and that the residue was divisible in sixths amongst the children living at the death of the wife. Roberts v. Edwards, 32 Beav. 259; 33 L. J., Ch. 369; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1219; 9 L. T. 360; 12 W. R. 33.

Personal property was bequeathed to trustees in trust for A. for life, and if she should have children that survived her then at her death for her children equally; but, if she should have no heirs, the trust fund was then bequeathed to B., who was A.'s mother, and her heirs:—Held, that upon the death of A., without having ever had any issue, the gift over took effect, and that B. and all her children, other than A., became entitled to the fund as joint tenants. Dakin v. Nicholson, 6 L. J., Ch. 329.

Testator gave his real and residuary personal estate in trust to pay an annuity to his nephew, and, subject thereto, in trust for his daughter for life, remainder in trust to pay the income for the maintenance of all and every such child or children as she might leave at her decease during his, her, or their minority; and when the youngest should have attained twenty-five, to pay, assign, and transfer the income, together with the principal, to the children, the same to be divided equally between them, share and share alike; but if any of them should die leaving a child or children who should attain twenty-one, then to pay and assign the share of such child to such his or their child or children; and the testator then expressed his further will to be, that his trustees should immediately after his nephew's decease, convey, release, and assign all his freehold and leasehold estates unto the heir or heirs who should be legally entitled thereto; and in case his daughter should leave no child or children, or they should die under age and unmarried, then in trust to pay and assign the income, together with the whole residue, unto and equally between his next of kin. The daughter left five children living at her death, all of whom attained twenty-five:—Held, that the trust for them was not void for remoteness, but that they took vested interests in the trust property on their mother's death. Milroy v. Milroy, 14 Sim. 48; 13 L. J., Ch. 266; 8 Jur. 234.

Bequest to A. for life, and after her decease to the testator's four children, the survivor or survivors of them, equally, or their heirs lawfully begotten. One of the four children died in the life of A.:—Held, that the children took one-fourth by substitution. Price v. Lockley, 6 Beav. 180; 7 Jur. 143.

A residuary estate was given to three brothers and a nephew, for their lives as tenants in common, and, after their decease, then in trust for their heirs and assigns as tenants in common. The will then contained provisions that the shares of any or either of their children dying under twenty-one without issue should go to the survivors, and that the share of such child as died under twenty-one, leaving issue, should go to the children of such child; but that in case one child only of the brothers and nephews should attain twenty-one or be married, then in trust for such child, his or her heirs or assigns:—Held, that the brothers and nephew took an absolute vested interest in the residuary estate, with an executory devise over in case of children being born. Spence v. Handford, 27 L. J., Ch. 767; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 987.

The testator directed the application of the surplus income of his estate for the maintenance of his children during their minority or apprenticeship, and the application of certain sums for their advancement, and after his youngest child should have attained twenty-one, he directed his executors to divide any surplus in their hands, every three years, during his wife's life or widowhood, and, after her death or marriage, every year equally amongst his children or their heirs, instead of any one that might happen to be dead, until the expiration of fifty years from the time of his death; and that at the end of the said fifty years, his executors should sell his remaining estate, and pay, discharge, or divide the money for the same amongst his children (naming them), or any of their heirs in their stead; and if any of his said children should die without lawful issue, such share or shares of those so dying to belong to the survivors or their lawful heirs equally:—Held, that the word "heirs" must be construed "issue," and not "children"; and that it was not a ground for departing from such meaning, that the consequence of adhering to it would be to render the will void for remoteness. Speakman v. Speakman, 8 Hare, 180.

Heirs of the Body Construed Children.]—Testator gave one-third of his residue in trust for his sister, the interest to be paid to her during her life, and the principal at her death to go to the heirs of her body, share and share alike. The sister had five children living at the testator's death :—Held, from the context of the will, that she took for life, with remainder to her children as tenants in common. Symers v. Jobson, 16 Sim. 267.

Where testator's intent appears plain, court will construe the words "heirs of the body" to be words of purchase. Bagshaw v. Spencer, 2 Atk. 580.

"Heirs of the body" have at law been considered as words of purchase, even in a deed. Ib.

On the construction of Serjeant Maynard's will heirs of the body were held to be in the sense of the first and every other son. Id. 582.

Devise to the testator's wife, after her decease to the heirs of her body, share and share alike, and in default of issue to be lawfully begotten by him, to be at her own disposal. He dies, and leaves six children by his said wife :—Held, that the wife took an estate for life only, and that each of the six children took a fee-simple in remainder, expectant on the determination of the mother's life estate, in one-sixth part as tenant in common. Gretton v. Haward, 1 Mer. 448.

W. H. by will, after giving several legacies, left the remainder of his property to his wife for life, to be invested in the public funds, and at her demise to be equally divided between his children and the heirs of their bodies. The estates were retained unsold, and a bill filed raising the questions, whether there was a direction to convert, whether a surviving trustee was liable for non-sale, or what was meant by "heirs of their bodies" :—Held, that there was a direction to convert; but inasmuch as loss was not caused by non-sale, the trustee was not liable, but the estate of the widow; and that the words "heirs of their bodies" meant "children," and were substitutionary, and the children of a deceased child were equally entitled. Pattenden v. Hobson, 17 Jur. 406; 1 W. R. 282.

In a devise "to the heirs of the body of A. and B. lawfully begotten, share and share alike, or to the survivor or survivors of them if more than one, and if but one then to such only child" :—Held, that heirs of the body must be construed children. Gummoe v. Howes, 23 Beav. 184; 26 L. J., Ch. 323; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 176; 5 W. R. 219.

Heirs Construed Next of Kin.]—Gift of personalty to A. for life, and afterwards to his children; and in default to the heirs of B. :—Held, that the next of kin were entitled under the ultimate limitation. Evans v. Salt, 6 Beav. 266.

A testator devised and bequeathed all real and personal estate to trustees, upon trust for certain persons for life, and afterwards for the heir-at-law of his family then living, whosoever the same might be :—Held, that the next of kin of the testator, according to the Statute of Distributions, took no interest under this gift. Tetlow v. Ashton, 20 L. J., Ch. 53; 15 Jur. 213.

Testator bequeathed 5,000*l.* in trust for his daughter A. for life, and after her decease for such child or children as she shall leave at her decease, in such shares as she should think proper; and in case she shall die leaving no child, which was the event, then as to 1,000*l.* for her executors, administrators, or assigns; and as to the remaining 4,000*l.* in trust for such person or persons "as shall be my heir or heirs-at-law." The 4,000*l.* vested in A., and the other two daughters of the testator, being his co-heiresses-at-law, and next of kin at his death. If that union of characters had not occurred, quære, whether the next of kin could not claim, and supposing the heirs intended, what description of heirs. Holloway v. Holloway, 5 Ves. 399; 5 R. R. 81.

A testatrix, after devising real estate to a devisee, "and to her heirs and assigns," bequeathed to her trustees 500*l.* upon trust to invest and pay the proceeds to R. for life, and in case (which happened) R. should leave no child living at her (R.'s) decease, "then I direct my trustees to divide the 500*l.* . . . amongst the heirs of my late brother" S. :—Held, that by the word "heirs" were meant the next of kin of S. according to the Statute of Distributions, together with the widow of S., if living at the testatrix's death. Steeven's Trusts, In re, L. R. 15 Eq. 100; 27 L. T. 480; 21 W. R. 119.

The meaning to be given to the word "heirs," when it is used by a testator in a signification other than its ordinary one, must be gathered from the words and tenor of the will. Powell v. Boggis, 35 Beav. 535; 14 W. R. 670.

Where a will, in which the word "heir" is used in different places, is only intelligible by interpreting the word "heirs" differently in different places, such interpretation will be given in order to give effect to the will. Ib.

A share of the produce of real and personal estate directed to be sold was given to a feme sole for her life, "and after her decease to her heirs, as she shall give it by will, and if she die without leaving a will, to her right heirs for ever" :—Held, that the words "right heirs" were to be construed executors and administrators. Ib.

Bequest of personalty "to the heirs of my late partner, for losses sustained during the time that the business of the house was under my sole control" :—Held, that the persons to take were those who, at the testator's death, would have been entitled, under the Statute of Distributions, to the personal estate of the deceased partner, in case he had died intestate, and not the heir-at-law strictly so called. Gamboa's Trusts, In re, 4 K. & J. 756.

A testator, after giving several sevenths of his personal estate to his living brothers and sisters "and their heirs and assigns" respectively, proceeded to give another seventh as follows: "To the heirs and assigns for ever of my late sister D., now deceased" :—Held, that the persons entitled to this last-mentioned seventh were the next of kin of D. at her death, according to the Statute of Distributions. Newton's Trusts, In re, 37 L. J., Ch. 23; L. R. 4 Eq. 171.

The testator, after giving the income of his residuary real and personal estate to A. for life, and after her decease to B. for life, directed his trustees then to sell his estates and divide the proceeds amongst "the following persons, or their heirs for ever: the grandchildren of C., the grandchildren of D., and the grandchildren of E." :—Held, that the word "heirs" was to be construed heirs according to the nature of the property; and it being in this case given as money, "heirs" was construed "next of kin"; that the grandchildren of C., D., and E., living at the death of the testator, and afterwards born during the lives of the tenants for life, and the next of kin of any of them who predeceased the surviving tenant for life, were entitled to the residuary estate, the next of kin of each deceased grandchild taking the deceased grandchild's share; that the words "for ever" did not alter the character of the persons who were to take, the only import of such words being that persons who were to take took absolutely. Doody v. Higgins, 9 Hare (App.) xxxii.; 1 W. R. 30.

Gift of residuary personal estate to be divided equally, share and share alike, amongst the following persons or their heirs for ever: to the grandchildren of A., also to the grandchildren of B., also the grandchildren of C. The court having previously held that the word "heirs" must be construed according to the nature of the property as "next of kin":—Held, further, that the "next of kin," according to the Statute of Distributions, including the widow, were entitled to take, and not the nearest of kin simply. S. C., 2 K. & J. 729; 25 L. J., Ch. 773; 4 W. R. 737.

Gift of personalty to A., and after his death to be equally divided among his legal heirs, is a gift after his death to his next of kin, according to the Statute of Distributions. Low v. Smith, 2 Jur. (N.S.) 344; 4 W. R. 429.

A testator, after giving all his residuary real and personal estate to his nephews, grandnephews, and nieces, directed his trustees to invest their shares according to their discretion, and to pay the income, or as much as might be necessary, for their maintenance until twenty-one, except A. L., and he to receive the interest until thirty, and then half to be applied, "at the discretion of the trustees," to assist him if they thought him capable, the remaining half to remain invested, and the income paid to him during his life, and at his death to be equally divided between his legal heirs. A. L. died under thirty, leaving a widow and heiress-at-law. Upon the questions what was meant by "legal heirs," and whether any part of A. L.'s share was undisposed of:—Held, that next of kin according to the statute was meant, and that no part of A. L.'s share was undisposed of. Ib.

A husband bequeathed his personal estate to his wife for life, and after her death "to be divided amongst my heirs and to their children with H. R. P., share and share alike." The testator had five brothers and sisters, some of whom died in his lifetime, leaving issue; others survived him and died in the lifetime of their mother, leaving issue:—Held, that by the word "heirs" was meant next of kin, exclusively of the widow; that it was a gift to a class to be ascertained at the testator's death, and consisting of the brothers and sisters living at the death of the testator, the children of brothers and sisters then dead, and H. R. P., and that those persons took vested interest. Peppitt, In re, Chester v. Phillips, 36 L. T. 500.

Heirs of the Body Construed Next of Kin.]—In a will, "heirs of the body":—Held, to mean next of kin. Pattenden v. Hobson, 22 L. J., Ch. 697; 17 Jur. 406; 1 W. R. 282.

Gift by will of personalty to trustees for the separate use of A., the daughter of the testator, for life, with remainder to the trustees for the benefit of the heirs of the body lawfully begotten of A., first to educate the said heirs, and lastly to pay to them the residue at their respective ages of twenty-one, in such proportions as A. should by will appoint:—Held, that the words "heirs of the body" must be construed next of kin, descendants of A. Jeaffreson, In re, 35 L. J., Ch. 622; L. R. 2 Eq. 276; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 660; 14 W. R. 759.

"Heirs or Next of Kin" Construed Next of Kin.]—Testator, by will unattested, after giving, among others, charitable legacies, to be distributed by his executor, gave the remainder and residue of his estate, if any, and effects of what nature soever and wheresoever, which he should be seised or possessed of, &c., "to next of kin or heir-at-law, whom I appoint my executor, after debts, &c., paid." He left one brother, and, by deceased brothers, a niece and several nephews, one of whom was heir-at-law:—Distribution decreed according to the statute. Lowndes v. Stone, 4 Ves. 649; 4 R. R. 316.

Testatrix bequeathed her real and personal estate to trustees upon trust to convert and pay one-third part to the "heirs or next of kin" of J. L., deceased. At her death she had only personal estate:—Held, that the description was intended to apply to one and the same class, and the gift was not an alternative gift, and that the description was sufficiently answered by the statutory next of kin of J. L. Thompson's Trusts, In re, 48 L. J., Ch. 135; 9 Ch. D. 607; 27 W. R. 378.

Heirs Construed Executors and Administrators.]—A testator gave real and personal estate to trustees, upon trust for his wife for life, and after her death to sell and divide the proceeds among his children, A., B., C., D., and E., "or their heirs or assigns," and recommended his children to settle by arbitration any dispute as to the construction of his will:—Held, that the gift to the children was absolute, and that the share of one of them, who survived the testator, and died in the widow's lifetime, went to his administrator. Walton, In re, 8 De G. M. & G. 173; 25 L. J., Ch. 569; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 363; 4 W. R. 416.

A share of the produce of real and personal estate directed to be sold was given to a feme sole for her life, "and after her decease to her heirs, as she shall give it by will, and if she die without leaving a will, to her right heirs for ever":—Held, that the words "right heirs" were to be construed executors and administrators. Powell v. Boggis, 35 Beav. 535; 14 W. R. 670.

Gift to A. or his Heirs—Next of Kin Entitled—Personalty.]—Legacy to A., "and failing him by decease before me, to his heirs." A. dies before the testator, having made a will containing a residuary bequest; the legacy belongs to the next of kin of A. living at the time of the testator's death. Vaux v. Henderson, 1 J. & W. 388; 21 R. R. 193.

A testator gave to the children of his sister, the late E. W., whose names he enumerated, "or to their heirs," certain legacies. Three of the children died in the lifetime of the testator:—Held, that the legacies to these children did not lapse, but that their next of kin took by substitution at the death of the testator. The same testator gave all the residue of his property in equal shares to each of his sisters M. S. and S. G., and upon their deaths respectively to their heirs. Both sisters died in the lifetime of the testator:—Held, that the next of kin of M. S.

and S. G., living at the death of the testator, were entitled by substitution to the gift of the residue. Gittings v. M'Dermott, 2 Myl. & K. 69; 2 L. J., Ch. 212.

Bequest of residue of personal estate to A. or his heirs, in such manner, however, as he might deem proper. A. died without making any disposition:—Held, that the property vested in the next of kin as tenants in common according to the Statute of Distributions. Jacobs v. Jacobs, 16 Beav. 557; 22 L. J., Ch. 668; 17 Jur. 293; 1 W. R. 238.

A bequest of personalty to certain persons "or their heirs for ever," the word "heirs" being a word of substitution, and not a designatio personæ:—Held, to denote, not the nearest of kin in blood, but those who, under the Statute for the Distribution of the Personal Estates of Intestates, would have been entitled to the personal estates of such persons if they had died intestate. Doody v. Higgins, 2 K. & J. 729; 25 L. J., Ch. 773; 4 W. R. 737.

The testator, after giving the income of his residuary real and personal estate to A. for life, and after her decease to B. for life, directed his trustees then to sell his estates, and divide the proceeds amongst "the following persons or their heirs for ever: the grandchildren of C., the grandchildren of D., and the grandchildren of E.":—Held, that the word "heirs" was to be construed heirs according to the nature of the property; and it being in this case given as money, "heirs" was construed "next of kin"; that the grandchildren of C., D., and E., living at the death of the testator, and afterwards born during the lives of the tenants for life, and the next of kin of those of them who predeceased the surviving tenant for life, were entitled to the residuary estate, the next of kin of each deceased grandchild taking the deceased grandchild's share; that the words "for ever" did not alter the character of the persons who were to take, the only import of such words being that the persons who were to take took absolutely. S. C., 9 Hare (App.) xxxii.; 1 W. R. 30.

Where there is a bequest to A. for life, and after his decease to B. "or his personal representatives," or a bequest to B., to be paid so many months after testator's death to B. "or his personal representatives," the courts have construed it simply as another way of giving B. a vested interest upon the testator's death, and B. dying before the testator, the bequest has been held to lapse; but if, instead of "personal representatives," the word "heirs" be used, it shows the testator intended the persons he designates his "heirs" to take by way of substitution whenever B. may die, and there shall be no lapse although B. should die before the testator. Porter, In re, 4 K. & J. 188; 27 L. J., Ch. 196; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 20; 6 W. R. 187.

Bequest of residue to A. for life, and at her death a legacy to B. "or his heirs":—Held, that the legacy to B. did not lapse by reason of his death in the lifetime of the testatrix, but that his widow and only child took by substitution. Ib.

A substitutional gift to the heirs of a legatee who dies in the testator's lifetime goes to the next of kin of the deceased legatee, and not to his personal representatives. Ib.

Of a policy of 1,200*l.* testator bequeathed 1,000*l.* to A., and 200*l.*, with all advantages and bonuses arising from the policy, to his wife. By a codicil the 1,000*l.*, was given in trust for A. and her children; and in case of her death without children, the 1,000*l.* was to become the property of the testator's widow, "or her heirs." The widow died, having bequeathed the 1,000*l.* (if A. died without issue) to B. A. died without issue:—Held, that the next of kin of the widow at the time of her death were entitled to the 1,000*l.* Craven, In re, 23 Beav. 333.

A testator directed that certain stock should after the death of his wife be divided among his "children then living, or their heirs." Two of the children were dead at the date of the will; three survived the testator and died in the lifetime of his wife; and two survived her:—Held, first, that the "heirs" of the children who predeceased the wife (including the two who were dead at the date of the will) were entitled to share in the fund along with the children who survived her. Philps, In re, L. R. 7 Eq. 151; 19 L. T. 713.

Held, secondly, that by "heirs" were meant the statutory next of kin of the children. Ib.

Held, thirdly, that such next of kin were to be ascertained, in the case of the children who survived the testator, at the time of the death of each child, but in the case of the children who predeceased the testator at the time of the testator's death. Ib.

A testator gave real and personal estate to A., charged with the payment of annuities to the testator's six children "or their heirs respectively":—Held, that the annuities were personal estate, and that the statutory next of kin of one of the six children who was dead at the date of will were entitled to one of the annuities. Parsons v. Parsons, L. R. 8 Eq. 260; 17 W. R. 1005.

A testator gave real and personal estate to his executors, and, after directing that certain legacies should be paid out of the proceeds of the whole, proceeded: "Whatever portion of my effects shall remain in the hands of my executors or the survivor of them, or, &c. (sic), after the payment of the above-mentioned legacies, I desire to be divided in the manner following, and giving two-thirds to the surviving sisters or sister of my wife or their heirs":—Held, that, the gift to heirs being substitutionary, the statutory next of kin of deceased sisters took under it, and not the heirs as personæ designatæ. Stannard, In re, Stannard v. Burt, 52 L. J., Ch. 355; 48 L. T. 660.

A testator gave his residuary personal estate to trustees upon trust for his wife during her life, and at her death for his children "or their heirs":—Held, that this was a substitutionary gift to the next of kin, according to the statute, of a child dying before the period of distribution. Finlason v. Tatlock, 39 L. J., Ch. 422; L. R. 9 Eq. 258; 22 L. T. 3; 18 W. R. 332.

A testatrix by her will gave a moiety of her personal estate in trust to be equally divided between two legatees, and afterwards by a codicil left the property, in the event of the legatees having no children, at their deaths to be equally divided to the children, or their heirs, of E. M. P. The original legatees having died without having had children:—Held, that the period of distribution was the date of the death of the survivor of the original legatees, and that, the gift to the "heirs" being a substitutional one, the property became divisible at that date between such one of the children of E. M. P. as was living both at the death of the testatrix and at that date, and the statutory next of kin of the remaining children of E. M. P. who, having been alive at the death of the testatrix, had died before the period of distribution. Neilson v. Monro, 27 W. R. 936.

Gift for life followed by a gift to the surviving children of B. and C., "or their heirs and assigns" :—Held, that "heirs and assigns" could not be read next of kin, and that all who survived the testator took vested interests. Hopkins, In re, 2 H. & M. 411.

—— Realty and Personalty Mixed.]—In wills of personal estate, where the word "heirs" is used, it will be considered as indicating "successors according to the quality of the estate," and consequently the next of kin of a party who dies entitled to a share of personalty will take. Preston's Trusts, In re, 1 N. R. 470; 8 L. T. 20.

Where a testatrix gave personalty, subject to a life interest, equally to her brother and five sisters, if alive, and, if not, to their heirs: that is, she meant a deceased sister's children to have one-sixth :—Held, that the next of kin, according to the statute, of those sisters who died before the period for distribution took their shares. Ib.

A testatrix by her will, dated 1836, gave all her personal property and also her real property to trustees on trust for payment of her debts and legacies, and subject thereto she gave "all her personal and real property as aforesaid," between her five sisters, nominatim, and the survivors of them, in equal shares during their lives and spinsterhood, and upon the death or marriage of all her said sisters she directed that her "property should be divided into equal proportions or shares between her brothers and sisters then living or their heirs." She had twelve brothers and sisters, of whom one brother died before the testatrix was born, one sister died before the date of the will, two brothers and one sister died in her lifetime after the date of the will, and the rest survived her. The last survivor was one of the five sisters named in the will who died a spinster :—Held, first, that (notwithstanding the will was before the date of the Wills Act) the word "or" in the gift in remainder could not be read "and," and that there was no intestacy. Wingfield v. Wingfield, 47 L. J., Ch. 768; 9 Ch. D. 658; 39 L. T. 227; 26 W. R. 711.

Held, secondly, that the word "heirs" must be construed distributively so as to mean heirs-at-law as to the real estate, and statutory next of kin (including widows) as to the personal estate. Ib.

Held, thirdly, that such heirs-at-law and next of kin were to be respectively ascertained, as regarded brothers and sisters who predeceased the testatrix at the death of the testatrix, and as regarded those who survived her at their respective deaths. Ib.

Held, fourthly, that the heir-at-law and next of kin of the brother who died before the testatrix was born were not entitled to share. Ib.

Held, fifthly, that the heir-at-law and next of kin of the sister who died before the date of the will, as well as the heirs-at-law and next of kin of the two brothers and the sister who died in the lifetime of the testatrix and after the date of the will, were so entitled. Ib.

A testator gave, devised and bequeathed to his wife all his property, real or personal, on trust for herself for her life, and after her death the whole of his property was to be equally divided among all his children, "or such of them as may be then surviving, or their heirs." The testator had five children, all of whom survived him. Of these children two daughters died before the wife, leaving children :—Held, that the word "heirs" had a twofold meaning, viz.: heir-at-law as regarded the real estate, and next of kin as regarded the personalty. Held, also, that the property was divisible in fifths—each surviving child of the testator taking one-fifth, and the heir-at-law and next of kin of each deceased daughter taking between them (according to the nature of the estate) one-fifth share. Wingfield v. Wingfield (supra) followed. Smith v. Butcher (infra) distinguished. Keay v. Boulton, 54 L. J., Ch. 48; 25 Ch. D. 212; 49 L. T. 631; 32 W. R. 591.

Heirs Construed Literally — Gift of Personalty.]—Where a pecuniary legacy is given by a testator to his "heir" the word is to be understood in its legal and ordinary sense, unless controlled by the context of the will, and the heir-at-law will take the legacy, and not the next of kin. In such a case it makes no difference that there are three co-heirs. Mounsey v. Blamire, 4 Russ. 384; 28 R. R. 133.

Goods devised to A. for life, and after the death of A. to the heir of B. B. dies in the life of A.: —Decreed, the goods should go to him that was heir of B. at his death, and not to him who was his heir at the death of A. Danvers v. Clarendon, 1 Vern. 35. And see Pleydell v. Pleydell, 1 P. Wms. 748.

A. gave all his personal estate, after payment of debts, to his wife for life, and upon her death he gave whatever should remain, after payment of various legacies, equally between the heirs of his late uncle N. and his aunt F., all of whom were dead at the date of the will :—Held, that the word "heirs" applied to the heirs-at-law of the three persons named, and not their next of kin. Rootes, In re, 1 Dr. & Sm. 228; 29 L. J., Ch. 868; 8 W. R. 625.

A testator bequeathed 2,000*l.* consols, to be divided between his children, when each of them attained twenty-one; but should neither of them attain that age, then he bequeathed the stock to his wife for her life, and afterwards to his "next heir-at-law" :—Held, that the heir-at-law, at the death of the testator, was the person entitled, and not the next of kin. Southgate v. Clinch, 27 L. J., Ch. 651; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 428; 6 W. R. 489.

Bequest of personal estate to "the children of A. during their lives, and on the decease of either of them his or her share of the principal to go to his or her lawful heir or heirs" :—Held, that "lawful heir or heirs" must be read literally, and not as meaning "next of kin," "executors or administrators," or "children." Mounsey v. Blamire (supra) disapproved of. Smith v. Butcher, 48 L. J., Ch. 136; L. R. 10 Ch. D. 113; 27 W. R. 281.

Personal estate was settled on a husband and wife successively for life, with remainder to their children, and, in failure of children, "then to the right heirs" of the survivor of the husband and wife :—Held, that under the last limitation, the heir-at-law of the survivor and not the next of kin was entitled. Hamilton v. Mills, 29 Beav. 193.

The words in a will in the Spanish language, made use of by the testator, an Englishman, were, "As regards the lands, &c., of which I am the possessor in England and Scotland, I direct that the whole may be sold, and that the amount thereof may be divided between and amongst the heirs I have there in accordance with English law." The property was the produce of a mortgage in fee in England :—Held, that the co-heirs of the testator were entitled, and not the next of kin. Caldcleugh, In re, 19 L. T. 377.

Testator bequeathed his residuary estate to his wife for life, his will continuing as follows : "And after the death of my said wife, I give unto my sister M. H., the wife of J. H., the sum of 1,000*l.* sterling, the same to become the property, at her death, of her heirs." J. H. survived M. H. (who died without issue), and by his will bequeathed the 1,000*l.* given to M. H. to X. and Z. on the subsequent death of the testator's widow :—Held, that the 1,000*l.* bequeathed to M. H. belonged to J. F., who was her heiress and next of kin, and not to X. and Z. Russell, In re, 52 L. T. 559—C. A. Reversing 53 L. J., Ch. 400.

—— Gift of Realty and Personalty mixed.]—Construction of the words "heirs" and "family," as applicable to dispositions of real and personal estate respectively. White v. Briggs, 2 Ph. 583 ; 17 L. J., Ch. 196.

Testator appointed his daughter-in-law his sole executrix, to have and enjoy all his real and personal estate, all the goods, cattle, chattels, enumerating several other articles of personal property, during her life, but not to diminish nor commit waste on the lands, and his nearest heir-at-law to enjoy the same after her death. An estate for life only in the whole, both real and personal estate, with remainder to the heir-at-law. Gwynne v. Muddock, 14 Ves. 488 ; 9 R. R. 327.

Testator devised all his estates in the funds of England, and all his manors, messuages, lands, &c., as well leasehold and freehold as copyhold, to A., B. and C., and their sons, in strict settlement, and ultimately to his own right heirs for ever, and empowered his trustees to invest the residue of his personal estates in the purchase of freehold lands in England, and to convey the same to such of the uses thereinbefore declared of his manors, messuages, lands, and premises devised by his will, as should be then subsisting. A. and B. died without issue in the testator's lifetime. C., who was his heir-at-law and executor, was living, but had no issue male. The testator's next of kin filed a bill against C., praying, amongst other things, for a declaration that, in the event of C. dying without leaving issue male, the plaintiff would be entitled to testator's personal estate. A general demurrer to the bill was allowed. De Beauvoir v. De Beauvoir, 15 Sim. 163 ; 15 L. J., Ch. 305 ; 10 Jur. 466. Affirmed 3 H. L. Cas. 524.

The words "next lawful heirs" in an ultimate gift of real and personal estate, construed in their strict sense as to the personalty and the heir-at-law, and not the next of kin, held entitled. Haslewood v. Green, 28 Beav. 1.

Devise and bequest of real and leasehold estates to the devisor's widow and her heirs for ever, "in the fullest confidence that after her decease she will devise the property to my family" :—Held, an estate for life only, with remainder in trust for the devisor's heir, as persona designata. Wright v. Atkyns, 19 Ves. 299 —C. A. See also S. C., Coop. 111 ; 1 V. & B. 313 ; Turn. & R. 143 ; 13 R. R. 199.

A testator devised estates to his trustees, to produce a maintenance out of the proceeds for his son John, who was born deaf and dumb, with a provision for his wife, if she should marry, and limitations in favour of his children if she should have any. He then limited divers estates for life and in tail, with the reversion "to his own right heirs." At the death of the testator, his son John was his heir-at-law ; the immediate estates failed :—Held, that although the testator had provided a maintenance for his son during life, as for a person incapable of taking care of himself, yet there was nothing to show that he was intended to be excluded from taking under the limitation to the testator's own right heirs. The equitable reversion in fee, therefore, vested in John. Observations on Cholmondeley v. Clinton, 2 J. & W. 5 ; 22 R. R. 84. Boidell v. Golightly, 12 L. J., Ch. 187 ; 7 Jur. 53.

H. J. by his will, dated September, 1838, gave the whole of his rents, profits and interest of all his estates, both real and personal, situate in B. M. and H., to R. H. during his life, and the issue of R. H. after his death as therein mentioned, and in the event of R. H. dying without issue, his will was, that the whole of the said estates, both real and personal, should go to the heir-at-law of his family, and he ordered his trustees to give up the whole of his estates, both real and personal, to such heir. Inquiries were directed by the decree made in the court below, for the purpose of ascertaining the particulars and locality of the testator's personal estate other than leasehold at the time of his death. The court affirmed the decree, being of opinion that there was no intestacy, and that there was at all events sufficient doubt upon that point to make the inquiries necessary. Horsfield v. Ashton, 2 Jur. (N.S.) 193—L.JJ.

Devise to Heir—Taking by Descent or Purchase.]—Devise to his son and heirs, but in case he should die without issue, not having attained twenty-one, then over. He attained twenty-one :—Held, he took by purchase, and not by descent. Scott v. Scott, Ambl. 383 ; 1 Eden, 458.

The rule that a man cannot make his right heir a purchaser, is confined to the estate of which he is seised. Robinson v. Knight, 2 Eden, 159.

If the same is devised to H. which he would have taken by descent, he is in by descent. Plunket v. Penson, 2 Atk. 293.

Testator devised his real estates to trustees, in trust to pay an annuity, and out of the residue of the rents to maintain S. W. (who was his heir), until he attained twenty-one, and on his attaining twenty-one, to convey the estates to him in fee ; but if he died under twenty-one, then to J. S. in fee. S. W. attained twenty-one :—Held, that he took the estates by descent. Wood v. Skelton, 6 Sim. 176 ; 2 L. J., Ch. 163.

A testator gave his real estate to his wife for life, and after her decease to his granddaughter, the only child of his deceased daughter, her heirs and assigns ; but in case she should die under twenty-one without issue, then over :—Held, that the granddaughter, who was the testator's sole heir-at-law, took at the death of the tenant for life, by descent and not by purchase. Manbridge v. Plummer, 2 Myl. & K. 93 ; 3 L. J., Ch. 82.

Devise and bequest of leasehold, freehold and copyhold estates to trustees, their heirs, executors, &c., upon trust to sell and pay debts, &c., and after payment thereof to pay and apply the rents, &c., to A. for life, and after his decease devising and bequeathing to the heir or heirs-at-law of B., and the heirs, executors, &c., of such heir or heirs to whom the trustees were directed to convey and assign accordingly; co-heiresses of B. being also co-heiresses of the devisor, take not as coparceners by descent, but as joint tenants by purchase; and, therefore, subject to survivorship. Swaine v. Burton, 15 Ves. 365.

Heir, being also devisee, takes by purchase, not by descent, if the devised estate is not of the same nature. Id. 371.

When a testator directs that his estates shall descend as if he died intestate, the heir-at-law takes by his title by descent. Walcott v. Bloomfield, 2 Con. & L. 577; 4 Dr. & War. 211; 6 Ir. Eq. R. 227.

Where lands were devised to the heir, subject to the payment of an annuity:—Held, that notwithstanding he would take by descent, the devise to him could not be treated as a mere nullity, nor deprive him of any benefit intended by the testator, and as between him and other devisees, the estates devised to him were not to be applied in payment of debts in priority of the estate devised to the latter. Biederman v. Seymour, 3 Beav. 368; 10 L. J., Ch. 177.

Limitation to Heir where no Estate in Ancestor.]—A testatrix, after giving estates tail to the then existing descendants of Sir T. S. by his first wife, devised as follows: "And for default of all such issue, then upon trust for the right heirs of my grandfather Sir T. S., deceased (the father of my late uncle Sir T. S.), by Mary his second wife, also deceased, who was the daughter of Sir G. C., for ever":—Held, that this was a limitation of an estate tail to the heirs of Sir T. S. by Mary, his second wife, and not of an estate in fee. Vernon v. Wright, 7 H. L. Cas. 35; 28 L. J., Ch. 198; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 1113.

Devise "to the right heirs of my grandfather S., deceased, by M. his second wife, also deceased, for ever":—Held, that the estate tail was not enlarged into an estate in fee by the use of the words "for ever." Ib.

Devise of lands to A. for ninety-nine years, if he should so long live, and after the determination of the term to the heirs of the body of A., and in default of such heirs over:—Held, an estate tail in the heir of the body of A. as an executory devise. Harris v. Barnes, Ambl. 666; 1 W. Bl. 643; 4 Burr. 2157.

Where there is a devise to the heirs male of the body of any person, he shall take an estate tail. Newcoman v. Bethlem Hospital, Ambl. 793.

"Next Nearest Heir."]—A testator (passing over his heir-at-law, the son of his deceased eldest brother) gave 1,000*l.* to the testator's father for life, and after his death to be continued to the testator's younger brother, and proceeded thus: "And after his death to be continued to my next nearest heir, and so on. This property is not meant to be disposed of by any of the family":—Held, that the ultimate limitation was void for uncertainty. Thomason v. Moses, 5 Beav. 77; 6 Jur. 403.

Devise of Real Estate to "Persons entitled according to Statute of Distributions"—Trust for Heir-at-Law.]—A conveyance to trustees without words of inheritance, of the share and interest, to which the conveying party is entitled under a will, passes a life estate only in so much of the property as consists of real estate. A devise of real estate in trust for the persons "who would have been entitled thereto" according to the Statutes of Distribution, creates a trust for the heir-at-law. Hudson, In re, Kühne v. Hudson, 13 R. 546; 72 L. T. 892.

m. Assigns.

Heirs and Assigns.]—A gift of a remainder to a person, her heirs and assigns, is a limitation to such uses as she shall appoint; and in default of appointment, to her heirs by way of purchase. Quested v. Michell, 24 L. J., Ch. 722; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 488; 3 W. R. 435.

A testator gives all his property to trustees upon trust to pay debts and legacies and to invest the residue in stock, thereout to pay certain annuities; and subject thereto he gives and bequeaths all his said residuary personal estate, and also all his freehold and copyhold messuages, lands, tenements and hereditaments, and real estate, as to one-sixth to L., his heirs, executors, administrators and assigns; as to one other sixth to H., daughter of C., in the same words; as to one other sixth in trust for W. C. and his assigns for life, and not by way of anticipation, remainder to his children; as to one other sixth in trust for M. B., wife of W. B., for life, without power of anticipation, upon trust, after payment thereout, for the heirs, executors, administrators and assigns of M. B.; as to one other sixth in trust for H. W., in the same words; and as to the remaining sixth part thereof in trust during the life of L. M., subject to payments thereout, to pay the clear rents to L. M. and her assigns, not by anticipation, during her life, and from and immediately after her decease upon trust for the heirs, executors, administrators and assigns of the said L. M. according to the several natures and qualities thereof:—Held, that M. B., H. W. and L. M. took an absolute interest in both the real and personal estate. Ib.

Gift for life followed by a gift to the surviving children of B. and C., "or their heirs and assigns":—Held, that "heirs and assigns" could not be read next of kin, and that all who survived the testator took vested interests. Hopkins, In re, 2 H. & M. 411.

Under a devise of real estate, in trust for the testator's widow for her life, and at her death to sell the property, and divide the proceeds among the testator's five children, by name, "or their heirs or assigns":—Held, that the children took absolutely on the death of the testator. Walton, In re, 8 De G. M. & G. 173; 25 L. J., Ch. 569; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 363; 4 W. R. 416.

Gift to A. "or to his Heirs, Executors, Administrators or Assigns."]—A testator, who had long resided in India, gave a legacy "to T. P., who resided at A. when I left England, or to his heirs, executors, administrators or assigns." T. P. died in the testator's lifetime:—Held, that the bequest was void for uncertainty. Waite v. Templer, 2 Sim. 524; 29 R. R. 161.

n. Servants.

Who included—Servants Hired by the Year.]—A bequest of a year's wages, to each of the testator's servants, over and above what may be due to them at the time of the testator's decease, applies to such servants only as are usually hired by the year. Booth v. Dean, 1 Myl. & K. 560; 2 L. J., Ch. 162.

A bequest of a year's wages to each of the servants of the testator living with him at his decease, who should then have lived three years in his service:—Held, not to exclude servants of the testator living in a different house from that in which the testator lived, but to exclude servants not hired by the year; and held, therefore, that a gardener, employed at weekly wage (although paid at irregular intervals), was not entitled to the benefit of the bequest. Blackwell v. Pennant, 9 Hare, 551; 22 L. J., Ch. 155; 16 Jur. 420.

Whether the words "living with me," as applied to servants, should not be understood "living in my service," quære. Ib.

A legacy of a "year's wages" cannot properly be construed to mean the aggregate of the weekly wages of a servant for fifty-two weeks. Ib.

—— Occasionally Employed.]—Under a bequest to the testator's "servants in his service at the time of his decease":—Held, that the outdoor servants, continually employed at weekly wages, were entitled, but that a boy employed a few months in the year, whilst the testator was at his country residence, at weekly wages, to carry letters to the post, and who was so employed at the testator's death, was not entitled. Thrupp v. Collett, 26 Beav. 147; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 111.

"Household Servants" confined to Domestic Servants.]—A testator gave to each of his "household servants" who should have been in his service for one year previously to his death six months' wages, free of legacy duty, in addition to the ordinary wages that might be due to him or her respectively. The servants who had been in the testator's service the requisite time, in addition to the maid servants resident in the house, were a coachman who lived in a cottage adjoining the pleasure grounds, a groom who occupied a room over stables in the park and close to the house, and another groom who also occupied a room over the stables:—Held, that household servants had the same meaning as domestic servants, and that the coachman and grooms were not entitled to the gift. Ogle v. Morgan (infra) followed. Drax, In re, Savile v. Yeatman, 57 L. T. 475.

Jobbed Coachman.]—Under a general bequest to servants, a coachman (provided with the carriage and horses by a job master, according to the usual course of that business) not entitled. Chilcot v. Bromley, 12 Ves. 114.

Steward residing out of House.]—A. devises a year's wages to such of his servants as shall be living with him at his death. Stewards of court and such who are not obliged to spend their whole time with master are not entitled, but only such servants as live in house and have diet from master. Townshend v. Windham, 2 Vern. 546.

A. acted as the land agent and house steward of a testator, but he resided out of the house:—Held, that he was entitled under a bequest "to all my servants and day labourers, who shall be in my service at the time of my death, one full year's wages." Armstrong v. Clavering, 27 Beav. 226.

Farm Bailiff.]—A testator gave one year's wages in advance to each of his servants in his service at his death who should have lived with him five years or upwards:—Held, that a farm bailiff was a servant within the meaning of the testator's will, and that the plaintiff, being such farm bailiff living with the testator at the time of his death, and having lived the required time in his service, was entitled to a year's wages. Bulling v. Ellice, 9 Jur. 936.

Gardener at Weekly Wages.]—A testator, by his will, gave to each person as a servant in his domestic establishment at the time of his decease a year's wages beyond what should be due to him or her for wages:—Held, that a head gardener, who lived in one of the testator's cottages and was not dieted by the testator, was not entitled to a year's wages under the will. Ogle v. Morgan, 1 De G. M. & G. 359; 16 Jur. 277. Reversing 19 L. J., Ch. 531.

The mere temporary absence of the gardener would not have precluded him from claiming the legacy had he come within the description. Ib.

A. bequeathed to each of his servants who should be living in his service for six months previously to his decease the amount of one year's standing wages. B. had been living in the service of A. as a gardener for more than six months at a rate of wages payable by weekly allowance in money, and by the use of a house and certain rations, calculated to amount to 52*l.* a year:—Held, that B. was not entitled to any legacy under the above bequest. Breslin v. Waldron, 4 Ir. Ch. R. 333.

Gift on Condition of Continued Service.]—A testator directs that his executors pay to A. B. a yearly sum as wages, so long as she should continue in his wife's service; and if she should continue in such service, that the payment should be made to her quarterly, free from all deductions, to cease in case she should leave the service of his wife, until the decease of his wife. The testator's wife died in his lifetime:—Held, that A. B. was entitled to the annuity during her life. Burchett v. Woolward, Turn. & R. 442.

A. bequeathed a legacy to V. in case she should be in his service at his decease. A. was shortly afterwards removed to a lunatic asylum, and V., who was a yearly servant, voluntarily quitted the house, receiving from the family her wages up to the end of the year, which did not expire till after the death of the testator:—Held, that she was not entitled to the legacy. Serres, In re, Venes v. Marriott, 31 L. J., Ch. 519; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 882; 6 L. T. 892; 10 W. R. 751.

Bequest of a legacy to the servant of the testatrix, in consideration of her long and faithful services, to be paid within twelve months after her decease, provided "she remains in my service till my death." The servant was in the service of the testatrix for twenty-one years, when one of the next of kin of the testatrix caused the testatrix to be removed to a lunatic asylum, and upon her own authority dismissed the servant, who was desirous to continue in the service of her mistress. Subsequently an order in lunacy was obtained by the next of kin, by which it was declared that the testatrix had been ascertained to be of unsound mind, and her furniture and effects were directed to be sold :—Held, that the order in lunacy operated as a dismissal of the servant, and that the conditional legacy to her therefore failed. Hartley, In re, 47 L. J., Ch. 610 ; 26 W. R. 590.

Legacy to A., if in the testator's service at the time of his decease ; parol evidence admitted to show that, though she had quitted his house, she continued and was by him considered as in his service, and upon that evidence the legacy was established. Herbert v. Reid, 16 Ves. 481.

—— "In Service" — What is. — A master bequeathed an annuity to his servant Sarah, "provided she shall be in my service at the time of my decease," and a few days before his decease he, without cause, dismissed her from his service, and at his death she was not in his service :—Held, that she was not entitled to the legacy. Darlow v. Edwards, 1 H. & C. 547 ; 32 L. J., Ex. 51 ; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 336 ; 6 L. T. 905 ; 10 W. R. 700—Ex. Ch.

"With me or in my Service"—Gardener of House Let for a Time.]—Sir F. B., by his will, directed his executors to pay to each of his domestic servants who should be with him or in his service at the time of his decease such sum of money as should be equivalent to two years of the then annual amount of their respective wages. A. was the gardener of Sir F. B. at a mansion where Sir F. B. formerly resided, but which for a short time previously to and at the time of the decease of Sir F. B. was let by Sir F. B. to Lady M. for a short term. A., however, had never ceased to be the servant of Sir F. B., but had the charge and management of the gardens at the mansion, for which he received an annual sum from Sir F. B. in addition to his yearly wages. A. was not resident in the mansion, but resided in a cottage in the garden, in the same manner as he did when the mansion was inhabited by Sir F. B. : —Held, following Ogle v. Morgan, supra, that A. was not entitled to a legacy as coming within the description of "a domestic servant of the testator living with him or in his service at the time of his death." Vaughan v. Booth, 16 Jur. 808.

"To Servants in my Service and to my Gardener."]—A testator, who died in 1883, by his will, dated in 1876, gave legacies to his servants in the following terms : "To each of my servants who shall at my death have been in my service twelve calendar months, or longer, one year's wages, in addition to anything owing by me, and to my gardener, Peter Grieve, 300*l.* in addition." In 1880 Peter Grieve, who had been in the testator's service for over thirty years, relinquished his situation, and when he did so the testator sent him 100*l.* The question was whether Peter Grieve was entitled to the legacy of 300*l.* :—Held, that the words "and to my gardener," &c., were governed by the condition that the servant should have been in the testator's service during twelve months preceding the testator's death, and as Peter Grieve had not fulfilled that condition, he was not entitled to the legacy. Benyon, In re, Benyon v. Grieve, 53 L. J., Ch. 1165 ; 51 L. T. 116 ; 32 W. R. 871.

Servants entering or quitting Service after Date of Will.]—Testator, by his will, bequeathed as follows : "My office and warehouse employés, such as clerks and workmen, shall have to receive six months' full salary" :—Held, that the persons to take were the employés in the service of the testator at the time of his death. Marcus, In re, Marcus v. Marcus, 56 L. J., Ch. 830 ; 57 L. T. 399.

Under a bequest of "500*l.* each to the other servants," a servant who quitted the service after the date of the will was held entitled. Parker v. Marchant, 2 Y. & C. C. C. 279 ; 12 L. J., Ch. 314 ; 7 Jur. 457—C. A .

S., by will, directed his trustees to pay to each man who should have been in his employment in London over ten years the sum of 10*l.* for each year beyond the said ten years :—Held, that a man who had been fifteen years in the testator's employment, but was not in such employment at the date of the testator's death or at the date of the will, was entitled to a legacy of 50*l.* Sharland, In re, Kemp v. Rozey, 65 L. J., Ch. 280 ; [1896] 1 Ch. 517 ; 74 L. T. 20.

——Alteration in Number.]—Bequest to the two servants that should live with testatrix at her death ; she had three at that time, and all of them were held entitled. Sleech v. Thorington, 2 Ves. 560.

o. Personæ Designatæ and Persons Filling a Particular Description.

i. Error in Name or Description.

Gift good notwithstanding.]—Mistake in the description of legatees, yet legacy :—Held, good, and took place according to intention. Bradwin v. Harper, Ambl. 374.

A wrong description of a legatee will not defeat a legacy given to him by name. Standen v. Standen, 2 Ves. 589.

Bequest of 800*l.* to the four eldest children of the testatrix's cousin, A. B., and 200*l.* to the three remaining children of her uncle A. B. The testatrix had a cousin and an uncle of that name. The cousin had seven children, and the uncle but one, but he had three remaining grandchildren, one other having died :—Held, that the three younger children of the cousin were entitled to the 200*l.* Bristow v. Bristow, 5 Beav. 289.

Testator gave 100*l.* in trust to pay the interest to A. till her daughter B. should attain twenty-four, and then he gave the said 100*l.* and the interest then due to her said mother A. :—Held, a mistake, and decreed the legacy to be paid to the daughter at the age of twenty-four. Clarke v. Norris, 3 Ves. 362.

Legatee's name very falsely spelt ; referred to a Master to see who was intended. Masters v. Masters, 1 P. Wms. 425.

The christian name of legatee was mistaken in will ; legacy was established on evidence, &c., after great delay in filing bill. Smith v. Coney, 6 Ves. 42.

Legatee entitled, notwithstanding a mistake in his name. Campbell v. French, 3 Ves. 322 ; 4 R. R. 5.

Legatee's both christian and surnames mistaken, yet the legacy is good. Beaumont v. Fell, 2 P. Wms. 141.

One name may be substituted for another in the construction of a will where it is manifest not only that the name used was not intended, but that a certain other name was necessarily intended. Dent v. Pepys, 6 Madd. 350 ; 23 R. R. 239.

Error in Name.]—Testator, by his will, in his own handwriting, devised an estate to Ann Aspinall and her heirs, if she should be then living; but if not, then to her issue and their heirs. He afterwards made a codicil commencing thus: "This is a codicil to the last will and testament of me, J. S., and which will I some time since made in my own handwriting, and thereby devised to John Aspinall as therein mentioned." At the date of the codicil Ann Aspinall had a son named John. Part of the testator's estates having been sold in pursuance of a direction in the will, the purchaser objected to the title, on the ground that the reference in the codicil afforded strong presumption of the existence of a subsequent will. But, as the will contained a gift which might take effect in favour of John Aspinall, the objection was overruled. Howarth v. Smith, 6 Sim. 161.

Bequest to "the two daughters of Sergeant-Major Gill, late of the 2nd Dragoon Guards, and who was lately stationed at N. barracks, and who is married to my cousin, M. A. M., the sum of 400*l.*, to be equally divided between them." M. A. M. was not cousin to the testatrix; she was the testatrix's father's stepdaughter; but they had been brought up together, and sometimes called each other cousins, sometimes sisters. M. A. M. was married to Sergeant Simons, by whom she had two daughters: Raynah, married to Sergeant-Major Gill, 3rd Dragoon Guards (which regiment had been stationed at N. barracks, shortly before the date of the will), and who had one daughter, an infant; and Rachel, married to Adams:—Held, on the evidence of statements made by the testatrix with reference to herself (M. A. M.) and her husband's name, that the testatrix, when making her will, had mistaken the name "Gill" for "Simons," and that Raynah and Rachel, the daughters of M. A. M., were entitled to the legacy. Baxter v. Morgan, 7 L. R., Ir. 501.

Administration granted to Andrew Carroll, of R., as universal legatee, although named in the will "Matthew Carroll, of R.," on satisfactory evidence of the mistake, and that there was no such person as "Matthew Carroll" living at R. Murphy, In goods of, 7 L. R., Ir. 561.

"Bequest to Miss Sarah Jameson"; there was no Miss Sarah Jameson. The testatrix was acquainted with Mrs. Sarah Jameson and her daughter Miss Frances Ann Jameson. Miss Frances Ann Jameson was held to be entitled to the legacy. Lee v. Pain, 4 Hare, 253; 14 L. J., Ch. 346; 9 Jur. 247; and see Id. 24.

A father, by his will, appointed his son, "Forster Charter," his executor, and made him his general devisee. At the date of the will he had two sons, William Forster Charter and Charles Charter. Another son, who was named Forster Charter, had died many years before. The elder son was usually called Willie, never Forster. He for many years had lived one hundred miles or more away from his father, was married, and he carried on an independent business as a butcher. The younger son, Charles, lived with his father and mother, working on their farm. The will directed the "executor, Forster Charter," to pay to the testator's wife an annuity of 10*l.*, and to allow her ordinary maintenance "so long as they reside together in the same house. . . . . But should they think proper to live separately, then, besides the annuity and the maintenance, 'Forster Charter' shall allow my wife, rent free, the use of the cottage," which adjoined his house. Any difference between the executor and widow as to the latter's maintenance was to be referred to the arbitration of a person named, who lived near the farm. On the hearing of the case, the evidence of the testator's intention to make Charles Charter his executor and devisee was admitted:—Held, that such evidence was not admissible, but that from the words "so long as they reside together," and from the other directions above mentioned, there was enough to show that the testator intended to name his younger son Charles, and that the demonstration of the legatee thus afforded must prevail over the incorrect description of the legatee by the name "Forster Charter." Charter v. Charter, 43 L. J., P. 73; L. R. 7 H. L. 364—H. L. (E.)

A testatrix, without professional assistance, made her own will and named Robert John M. (the eldest son of her brother) her executor. She then created two annuities of 50*l.* each in favour of two persons, and made a gift to a third, but in terms which left it doubtful whether the gift was of that specific sum, or of an annuity to that amount. She then proceeded thus: "My dear nephew John Henry M., of H., surgeon, but late of Calcott Hall, the above bequests to fall into his hands; and should he not marry, to be divided equally between Samuel M., John M., and Mary D.," formerly Mary Margaret M., but then a married woman, "all of them late of Calcott Hall, must each receive 50*l.*, the residue to fall into my above-named executor's hands." There was a son Thomas, born between Samuel and Mary, but there was no son named only John, the second nephew John Henry, and unmarried. The others survived him:—Held, that a court of justice could not safely arrive at the conclusion, that the words "John M." in the last stated gift were written by mistake for "Thomas M.," either on the ground that if "John M." meant John Henry M. there would be two inconsistent provisions for his benefit, or on the ground that the testatrix evidently intended to benefit all the children, and that in regular order of seniority the name of Thomas M. would have come in that place. Mostyn v. Mostyn, 5 H. L. Cas. 155; 23 L. J., Ch. 925. Affirming 3 De G. M. & G. 140.

A testator devised his estates on trust for "the second son of Edward Weld, of Lulworth," for life, with remainders to his sons successively in tail male, with like remainders to the third and other sons (except the eldest) of the said Edward Weld, and their sons; with remainders to the first and other sons of each brother (except the eldest brother) of the said Edward Weld successively in tail male; with like remainders to the second and other sons (except the eldest) of Lady Stourton, "one of the sisters of the said Edward Weld." There was not, at the date of the will or death of the testator, any such person as Edward Weld, of Lulworth, but it appeared, from evidence as to the state of the Weld family, that Joseph Weld was the then possessor of Lulworth; that he had an eldest brother living; that Lady Stourton was one of his sisters; and that he had an eldest son named Edward Joseph, commonly called Edward, and a second son named Thomas, both unmarried:—Held, that the descriptions of the unnamed devisee, taken with the whole context of the will, and with the evidence of the state of the Weld family, clearly designated the second son of Joseph Weld, and that he was entitled, as tenant for life in possession, to the devised estates. Camoys (Lord) v. Blundell, 1

H. L. Cas. 778. Affirming 1 Ph. 279; 12 L. J., Ch. 225; 7 Jur. 269.

Right Name Substituted by Court.]—A father gave the residue of his property in trust for his four children: Ann, Charles, Florence Mary, and Agnes Emily. He had living four children: Ann, Charles, Florence Mary, and Alice Martha. He had previously had a child, Agnes Emily, but she had been dead more than five years:—Held, that the name of Alice Martha must be substituted for that of Agnes Emily. Gregory v. Gregory, 19 W. R. 711.

A testator, by his will made in 1856, gave a legacy of 10*l.* to his servant, Susanna Cole. He had at that date a servant of that name, but in 1858 she married and left the testator's service, although for five years she continued to be employed occasionally in his house. When she left, her place was taken by her sister, Ann Cole. In 1871 the testator made a codicil, by which he gave a legacy of 100*l.* "to my servant Susanna Cole." At the date of the codicil, Ann Cole was still in the testator's service:—Held, that Ann Cole was entitled to the legacy of 100*l.* Fry, In re, Matthews v. Greenman, 31 L. T. 8; 22 W. R. 813—L.JJ.

A testatrix left by her will "to the five children of the late post captain Horatio Nelson Noble, her husband's son," 50*l.* each. Her husband had two sons: Horatio Nelson, who had been a major in the Indian army, and was dead many years, and Jeffrey, who had died shortly before the testatrix, and had been a post captain in the navy. There were five children of each son living at the date of the will. It was proved that the testatrix had been on terms of great intimacy and affection with Jeffrey and his children, but had little intercourse with the children of Horatio Nelson; that she had directed the widow of Jeffrey to be written to for the christian names of her children shortly before making her will, and that when the will was read over to her, she had directed the word "post" to be inserted in the draft before "captain":—Held, that the children of Jeffrey, the post captain, were entitled to the legacies. Noble, In re, Ir. R. 5 Eq. 140; 18 W. R. 881.

Error in Description.]—Legacy "to my namesake Thomas, the second son of my brother John," there being no son named Thomas, established in the favour of the second son, William, as an erroneous description, not a condition. Stockdale v. Bushby, 19 Ves. 381; G. Coop. 229.

Bequest to the children of R. H., late of N., and now of L., the sum of 100*l.* apiece; R. H. had left N. at the age of fourteen or sixteen, and died in L. several years before the will: his only surviving child entitled to the legacy against the claim of the children of G. H., formerly of N., residing in L. at the testator's death, upon the suggestion of mistake. Holmes v. Custance, 12 Ves. 279.

An aunt bequeathed a legacy to a niece, whom she described as "Monimia Mahon, daughter of my brother Walter," and it appeared that the only daughter of Walter, named Monimia, had been married to a person named Smith, and was dead at the date of the bequest, as the testatrix was aware, but that she had another niece named Monimia Mahon, who survived her. This lady, however, was not a daughter of Walter:—Held, that, notwithstanding the inaccuracy in the description of the legatee, the testatrix had indicated with sufficient certainty that the legacy was intended for the niece Monimia who survived her. Dooley v. Mahon, Ir. R. 11 Eq. 299.

Bequests unto "my niece Mary Elizabeth G., now residing with me." The only niece of testator was named Elizabeth W. Mary Elizabeth G. was a stranger in blood to testator, being the wife of an illegitimate son of testator's wife. Neither Elizabeth W. nor Mary Elizabeth G. actually resided with testator, but both of them visited at his house and were in attendance upon him during his last illness, in the course of which his will was made:—Held, that Mary Elizabeth G. was the person designated. Lyon's Trusts, In re, 48 L. J., Ch. 245.

A testator devised and bequeathed his real and personal estate to trustees absolutely, upon trust, as to one moiety of the personalty, to pay and divide the residue equally between and amongst his nephew John and his niece Hannah (whom he described as the children of his late brother Joseph), "and all and every the children of my late nephew Mark Ingle and my niece Eliza Wheelwright," share and share alike. He then desired his trustees to stand possessed of a moiety of the proceeds of the sale of his realty, upon trust to divide the same as before mentioned. In a codicil he referred to the "legacy left and apportioned to my niece Eliza." Some years before the date of the will a brother of the testator, named Mark, had died, leaving three sons, and a third son named Mark. The evidence showed that, at the testator's death, the nephew Mark, who had had a son born to him in England, and had emigrated to America, where he had another child, was still living; also that the testator knew of the birth in England of the child of Mark, and of his emigration to America, and that from such circumstances he (the testator) had, shortly before the date of the will, been led to suppose that Mark might be dead:—Held, that by the words "my late nephew Mark" the testator meant his (living) nephew Mark, and not his late brother Mark. Ingle, In re, 40 L. J., Ch. 310; L. R. 11 Eq. 578; 24 L. T. 315; 19 W. R. 676.

—— In Sex.]—Testator gave a share of his residuary personal estate to "my niece, the daughter of my late sister Sarah." The testator had had one sister only, named Sarah Ann, who had died fifteen years before, and who had never had any daughter, and but one child, a son:—Held, that such son was entitled. Ricket's Trust, In re, 11 Hare, 299; 1 Eq. R. 251; 22 L. J., Ch. 1044; 17 Jur. 664; 1 W. R. 492.

Where Description Changed by Subsequent Resettlement.]—In 1841 lands were settled to the use of J. C. the elder for life, remainder to E. C. for life; remainder to the first and other sons of E. C. in tail. E. C. had two sons, namely, J. C. the younger and H. C. In 1848 J. C. the elder made his will, by which he bequeathed an annuity of 200*l.* a year, during the life of E. C., to J. C. the younger; and in case of his death, to the person or persons who would be entitled to the rents of the settled lands under the limitations of the settlement of 1841, if E. C. were dead. J. C. the younger married, and had one son, J. M. C. In 1866 the lands were resettled and limited, after the death of E. C., to the use of H. C. for life. J. C. the younger died:—

Held, upon the construction of the entire of the will of J. C. the elder that J. M. C., and not H. C., was the person entitled during the life of E. C. to the annuity of 200*l.* a year. Croker, In re, Ir. R. 2 Eq. 58.

Error in Name and Description.]—A bequest to the children of the testator's late aunts, Rachael Walker and Diana Walker, who should be living at his death. The testator had no aunt nor any relative named Diana Walker, but he had a cousin, the daughter of his aunt Rachael, named Dinah Walker, who married Harrison long before the date of the will, and survived the testator. Evidence proved that the testator called his cousin by her maiden name of Walker after her marriage:—Held, that the children of Dinah Harrison were not entitled as the children of his late aunt, Diana Walker. Shearman v. Jennett, 9 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 148.

A testatrix made a bequest in favour of "John Bird, son of the late Charrington Bird, who was my first husband's brother." H. W. Charrington, son of a brother-in-law of the first husband, claimed the fund, as being the person meant by the testatrix:—Held, that the claim was good. Meredith, In re, 10 L. T. 565; 12 W. R. 849.

Where a legacy was given to a legatee by the name and description of "C. H., the wife of A.," H. being in fact the wife of A., and C. H. his daughter, an infant of tender years, the court would not presume that there was any mistake in the preparation of the will; and it being more probable that the testatrix had mistaken the name than the description of the legatee, the court held that the legatee intended was reasonably certain, and decreed the legacy to be paid according to the description, and not according to the name. Adams v. Jones, infra.

—— Name and Sex.]—A testator devised an estate to "Elizabeth Abbott (a natural daughter of Elizabeth Abbott, of G., single woman, and who formerly lived in his service)" for life, with remainder to her children. At the date of the will, there was no person answering this description; for though Elizabeth Abbott, who had formerly lived in his service, had a natural child, yet it was a son and not a daughter, and was named John and not Elizabeth; besides this, Elizabeth herself was not then a single woman, but had married one Caddy, and had a legitimate daughter Margaret. John Abbott being dead, the property was claimed, first, by the plaintiff, on the ground that the gift was void for uncertainty; secondly, by the children of John Abbott; and, thirdly, by Margaret; but the court held, under the circumstances, that the children of John Abbott were entitled. Ryall v. Hannam, 10 Beav. 536; 16 L. J., Ch. 491; 11 Jur. 761.

—— Number of Class Designated.]—A testator bequeathed the residue of his estate to his trustees, and directed that out of the proceeds they should pay his funeral and testamentary expenses, debts and legacies. By a codicil he bequeathed 4,000*l.* to his trustees, on trust to pay the annual income thereof to his son R., who was in his uncontrolled discretion to apply the same for the benefit of the testator's son W. and his two children by his late wife. And, after the death of W., the trustees were to stand possessed of the capital and income of the 4,000*l.* in trust for "the said two children of W. in equal shares as tenants in common, to be paid to them on their respectively attaining the age of twenty-one years or marrying under that age." At the date of the codicil there were living four children of W. by his late wife. In an action by the trustees after W.'s death to determine which of his four children were entitled to the 4,000*l.*:—Held, that the four children were entitled to the 4,000*l.* in equal shares. Groom, In re, Booty v. Groom, 66 L. J., Ch. 778; [1897] 2 Ch. 407; 77 L. T. 154.

Gift to an Eldest, Youngest, or Other Son.]—A bequest "to my nephew John Newbolt, second son of the Rev. W. S. N., vicar of Somerton, Somerset." The vicar of Somerton at the date of the will was the Rev. W. R. N., who was brother-in-law to the testatrix; his second son's name was R. H. N., and his third son's name was John Pryce Newbolt:—Held, that it was a good bequest to the third son John Pryce Newbolt, and that his description by the name "John" was sufficient to make the veritas nominis overcome the error descriptionis. Newbolt v. Pryce, 14 Sim. 354; 8 Jur. 1112.

A. bequeathed 4,000*l.* in trust for his brother for life, and after his decease upon trust to pay or divide the principal unto or equally between the child or children of the brother living at his decease except Thomas (his eldest son), and the issue then living of any (except Thomas) then dead, such issue taking their parent's share only. It was shown by evidence that Thomas was the youngest son of the testator's brother at his decease; and that, to his knowledge, when he made his will, the eldest son of his brother was possessed of a large fortune, whilst the youngest and other children were unprovided for:—Held, that the eldest son, and not Thomas, was the son intended to be excepted. Hodgson v. Clarke, 1 De G. F. & J. 394. See S. C., 1 Giff. 139; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1024.

Testator devised an estate in Jamaica to trustees, upon trust, so long as Robert B., the second son of his daughter E. B., should be under the age of twenty-one years, to pay and apply 150*l.* per annum out of the rents and profits for his maintenance and education, and subject thereto upon various other trusts in favour of his daughter E. B., and his said grandson Robert B., and subject to all those trusts in trust for the said Robert B. for life, with remainder to his first and other sons in tail male, with remainder in moieties in favour of H. C. and R. C., the second and third sons of J. C., and their issue. The testator also devised his estate in England in trust for his said daughter E. B. for life, with remainder to his said grandson Robert B. for life, with remainder to his first and other sons in tail male, with remainder to the third, fourth, fifth and every other son of the said E. B. severally and successively in tail male, with remainder to the testator's right heirs. E. B. had no second son named Robert. The name of her eldest son was Robert, and that of the second son, Henry:—Held, under the circumstances, that this was a mistake in the name and not in the description of the devisee, and consequently that Henry and not Robert was entitled to take under these devises, and parol evidence was admitted to explain the ambiguity. Bradshaw v. Bradshaw, 2 Y. & C. 72; 6 L. J., Ex. Eq. 1.

Bequest to "Francis G., the youngest son of my brother Francis G." There was no son of Francis G. answering the description, his youngest son being named Arthur Charles, and his eldest Arthur Francis. In support of the claim of the youngest son, parol evidence was admitted of a bequest to him, by a prior will, of the same property, and of a general belief that the testator was his godfather :—Held, that the youngest was entitled to the legacy. Gregory, In re, 6 N. R. 282; 34 Beav. 600; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 364; 13 W. R. 828.

A testator devised freehold property to trustees to the use of his son George Gillett for life, and after his decease to the use of "Robert Gillett, the fourth son of George Gillett," in fee, in case he should attain twenty-one; but if he should die under that age, to the use of the fifth son in fee, and if he should die under twenty-one, to the first son coming after the fifth who should attain twenty-one. Robert Henry Gillett was the third, and John William Gillett was the fourth son of George Gillett, who had seven sons. There were reasons apparent why the testator passed over the first and second sons, but none for omitting the third son :—Held, that the name must prevail over the description, and that Robert Henry Gillett, the third son, took under the devise. Gillett v. Gane, 39 L. J., Ch. 818; L. R. 10 Eq. 29; 22 L. T. 58; 18 W. R. 423.

Land was devised on trust for A. for life, with remainder to "W., the eldest son of A.," for life. At the date of the will A. had two sons living, both children : J., the elder, the third-born, and W., the younger :—Held, that W. was the person designated. Garland, In re, Garland v. Beverley, 47 L. J., Ch. 711; 9 Ch. D. 213; 38 L. T. 911; 26 W. R. 718.

Gift to Illegitimate Children.] — Though a bastard's name be mistaken in a devise, yet, if the person meant can be clearly ascertained by averment, the devise is good. Rivers' Case, 1 Atk. 410.

A legatee in a will was described as "J. E., the son of S. E. by M. J., or M., or E. his wife." There being no doubt as to the identity of the person intended, the question whether he was the son born in lawful wedlock or not was utterly immaterial, for he was the person designated as the legatee. Thompson v. Eastwood, 2 App. Cas. 215—H. L. (Ir.)

Question as to whether a bastard could take under the denomination in a will of "eldest son," by way of descriptionis personæ, the testator knowing of his existence, and believing that there was no lawful issue. Baker v. Baker, 2 Ves. Sen. 167.

Where a testator made a bequest in favour of the daughters of A. (his first cousin once removed), and it was proved that A. died seven years before the date of the will, leaving no legitimate daughters, but having had two reputed daughters, of whom one survived at the date of the will, and it being further proved that the testator had been in communication with members of A.'s immediate family, who recognised the illegitimate children as daughters of A., and that he had taken a small bequest under the will of A.'s brother, by which will the death of A. and the existence of the reputed daughters appeared :—Held, that these facts were sufficient to entitle the surviving daughter as a persona designata. Herbert, In re, 1 J. & H. 121; 29 L. J., Ch. 870; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 1027; 8 W. R. 660.

A father bequeathed his residuary estate to "all and every my daughters in equal shares who shall attain the age of twenty-one or marry." He never had any legitimate children, but he had three illegitimate daughters, whose mother he had married two years before the date of his will, and whom he always treated and spoke of as his children :—Held, that the illegitimate daughters were entitled to take under the will as personæ designatæ. Laker v. Hordern, 45 L. J., Ch. 315; 1 Ch. D. 644; 34 L. T. 88; 24 W. R. 543.

Testator, by his will, after reciting that he had nine children by his then present wife, and enumerating such children by their respective names and descriptions, devised his real estate upon trust for sale, and upon the death or second marriage of the testator's then present wife to divide the proceeds of such sale among his children by his then present wife who should be then living, and the issue of such of them as should be then dead, such issue taking per stirpes, and not per capita, but subject, as to the shares of daughters, to the directions thereinafter contained; and the testator thereby directed his trustees, during the life of each of his said children by his then present wife who should happen to be a daughter, to pay the dividends of her share of the proceeds of the real estate as such daughter should appoint; and in default of appointment, to such daughter for her life to her separate use; and after the decease of such daughter, upon certain trusts for the benefit of her children; and in default of issue of such daughter, then upon trust as such daughter should by will appoint; and in default of appointment, then upon certain trusts for the benefit of the brothers and sisters of the whole blood of such daughter and their issue; and in default of such brothers and sisters, or their issue, then upon trust for the next of kin of such daughter at her death, according to the Statute of Distributions. The testator, at his death, left by his said wife the nine children only enumerated in the will; but of these one, a married daughter, was illegitimate, having been born before the marriage :—Held, upon the context of the whole will, that the illegitimate daughter was entitled to participate in the benefit of the gift to the testator's children of the proceeds of his real estate. Owen v. Bryant, 2 De G. M. & G. 697; 21 L. J., Ch. 860; 16 Jur. 877.

A testator described his daughter as Mary, the wife of John Crook, and spoke of him as her present husband. The daughter was the sister of the deceased wife of John Crook. There were children of Mary Crook by John Crook, whom the testator recognised as his grandchildren, and no other children of Mary Crook :—Held, that such children could not take under a bequest to "the children or child of my daughter Mary Crook." Crook v. Hill, 38 L. J., Ch. 579; 17 W. R. 1092.

Gifts to Charitable Institutions.] — Gift by the will of 100*l.* to Highbury College, and of another 100*l.* by the second codicil under a gift of that sum to each of the charities mentioned in the will. In the same codicil was a legacy of 500*l.* to Hoxton Academy. The establishment known as Highbury College was formerly called Hoxton Academy. There was no Hoxton Academy at the date of the codicil or subsequently, but other charitable societies had for some time occupied the same premises :—Held, that the Highbury College was not entitled to the legacy of 500*l.* Lee v. Pain, 4 Hare, 254.

A testatrix who died in 1885, by a codicil to her will dated in 1882, bequeathed to the "Anti-Vivisection Society" a legacy of 200*l.*, and to the "International Anti-Vivisection Society" a legacy of 200*l.* These two societies amalgamated in 1883, their objects being identical. The question was, whether the united society was entitled to both legacies, one legacy, or nothing at all:—Held, that, for the purpose of the will, both societies must be deemed to be still in existence, and took both legacies, and that the united society was entitled to 400*l.* Joy, In re, Purday v. Johnson, 60 L. T. 175.

Gift to Persons holding a Particular Office—Rector—Vicar.]—Charitable bequest in trust to the rector for the time being of W., W. being a vicarage, ordered to be paid to the vicar. Hopkinson v. Ellis, 5 Beav. 34.

—— Provost and Scholars — Fellows.] — A legacy was given to the provost and fellows of Queen's College. The proper name of the corporation was "The provost and scholars":—Held, that the provost and scholars were entitled. Queen's College v. Sutton, 12 Sim. 521; 11 L. J., Ch. 198; 6 Jur. 906.

—— Surgeon and Apothecary of Hospital—Dispenser.] — A testator bequeathed nineteen guineas each to the "surgeon" and "resident apothecary" of the Southern Dispensary of Bath, or any who might hold the like situations at his decease. There were two surgeons and no resident apothecary, but a "dispenser":— Held, that the three were entitled to nineteen guineas each. Ellis v. Bartrum, 25 Beav. 109.

—— Curate of B. Church.]—A testator gave legacies of 25*l.* each to the Rev. J. B., the Rev. N. L., and the Rev. J. D. C. W., described as curates of a particular church. At the date of the will and the death of the testator, the Rev. J. B., the Rev. N. L., and the Rev. W. C. B. were curates of the church; there never had been any curate of that church named W., but there was a clergyman of that name whose initials were J. D. C.:—Held, that the Rev. J. D. C. W. was entitled to the legacy, and that extrinsic evidence of the testator's intention was inadmissible. Furrer v. St. Catharine's College, Cambridge, 42 L. J., Ch. 809; L. R. 16 Eq. 19; 28 L. T. 800.

—— Peer.]—A testator bequeathed a silver cup to Lord S. and his heirs for an heirloom. The person who was Lord S. at the date of the will died before the testator, leaving a successor to the title:—Held, that the bequest lapsed. Wilmorwood, In re, Ogle v. Sherborne (Lord), 56 L. J., Ch. 340; 34 Ch. D. 446; 56 L. T. 71; 35 W. R. 342—C. A.

Person Entitled to Possession of M. House.]—Testator bequeathed a collection of books, manuscripts, and pictures to his executors to hold as heirlooms, and suffer the same to be used and enjoyed by the person who for the time being under the limitations of "a certain deed of entail bearing date day of shall be entitled to the possession of" M. House. At the testator's death there was no such deed of entail as described in the will in existence, and the testator was entitled to the house absolutely in fee simple:—Held, that the collection belonged to the heir-at-law of the testator, as the person entitled in possession to M. House. Bute (Marquis), In re, Bute (Marquis) v. Ryder, 53 L. J., Ch. 1090; 27 Ch. D. 196; 32 W. R. 996.

"Person Entitled to the Possession or Receipt of Rents and Profits."]—The canon of construction laid down in Doe d. Hearle v. Hicks (8 Bing. 475) and Langdale v. Briggs (8 De G. M. & G. 391), that an estate clearly given cannot be divested except by words as clear and unequivocal as those which created it, approved and applied. A testatrix by her will directed that certain hereditaments thereby devised should go over in case the person for the time being "entitled to the possession or to the receipt of the rents and profits" of the said hereditaments should succeed to a certain title. A management clause provided that while and so often as the person who (but for the proviso) would have been "entitled to the possession, receipt, or enjoyment of the rents, issues, and profits" of the hereditaments should be an infant, the trustees should enter into and hold "the possession or receipt of the rents, issues, and profits" thereof, and manage the same. The trustees had a power of leasing during the minority of any person who if of full age would have been "entitled at law or in equity to the possession or to the receipts of the rents and profits" of the hereditaments:—Held, on the construction of the whole will (several other parts of which also contained the words "possession or receipt of rents and profits," or similar words), that the shifting clause did not apply to the case of a tenant in tail in possession who while an infant succeeded to the title. Leslie v. Rothes (Earl), 63 L. J., Ch. 617; [1894] 2 Ch. 499; 7 R. 600; 71 L. T. 134— C. A.

Equivocation.]—Two schools in the same town, one a free school and the other a charity school for boys and girls: A. devises 500*l.* to the charity school; and though both be charity schools, yet only the charity school for boys and girls shall take. Att.-Gen. v. Hudson, 1 P. Wms. 674.

Legacy to "R. C., my nephew, the son of Joseph C."; other clauses describing "my nephew R. C." generally, and one legacy to "my nephew R. C., the son of John C." The testator had only two brothers, John and T. C., each having a son named R. C. Parol evidence admitted to resolve this latent ambiguity, shewing intimacy with the son of John C., and very slight knowledge of the other C.; the legacy was decreed to the former. Careless v. Careless, 19 Ves. 601; 1 Mer. 384; 15 R. R. 134.

Legacy to Miss S.; if more than one person answering that description must be intended the eldest. Lee v. Pain, 4 Hare, 249. And see Id. 24; 14 L. J., Ch. 346; 9 Jur. 247.

A testator, who was a farmer, by his will gave a legacy in these terms: "to W. R., one of my farming men." At the date of the testator's will, and at the time of his death, he had two persons in his service named W. R.; one of them was a farming man, and the other was employed both in the house and in the farm:—Held (upon some evidence that the testator intended to benefit the latter), that the latter, and not the former, was entitled to the legacy. Reynolds v. Whelan, 16 L. J., Ch. 434.

Testator bequeathed his residue to his first cousins, the children of his father's brother of the name of C. The testator's father had two brothers of the name of C., both of whom had left children :—Held, that the bequest was not void for uncertainty, but that the children of both the brothers were entitled to share in the residue. Hare v. Cartridge, 13 Sim. 165.

A testator having several nephews, among them Joseph Healy, the son of his deceased brother James, and Joseph Healy, the son of a living brother Joseph, devised his farm to "my nephew Joseph Healy," with remainder, in case of his death without issue, to his nephew Thomas Healy. He bequeathed to his brother Joseph 300*l*., legacies to Thomas Healy and three other nephews, "all of whom are children of my brother the late James Healy." To a niece, "daughter of my brother Joseph Healy," and to "Joseph Healy, only son of my brother Joseph Healy aforesaid," 200*l*., to be paid to him at such time and in such manner as his said brother Joseph Healy should direct. He bequeathed the residue of his property of every kind to his "said nephew Joseph Healy":—Held, that Joseph, the son of James, took the farm and the residue. Healy v. Healy, Ir. R. 9 Eq. 418.

Gift to "my grand-daughter E. B." There were two of that name, one of them constantly visiting the testator, and much noticed by him, and the other not :—Held, that the former was entitled to the legacy. Jefferies v. Michell, 20 Beav. 15.

Where impossible to ascertain Mistake—Gift Void for Uncertainty.]—Where it was impossible to ascertain the mistake in a devise, the name belonging to one, the description to another, it was held void for uncertainty. Careless v. Careless, 19 Ves. 604 ; 1 Mer. 384 ; 15 R. R. 134.

A. devised a life interest in an estate to his "sister, Mary Frances Tyrwhitt Drake" ; he had no sister, but he had a sister-in-law, of that name. After other devises and bequests, he gave the residue equally among four persons, one of whom was named and described, "my niece Mary Frances Tyrwhitt Drake." He had no niece who bore those two names conjointly ; he had nieces who bore one or other of those names :—Held, that the bequest as to the fourth part was void for uncertainty. Drake v. Drake, infra, col. 872.

Legacy to son and daughter of W. ; W. had four sons :—Held, none of the sons could take, but the daughter took the whole. Dowset v. Sweet, Ambl. 175.

Legacy to John and B., sons of S. ; S. had two sons, James and B., but no son of the name of John :—Held, James should take. Ib.

By his will the testator gave his residue amongst his nephews and nieces, excluding John Shutt. By a codicil, he varied the limitation to this class, and excluded William Shutt "as in his will was directed" :—Held, that the exclusion was void for uncertainty, and that they both took a share. Cope v. Henshaw, 35 Beav. 420.

Where Description supplies Motive for Gift.]—A false character, attributed by a testator to a legatee, will not affect the validity of the legacy, unless the false character has been acquired by a fraud which has deceived the testator ; and where the testator and legatee have a common knowledge of an immoral or criminal act, by which the legatee has acquired the false character, the rights of the legatee, as such, will not be affected, it being no part of the duty of courts of equity to punish parties for immoral conduct, by depriving them of their civil rights. Giles v. Giles, 1 Keen, 685 ; 5 L. J., Ch. 46.

If a legacy is given to a person under a particular character, which he has falsely assumed, and which alone can be supposed the motive of the bounty, the rule of the civil law is adopted, and the legacy fails ; therefore, where a legacy was given by a woman to a man in the character of her husband, whom she supposed and described as such, but who, at the time of the marriage ceremony with her, had a wife living ; the court in respect of his conduct held him not entitled ; but inclined to think it would be otherwise where, from circumstances not moving from the legatee himself, the description is inapplicable. as where a testator gives a legacy to a child from motives of affection supposing it his own, but is imposed upon in that respect. Kennell v. Abbott, 4 Ves. 802 ; 4 R. R. 351.

A legacy to A., described as, and believed by the testator to be, his wife, A. being, in fact, aware that she had a husband living when she went through the marriage ceremony with the testator, and during the whole coverture, is void. Wilkinson v. Joughin, 35 L. J., Ch. 684 ; L. R. 2 Eq. 319 ; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 330 ; 14 L. T. 394.

But a legacy given by the same testator to B., a daughter of A. by her husband, under the designation of the testator's step-daughter B. (B. being innocent of the fraud), is valid. Ib.

A testator, by will dated in 1874, shortly before his death, bequeathed to his executors a sum of new 3*l*. per cent. annuities, upon trust to sell the same and apply the proceeds in the purchase of a life annuity in "the name and for the benefit of my housekeeper M. R., whether living in my service at the time of my death or not." M. R. had left the testator's service six or seven years before, and married in 1871, and her sister E. R. had been since 1870, and was, at the time of the testator's death, in his service as his housekeeper :—Held, that the primary description of the legatee, "my housekeeper," and not the name, was in this case the guide to the testator's intention, and that E. R. was entitled to the fund. Nunn, In re, 44 L. J., Ch. 255 ; L. R. 19 Eq. 331 ; 23 W. R. 376.

A testator directed his trustees to set apart and invest 1,000*l*., and to stand possessed thereof and the income thereof in trust for Y. for life, and, after his death, "in trust for his daughter, my godchild, for her sole and separate use." Y., at the date of the will and the testator's death, had a son who was the godchild of the testator, and a daughter who was married. The testator had not been sponsor to any of Y.'s children, except the son, and had left legacies to several other godchildren of his, and was on intimate terms with the son, but not with his sister :—Held, that the son was entitled to the legacy, the leading motive of the bequest appearing to be that he was the testator's godchild. Blayney, In re, Ir. R. 9 Eq. 413.

A testator, by his will made in 1856, gave a legacy of 10*l*. to his servant, Susanna Cole. He had at that date a servant of that name, but in 1858 she married and left the testator's service, although for five years she continued to be employed occasionally in his house. When she left her place was taken by her sister, Ann Cole. In 1871 the testator made a codicil, by which he gave a legacy of 100*l*. "to my servant, Susanna Cole." At the date of the codicil, Ann Cole was still in the testator's service :—Held, that Ann Cole was entitled to the legacy of 100*l*. Fry, In re, Matthews v. Greenman, 31 L. T. 8 ; 22 W. R. 813.

Parol Evidence — When admitted.]—When there is an error both in the names and description, parol extrinsic evidence will not be admitted to explain who were the intended objects of the testator's bounty. Acworth v. Benton, 22 L. T. 776 ; 18 W. R. 988.

Parol evidence is admissible to prove that a person exactly answering to a description in a will is not the person intended by the testator, and that another person who does not exactly, but does substantially, answer the description is the person intended by the testator. Woolverton Mortgaged Estates, In re, 47 L. J., Ch. 127 ; 7 Ch. D. 197 ; 37 L. T. 573 ; 26 W. R. 138.

A father left a legacy to the children of his daughter by any husband other than Mr. Thomas Fisher, of Bridge street, Bath. There was a Mr. Thomas Fisher, of Bridge street, Bath, who was a married man. There was also a Henry Tom Fisher, son of Thomas Fisher, who sometimes lived with his father :—Held, that although Mr. Thomas Fisher answered the description, and his son's name was not Thomas but Tom, parol evidence of these circumstances might be admitted to shew which was intended. Ib.

When a legatee is once correctly described in a will, and the same name is mentioned again without any description, evidence is not admissible to shew that a different person was intended. Webber v. Corbett, L. R. 16 Eq. 515 ; 29 L. T. 365.

An aunt gave "to her niece Laura, the second daughter of her brother John Webber," certain chattels. In a subsequent part of her will she gave to "each of her nieces, Laura Webber" and others, 50*l*. : and almost immediately afterwards "to each of her nieces, the said Laura Webber" and others, 100*l*. : and divided her residuary estate equally between "the said Laura Webber" and three others. The testatrix had two nieces, one named Laura, the second daughter of her brother John, and the other named Laura Frances Tonkin, the daughter of her brother William :—Held, that having once clearly and accurately described her niece Laura, as Laura "the second daughter of her brother John," whenever she mentioned "her niece Laura" afterwards, she must be presumed to have meant the same person : there was consequently no latent ambiguity, and parol evidence was therefore not admissible to shew which of the two nieces was meant. Ib.

Where there is a person corresponding in name and address, but not in other particulars, to the description of the legatee contained in a will, and another person corresponding in every particular except the christian name, the court admitted parol evidence to shew that the latter was the person intended to be benefited. Roland, In re, 14 W. R. 317.

Testatrix bequeathed 100*l*. to T. T., of R. square, Brighton. The testatrix had two nephews, one J. T. of R. square aforesaid, surgeon ; and another, the Reverend T. T., of Little Preston, Daventry, clerk. Each of these persons claimed the legacy. The money having been paid into court under the Trustee Relief Act, T. T. presented a petition for payment of it to him, and adduced extrinsic evidence in support of his claim, such evidence going to shew that he was in some sense properly described as of R. square. In opposition to the claim of T. T., evidence was adduced by J. T. to shew that the testatrix had made a mistake in his name, and a former will of the testatrix was produced made three years before the instrument in question, in which she gave a legacy to "T. T., of R. square, Brighton, surgeon," that being, with the exception of the wrong christian name, the exact description of J. T. :—Held, that such evidence was admissible, and that the evidence of the prior will was conclusive in favour of J. T. Feltham's Trusts, In re, 1 K. & J. 528, 533.

A. bequeathed a legacy to his niece, E. S. After her death, he made another will, in which the same bequest was copied. The latter alone was proved. The legacy was claimed by E. J. S., a great-great-niece :—Held, that she was entitled, and that parol evidence was inadmissible to shew that the deceased niece was intended. Stringer v. Gardiner, 27 Beav. 35. Affirmed, 4 De G. & J. 468.

A gift by the testator to his first cousin, Vincent B., the son of his late uncle, Peter B. The testator had no cousin named Vincent B., who was the son of his late uncle Peter ; but he had a first cousin named George Vincent B., who frequently visited and dined with him, whom he commonly called "Vincent," and who was the son of a deceased uncle named Joseph. The son of Peter was named Frederick, and was not in the habit of visiting the testator. The court admitted evidence of these extrinsic circumstances, and :—Held, that the testator was mistaken in the description rather than in the name of the legatee ; and that the George Vincent B., the son of Joseph, was entitled to the legacy. Bernasconi v. Atkinson, 10 Hare, 345 ; 17 Jur. 128 ; 1 W. R. 152.

Held, also, that the evidence of the solicitor who prepared the will, that the testator had by his instructions expressly indicated that George Vincent B. was the person for whom the legacy was intended, and that he (the solicitor) had inserted the description without the direction of the testator, and in a mistaken belief of the parentage of the legatee, was not admissible. Ib.

Where a legatee is pointed out by name and description, and there is no person to whom the name and description both apply, but the name only applies to one and the description only applies to another, the court will endeavour, from such of the extrinsic circumstances as are admissible, to ascertain the person meant by the testator, and will not hold the bequest void for uncertainty, except in cases where it is impossible to discover any preponderance in favour of one of the persons rather than of the other. Extrinsic evidence is only admitted to assist in the construction of wills where the ambiguity is created by matter dehors the will. Ib.

A name and a description of a legatee were given in a will, which, taken together, could not be applied to any one person. Evidence of the state of the family was admitted, and an affidavit of a solicitor who prepared the will was offered to shew what had been the cause of the mistake :—Held, that the affidavit was not admissible. Drake v. Drake, 8 H. L. Cas. 172 ; 29 L. J., Ch. 850 ; 3 L. T. 193. Affirming 25 Beav. 642 ; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 727 ; 6 W. R. 791.

Where a gift is made by a will to persons described by their surnames only, extrinsic evidence is admissible to shew what persons having such surnames were known to the testator, and in what respective relations they stood to him. Gregson's Trusts, In re, 2 H. & M. 504; 4 N. R. 222; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 696; 10 L. T. 642; 12 W. R. 935.

Semble, where the number of persons entitled to any such surname, and known to the testator, exceeds the number of legatees of that name, the court will not look at external evidence of the testator's intention, but will determine which of the persons are entitled to the gift from evidence derived from the state of the family, and the rest of the will itself. Ib.

Evidence admitted to prove mistake in name of legatee in will; but one legatee in will who might otherwise have had a claim to that legacy being an infant, inquiry was directed as to the party entitled. Still v. Hoste, 6 Madd. 192.

Legacy to "James, son of Thomas A." There was no person of that description; there was a "Thomas, son of James A." The court will not receive evidence to shew that this was a mistake in the description. Andrews v. Dobson, 1 Cox, 425.

A will contained a legacy of 300*l.* to Commodore P. D., of S., and a like legacy to the children of P. H. D. This legacy was claimed by the three children of H. O. D., and also adversely by the five children of P. D., whose real name was P. J. D. P. J. D. and H. O. D. were both in the same degree of relationship to the testatrix, and she had given like legacies to their brothers and sisters. H. O. D. was dead at the date of the will:—Held, that the previous gift to Commodore P. D., and the fact that the gift was not to the children of "the said" P. H. D., together with the intention manifested in the will to provide for all the members of the D. family, was sufficient to enable the court to decide, upon the face of the will, that the children of H. O. D. were intended, although there was no reference to him as "the late" H. O. D.:—Held, also, that this construction did not strike out the name "P.," but treated it as having been used by mistake:—Held, lastly, that extrinsic evidence of the intention of the testatrix was not admissible, although it might have been if there had been only one class of claimants. Douglas v. Fellows, 1 Kay, 114; 23 L. J., Ch. 167; 2 W. R. 654.

Testator gave the residue of his estate to the poor of the parish of K., in L., but that parish was in N. It was set up by the next of kin, that testator did not imagine his residuum would exceed 10*l.*, and had so declared, whereas it amounted to near 1,000*l.* The court thought parol evidence should be admitted to help out the description of the parish, but not as to the quantity of the thing given. Brown v. Langley, 2 Barnard. 118. See also Blackman, In re, 16 Beav. 377.

—— Where Latent Ambiguity.] — Latent ambiguity, propounded and dissolved by parol, but parol never admitted on patent ambiguity. Bequest to the "son and daughter" of one who has several sons is a latent ambiguity. Delmare v. Robello, 1 Ves. J. 415.

Testator devised to all the children of his two sisters A. and B.; A., long before the date of the will, changed from the Jewish to the Roman Catholic religion, was baptised by a new name, and became a professed nun at Geneva. Bill by the children of C., a third sister, living with B. at Leghorn, upon ground of mistake in testator, and evidence of intent to provide for his sisters at Leghorn, dismissed. Id. 412.

Legacy to "R. C., my nephew, the son of Joseph C.," other clauses describing "my nephew, R. C.," generally, and one legacy to "my nephew, R. C., the son of John C." The testator had only two brothers, John C. and T. C., each having a son named R. C.: parol evidence admitted to resolve this latent ambiguity; shewing intimacy with the son of John C. and very slight knowledge of the other, and the legacy was decreed to the former. Careless v. Careless, 19 Ves. 601; 1 Mer. 384; 15 R. R. 134.

A., by will, left to F. M. F., and to "his sister, M. F., my grand-daughter, share and share alike, M. F. now living in France with her uncle M.," all his estates. M. F. was not then living, and had never lived, while her sister, C. F., was living and had lived for some time with the uncle:—Held, that extrinsic evidence was admissible to explain the ambiguity in the will. Plunkett, In re, 11 Ir. Ch. R. 361.

Held, also, that the name should control the description, and that M. F. was therefore entitled. Ib.

A testatrix gave a sum of stock in trust for "S. D., for life, and after her decease, in trust for D., daughter of the said S. D." At the date of the will S. D. had one, but at the death of the testatrix, three daughters. On evidence, shewing that the eldest daughter of S. D. was alone known to the testatrix, who was not aware of the existence of the other daughters, the court declared her entitled. Phillips v. Barker, 1 Sm. & G. 583; 2 Eq. R. 795; 17 Jur. 1146; 2 W. R. 110.

A testator by his will dated in 1884, bequeathed "to my cousin A., son of my late uncle A., unless he shall immediately on my death succeed to the title of Marquis of E.," the sum of 2,000*l.* The testator's cousin A. died in 1866, and at the date of the will and also of the testator's death, G. was the only child of the testator's uncle A. other than the son who succeeded to the title:—Held, that on the face of the will there was a gift to a non-existent person, that there was no ambiguity, and that parol evidence was not admissible to shew that the testator intended to benefit G., or that A.'s name had been inserted by mistake of the draftsman. Ely, In re, Tottenham v. Ely, 65 L. T. 452.

Before resorting to parol evidence to explain a latent ambiguity, the court should be satisfied that the ambiguity cannot be removed by the construction of the will itself, having regard to the circumstances surrounding the testator. Healy v. Healy, 9 Ir. Eq. R. 418.

A brother, having two sisters, E. D. and E. B., appointed J. M., E. C., and his sister E. D. joint executors of his entire property for the purpose of putting it to the best advantage for "his sister, wife and children":—Held, that E. D., being the sister in the mind of the testator when making his will, was the person entitled to share in his property, and that E. B. was not entitled to any share therein. Murphy v. Donnelly, Ir. R. 6 Eq. 203.

—— Equivocation.]—Latent ambiguity arises dehors the will, and evidence is admissible to explain it; as in case of two manors of the same name, or an inadequate description of a child; not to explain a patent ambiguity upon the face of the will. Baugh v. Read, 1 Ves. 259; 3 Bro. C. C. 192.

A devise to my son E. F., and then to my grandson H. F. (the testator having two grandsons of that name through different sons), does not necessarily mean to H. F., son of E. F.; and parol evidence is admissible to shew which was meant. Fleming v. Fleming, 31 L. J., Ex. 419; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 1042; 6 L. T. 896; 10 W. R. 778.

An aunt, after making specific bequests to her niece Clara and "my niece Laura, second daughter of my brother J. H. W.," bequeathed as follows: "To each of my nieces, K. G., H. M. T., H. B., and Laura W., 50*l.*," and further bequeathed "to each of my nieces, C. W., Laura W., R. W., M. E. S. S., and E. G. S., 100*l.*," and gave the residue "in trust for M. E. S., Laura W., E. G. M., and R. W." The testatrix had two nieces, one Laura W., a daughter of her brother J. H. W., and the other Laura Frances Tomkins W., a daughter of her brother William W. Parol evidence had been entered into to shew which Laura was intended:—Held, that in the first gift the person who was intended was accurately described; that there was no latent ambiguity; and that parol evidence was not admissible; that the same Laura W. mentioned in the first gift took both the legacies of 50*l.* and 100*l.*, and also the share of the residue. Webber v. Corbett, 43 L. J., Ch. 164; L. R. 16 Eq. 515; 29 L. T. 365.

Held, that, there being only one living person answering to the name given, this was not a case of equivocation, and that evidence of intention was not admissible. Ingle, In re, supra, col. 862.

Devise "to William Marshall, my second cousin." The testator had no second cousin so named, but he had two first cousins once removed, one named William Marshall, the other named William John Robert Blandford Marshall:—Held, a latent ambiguity, and parol evidence admitted to dissolve it. Bennett v. Marshall, 2 K. & J. 740.

—— Assumed Name or Nickname.]—The court will not allow parol evidence to explain a blank in a will; but where a legatee is nicknamed, or where there are two of the same name, parol evidence will be admitted to explain. Baylis v. Att.-Gen., 2 Atk. 240. And see Beaumont v. Fell, 2 P. Wms. 141.

When a person is mentioned by a nickname, or where there have been two who have had the same christian and surname, parol evidence has been admitted to ascertain whom the testator meant. Ib.

A legacy having been given to a legatee, in a name which she had for many years assumed, the court will direct an inquiry who was the person meant. Neathway v. Ham, Tam. 316.

Annuity bequeathed to testator's brother E. for life, remainder to his children by his present wife: at the date of the will, E. and his wife were dead, and their children had other legacies under it, and testator had only one brother S., having a wife and children, whom he had been in the habit of calling E.: his children held to be entitled upon these circumstances. Parsons v. Parsons, 1 Ves. 266; 5 R. R. 120.

Legacy to "Mrs. G." Evidence admitted to prove who was intended. Abbott v. Massie, 3 Ves. 148.

The testatrix bequeathed to Mrs. and Miss B., the widow and daughter of the late B., 200*l.* each; at the date of the testamentary instrument there were no persons answering the description. The legacy was claimed by a Mrs. W., the daughter of the late B., and her daughter, Miss W. (the grand-daughter of the late B.); it was proved that the testatrix was intimately acquainted with the late B. and also with Mrs. and Miss W., and used to call them by Mrs. W.'s maiden name of B.:—Held, that this evidence was admissible, and Mrs. and Miss W. were declared to be entitled to the legacies. Lee v. Pain, 4 Hare, 251; 14 L. J., Ch. 346; 9 Jur. 247. And see Id. 24.

ii. Construction of Particular Gifts.

Gift to Friends of Testator.]—A testator devised freehold lands to his wife for life, provided she remained unmarried, and directed that on her death or marriage the lands should revert to his friends, and be their property. With the exception of a few nominal legacies, he bequeathed to his wife all his personal and chattel property absolutely, and appointed her sole residuary legatee:—Held, upon the construction of the will, that the words "my friends" were capable of meaning the testator's kindred who would have taken his interest in the lands but for the interposed devise to his wife; that the devise over, on the death or marriage of the wife, was not void for uncertainty, and that upon her death the testator's heir-at-law became entitled under the devise. Coogan v. Hayden, 4 L. R., Ir. 585.

To Offspring.]—A gift of personalty by will to A. for life, remainder to her children; "but if there should not be any child or offspring," then a legacy to B., and the remainder to other persons. A. died, leaving only grandchildren:—Held, that the legacy to B. failed, offspring meaning issue beyond children. Thompson v. Beasley, 3 Drew. 7; 3 Eq. R. 59; 24 L. J., Ch. 327; 18 Jur. 973.

A testator directed a policy on the life of his son, to be settled, and the interest to be paid to his son's widow for life, and after her decease to her offspring:—Held, that the children of his son, who survived him, were entitled, to the exclusion of grandchildren. Lister v. Tidd, 29 Beav. 618.

The word "offspring," in its natural and proper sense, means lineal issue, or descendants. Young v. Davies, 2 Dr. & Sm. 167; 1 N. R. 419; 32 L. J., Ch. 372; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 399; 8 L. T. 80; 11 W. R. 452.

Where there is a gift of personalty for life to a testator's son, and "at his death to my surviving daughters, and their lawful offspring," that is a gift to the daughters only who survive the son, absolutely, the word "offspring" being a word of limitation, and meaning the same as "issue." Ib.

To an Orphan.]—A testatrix devised the rents and profits of houses to be applied "for and towards the maintenance, education and support of my grand-daughter until she arrives at twenty-one, provided she be left an orphan, unprovided for, and lives with part of my family." On a bill by the grand-daughter, an infant, by her father as next friend, the mother being dead at the time of the execution of the will:—Held, that she was not an orphan within the meaning of the will, and the rents and profits were not applicable to her support or education. Guilmette v. Mossop, 7 L. T. 190.

To a Child.]—A testator at the time of making his will had four children, one of them married

(who had then one daughter), and three others unmarried. He gave an estate to one of the four for life, remainder to "one child" of each, provided that if the three then unmarried, naming them, should never have any lawful children, their part should go to the next of kin :—Held, that the first-born child of each of the four children took a fourth share in fee, as they successively came in esse. Powell v. Davies, 1 Beav. 532 ; 3 Jur. 839.

To a Son.]—A testator devised certain estates in remainder to "a son of my nephew J. W., his heirs and assigns." J. W. had three sons, the two elder of whom died infants and unmarried :—Held, that the eldest son of J. W. took an estate in fee simple in remainder in the estates. Ashburner v. Wilson, 19 L. J., Ch. 330 ; 14 Jur. 497.

A. having a power to appoint real estate and 4,000*l.* to all or any, or one or more of the children, or more remote issue of his marriage, made his will before any child was born, but while his wife was enceinte, bequeathing all his property on trust in the event of his leaving one child, that he or she should inherit all his landed and personal property ; but, in case of his leaving a son and daughter, he devised and bequeathed all his landed and personal property to his son, save and except 4,000*l.* to his daughter. He afterwards died, having no real estate except what was the subject of the power, but considerable personal estate, and leaving two sons and two daughters :—Held, that the will did not operate as an execution of the power over the real estate, as the devise was either void for uncertainty, or conditional on events which had not happened. Russell v. Russell, 12 Ir. Ch. R. 377.

To "Other Sons"—Eldest Son excluded.]—Testator devised his mansion-house successively to his second and third sons, F. L. and J. L., for life, with remainder to their sons in tail male, and then to the use of his fourth, fifth, and all and every other the son and sons of his body on the body of his wife to be begotten, born, or en ventre sa mère at the time of his decease, severally, successively, and in remainder one after another in seniority of age and priority of birth, and of the several and respective heirs male of the body and bodies of all and every such son and sons lawfully issuing, the elder of such son and sons and the heirs male of his body to be always preferred, and to take before the younger of such son and sons and the heirs male of his and their body and bodies issuing, and for default of such issue to the use of the testator's daughters, begotten or to be begotten, as tenants in common in tail. The will also provided for portions for the testator's children other than his three eldest sons, "who are otherwise provided for." The will contained no provision for the eldest son, but he was entitled to other family estates in remainder upon the death of the testator. The testator died leaving three sons and five daughters, all of whom were in esse at the date of the will. The limitations to the second and third sons and their issue having failed, the eldest son claimed an estate tail under the devise to the fourth, fifth, and other sons :—Held, that he was not entitled. Locke v. Dunlop, 57 L. J., Ch. 1010 ; 39 Ch. D. 387 ; 59 L. T. 683—C. A. Affirming 36 W. R. 41.

To "Younger Children."]—A testator devised real estate on trust after the death of his wife in strict settlement on his four sons, A., B., C. and D., and their issue male successively. He bequeathed a legacy of 14,000*l.* after the death of his wife to be paid to his "younger children," namely B., C., D., E., F., G., H., K. and L. (the six latter being his daughters), in equal shares, so that the share of each of his said younger children should be absolutely vested at twenty-one, whether the preceding trusts should be determined or not. A. and B. died in the lifetime of the testator's widow without issue male. C. attained twenty-one in the lifetime of B., and on the death of the widow became tenant for life under the will of the real estate :—Held, that he was entitled to a share in the legacy of 14,000*l.* Prytherch, In re, Prytherch v. Williams, 42 Ch. D. 590.

To a Charitable Institution.]—A bequest of 500*l.* to the Westminster Asylum for Pregnant Women :—Held, upon extrinsic evidence, and the context of the will, without any inquiry, a gift to "The General Lying-in Hospital." General Lying-in Hospital v. Knight, 21 L. J., Ch. 537.

A testator, who had never been in England, bequeathed the residue of his personal estate to "the hospitals of Paris and London." In another part of the same will he spoke of a solicitor, whose offices were in Savile Place, as his "notary at London" :—Held, that the word "London," as used by the testator, included Brompton. Semble, that it included all houses in a continuous line of streets with the City, Westminster, and Southwark, and the houses contiguous to such streets. Quære, whether "the hospitals of London" would not include all hospitals for the benefit of the inhabitants of London. Wallace v. Att.-Gen., 3 N. R. 555 ; 33 L. J., Ch. 314 ; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 249 ; 12 W. R. 506.

To a Trade Union.]—See Amos, In re, ante, sub tit. TRADE.

To A. "if not a Bankrupt."]—A legacy was given to A. "if not an uncertificated bankrupt at the testator's death." He was a bankrupt at the testator's death, but his bankruptcy was annulled for months afterwards :—Held, that he was not entitled to the legacy. Cox v. Fonblanque, L. R. 6 Eq. 482.

To a Roman Catholic Bishop.]—A bequest to Roman Catholic bishops and their successors is void, no such characters being known to the laws of Ireland ; but where they are particularly named, though so described, the bequest is good, for their joint lives, subject to the control of the Court of Chancery. Att-Gen. v. Power, 1 Ball & B. 145.

To a Family until Extinct.]—A testator, by a codicil to his will, having devised certain lands to trustees for charitable purposes, and having recited that they were then let at a clear yearly rent of 237*l.*, which he directed to be appropriated in the particular manner specified in the codicil for the maintenance of an almshouse, &c., declared that, in the event of there being an increase in the rents by any new letting, the surplus so to arise should go to the only use and behoof of the person or persons of the S. and C. families who for the time being should be lord or lords, lady or ladies, of the manor of D. ; and in case the said families did not protect the said charities, or if the said families should become extinct, then and in either of said cases the trustees were to apply the said surplus rents in addition to the former provisions for the charity. After the death of the testator, the families of S. and C. sold the manor of D.:—Held, that the families of S. and C. had not, by the sale of the manor of D., become extinct within the meaning of the codicil. Charitable Donations Commissioners v. De Clifford, 1 Dr. & War. 245.

To Person "living and residing at J."]—Devise of several estates to A. for life, with remainder to trustees to preserve contingent remainders, with remainder to the first and other sons of A. in tail male, with divers remainders over, with power to the persons from time to time entitled to the estates devised to lease all such estates, except an estate called Juts, and with a direction that the persons who should be entitled to and possessed of the devised estates should not lease the estate called Juts or any part thereof, and that every such person should live and reside on the said estate called Juts, and, for default thereof, all the devised estates to go over to the person next in succession, as if the person refusing or neglecting to reside or live at Juts were actually dead:—Held, in a suit by parties making title under a recovery suffered by A. and his eldest son against a purchaser for specific performance, that it was too uncertain what the testator meant by the words live and reside for the court to determine that there had been a forfeiture, and specific performance decreed. Fillingham v. Bromley, Turn. & R. 530; 24 R. R. 136.

To Persons "living" or "residing" in England.]—A. gave her residuary estate equally among such of her nephews and nieces as should "be" in England at the time of her decease, and the children of such as should be then dead "living" in England, such children taking only the parents' share, and her great-niece J. G., and the children of her deceased niece M. W., such last-mentioned children only to take one of such shares in right of their mother equally among them:—Held, that two nieces who had for many years been permanently settled in America were excluded; that two nieces who at the time of the testator's death were temporarily in Ireland were not excluded, and that J. G. and the children of M. W. were entitled to claim double interests as parties named, and as included in the class. Woods v. Townley, 11 Hare, 314; 23 L. J., Ch. 281; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 41; 1 W. R. 504.

Bequest in a will "to such of my nephews and nieces as shall at my decease be residing in this country." At the date of the will, and at her death, the testatrix had one nephew residing in the United States, and another in the East Indies. A third nephew was a seafaring person, born and in his youth resident in Durham, where the testatrix resided. He was thenceforth continually a seafaring man, without any fixed residence on shore, living, however, occasionally at Durham, and sometimes in Ireland. He married an Irishwoman in Ireland, but neither did he provide any fixed residence for her, and she sometimes lived in England, sometimes in Ireland. At the time of the death of the testatrix this nephew was in Belfast harbour, on board ship, having just arrived from North America:—Held, that he was entitled within the words "residing in this country." Dale v. Atkinson, 3 Jur. (N.S.) 41.

Where Name Omitted—Effect of Recital.]—By articles of agreement of the 19th November, 1812, purporting to be made in contemplation of a then intended and soon after solemnised marriage, it was declared that 600*l.*, portion of the wife's fortune, should be secured by the bond and warrant of her father L. On the 19th January, 1826, L. made his last will and testament, wherein he (correctly) recited that he was tenant for life of the lands of Aggard, which, by the terms of his marriage settlement, were charged with 4,000*l.* for his daughters in such shares as he should by will or other writing appoint, and he thereby further (erroneously) recited that the sum of 600*l.* was on the marriage of his daughter charged for her on the lands, and he thereby directed the said last-mentioned sum, together with other sums amounting to 1,100*l.*, to be for her (his married daughter's) portion, and he then also appointed three several sums of 900*l.* each to his third, fourth and fifth daughters, which, with sums charged on other lands, made 1,100*l.* each:—Held, that the will sufficiently indicated an intention on the part of the testator to appoint the 600*l.* to his married daughter, notwithstanding that he had not therein made any appointment to her by name. Burke v. Lambert, 15 W. R. 913.

Where One Person fills Two Descriptions.]—After a devise to a party for life, remainder, in default of certain powers of appointment, to the testator's male relations of the name:—Held, that the devisee for life, filling the character to whom the estates were given in certain events, was not, because he was tenant for life, to be excluded from taking under the description on the ultimate limitation which he afterwards filled. Pearce v. Vincent, 2 Keen, 230. S. C., 7 L. J., Ch. 285. And see 2 Bing. (N.S.) 328; 1 C. & M. 598; 2 Scott, 347; 5 L. J., C. P. 82.

Where Description filled by Two Persons successively—Superioress of Convent.]—A testatrix devised her share of freehold lands to her brother and sister equally for life, and on the death of either the whole to the survivor, and directed that on the death of the survivor the share should be divided equally between the superioresses of two convents for the benefit of the schools attached to each. The lands were sold after the death of the survivor. The purchaser required that the person who was superioress at the date of the death of the testatrix, or her heir-at-law or devisee, should join in the conveyance:—Held, that the devise meant the superioress at the date of the death of the testatrix, and not the superioress at the date of the death of the surviving tenant for life, and that the requisition of the purchaser should be complied with. Laffan and Downe's Contract, In re, [1897] 1 Ir. R. 469.

Construction of Word "Unmarried."]—The word "unmarried" is flexible in its meaning, and may be construed to mean "never having been married," or simply "unmarried at the time of the death," according to the obvious meaning of the parties, as manifested by the words of the instrument, or the nature of the transaction itself. Coventry v. Lauderdale (Earl), 10 Jur. 793.

Although the word "unmarried" is one of flexible meaning, and may mean either "never having been married," or "not having a husband" at the time when a gift is to take effect, the former is the primary or natural meaning, and, in the absence of any context shewing a different intention, the word will be so construed. Sergeant. In re, Mertens v. Walley, 54 L. J., Ch. 159 ; 26 Ch. D. 575 ; 32 W. R. 987.

Bequest to the son and unmarried daughters of G. D. G. as he (G. D. G.) might by will direct, and failing such direction, to them equally :—Held, that the word "unmarried" had reference to the state of G. D. G.'s family at the date of the will, and that therefore daughters of G. D. G., who were unmarried at the date of the will, were not excluded from participating in the benefit of the bequest by the circumstance of their having afterwards married in the lifetime of the testator. Hall v. Robertson, 2 Eq. R. 15 ; 4 De G. M. & G. 781 ; 23 L. J., Ch. 241 ; 18 Jur. 635. Reversing 1 W. R. 464.

Construed to mean wifeless. Sanders, In re, L. R. 1 Eq. 675 ; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 351 ; 14 W. R. 576.

Property was given by will to trustees in trust for A. for life, "but if he should die unmarried," to be equally divided between the children of B. At the date of the will A. was a bachelor, and at the time of his death he was a widower :—Held, that, in the absence of context shewing a contrary intention, the word "unmarried" must be construed according to its ordinary or primary meaning, as "never having been married," and therefore that the gift to the children of B. did not take effect. Dalrymple v. Hall, 50 L. J., Ch. 302 ; 16 Ch. D. 715 ; 29 W. R. 421.

A testator gave a legacy to his daughter (a spinster) at her mother's decease, if she should be then unmarried, as an outfit and to answer her immediate purposes :—Held, by Stuart, V.-C., not conclusively forfeited upon her marrying in her mother's lifetime. But on appeal :—Held, upon the construction of the context and upon a comparison of the use of the word "unmarried" in the bequest with its use in other parts of the will, that it meant "without having been married." Thistlethwaite's Trust, In re, 1 Jur. (N.S.) 570 ; 3 W. R. 466 : and on appeal, S. C., nom. Thistlethwayte's Trust, In re, 24 L. J., Ch. 712 ; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 881 ; 3 W. R. 629.

—— Effect of Divorce.]—A testator by his will devised freehold and leasehold estates to trustees upon trust out of the rents and profits arising therefrom to pay an annual sum to his son and his son's wife E. jointly, and if his son predeceased E., to E. "so long as she continues unmarried." Before his son's death his son obtained a divorce from E. He was now dead, and E. had not been remarried. On an application that the receiver might be directed to pay E. the arrears unpaid since her husband's death, and continue to pay the annuity :—Held, that the phrase "so long as she continues unmarried" was not equivalent to "during widowhood," and that, although E. was not a widow, as she was the "E." named in the will, and was unmarried, she was entitled to the annuity so long as she remained unmarried. Knox v. Wells, 48 L. T. 655 ; 31 W. R. 559.

A testatrix, by her will made in 1860, bequeathed a fund to trustees, on trust to pay the income to her husband for life, and on his death to divide the fund into four equal parts, and, as to one of the parts, "upon trust to pay the same to J. H., spinster, if she be then sole and unmarried, but, if she be then married," the testatrix directed her trustees to pay the income of the fourth part to J. H. for her life, for her separate use, and after her death to hold it on trust for her children. In June, 1878, the testatrix died, and her husband died in April, 1883. In April, 1861, J. H. married, and in November, 1878, a decree absolute was made for the dissolution of her marriage. There were three children of the marriage. J. H. did not marry again :—Held, that the words "then sole and unmarried" meant "not having a husband" at the time of the death of the tenant for life, and that, in the events which had happened, J. H. was absolutely entitled to the one-fourth share. Lesingham's Trusts, In re, 24 Ch. D. 703 ; 49 L. T. 235 ; 32 W. R. 116.

—— Of Nullity Decree.]—A testator by his will gave the proceeds of sale of his residuary estate to trustees, on trust to pay to his wife E. C., within one month after his decease, a legacy of 200*l.*, and in addition thereto to pay to his said wife, "so long as she shall continue my widow and unmarried," an annuity of 300*l.*, commencing from the date of his decease, "or otherwise in lieu and in substitution of the said annuity, at the option of my said wife, if she shall prefer it, a legacy of 2,000*l.* And I direct that the provision hereby made for my said wife shall be in lieu and satisfaction of any dower or thirds to which she might be entitled out of my estate." After the date of the will the marriage was, in a suit in the Divorce Court instituted by the wife, declared void ab initio, on the ground of the impotency of the testator. He died without altering his will :—Held, that the late wife was entitled to a legacy of 200*l.*, but that she could not claim the annuity inasmuch as she, never having been in law the wife of the testator, never could be or continue his widow, and the annuity was therefore given for a period which could never come into existence. Boddington, In re, Boddington v. Clairat, 53 L. J., Ch. 475 ; 25 Ch. D. 685 ; 50 L. T. 761 ; 32 W. R. 448—C. A.

Held, also, that she could not take the 2,000*l.* which was given in substitution for the annuity to which she was not entitled. Ib.

—— Of Invalid Marriage—Widow.]—A testator gives to his mother an annuity for life, and after her decease to his sister, if she be a widow, but not otherwise, but to revert back to his children after her death. At the death of the testator and of the mother, who survived him, the sister was a married woman :—Held, that the sister, on afterwards becoming a widow, was not entitled to the annuity. Bartleman v. Murchison, 2 Russ. & M. 136 ; 9 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 60.

Bequest to Lady C., a widow of Sir N. C., considered valid although at the date of the will she had married a second husband, R., and the fact of that marriage was unknown to the testator, and she continued to call herself Lady C. The bequest was the bequest of a fund to trustees to pay to her the dividends so long as she should continue single and unmarried; and if she should anticipate such dividends, then the fund to become part of the testator's residue :—Held, that she took an absolute interest in the fund. Rishton v. Cobb, 9 Sim. 615; 5 Myl. & Cr. 145; 9 L. J., Ch. 110; 4 Jur. 261.

"Unprovided for by Marriage" Construed Unmarried.]—A testator bequeaths the sum of 400*l.* sterling to each of his sister's children that may be alive and unprovided for by marriage at her death; and in a subsequent passage of his will adds, "I have left small legacies to my sister's children, that they may not in their turn become the prey of unprincipled men" :—Held, that this was a bequest to daughters only, and not to sons; that "unprovided for by marriage" meant "unmarried"; that a daughter who was a widow at her mother's death was entitled to her legacy of 400*l.* Dunbar v. Boldero, 4 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 76.

2. Gifts to a Class.

a. What is a Class.

A testator directed his property to be sold, and the proceeds to be divided between his three sons and his daughter (naming them), or as many of them as should be then living. He then referred to a power of appointment over a fund under his marriage settlement, and to the appointment of 2,000*l.*, part thereof, to his daughter on her marriage, and declared his wish to be that the residue should be "equally divided among my sons, as also any other sum of money that I may die possessed of" :—Held, that the gift of the residue of the trust fund was made to his sons as a class generally, and not to the three sons named in the previous gift. Fitzroy v. Richmond (Duke), 27 Beav. 186; 28 L. J., Ch. 750; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 971.

Bequest to wife for life, and afterwards to all testator's nephews and nieces living at the death of his wife, namely, "all the children of my brother S. N.," &c. (naming the greater part, but not the whole of his brothers and sisters, and excepting one of his nieces by name, and giving her a legacy) :—Held, that this was not a gift to a class consisting of all the testator's nephews and nieces, but to the children only of those brothers and sisters who were specifically named. Hull, In re, 21 Beav. 314; 4 W. R. 194.

Personal property was bequeathed to trustees in trust for A. for life, and if she should have children that survived her, then at her death for her children equally; but if she should have no heirs, the trust fund was then bequeathed to B., who was A.'s mother, and her heirs :—Held, that upon the death of A., without having ever had any issue, the gift over took effect, and that B. and all her children other than A. became entitled to the fund as joint tenants. Dakin v. Nicholson, 6 L. J., Ch. 329.

Bequest of residue "in trust for my son George, my daughters Lydia, Mary Ann, Alice, and Frances, and such of my child or children, if any, hereafter to be born, as shall attain the age of twenty-one years or marry, in equal shares as tenants in common, but subject, as to the share of any daughter, whether now living, or a child hereafter to be born, to the trusts following"; the share of "such daughter" being settled. The testator had six children only, the five named and one other, all of whom had attained twenty-one at the date of the will. Of the named children, two died in the testator's lifetime without issue, and three survived him :—Held, that the five named children took as a class, and not as individuals, and that the whole residue was divisible among the three who survived the testator. Stanhope's Trusts, In re (27 Beav. 201), followed. Jackson, In re, Shiers v. Ashworth, 53 L. J., Ch. 180; 25 Ch. D. 162; 50 L. T. 18; 32 W. R. 194.

Testator bequeathed his residue to several classes of persons. Some of the parties were members of two of the classes :—Held, nevertheless, that they were entitled to only one share each. Pruen v. Osborne, 11 Sim. 132.

A testator gave 2,000*l.* in remainder to his sisters except A., and he then gave a legacy to A. He afterwards gave "to each of his sisters, namely, B., C. and D., 500*l.* each"; and in case of death of either, portion to go to the surviving sisters above mentioned :—Held, that A. was not included among the surviving sisters. White v. Wakley, 26 Beav. 23; 28 L. J., Ch. 79.

Bequest to A. for life, and at her death for her brother and sister and the testator's brothers and sisters equally. At the date of the will A. had one brother and sister, and the testator had three brothers and one sister :—Held, that this was not a gift to an unascertained class, but to the brothers and sisters living at the date of the will. Havergal v. Harrison, 7 Beav. 49; 13 L. J., Ch. 30; 7 Jur. 1100.

A testatrix bequeathed the residue of her property to be equally divided between the five daughters of Samuel and Mary L. for their own use :—Held, that this was a bequest to the five daughters as personæ designatæ, and not as a class. Smith, In re, 9 Ch. D. 117; 38 L. T. 905; 27 W. R. 132.

To a gift equally between father, mother, brothers and sisters of the testatrix was added a direction that the shares of brothers should not vest till they attained twenty-one, nor of sisters till they attained that age or married :—Held, that brothers and sisters constituted only one class, and a child en ventre sa mère but not born at the time of ascertaining the class did not participate. Garratt v. Weeks, Gardiner, In re, 45 L. J., Ch. 193; L. R. 20 Eq. 647.

Testator directed that at the decease of his wife (who died in his lifetime) his real estate and household furniture should be sold, and the moneys equally divided "between my nine children." He then bequeathed his personal estate not thereinbefore bequeathed to his trustees, upon trust to get in and convert the same into money, and pay and divide the same "equally to and between all my children," except that his eldest son, John, by reason of his becoming entitled to a piece of property by a different title, should receive 30*l.* "less than each of my other children" :—Held, that the gift of residuary personalty was a gift to the testator's nine children as persons designated; and hence that the representative of a child who died in the testator's lifetime was entitled to participate by virtue of the 33rd section of the Wills Act, 1837. Stansfield, In re, Stansfield v. Stansfield, 49 L. J., Ch. 750; 15 Ch. D. 84; 43 L. T. 310; 29 W. R. 72.

Under a gift to one for life, with remainder "to my grandchildren" :—Held, that the bequest was not limited to grandchildren to whom legacies had previously been given nominatim, but that all the grandchildren who came into esse prior to the period of distribution were entitled. Moffatt v. Burnie, 18 Beav. 211; 23 L. J., Ch. 591; 18 Jur. 32; 2 W. R. 83.

Where a testator directed his trustees to pay all or any part of the residue of the income of his personal estate, so long as his mother should live, as in their discretion, and to the exclusion of any one or more of them, his trustees should think fit and proper, for the maintenance and education or otherwise for the advancement of "my nephew, A. W., and my nieces, the son and daughters of my late sister A.," and after the decease of his mother to pay an annuity, which he had given her, "for the benefit of my nephew and nieces," in the same manner and for the same purposes as thereinbefore directed, until they should respectively attain twenty-one, and provided that "in case my said nephew or any or either of my said nieces" should marry under twenty-one, and die leaving issue, his trustees should make advances out of income for the benefit of such issue "as they may deem expedient or think fit," and directed that immediately after the decease of his mother, and upon his nephew and nieces respectively attaining twenty-one, his trustees should transfer one equal share of the trust estate to each, and provided that in the event of his nephew or either of his nieces dying under twenty-one married and leaving issue the issue should take their parent's share:—Held, that the gift to the nephew and nieces was made to them nominatim, and not as a class. Barnshaw, In re, 15 W. R. 378.

A testatrix bequeathed stock to trustees in trust for her brother R.-G. for life, and after his decease in trust for his son, J. R.-G., for life, and after the decease of both of them upon trust for any immediate or direct descendants of her said brother or nephew who should bear the name of R.-G. for life, and from and after his or her decease, or in case of failure of any such immediate or direct descendants of her said brother or nephew who should bear that name, upon trust for certain charities, with a condition of forfeiture on abandoning the name of R.-G. Both R.-G. and his son J. R.-G. survived the testatrix, and J. R.-G. survived R.-G., but died without ever having had any issue. At the death of J. R.-G., the only descendant of R.-G. who bore the name of R.-G. was a descendant in the female line, C. G. R.-G., and he had assumed the name of R.-G. by royal licence after the death of R.-G.:—Held, that the intention of the testatrix was not that the descendants described should take singly and successively, but as a class for life, and that C. G. R.-G., being the only member of the class, took the whole for life. Roberts, In re, Repington v. Roberts, 45 L. T. 450—C. A. Reversing on this point 50 L. J., Ch. 265.

b. Who are Entitled.

Gift to Children "To be Born" or "To be Begotten."]—The words "to be begotten" in a will are construed as relating to the root of descent, and not to the time of birth. Almack v. Horn, 1 H. & M. 630; 1 N. R. 535; 32 L. J., Ch. 304; 8 L. T. 415; 11 W. R. 505.

The words "to be begotten," in a will, where the intention of the testator is not otherwise to be collected, will have their strict legal construction. Therefore all the children of a particular person "begotten" or "to be begotten" will be included. Ib.

Devise to A. and her daughter, B., for their lives, remainder to all the children of A. and B. to be begotten, as tenants in common in tail. B. being the only daughter of A.:—Held, that B. was entitled in common with her own children to share in the remainder in tail. Ib.

A legacy of 500*l.* is given to the eldest son of A., to be begotten, to place him out apprentice. A. has a son born after the testator's death, who brings a bill for the legacy; and it is decreed to be paid him forthwith, though not born in the testator's lifetime, and though the 500*l.* was given for a particular purpose. Nevill v. Nevill, 2 Vern. 431.

The words "begotten and to be begotten" are the same as well on construction of wills as settlements. Cook v. Cook, 2 Vern. 545.

—— When only those born in Testator's Lifetime included.]—Legacy to children of A. lawfully begotten or to be begotten extends only to those born in lifetime of testator. Sprackling v. Ranier, Dick. 344.

Testator devised freehold fee-simple estates to trustees during the life of his son J., upon certain trusts, remainder to his son's children and their issue, in the same words as in the above devise to his daughter's children, and in default of such issues to all and every the child and children of his daughter S., &c. (in same words as before):—Held, that only six of the nine children of S. took under this devise, namely, five who were born, and one who was en ventre at the death of J. Mogg v. Mogg, 1 Mer. 665; 15 R. R. 185.

Testator devised freehold fee-simple estates to his widow for life, and after her decease to the same uses as in the devise last stated:—Held, that all the nine children of S. took under this devise, all being born in the widow's life. Ib.

Testator gave legacies of 200*l.* to each of the children of his nephews and nieces begotten, or to be begotten, and directed that the legacies should be paid to them at the usual periods:—Held, that the legacies vested on the testator's death, and that the children of the nephews and nieces who were born after the testator's death were not entitled to participate in the legacies. Butler v. Lowe, 10 Sim. 317; 3 Jur. 1143.

A testatrix gave her residuary personal estate to trustees in trust as to one-fourth for her grand-daughter A., and as to the remaining three-fourths in trust for the children of her daughter B., with certain after limitations. Afterwards, by an informal codicil, she desired her will to be altered, so that instead of her grand-daughter A. receiving one-fourth part of the trust estate, such estate should be equally divided between A. and the children "now born or hereafter to be born" of her daughter B.:—Held, that A. took one moiety, and the children of B. born in the lifetime of the testatrix, or within nine months after her death, took the other moiety. Armitage v. Ashton, 20 L. T. 102.

Gift to A. for life, and after her decease to all the children of B. who should be living at the testator's death, or be born afterwards, who should attain twenty-one, with a direction that no child should be excluded in consequence of any other child having attained a vested interest:

—Held, that the class was to be ascertained upon the latter of these two events, viz., a child of B. attaining twenty-one at the death of A., and that a child born after that period was excluded. Parsons v. Justice, 34 Beav. 598.

Testator devised estates after the decease of F. S. and M., unto all the children of F. S. and M. then already or thereafter to be born of their bodies, male or female, for and during their joint lives and the life of the survivor of them; remainder to trustees to preserve contingent remainders, in trust nevertheless to permit all the said children to receive the rents of the property in equal shares during their lives, and from and after their several deceases unto and equally between all their issue, male and female, and for want of such issue over:—Held, that only children of F. S. and M. living at testator's death were included under the gift to children "now already or hereafter to be born." Woodhouse v. Herrick, 1 K. & J. 352; 3 Eq. R. 817; 24 L. J., Ch. 649; 3 W. R. 303.

—— When Children Born after Testator's Death included.]—Testator devised freehold fee-simple estates in possession to all and every the child and children "begotten and to be begotten" of his daughter S. M. for life; and after the decease of such child and children, to the lawful issue of such child and children, to hold to such issue, his, her and their heirs as tenants in common; and in default of such issue over to other persons. S. M. had nine children, four born in the testator's life, and five after his decease:—Held, that all the nine took under this devise as tenants in common in tail, with cross-remainders. Mogg v. Mogg, 1 Mer. 654; 15 R. R. 185.

A testator devised a real estate to trustees in fee for all the children of his two sisters then born, or thereafter to be born, who should have attained, or should afterwards attain twenty-one, in equal shares. And he directed that, as the same should respectively become vested, the trustees should convey the same accordingly:—Held, that the children born after the testator's death took a share. Eddowes v. Eddowes, 30 Beav. 603.

After the death of the annuitant, the testator directed that "the principal from which such annuity was derived should be equally divided between her five daughters, then in existence, and any other children, whether male or female, that might yet be born":—Held, that the five daughters, and all the after-born children of the annuitant, were entitled to the fund producing the full annuity, in equal shares. Attwater v. Attwater, 18 Beav. 330; 23 L. J., Ch. 692; 18 Jur. 50; 2 W. R. 81.

A. devised a term for years to his daughter and her children (she having then three children), "and also to such other children as she should have, and the children of those children." She had other children afterwards. Per cur., the woman and her three children took jointly each a fourth part, and that the after-born children took nothing. Alcock v. Ellen, 2 Freem. 186. And see Minshull v. Minshull, 1 Atk. 413.

—— Children Living at Date of Will, when included.]—Devise in trust to the use of the testator's son H. for life, and after his decease to the use of J., the son of H., for life, and after the decease of J., to the use of the first and every other son of J. successively in tail, and in default of such issue, to the use of every son of the testator's said son H. thereafter to be born severally and successively in tail:—Held, that on the death of J. without issue, H. having previously died, the second son of H., though born at the date of the will, became entitled to an equitable estate tail in the devised lands. Harrison v. Harrison, Ir. R. 10 Eq. 290.

The testator devised an estate to his six grandsons (of whom the appellant was one) "during their respective lives, in equal shares, as tenants in common, and as to the respective shares therein of each of them, my said grandsons after his decease, to the use of his first and every other son successively, according to seniority of birth in tail male; and on failure of the issue male of any one or more of my said grandsons, then and so often as the same shall happen, I give and devise as well the share or respective shares originally limited to the grandson whose issue shall so fail, as the share or respective shares which by virtue of this present clause shall have become vested in him or them, or his or their issue male, to the use of the other or others of my said grandsons during his or their life, or respective lives, as tenants in common. And after the decease of such last-mentioned grandsons, then I give and devise the share or shares lastly hereinbefore limited to him, to his first and every other son successively according to seniority of birth in tail male; and if there shall be a failure of such issue of all my said grandsons but one of them, I give and devise the entirety of all the said estates to the use of such only grandson for his life, and after his decease to the use of his and every other son successively according to their seniorities in tail male." By a proviso at the end of the will, the testator directed—"Provided always, that if any person whom I have made tenant in tail male of my said estate shall be born in my lifetime, then and in such case I revoke the devise so made to him. In lieu thereof, I give and devise the hereditament comprised in such devise and appointment to the use of the same person respectively, for the term of his or her natural life, and after his or her decease, to the use of his or her first and every other son successively according to their respective seniorities in tail male." Two out of the six grandsons died without issue. The eldest son of the appellant was born before the date of the will, and by a disentailing deed executed after the testator's death conveyed to the appellant his share and interest in the said estate in fee. In a suit for declaration of title and consequent relief:—Held, that the appellant was entitled to an estate in fee-simple in one-fourth part of the hereditaments and premises, the subject of the suit. The words of the proviso must be construed in their grammatical sense, and be taken to mean a tenant in tail male born after the date of the will, and therefore not to include the eldest son of the appellant. The words "shall be born in my lifetime," in the absence of any context to explain them, are to be taken as words of futurity. Consequently, the gift of an estate tail to the appellant's eldest son, who was born before the date of the will, was not revoked. Gibbons v. Gibbons, 50 L. J., P. C. 45; 6 App. Cas. 471; 45 L. T. 177.

Testator, by codicil, gave legacies of 500*l.* each to A., B., C. and D., who, from the other parts of the codicil, and from the will, appeared to be grandchildren of his brother Henry. He added, "Item, I direct my executors to pay out of my personal estate the sum of 500*l.* apiece to each child that may be born to either of the children of either of my brothers lawfully begotten, to be paid to them on his or her attaining the age of twenty-one." At the date of the codicil, and at the testator's death, there were to his knowledge living several grandchildren of his brothers, besides A., B., C. and D., and various children of the brothers of the testator, and the testator was survived by one at least of his brothers:—Held, that A., B., C. and D. were not entitled to double legacies. Early v. Benbow, 2 Coll. C. C. 342; 15 L. J., Ch. 169; 10 Jur. 169.

A testator, by a codicil to his will, gave legacies of 500*l.* each to four children, by name, of his niece, Alice Early, the eldest daughter of his brother Henry, and he directed his executors to pay, out of his personal estate, the sum of 500*l.* apiece to each child that might be born to either of the children of either of his brothers, to be paid to each of them on his or her attaining the age of twenty-one years. The testator's niece, Alice Early, besides the four children named in the codicil, had three other children living at the date thereof:—Held, that those children were not entitled to a legacy of 500*l.* each, as the words of the codicil contemplated only children who might be born subsequently to the date of it:—Held, also, on the same will, by Sir John Leach, that a child born after the testator's death was not entitled, and, by Sir J. L. Knight-Bruce, that the four children did not take cumulative legacies. Early v. Middleton, 14 Beav. 453; 15 Jur. 867.

—— Child en ventre sa Mère.]—A testator directed his executors to pay "the sum of 500*l.* apiece to each child that may be born to either of the children of either of my brothers lawfully begotten":—Held, that the child of a niece born within eight months after the testator's death was entitled to the legacy, and that the gift was not as to such child void for remoteness. Storrs v. Benbow, 3 De G. M. & G. 390; 22 L. J., Ch. 823; 17 Jur. 821; 1 W. R. 115, 134, 420.

A will directed that all legacies should be paid within six months after death. By a codicil, executed on the day of the testator's death, after giving 500*l.* apiece to five of the grandchildren of his brothers by name, he bequeathed 500*l.* to legatees thus described, "each child that may be born to either of the children of either of my brothers lawfully begotten":—Held, that of the children of the brother's children neither those born at the date of the codicil nor those begotten after the testator's death were entitled, but only children en ventres leur mères at the date of the codicil and of the testator's death. Townsend v. Early, 3 De G. F. & J. 1; 28 Beav. 429. And see cases in next col.

—— Where Period named by Testator.]—Residue bequeathed to A. and all the other children hereafter to be born of B., at their respective ages of twenty-one; those born after one attains that age are excluded. Gilbert v. Boorman, 11 Ves. 238; 8 R. R. 137.

Bequest to children of A., born or to be born, as many as there might be, at twenty-one or marriage, with survivorship, and a limitation over on death of all, &c.:—Held, vested in those living when one is entitled, to the exclusion of those born afterwards. Whitbread v. St. John (Lord), 10 Ves. 152; 7 R. R. 366.

Under a bequest to all the children of A., "now born or hereafter to be born who shall attain twenty-one," in equal shares, with powers of maintenance, accumulation, and advancement out of presumptive shares, the members of each class are not to be ascertained at the time the first of them attains twenty-one, but all the children are to be let in. Bateman v. Gray, 37 L. J., Ch. 592; L. R. 6 Eq. 215; 16 W. R. 962. Reversing 29 Beav. 447.

A testator gave the accumulation of the rents and profits of real and personal estate at the expiration of twenty years after his decease to such of his grandchildren, "now born or hereafter to be born during the lifetime of their respective parents," as should attain twenty-one or marry with consent, and whether born or unborn when any other of them should attain the age aforesaid. At the expiration of the twenty years there were several grandchildren who had attained twenty-one, but two of the testator's children were still living:—Held, that the shares of the grandchildren who had attained twenty-one were vested, subject to open and let in the claim of any other grandchildren who might attain the same age, and in the meanwhile the interest only of the vested shares was to be paid. Scott v. Scarborough (Earl), 1 Beav. 154; 8 L. J., Ch. 65.

Gift to Children "Born" or "Begotten."]—Gift to all and every the children of nephews and nieces lawfully begotten, includes after-born children. Browne v. Groombridge, 4 Madd. 495; 20 R. R. 326.

The testator gave to A. B.'s children, 50*l.* to every child he hath by his wife, to be paid them as they come of age; there were eleven children at the date of the will, thirteen at the testator's death, and three born afterwards. The thirteen children living at the death of the testator are entitled to their legacies, but not those born afterwards. Ringrose v. Bramham, 2 Cox, 384; 2 R. R. 84.

Devise of real estate to A. for life, and after her death to all the children of A. born at the time of her death. A. had two children, both of whom died in her lifetime:—Held, that the shares in the real estate vested in them indefeasibly at their births. Paterson v. Mills, 18 L. J., Ch. 449; 14 Jur. 126.

Gift after a previous life estate to C. to the children of W. who should be living at the death of testator and C.:—Held, that a child of W. who was born after the death of testator and survived C., was included in the class and took a share. Fox v. Garrett, 28 Beav. 19.

The fiction or indulgence of the law which treats a child en ventre sa mère as actually born, applies only for the purpose of enabling such child to take a benefit to which, if actually born, it would have been entitled; in all other cases the word "born" must have its natural interpretation. Blasson v. Blasson, 5 N. R. 65; 2 De G. J. & S. 665; 34 L. J., Ch. 18; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 1113; 11 L. T. 353; 13 W. R. 112. And see S. C., 3 N. R. 407.

Children en ventre sa Mère, when Entitled.]—The law is clear that a devise to an infant en ventre sa mère is good, though he be born after the death of the testator, and he shall take by way of executory devise when he is born. Anon., 1 Freem. 293. S. P., Taylor v. Bydall, id. 243.

One devises, in case he have no son at the time of his death, to S. The testator dies, leaving his wife privement enceinte with a son; this posthumous son is a son living at the testator's death, and S. not entitled. Burdet v. Hopegood, 1 P. Wms. 486.

Infant en ventre shall not take under a bequest to the children of A. living at the death of testator. Cooper v. Forbes, 2 Bro. C. C. 63, sed quære.

Bequest to all children "born in the lifetime of testator" includes child of which the feme was enceinte at death of testator. Trower v. Butts, 1 Sim. & S. 181; 1 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 115; 24 R. R. 164.

The description of children of A. does not extend to a child en ventre sa mère. Pierson v. Garnet, 2 Bro. C. C. 38; Pre. Ch. 201, n. S. C., Id. 226.

Testator gave to each and every of his children born or thereafter to be born, and who should be living at the time of his death, 5,000*l.* apiece, to be paid at their ages of twenty-one, &c., with interest from the day of his death. A child en ventre sa mère is entitled to a legacy of 5,000*l.*, but the interest is to be computed only from the birth. Rawlins v. Rawlins, 2 Cox, 425.

One devises the surplus of his estate to his grandchildren living at his death; grandchildren born after his decease shall not take. Musgrave v. Parry, 2 Vern. 710.

An infant en ventre sa mère, under a devise to heirs of the body of the devisor begotten and to be begotten, cannot take by purchase the legal fee, the terms of description not amounting to a legal designation of him; but is entitled in equity, by virtue of the apparent intention, to the trust of a term attendant on the inheritance, though merged at law. Nurse v. Yerworth, 3 Swan. 608.

One devises the surplus of his estate to his children and grandchildren; a grandchild en ventre sa mère at the testator's death shall not take; secus had it been to the children and grandchildren living at his death. Northey v. Strange, 1 P. Wms. 342; Pre. Ch. 470; Gilb. Eq. R. 136.

Under a devise to all the children of A. except B., a posthumous child is entitled. Clarke v. Blake, 2 Ves. 672.

Where a testator makes a bequest to a person and his children, if there are any children in esse at the date of the will, they take jointly with the parent; but if words are superadded shewing an intention to settle the property the parent only takes a life interest, and for this purpose a child en ventre sa mère is considered to be in esse. Mason v. Clarke, 17 Beav. 126; 22 L. J., Ch. 956; 17 Jur. 479; 1 W. R. 297.

In construing a will a child en ventre sa mère is treated as living where the effect is to leave to the child an interest vested or contingent which any other construction would take away from it, unless there is a clear contrary intention. Pearce v. Carrington, 42 L. J., Ch. 900; L. R. 8 Ch. 969; 22 W. R. 41. Affirming 28 L. T. 659.

A husband gave a fund to his wife for life, then to his daughter (a married woman) for life, and after her death to her children who being sons should attain twenty-one, or being daughters attain that age or marry, and if none, then to certain persons by name. By a codicil he directed that if his daughter should be living at the expiration of five years from the death of his wife, and should not then have had any child or children, the fund should be at once divided between the ulterior takers, as if his daughter were dead without children. The daughter's first child was born five years and six months after the death of the testator's widow:—Held, that as the daughter had a child en ventre sa mère within five years after the death of the widow, the gift over had not taken effect. Ib.

A testatrix by will bequeathed residuary personal estate unto and equally between all her brothers and sisters, share and share alike. She directed that the shares of her brothers respectively should not vest in them respectively until they should respectively attain twenty-one, and that the shares of her sisters should not vest in them respectively until they should respectively attain that age or marry:—Held, that the brothers and sisters formed one class only of persons; and that a brother not born, though en ventre sa mère when the eldest of the brothers and sisters who attained twenty-one came of age, was excluded, although he was born before the eldest of the brothers only who attained twenty-one came of age. Gardiner, In re, Garratt v. Weeks, 45 L. J., Ch. 193; L. R. 20 Eq. 647.

Testator gave his estates to trustees to apply the profits for the use of the child with which his wife was then pregnant during infancy, and at twenty-five to the child in fee; but in case the child should die before twenty-five, without issue, remainder over. The child was still-born. Afterwards testator made a codicil affirming his will, and died without issue. Forty-three weeks after his death his widow was brought to bed of a son; this son cannot take the estate, though found to be legitimate, but it shall go to the devisees over. Foster v. Cook, 3 Bro. C. C. 347.

A testatrix, who died in November, 1874, by her will in January, 1874, bequeathed to each of the three children of her niece 1,000*l.*; and if any of the said three children should die before attaining the age of twenty-one the legacy was to be divided between the survivors of the said three children. There was a codicil in June, 1874, confirming, as regarded this bequest, the will. At the date of the will the niece had three children living, the youngest being three years old, and a fourth child, en ventre sa mère at the time, and born in July, 1874, claimed a legacy of 1,000*l.*:—Held, that the three children born at the date of the will only were entitled to legacies. Emery, In re, Jones v. Emery, 3 Ch. D. 300; 34 L. T. 846; 24 W. R. 917.

A testator devised his estates to trustees, in trust, after C.'s decease, "in case she should leave only one child which should survive her," to pay 200*l.* a year for his maintenance until he should attain twenty-five, and from and after the time when such only child should attain that age to raise 10,000*l.* and pay the same to him at that age, or in case C. should, at her decease, have two or more children, then to raise an annuity for their maintenance until they should respectively attain twenty-five, and when they respectively attained that age, to pay each an equal share of the 10,000*l.* The plaintiff was en ventre sa mère at the testator's death, and was the only child of C. who survived her:—Held, that the bequest of the 10,000*l.* was too remote. Merlin v. Blagrave, 25 Beav. 125.

A father directed the income of one-half of his residuary estate to be paid to his son during his life and afterwards to his lawful issue; one of the issue was en ventre sa mère at the date of the death of the tenant for life, but his parents were not married till after that date, though before the birth of the child:—Held, that such child was not entitled to share in the distribution of the half of the residue. Corlass, In re, 45 L. J., Ch. 118; 1 Ch. D. 460; 33 L. T. 630; 24 W. R. 204.

20,000*l.* left to executors in trust to dispose of in such proportions, &c., as they should think fit amongst such of the testator's relations as should not be worth 2,000*l.*, and should apply within two years after the testator's death. One within the description applied and had a sum ordered her, but died before it was paid:—Held, her representative entitled to it. A child born after the death of the testator, who was of consanguinity, claimed and died without issue:—Held, not within the description, though en ventre sa mère at testator's death. Bennett v. Honywood, Ambl. 708.

A testatrix directed that a fund should be accumulated, and that when the youngest of the children of her nephew and nieces, A., B. and C., who should have been born and living at the time of her decease, should attain twenty-one, the accumulated fund should be divided equally among all such children of A., B. and C. as should then be living, with a provision that if at the period of division any children should not personally claim their shares within twelve months their shares should go over to the others. There were children born in the lifetime of the testatrix, and others born after her death, two of whom were en ventre sa mère:—Held, that the clause as to personal claim was not sufficient to restrict the preceding gift to children who attained twenty-one before the period of division, and that all children living at the period of division, whether born before or after the death of the testatrix, were entitled. Blasson v. Blasson, 5 N. R. 65; 2 De G. J. & S. 665; 34 L. J., Ch. 18; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 1113; 11 L. T. 353; 13 W. R. 113. And see S. C., 3 N. R. 407.

Held, also, that a child en ventre sa mère is only to be treated as born where such construction is necessary for the benefit of that child, and that therefore the distribution was not postponed till the youngest child en ventre sa mère at the death of the testatrix attained twenty-one. Ib.

Held, also, that the words "born and living" were used for the purpose only of ascertaining a period of time, and were not a description of children as objects of the bequest, and therefore children in utero were not included. Ib.

The rule of construction by which a child en ventre sa mère is in law considered as a child in esse is not confined to cases in which the unborn child is benefited by its application. Dictum in Thellusson v. Woodford (11 Ves. 112, 149) considered and approved. Blasson v. Blasson (supra) distinguished. Burrows, In re, Cleghorn v. Burrows, 65 L. J., Ch. 52; [1895] 2 Ch. 497; 13 R. 689; 73 L. T. 148; 43 W. R. 683.

Children of Objects deceased at Date of Will.]—A testator, after bequeathing several pecuniary legacies, gave the residue of his real and personal estate to trustees, on trust to sell and invest the surplus after payment of his debts, and pay and divide the income unto and between all his brothers and sisters, share and share alike, during the terms of their natural lives respectively; and upon their deaths respectively the principal of such residuary property to which each should be entitled for his or her natural life should go to the child or children of the person or persons respectively so dying, in equal shares and proportions, and the testator stated his wish to be, and he recommended such child or children to invest the amount of their respective shares in the purchase of farms. The testator had two brothers, J. and C., and one sister, M., all of whom were married, and had families. C. and M. were both dead at the date of the will. J. was then alive, but predeceased the testator:—Held, that the residue was divisible equally between the families of the two brothers and the sister, so that each stirps took one-third share. Walsh v. Blayney, 21 L. R., Ir. 140.

A testator, by a codicil to his will, bequeathed to the widow of his deceased son the interest accruing from a sum of money, the payment thereof to cease upon her death or second marriage. He directed his executors to divide the principal sum "amongst my surviving male and female children. Should a male or female child's death precede mine, his or her share to be divided equally between the male and female children of such son and daughter deceased." One son and two daughters of the testator were dead at the date of the codicil; the two daughters each left one child. Eight children of the testator survived him:—Held, that the class of persons entitled under the gift were children of the testator living at his death and, per stirpes, the children living at his death of any child of the testator who had predeceased him, whether before or after the date of the codicil; consequently the fund was divisible into tenths among the eight surviving children of the testator and the children of the two daughters who died in his lifetime. Miles v. Tudway, 49 L. T. 664.

Sect. 33 of the Wills Act, preventing lapse in case of gifts to a child or other issue of the testator, does not apply where the devise or bequest is to children as a class. Harvey, In re, Harvey v. Gillow, 62 L. J., Ch. 328; [1893] 1 Ch. 567; 3 R. 247; 68 L. T. 562; 41 W. R. 293.

The principle is, that the section leaves the construction of class gifts unaltered, and that these gifts are still to be read as gifts to those only who survive, and not as gifts to the possible members of the class who die in the lifetime of the testator; and that the gift in regard to those children who so die is not to be treated as a gift to individuals. Where, therefore, a possible member of such a class of children died in the testator's lifetime, leaving issue that survived the testator, and there was never, in fact, any other possible member:—Held, in conformity with the above principle, that s. 33 of the Wills Act did not apply. Olney v. Bates (3 Drew. 319) and Browne v. Hammond (Johns. 210) followed. Ib.

Gift to a Class for Life and then to their Children—Children born before and after Testator's Death.]—Where a will contains a gift to a class whose members take at or before twenty-one and must all be ascertained within the legal period, a proviso settling the shares of members of the class upon themselves for life and then upon their children will be good as to shares of members born in the testator's lifetime, whether or not there are in fact members subsequently born, as to whose shares the settlement cannot take effect. Russell, In re, Dorrell v. Dorrell, 64 L. J., Ch. 891 ; [1895] 2 Ch. 698 ; 12 R. 499 ; 73 L. T. 195 ; 44 W. R. 100—C. A.

Gift to Children of Nephew to be vested at Twenty-five—Children born before and after Testatrix's Death.]—Testatrix directed that as to one moiety of the residue of her estate the trustees should hold it upon trust for the benefit of the children of her nephew, W. H., to be vested interests in them, as to sons on attaining the age of twenty-one years and as to daughters on their attaining twenty-five years or being married before that age ; and in case a daughter should marry under age, power was given to the trustees to settle her share. Power was also given to the trustees to apply the income of an expectant share of any child for maintenance, education, and bringing up, and also to apply half of an expectant share for advancement in life. In case all the children of W. H. should die without taking a vested interest, there was a gift over to testatrix's brothers and sisters, &c. W. H. had seven children, four born before the testatrix's death, all being now infants, and three afterwards. A daughter, one of the four, had married under age :—Held, that the four children, and those only, could take, and that the daughter took a vested interest which at present was one-fourth. Elliott v. Elliott (post, cols. 908–9) followed. Coppard, In re, Howlett v. Hodson, 56 L. J., Ch. 606 ; 35 Ch. D. 350 ; 56 L. T. 359 ; 35 W. R. 473.

"E. and the Other Children"—Children living at Date of Will.]—Testator bequeathed all the stock in the funds which he might die possessed of to trustees upon trust, to pay an annuity to his wife for life, and after her decease upon trust to pay and apply the dividends of the stock to and for the proper use and benefit of E., the eldest daughter of his brother J., and the other children of his said brother, in equal shares for their respective lives ; and he directed that the principal stock should be divided and apportioned to and amongst all and every the lawful issue of the said E. and the other children of his brother in equal shares and proportions, and be assigned to them respectively upon their severally attaining the age of twenty-one years, and to the survivors or survivor of them. He left the residue of his estate to his wife. By a codicil he explained that by E., the eldest daughter of his brother, he meant an illegitimate daughter called E. At the date of the testator's will and of his death his brother had three children only, namely, E., M. and J. Of these E. survived the widow, and had a child, who also survived the widow. M. died in the widow's lifetime, leaving a child who survived the widow, and J. died in the widow's lifetime, without leaving issue :—Held, that by the expression "E. and the other children" the testator intended the three children of his brother living at the date of the will ; that each of the three children took a life interest only in one-third of the dividends ; and, consequently, that upon the death of the widow E. took a life interest in one-third of the dividends, and each of the children of E. and M. took one-third of the capital. Leach v. Leach, 2 Y. & C. C. C. 495 ; 7 Jur. 243.

Tenant for Life included in Gift over to a Class.]—Bequest to testator's daughter, Martha, for life, with power to appoint by will amongst her children ; but if she should die without leaving any, then to and amongst "such of his children as should be living at his decease," and if any should die before becoming entitled to receive a share of the fund leaving issue, the share to be distributed amongst their children : the testator died leaving five children living at his decease ; Martha died without issue :—Held, that her personal representatives were entitled to one-fifth of the fund. Jennings v. Newman, 10 Sim. 219 ; 3 Jur. 748, 1068.

Gift to a Class "from A. downwards."]—A gift to a class "from A. downwards" was held to be inclusive of A., and entitled her to share in the gift. Lett v. Osborne, 51 L. J., Ch. 910 ; 47 L. T. 40.

Class described by Relationship—Half-blood.]—A gift in a will to a class of persons described by relationship will, in the absence of an overruling context, be construed as a gift to all persons answering the relationship, whether of the whole blood or of the half-blood ; therefore a bequest simply to "the sisters of A." will extend to A.'s sisters of the half-blood. Reed, In re, 57 L. J., Ch. 790 ; 36 W. R. 682.

c. When Class Ascertained.

i. Children.

Immediate Gift—Children living at Death of Testator.]—Gift by will to the children of a deceased sister is a gift to those who were living at the death of the testator. Viner v. Francis, 2 Cox, 190 ; 2 Bro. C. C. 658 ; 2 R. R. 29.

A will can never relate to a child who was not in esse till some years after testator's death. Heathe v. Heathe, 2 Atk. 122.

A. devises 20*l.* apiece to all the children of his sister B. A child born after making of will, and before testator's death, shall take. Garbrand v. Mayot, 2 Vern. 105 ; 2 Freem. 105.

Devise in favour of children of testator's sister :—Held, on construction of the whole will, to apply to such children only as were living at the testator's death, and not to include after-born children. Scott v. Harwood, 5 Madd. 332 ; 21 R. R. 300.

Where there is no immediate devise to children and grandchildren generally vesting in possession on death of the testator, after-born children are excluded ; but if the vesting in possession be postponed, then after-born children in esse at the time of distribution are entitled, though devise immediate. Crone v. Odell, 1 Ball & B. 483. Affirmed, 3 Dow, 61 ; 15 R. R. 20.

Where devise immediate, and the description of persons to take general, those answering it on testator's death alone can take, and after-born children are excluded ; but where the enjoyment is postponed to a particular period, or until a particular event happens, those then answering the description will take, and after-born children will be included. S. C., 1 Ball & B. 459. Affirmed, 3 Dow, 61 ; 15 R. R. 20.

E. devised all her real estates to trustees for a term of five hundred years, to raise 200*l.* for the purposes in the will mentioned, and after the determination of that term, and subject thereto to other trustees for one thousand years, in trust to pay out of the rents certain annuities ; and subject to the said two terms, she gave the premises to all and every the child and children of her brother T. and the heirs of their bodies, &c. T. had two children at the death of the testatrix and one born afterwards, but before the death of the annuitant. This is an immediate devise; and the last-mentioned child being born after the testatrix's death, is not entitled to any share of the premises. Singleton v. Gilbert, 1 Cox, 68.

A devise to a man and his children of personal estate. A child born after the death of the testator shall not take. Cook v. Cook, 2 Vern. 545.

One devises the surplus of his estate to his grandchildren living at his death. Grandchildren born after his decease shall not take. Musgrave v. Parry, 2 Vern. 710.

Devise thus: "All the rest of my estate I give to be equally divided between my three daughters, F., G. and A. and all my grandchildren and great-grandchildren, or so many of them as shall be living within two years next after my decease." This was held to extend only to those then born, and not to any to be born within two years after testator's death. Trelawney v. Molesworth, Colles's P. C. 163.

Bequest of residue to children of A., the interest to be paid for their learning, and at the age of twenty to be equally divided between them: but if A. have no children, the interest to be paid to A. for seven years, and then the whole to be paid to her. Whether after-born child shall take, quære on. A new bill by the husband after the death of his wife and several children to whom he was administrator to have the question determined; Lord Camden, Chancellor, was clearly of opinion that the interest vested at the death of the testator, being given per verba de presenti, and that the after-born child was excluded. Hodges v. Isaac, Ambl. 348.

Bequest of 100*l.* each to the testator's two sisters, and the testator's ornaments to be equally divided amongst the unmarried ones:—Held, that the class of unmarried daughters was to be ascertained at his death. Blagrove v. Coore, 27 Beav. 138.

Gift to the wife of the use of all testator's property (following an absolute bequest of 500*l.* to her), for the benefit of herself and unmarried children that they might be comfortably provided for during her life:—Held, to confer on the wife and the children who were unmarried at the testator's death an equal share in the income of the property during the life of wife. Jubber v. Jubber, 9 Sim. 503.

A testator gave 5,000*l.* to be invested in the names of trustees for the benefit of a tenant for life, and at his death the principal to his son and unmarried daughters as he might by will direct, and failing such direction, to them equally:—Held, that "unmarried daughters" meant those who were unmarried at the date of the codicil. Hall v. Robertson, 4 De G. M. & G. 781; 2 Eq. R. 15; 23 L. J., Ch. 241; 18 Jur. 635. Reversing 1 W. R. 464.

Residuary disposition to the children of the testator's brothers and sisters as aforesaid (named previously as legatees) who shall be living at his decease, at twenty-five equally; but in case of the decease of any of the aforesaid brothers and sisters having issue, then the child or children to have the same share as if the parent had been living at his decease, with maintenance and survivorship in case of the death of any unmarried and without issue. The first clear designation of nephews and nieces, living at his death, as the sole objects of his bounty, not altered or controlled by the subsequent designation of the brothers and sisters, admitting questions of doubtful construction as to after-born children. Barker v. Lea, 3 V. & B. 113.

Future Gift — Remainder — Children born before Period of Distribution.]—Testator gave the residue of his real and personal estate to his wife for life, and upon her decease he bequeathed it to the children of A. and his wife Jane, to be equally divided amongst them, the said Jane's children, and not to any children by any other marriage of either party; the residue is divisible amongst the children of A. and his wife who were living at the death of the wife, but will not extend to children born after that time. Ayton v. Ayton, 1 Cox, 327.

Bequests to the testator's wife for life, then after an appropriation to answer annuities, to the children of the testator's brothers and sisters. All the children living at the death of the testator and those born afterwards before the death of the wife had vested interests, a codicil in favour of the same objects, only restrained to those surviving at the time of distribution, being held to apply only to the capital of the fund appropriated to the annuities. Middleton v. Messenger, 5 Ves. 136; 5 R. R. 1.

Devise of real estate to H., the testator's daughter, for life; and after her death without issue to sell and divide the money among all and every the children of his two sisters. The sisters had several children born in the lifetime of testator; one of them had a child born afterwards, but in the lifetime of H. H. died without issue:—Held, the after-born child entitled. Bartlett v. Hollister, Ambl. 334; 1 Bro. C. C. 530, n.

Child born after death of testator decreed to take under a general gift to A. for life, then to the children of A., but this point not contested. Simmons v. Vallance, 4 Bro. C. C. 345.

A legacy of a sum to be divided among children. All those born before the time of division take. Pulsford v. Hunter, 3 Bro. C. C. 416.

Devise to S. for life, and after her decease estate to be settled by counsel, and go amongst testator's grandchildren of male kind, and issue in tail male with remainder over. Only one grandchild was born in testator's lifetime, but two were born afterwards, before death of S.:—Held, such after-born children were entitled. Marshall v. Bousfield, 2 Madd. 166.

Bequest of residue after death of testator's wife to five of his children, and to "the son of his son T. or his other children that is living":—Held, to pass shares to children of son born after the testator's death, and before the death of the wife. Tebbs v. Carpenter, 1 Madd. 290; 16 R. R. 224.

A gift of a sum on death of a tenant for life to the children of A. includes only children of A. born at the death of the tenant for life, notwithstanding the gift was made by reference to another and independent gift, which included all children of A. Batson v. Rowlands, 13 L. T. 663; 14 W. R. 261.

Where property is limited to A. for life, and the will contains a subsequent limitation in favour of A.'s children, and a question arises as to which of the children are to participate, the court will not decide the question until the death of A., when all the parties interested in discussing the question are in esse. Heather v. Winder, 5 L. J., Ch. 41.

A testator devised and bequeathed to his trustees all his freehold, leasehold and personal estate, in trust to accumulate the rents and interests until his daughter H. attained twenty-one, then to be divided between his children, W., A. and H.; and he directed that the rents and interests arising therefrom after his daughter attained twenty-one should be paid to W., A. and H. equally; all the rest and residue of his personal estate, he gave unto the issue of W., A. and H., share and share alike. W. and H. died without issue:—Held, that such of the children of A. as were living at the time of the death of H. were entitled to the one-third given to H. for life, and similarly of the share of W. Ib.

When life estate is interposed between the death of testator and the enjoyment by the children of the tenant for life, and there is nothing to limit the general description, after-born children will be included. Crone v. Odell, 1 Ball & B. 462. Affirmed, 3 Dow, 61; 15 R. R. 20.

Where property is given to trustees upon trust for a person or persons for life or until a contingency, and afterwards upon trust for a class of children or others, the members of the class are those who are members of it at the death of the testator and all who become members of it before the arrival of the event. Wood, In re, Moore v. Bailey, 43 L. T. 730; 29 W. R. 171.

In a legacy to the children of A., those born before the time of distribution are entitled to share, unless a time of distribution is expressly provided, excluding those born afterwards by the necessity of a previous distribution. Walker v. Shore, 15 Ves. 125; 10 R. R. 41.

Bequest of the produce of the sale of a copyhold estate to A., the wife of B., for life, and after her death to divide the principal among the children of B. and C. equally, and of the testator's reversionary interest in bank stock on the death of D., if in his name at his decease, and if not, at D.'s death equally among the same children. Vested interests in all the children, comprising those who died and those who came into existence after the death of the testator, and during the lives of the tenants for life. Id. 122.

—— Where Interest accelerated.]—Where a fund was given to be divided upon the death or alienation by tenant for life among his children who should attain twenty-one, and the gift over took effect upon his bankruptcy, there being then three children, of whom two had attained twenty-one, the court allowed them the dividends of one-third each, but refused them the capital. Brandon v. Aston, 2 Y. & C. C. C. 30; 7 Jur. 10.

A testator gave a fund to trustees upon trust to pay the income to his son during his life, and after his death to pay and divide the fund equally among all the children which the son might have, as and when they should respectively attain twenty-one, and if the son should leave no child who shall attain twenty-one, the fund was to sink into the residue of the testator's estate. There was a proviso that if the son should be adjudicated bankrupt, the fund and the income thereof should thenceforth immediately go and be payable or applicable to or for the benefit of the said child or children of the son "in the same manner as if he was naturally dead" or in default of such child or children should sink into the residue. After the death of the testator, the son was adjudicated a bankrupt; at the date of the adjudication he had two children; other children were born to him afterwards:—Held, that the children born after the adjudication were entitled to share in the fund subject to the contingency of their attaining twenty-one. Bedson's Trusts, In re, 54 L. J., Ch. 644; 28 Ch. D. 523; 52 L. T. 554; 33 W. R. 386—C. A.

Testator gave his property to his widow for the benefit of his children so long as his wife remained unmarried, and, in the event of her marrying, gave her a life interest in 2,000*l.*, which he directed to be invested, and, in the event of her death, to be divided equally between his children. He then authorised certain advancements on loan to be made to his children, and continued, "At my wife's death the estate then remaining is to be divided into four parts, and the proceeds divided equally amongst the children then surviving." The widow married again:—Held, that the residue vested in the children living at the widow's remarriage. Dear, In re, Helby v. Dear, 58 L. J., Ch. 659; 61 L. T. 432; 38 W. R. 31.

A testator devised a house to his son for life, and after his death to his son's wife for life, and after the death of the survivor to a trustee upon trust to sell and hold the proceeds in trust for all the testator's children then living, and the issue then living of deceased children. The testator subsequently revoked the life interest given to his son and his son's wife, both of whom were still living:—Held, that there was an immediate devise to the trustee upon trust for sale on the death of the testator, at which time the trust for sale arose, and that the class of children and issue of deceased children, who were to take under the trust, was to be ascertained when the trust for sale arose, and not at the date of the death of the survivor of the tenants for life. Johnson, In re, Danily v. Johnson, 3 R. 308; 68 L. T. 20.

—— Children dying before Period of Distribution.]—A testator directed his property to be settled upon his daughter H., in such manner that in case of her death it should devolve upon her children, if she had any, and if she should not have any, then that she should bequeath it to any person she might think fit. The word "devolve" imports transmission to children living at the death of the mother; and upon the death of the mother, her husband, as representative of a deceased child, took no interest under the will. Parr v. Parr, 1 Myl. & K. 647; 2 L. J., Ch. 167.

A testator, by his will dated in February, 1854, left the entire residue of his property (which was principally realty) to his trustees therein named, "In trust for the benefit of my dear wife during her lifetime, at her death to be equally divided among our children, Thomas, James and Mary Hamilton, to take what would have been their mother's share, and any other of my grandchildren to represent their parents in similar circumstances." The testator died in December, 1856, leaving seven children. His widow died in April, 1889. Thomas, James and Mary Hamilton named in the will were grandchildren of the testator, and their mother, the testator's daughter, was dead at the date of the will. Three other children of the testator died in the interval between the date of his death and the date of the death of his widow. The question was, what in the events which had happened was the true construction of the devise and bequest of the residue of the testator's real and personal estate :—Held, that the words "in similar circumstances" afforded no ground for disturbing the well settled rule that where the period of distribution was the death of the tenant for life, and the gift was one among a class of persons, then the share of any one dying in the lifetime of the tenant for life went over :—Held, therefore, that the children of the testator who died after his death and before the death of his widow did not take vested or indefeasible interests in the testator's estate ; but that the interests of such children so dying were devised and bequeathed to their children by the concluding clause in the will. Miles, In re, Miles v. Miles, 61 L. T. 359.

J. L., by his will, gave to his niece the rents of houses for her life, and after her death devised the houses to her children by her late husband, in what proportions she should by her will direct. At the testator's death, the niece had nine children, but four died in her lifetime :—Held, that all the five surviving children were entitled, to the exclusion of the representatives of those who died in the lifetime of their mother ; held, also, that these children took as tenants in common. Arrow v. Bellamy, 9 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 198.

A. bequeathed to trustees certain leasehold property, in trust to pay the rents to B. for life ; and after B.'s death A. gave the leasehold to the heirs and children of the body of B. lawfully begotten, whether males or females, equally between them, for all the residue of the term of years that should remain unexpired thereon at B.'s death. B. had ten children, some of whom died during her lifetime, and others survived her :—Held, that the respective personal representatives of the children who predeceased B. took equal shares in the leaseholds with the children who survived her. Swan v. Bowden, 11 L. J., Ch. 155.

A testator devised certain lands to his eldest son, John, and his assigns during his life and after his death to such of his children or other issue born in his lifetime as he should appoint, and in default of appointment equally among them as tenants in common ; in case John should leave no issue living at his decease, the testator devised the lands to the second son, Richard, for life, followed by the like provisions and limitations in favour of his children or other issue born in his lifetime ; in the event of Richard dying without lawful issue the lands were devised in similar terms to the testator's third son, Emanuel, for life, with the same provisions and limitations in favour of his children or other issue born in his lifetime ; and in the event of Emanuel dying without issue the lands were devised in similar terms to the testator's fourth son, Robert, for his life, with the same provisions and limitations in favour of his children or other issue born in his lifetime. The will then provided : "And in case my said son Robert shall leave no issue living at the time of his death, then, subject as aforesaid, I give and bequeath the same to my daughters who shall then be living or who shall have died leaving issue then living, and their respective executors and administrators in equal shares, as tenants in common for ever." The testator's four sons survived him. Robert, the fourth son, and Emanuel, the third son, both died in 1853 unmarried and without issue ; John, the eldest son, died in 1862 without issue and having survived his wife. Richard, the second son, died in 1892 unmarried and without issue :—Held, that the daughters of the testator who were to take as tenants in common, under the provisions of the will, were to be ascertained as a class on the death of Robert in 1853 and not on the death of Richard in 1892, when all the previous limitations in favour of the testator's sons were exhausted. Archer v. Jegon (8 Sim. 446) considered and followed. Palmer v. Orpen, [1894] 1 Ir. R. 32.

—— Interests vested—Subject to be divested pro tanto.]—Bequest "and after death of, &c., I give and leave to each of the children of —— R., and of B. his wife, 50*l*., which shall be paid to them when they shall be of age" :—Held, vested legacies, and that after-born child shall take. Att.-Gen. v. Crispin, 1 Bro. C. C. 386.

After specific legacies to three of the testator's nieces (a sister's children), there was a gift of the residue, subject to the life interest of the sister and her husband and of an annuitant, "to be divided equally between the daughters of his said sister," and which he bequeathed "to his said nieces," and a gift over if no daughter of his sister should be then living ; the sister had four daughters born at the date of the will and one daughter born after the testator's death, but some only survived the tenants for life :—Held, that all the nieces took vested interests, subject only to be divested by an event which had not happened. Locker v. Bradley, 5 Beav. 593.

A testator directed his trustees to pay the income of his personal estate between his son and two daughters and a grand-daughter for life ; the son to have one-third of such income, one of the daughters another third, and the remaining third was to be divided between the other daughter and the grand-daughter ; and from and after the decease of each of the tenants for life, the trustees were to pay and transfer the share in the principal moneys of the party dying equally amongst all and every his or her children ; and there was a gift over, in case of any of the tenants for life dying without issue, of the share of the party dying to the children of the others :—Held, that the children of the tenants for life took interests which vested immediately on the testator's death, and that the gift was not to a class to be ascertained at the death of the tenant for life. Salmon v. Green, 11 Beav. 453 ; 18 L. J., Ch. 166 ; 13 Jur. 621.

Bequests to the testator's wife for life ; then after an appropriation to answer annuities, to the children of the testator's brothers and sisters. All the children living at the death of the testator and those born afterwards before the death of the wife had vested interests, a codicil in favour of the same objects, only restrained to those surviving at the time of distribution, being held to apply only to the capital of the fund appropriated to the annuities. Middleton v. Messenger, 5 Ves. 136 ; 5 R. R. 1.

Testator gave annuities to three of his relations, and directed that if the annuities were paid by the interest of money in the stocks, at the death of the different parties the principal should be divided between the children of the deceased. One of the annuitants had five children living at the testator's death, but only one of them survived the annuitant :—Held, that the capital of the stock which had been provided to answer the annuity did not vest in the surviving child on the annuitant's death, but vested on the testator's death in all the children then living, as tenants in common. Watson v. Watson, 11 Sim. 73.

S. gave 5,000*l.* to purchase stock, the interest to M. for life, then to W. for life, at his decease to testator's godson S., and at his death to be divided among his brothers equally. S. was dead at the time of the will made. A son of W. born after the testator's death, who would have been a brother of S. had he lived, shall take a share in the 5,000*l.* The testator also, by codicil, gave 4,000*l.* to L. for life, and in case he had no children, to revert to W.'s children. A daughter of W., who was alive at the time of the codicil being made, but died before W., was held to have a vested interest transmissible to her representative. Devisme v. Mello, 1 Bro. C. C. 537.

Bequest of stock to testator's wife for life, and then, as she should by will direct, amongst A., B. and C. and their respective children, and in default of appointment the same at his wife's death to go amongst all the children equally. No appointment was made :—Held, that the fund vested in the children living at the testator's death, subject to be divested pro tanto for the purpose of admitting any after-born child coming into existence before the period of division, i.e., before the death of the tenant for life. Pattison v. Pattison, 19 Beav. 638.

Testator directed the residue of his personal estate after the death of his wife, who was tenant for life, to be divided as follows: to his five nephews and nieces, A., B., C., D. and E., two shares each, and to their children one share each; the nephews and nieces survived the testator :—Held, that the residue vested in the nephews and nieces living at the testator's death or born in the lifetime of the tenant for life, the children taking per capita, but the shares of each of the nephews and nieces being double that of each child. Cooker v. Bowen, 4 Y. & C. 244.

Future Gift—Executory.]—Testator directed all his property to be sold and brought into the funds in the names of his executors, in trust for all his grandchildren, to be divided equally among them at the expiration of twenty years after his death :—Held, that all the grandchildren living at the death of the testator took vested interests, subject to be opened to let in after-born grandchildren. Oppenheim v. Henry, 1 W. R. 126.

Testator gave 30,000*l.* unto and amongst the children of his daughter who should be living at the time the eldest should live to attain the age of twenty-four years and the issue of such of them as might be then dead, to be equally divided amongst them per stirpes, and not per capita, and to be paid to them respectively when and as they should attain twenty-four, but without interest in the meantime. At the testator's death, his daughter had three children, who were of the ages of thirteen, twelve and nine :—Held, that the testator intended that such only of his daughter's children should take as should be living when the eldest for the time being should attain twenty-four, and consequently that the bequest was too remote. Dodd v. Wake, 8 Sim. 615.

A bequest to all the children of A. and their issue, share and share alike, and to be paid twelve months after the testator's death, is an absolute gift to such children of A. as are living at the testator's death. Butter v. Ommaney, 4 Russ. 70; 6 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 54; 28 R. R. 6.

A testator bequeathed the residue of his estate, after the death of two persons, to such children of B. as should be then dead leaving children; he directed that the children should stand in the place of their parents :—Held, that the children of such children of B. as died in the testator's lifetime took no share of the residue. Id.

Legacy of 300*l.* to E., to be paid at twenty-one or marriage, but if she died before, then to the younger children of F. E. having died unmarried, under twenty-one :—Held, to vest in such of the younger children as were living at that time. Ellison v. Airey, 1 Ves. 111.

Testator had four daughters, A., B., C. and D., and by his will gave 4,000*l.* to each of his daughters A. and B., with a direction that if either of them died unmarried, 3,600*l.*, part of the 4,000*l.*, should be divided among his surviving daughters and the child or children of such of them as should be then dead. A. died unmarried. C. had five children, two of whom survived A., but the other three died in her lifetime. The five children of C. took vested interests in equal fifths of the fund, as well those who died before as those who survived A. Stanley v. Wise, 1 Cox, 432.

A testator gave his residuary real and personal estate upon trust for his wife for life, and after her death upon trusts for the testator's issue, with executory trusts for his sister and her issue; and in default of such issue of himself and his said sister, "or upon their total extinction under twenty-one years old," he bequeathed the said residuary estate unto his first cousins by their mother's side and the issue of such of them as might happen to be dead per stirpes, and to their heirs, executors, administrators and assigns for ever as tenants in common, and not as joint tenants :—Held, first, that the gift to the cousins was not too remote; secondly, that it was not a gift to a class to be ascertained at a future period, but that the first cousins ex parte maternâ living at the testator's death took vested interests liable to be divested to the extent required to let in other first cousins born before the period of distribution; thirdly, that the shares of first cousins who died before the period of distribution leaving no issue were not divested, but went to their real and personal representatives; fourthly, that the share to a first cousin who died before the period of distribution leaving children went to those children. Baldwin v. Rogers, 3 De G. M. & G. 649; 22 L. J., Ch. 665; 17 Jur. 267.

A husband directed that after the death of his wife his trustees should pay and divide 1,000*l.* equally between such ten of the children or remoter issue of H. as the trustees should think fit. At the death of the widow there were only six descendants of H. living :—Held, that the sum was to be divided equally amongst them. Carthew v. Enraght, 26 L. T. 834; 20 W. R. 743.

—— Effect of charging Land or Personalty.]—Legacies in trust for grandchildren then in existence by name, to sons at twenty-three, daughters, at twenty-one; mesne interest for education; surplus to accumulate with survivorship; residue for all the grandchildren generally for their benefit "as aforesaid." By codicil a fund was set apart to pay life annuities :—Held, that grandchildren born after the testator's death were not entitled to a share of the residue into which the fund under the codicil falls, after the purpose answered. Hill v. Chapman, 1 Ves. 405; 3 Bro. C. C. 391.

A testator directed a reversionary sum to fall into his residue. He gave an annuity to A. for life, and his residue to a class of children who should attain twenty-one. The only residue was the reversionary sum and the fund set apart to answer the annuity. On the death of A.:—Held, that children born in the life of A., but after one of the class had attained twenty-one, were excluded, and did not participate in the fund then distributable. Hagger v. Payne, 23 Beav. 474; 26 L. J., Ch. 617; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 479.

Where a residue, consisting partly of reversionary property, is given directly to a class, the class is to be ascertained at once, and not from time to time as the reversions fall into possession, and become distributable. Ib.

A testator, by his will, directed a fund to be set apart to answer an annuity which he directed to be paid to his widow. After her death he directed the fund to form part of his residuary estate; and he bequeathed his residuary estate to all his children equally to be divided between them, with a proviso that if any child should die either in his lifetime or after his decease, and before the part or share bequeathed to such child should become a vested interest, without leaving issue, then such share should go to the survivors, but in case any child should die leaving issue, then such issue should take their parent's share:—Held, that the second branch of the proviso must be read in connection with the first, and that in both the death contemplated was a death before the share vested in possession. King v. Cullen, 2 De G. & Sm. 252.

Bequest of residue in trust, after payment of an annuity of 50*l.* to A. for life, to apply the residue of the interest towards the maintenance of the children of B. until twenty-one, and, in case of the death of A. during their minority, to apply the whole, or so much as was necessary, in the same way, and after the death of A., when such children attained twenty-one, to transfer the principal to them. There was a gift over in case there should be no children of B. living at the death of A. The fund was more than sufficient to provide for the annuity:—Held, that the gift to the children was not confined to those living at the death of the testatrix. Gardner v. James, 6 Beav. 170.

A testator devised his freehold, leasehold, and copyhold estates upon trust to pay his debts; and subject thereto, as to one-half, he gave the income to his wife for her life, and at her death directed it should go into and form part of his residuary estate; and as to the other half, he directed it to accumulate till 1875, when he directed it should fall into his residuary estate; and as to the residue of his estates, whether real or personal, the testator devised the same amongst his son, his daughter-in-law, and all his grandchildren, share and share alike:—Held, that grandchildren living at the death of the testator would alone take; and that adult grandchildren could claim the immediate enjoyment of their shares notwithstanding the accumulation clause. Coventry v. Coventry, 2 Dr. & Sm. 470; 13 L. T. 83; 13 W. R. 985.

Where there was a gift of residue to a class, and no tenancy for life of the income of that residue, but the division of the principal was postponed until after the death of one annuitant, the general rule that the class must be ascertained at the death of the testator was adhered to. Bortoft v. Wadsworth, 12 W. R. 523.

A testator devised and bequeathed his residuary real and personal estate to trustees upon trust for sale and conversion, and out of the income to arise therefrom to pay certain annuities to his wife and children respectively. The trustees were then directed to stand possessed of the balance thereof upon the trusts thereinafter declared; and the testator directed that if any of his children should die in his lifetime or afterwards, without having acquired a vested interest in the income or trust moneys, leaving any child or children, then and in such case such last-mentioned child or children should be entitled to the same share of the income as his, her, or their deceased parent would have been entitled to if living; and from and after the determination of the estates and interests in the trust property thereinbefore limited and given, upon trust to divide the same between and amongst the whole of the testator's grandchildren in equal shares per capita as and when they, being respectively a son or sons, should attain the age of twenty-one years, or, being a daughter or daughters, should attain that age or marry, for their own use and benefit absolutely. Upon the questions as to what would be the period of distribution of the capital and amongst whom such capital would be divisible:—Held, that no distribution could take place until the death of the last surviving annuitant, and that all the testator's grandchildren then existing would be entitled to share equally. Hiscoe, In re, Hiscoe v. Waite, 48 L. T. 510.

Where no Child in Existence at Death of Testator.]—One devises the surplus of his personal estate to the children of A. and B.; neither of them has a child at the making of the will or the death of testator; the devise is executory, and shall extend to any children that A. and B. shall afterwards have; and the children of each shall take per capita, and not per stirpes. Weld v. Bradbury, 2 Vern. 705.

Legacy in trust for the children of A. to be equally divided between them, with benefit of survivorship, and a provision for maintenance out of the interest, A. having no children at the death of the testator:—Held, that after-born children would take, and that the interest till the birth of a child fell into the residue. Harris v. Lloyd, Turn. & R. 310; 24 R. R. 68.

Testator bequeathed 500*l.* to be paid to his grandson P. if he lived to be twenty-one, and in case he died before then, to the other child or children of his daughter equally arriving at such age. P. died before twenty-one, and no child of P. was born or living at testator's death. The grandchildren born after the death of testator were held entitled to the 500*l.*; for not being in esse in his lifetime, he must have had in his view the future children of his daughter. Haughton v. Harrison, 2 Atk. 329.

A parent is bound by nature to support a child, but this has not been extended to grandchildren, and therefore not entitled to interest. Ib.

If the child or children of P. arrive at twenty-one, then the 500*l.* was directed to be paid to them, and interest from the time it becomes payable. Ib.

Devise of estate to A., subject to payment of 500*l.* to M. with interest on her marriage or attaining twenty-one; but if she dies before twenty-one or marriage, and there be no children born of B., then the 500*l.* to revert to A. M. died before twenty-one unmarried :—Held, that children born of B. after death of M. entitled. Hutcheson v. Jones, 2 Madd. 124 ; 17 R. R. 198.

Bequest of shares, the profits to be invested and the interest applied in the education of the children of A. and B., in equal shares ; "and on their attaining twenty-one, the whole to be sold and divided equally among them." There was a gift over if A. and B. should die without issue. A. and B. had no child at testator's death :—Held, that all the children of A. and B. took, and that the class was not limited to those born when the first attained twenty-one ; and, secondly, that the children of A. and B. took per capita, and not per stirpes. Armitage v. Williams, 27 Beav. 346.

H. by her will gave 100*l.* to each of the children of M. who should attain twenty-one years. At the death of the testatrix M. had no children :—Held, that none of her after-born children, if she had any, could be entitled to the legacy. Rogers v. Mutch, 48 L. J., Ch. 133 ; 10 Ch. D. 25 ; 27 W. R. 131.

Where Distribution postponed to a given Age.]—Devise to all the children of A. at the respective ages of twenty-one ; a child born after the death of the testatrix shall take. Congreve v. Congreve, 1 Bro. C. C. 530.

Bequest to younger children of testator's son, to be paid at twenty-one :—Held, vested in those born at the time of the testator's death. Horsley Chaloner, 2 Ves. Sen. 85.

Trust, by will, for all the children of A. when and as they shall severally attain sixteen, with a direction for their maintenance ; those born after the eldest attain sixteen were excluded ; maintenance was directed without regard to the father's ability. Hoste v. Pratt, 3 Ves. 730.

Bequest to children of A. born or to be born, as many as there might be at twenty-one or marriage, with survivorship, and a limitation over on death of all, &c. :—Held, vested in those living, when one is entitled, to the exclusion of those born afterwards. Whitbread v. St. John (Lord), 10 Ves. 152 ; 7 R. R. 366.

Bequest of a residue to all the children of A., the daughters' shares to be paid at twenty-one or marriage, the sons' at twenty-one, or to be sooner advanced for their benefit, with survivorship and interest for maintenance. The fund shall be divisible when the eldest attains twenty-one, and the division shall be among those then in esse. Andrews v. Partington, 3 Bro. C. C. 401.

Testator bequeathed his residuary estate to trustees, upon trust to transfer the same unto his great-nephews and nieces, the shares of the boys to be transferable to them at twenty-one, and those of the girls at twenty-one or marriage, and to accumulate for them in the meantime, with benefit of accruer and survivorship ; and in case of the death of all the said children except one before their shares became vested, then upon trust to transfer the whole to the survivor at the age or time aforesaid :—Held, that a great-nephew born after the testator's death, but before any of his other great-nephews or nieces attained twenty-one or married, was entitled to a share of the testator's residuary estate. Balm v. Balm, 3 Sim. 492 ; 30 R. R. 192.

Where there is a gift to children as a class, and a vested interest is given to them, but there is a postponed time of payment, and another child is born before the period of distribution, such child is entitled to claim a share in his own right. Blease v. Burgh, 2 Beav. 221 ; 9 L. J., Ch. 226.

Bequest to particular description of persons at a particular time vests in persons answering the description at that time exclusively. Godfrey v. Davis, 6 Ves. 43 ; 5 R. R. 204.

J. S. by his will, dated in 1833, directed his trustees to accumulate the income of his residuary real and personal estate during the term of twenty-one years next after his decease, upon trust, at the expiration of the said term, to assign and transfer the same unto and among all and every his (the testator's) great-grandchildren being sons and daughters of his grandchildren, John S., Maria S., and Harriet S., equally to be divided between them, if more than one, as tenants in common, and if there should be but one great-grandchild, then to such one, his or her heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, and in trust in the meantime to pay the whole income of the trust premises unto the respective parents, his said grandchildren, John, Maria, and Harriet, respectively, and their respective assigns equally ; and in the event of there being no such child or children of his said grandchildren, the testator directed that the whole of the said trust premises and the accumulations should belong to E. M. F. absolutely. Testator died in 1837, John S. died in 1848 without leaving issue, and Maria and Harriet S., who were respectively of the ages of forty-two and thirty-eight years, although married, had not had any children at the expiration of the period of accumulation. An amicable settlement and compromise of the rights and interests of the various parties claiming to be entitled under the said will, including the said Maria and Harriet S., was subsequently entered into :—Held, that the testator did not intend that at the end of the period of accumulation there should be no longer any continuing trust ; and that the two surviving grandchildren were entitled to receive the income of the trust premises during the continuance of their joint lives and the life of the survivor, and that after the death of such survivor the said E. M. F. was entitled (in the event of no great-grandchild being born) to the corpus of the accumulated fund. The compromise above referred to declared to be for the benefit of the married ladies, and ordered to be confirmed. Conduit v. Soane, 4 Jur. (N.S.) 502 ; 6 W. R. 667.

Bequest to J. (a younger son of A.) as soon as he should attain twenty-one ; but in case he should die before attaining twenty-one, then to such of the other children of A. as should attain twenty-one ; J. died an infant :—Held, that the words "such, &c., as should attain twenty-one" were equivalent to "at twenty-one," or "when and as they should attain twenty-one," and that on D.'s death the share of a child who had then attained twenty-one became immediately payable, and no after-born child (if any) would be entitled to a share in the fund. Gillman v. Daunt, 3 K. & J. 48.

Testator gave the residue of his personal estate unto and among all and every the children, sons and daughters, of his daughter Elizabeth, in equal shares and proportions, as and when they should attain their respective ages of twenty-two years :—Held, that the children of the testator's daughter living at the testator's death were the only objects of the bequest, and that it was not void for remoteness. Elliott v. Elliott, 12 Sim. 276; 10 L. J., Ch. 363.

A testator, after devising and bequeathing all his real and personal estates to trustees, on trust from time to time to receive the rents and profits, and therewith to pay various legacies and annuities, directed that they should invest the surplus rents and profits at interest, and suffer the same to accumulate; and he declared that they should stand seised of his said trust estate and the accumulations, upon trust that when and as soon as any son of either of his nephews A. and B. should have attained the age of twenty-five years a valuation of his said trust estate should be made, and that the same should then be divided into as many equal lots as there should be sons of his said nephews then living, and thenceforth separate accounts should be kept of the respective portions; and that each of his said nephews' sons, when and as they should respectively arrive at the age of twenty-five years, should choose one of such portions as the share to be allotted to him and his children; and that thenceforth the said portion or share should be held by trustees upon trust for the person so selecting the same for his life, and after his decease upon trust as to one equal moiety for his eldest son and his heirs, executors, &c., and as to the other moiety for the rest of his children and their heirs, executors, &c., in equal proportions, and if but one child both moieties for such child absolutely; but if any or either of his said nephews' sons should die under their respective ages of twenty-five years, or having attained that age, should afterwards die without leaving issue, the share or shares intended for the person or persons so dying should go to the others and other of the said nephews' sons; and if all but one should die without leaving issue, the trustees should stand seised and possessed of the whole trust estate in trust for such one surviving nephew's sons for his life, and for his children and child as aforesaid; but if all the testator's said nephews' sons should depart this life without leaving issue, then upon trust for such person as should at that time be the testator's heir. At the time of the testator's death A. and B. had several sons living, and B. had another son born afterwards:—Held, upon the construction of the will, that the trusts for accumulation and division of the property comprised all the sons of the nephews who should be living when the first of them should attain twenty-five; and as the son who should first attain that age might not be born until after the testator's death, the gifts were too remote, and therefore void; and the testator's real estates upon his death became vested in his heir. Boughton v. Boughton, 1 H. L. Cas. 406. Affirming with a variation 1 Coll. C. C. 26; 8 Jur. 329.

Testator gave his real and personal property upon trust for the children of his daughters who should live to attain twenty-five. At his death one of his daughters had a child who had attained twenty-five:—Held, that this gift was not void for remoteness, but was a valid gift to such of the children living at the testator's death as should attain twenty-five. Picken v. Matthews, 48 L. J., Ch. 150; 10 Ch. D. 264; 39 L. T. 531.

Testator, who died in 1879, gave his real and residuary personal estate to trustees upon trust for sale, conversion, and investment, and directed them to hold the investments, and the income thereof, upon trust to pay and divide the same equally between the then present children of his son J. (whom he named), and any other children who might be thereafter born, as and when they should respectively attain the age of twenty-five, with power for the trustees in the meantime to pay and apply the whole or any part of the income for the maintenance and education of such grandchildren during their minority. There was also a power of advancement. J. survived the testator. He had at the testator's death five children living; one other child was born four months afterwards, and two others subsequently. The eldest child attained twenty-five in 1890:—Held, first, that the children of J. did not take vested interests under the will; secondly, that the gift was to a class which must be ascertained when the first of the children attained twenty-five; and, thirdly, that the gift was void for remoteness. Parker, In re, Barker v. Barker (16 Ch. D. 44), followed. Elliott v. Elliott (supra) commented on and distinguished. Mervin, In re, Mervin v. Crossman, 60 L. J., Ch. 671; [1891] 3 Ch. 197; 65 L. T. 186; 39 W. R. 697.

The testator directed that the rents of the trust premises should be accumulated for twenty-one years; and that the accumulated fund should be in trust for all the children of B. who should attain twenty-one, in equal shares. B. had six children who attained twenty-one. One of them, E., was born after the eldest had attained twenty-one, but during the period of accumulation:—Held, that E., having been born before the period of accumulation came to an end, was entitled to take as a member of the class; and that the fund was, therefore, divisible in sixths. Watson v. Young, 54 L. J., Ch. 502; 28 Ch. D. 436; 33 W. R. 637.

—— After a Life Interest.]—After an annuity for life to father of part of dividends, and remainder as to whole dividends subject to father's annuity, gift to children when they attain twenty-one is gift to all living when eldest attains twenty-one. Curtis v. Curtis, 6 Madd. 14.

A fund was given to one for life, remainder to such children of another person as should attain the age of twenty-one. The legatee for life died before the eldest child attained that age:—Held, without argument, that all the children in esse when such eldest child did attain twenty-one were entitled to share on attaining that age themselves. Clarke v. Clarke, 8 Sim. 59; 5 L. J., Ch. 286.

A testator gave real and personal estate to a trustee upon certain trusts for the benefit of his son during his life, and directed that in case his son should die under twenty-one without leaving issue his trustees should convert the same into money, and divide it equally among E. H., the children of M. W., and the children of E. E., and the issue of such of them as should die leaving lawful issue, the issue taking their parents' shares, the shares to be paid to the legatees being sons at twenty-one and being daughters at twenty-one or marriage, the shares during minority to be invested and the dividends applied for the maintenance and education of the legatees. M. W. had children at the death of the testator, and other children born after the death under twenty-one years of age of the testator's son:—Held, that all the children of M. W. who were born at the time the first of the legatees who attained twenty-one attained that age were entitled to participate in the gift.

Robley v. Ridings, 16 L. J., Ch. 344; 11 Jur. 813.

Testator bequeathed his residuary estate to trustees in trust for his wife for life, and after her decease "to preserve the then remaining part of my estate for the grandchildren of my brother C., to be by them received in equal proportions when they shall severally attain the age of twenty-five years; and when the youngest shall have attained the age of twenty-five years, and he or she shall have received their final dividend or share of my estate, the trust shall cease." Testator left his widow and brother surviving. Eight grandchildren of the brother were in existence at the widow's death, and several were born afterwards:—Held, that the bequest was not void for remoteness, but that those only of the grandchildren who were in existence at the widow's decease were entitled to share in the testator's residuary estate. Kevern v. Williams, 5 Sim. 171.

Where a testator, after giving certain sums in certain shares among the six children of A., naming them, to be vested and payable at twenty-five, with certain provisions for their maintenance until then, afterwards gives another sum of 6,000*l.*, subject to certain life interests, to all the children then born or hereafter to be born, to be vested and payable at twenty-five, and with the like trust for maintenance, and subject to the like provisions and conditions, as the legacies before given to the children then born and named:—Held, that the legacy of 6,000*l.* was void for remoteness as to all the children, both those then born and also the unborn. Comport v. Austen, 12 Sim. 218.

A testator bequeathed a fund to trustees upon trust, after the determination of a life interest, to pay and transfer the trust property equally among the female children of his sister on their attaining twenty-one or marrying with the consent of their parents. At the death of the tenant for life the testator's sister was a widow and had two daughters, the elder of whom afterwards married while under age with the consent of her mother:—Held, that the class to take must be ascertained when the first member became absolutely entitled to a share. Dawson v. Oliver-Massey, 45 L. J., Ch. 519; 2 Ch. D. 753; 34 L. T. 551; 24 W. R. 993.

A testator gave the residue of his property in trust for his mother for life, with remainder to all the younger children of his two sisters, to be vested interests on their attaining twenty-one. There was also a clause of survivorship upon any of the children dying under twenty-one:—Held, that those children were alone entitled who were born previously to the death of the tenant for life. Berkeley v. Swinburne, 16 Sim. 275; 17 L. J., Ch. 416; 12 Jur. 571.

Testator gave his estates, real and personal, upon trust to convert the personal, and after payment of debts, &c., to invest and to permit H. E. during his life to receive the rents and income for his own benefit, and after his death, as to one undivided third part, for all the children of H. E. equally, the shares to be conveyed and paid to them as they should attain twenty-one as to sons, and twenty-one or marriage as to daughters. There were clauses of maintenance and accruer. Testator gave another third part of the estates after the death of H. E. in favour of the children of his sister, and the remaining third part in trust for all and every the children of G., the shares to be conveyed and paid at the ages and times above mentioned, and in case H. E. should die without children the share given for them was to be divided between his sister's and G.'s children, as the two-thirds given to them. H. E. died a bachelor. At his death, G., a widower, had two children. He married again, and when his eldest child attained twenty-one, he had six children, all of whom lived to attain twenty-one. Another child was born afterwards:—Held, that the six children, or their legal personal representatives, were entitled to a moiety of the estates. Berkeley v. Swinburne (supra) explained. Emmet's Estate, In re, Emmet v. Emmet, 49 L. J., Ch. 295; 13 Ch. D. 484; 42 L. T. 4; 28 W. R. 401—C. A.

—— Where Definite Sum given to each Child.]—Legacy to children of S., he having but one born. Those born after held entitled. Maddison v. Andrews, 1 Ves. 58.

A legacy of 500*l.* apiece "to each child that may be born to either of the children of either of my brothers lawfully begotten, to be paid to each of them on his or her attaining the age of twenty-one years, without benefit of survivorship," does not include a child born after the testator's death. Storrs v. Benbow, 2 Myl. & K. 46; 2 L. J., Ch. 201.

A. bequeathed legacies of "500*l.* apiece to each child that may be born to either of the children of my brothers":—Held, that the class included only the children coming into esse between the date of the will and the death of the testator, and that children born at the date of the will, and those born after his death (unless en ventre sa mère at that period), were excluded. Townsend v. Early, 28 Beav. 429; 3 De G. F. & J. 1.

Where a sum of money is bequeathed to be divided among a class when the eldest attains twenty-one, whether the gift be vested or contingent, all the children who are born before the period of division are admitted to take shares. Mann v. Thompson, Perkin v. Mann, 1 Kay, 638; 18 Jur. 826; 2 W. R. 582.

When distinct sums of money are given to every individual of the class, but no time is limited for distribution, the persons who answer the description at the death of the testator are alone entitled to take. Ib.

The construction is the same if the gift be of a certain sum to each of the children of A. and B. who should attain twenty-one; but in case any of them should die under that age, his share to go to his surviving brothers and sisters, although A. had no children at the date of the will, or at the death of the testator, but had children born after the testator's death. The word "surviving" in such a limitation cannot be read "other," so as to entitle a child to the share of a brother who died before he was born. Ib.

The testator gave 300*l.* apiece to each of the grand-daughters of E. S. H. at twenty-one, or on marriage with consent; and if any of them should die, their shares to be equally divided, &c.:—Held, that grand-daughters born after the testator's decease were not included in this bequest. Peyton v. Hughes, 7 Jur. 311.

A limited fund was given to A. B. until some child should attain twenty-one, and 1,000*l.* consols was to be paid thereout to each of his children as they attained twenty-one. The fund was insufficient to provide for all the children. A child attained twenty-one:—Held, that it was, notwithstanding the deficiency, entitled to 1,000*l.* consols. A. B. had issue at the death of the testatrix:—Held, also, that the children born after her death were also entitled. Evans v. Harris, 5 Beav. 45.

Bequest of "the sum of 100*l.* to each of the children of my niece M. who shall live to attain the age of twenty-one years." The niece survived the testatrix, and was still living, but had no children:—Held, applying the rule that, under a gift of a certain sum to each of a class of objects at a future period, objects born after the testator's death cannot be admitted,—that no child the niece might have could take under the bequest. Rogers v. Mutch, 48 L. J., Ch. 133; 10 Ch. D. 25; 27 W. R. 131.

The rule that a gift of a certain sum to each of a class of objects at a future period is confined to those living at the testator's death, is one of convenience only, to facilitate the more speedy division of the estate. Ib.

—— When Youngest attains given Age.]—The "rule of convenience," by which in a bequest of an aggregate fund to children, as a class, payable on attaining a given age, the period of ascertaining the class is the time when the first of the class by attaining the given age becomes entitled to payment, and children coming into esse after that period are excluded, is not applicable to similar bequests of income. Wenmoth's Estate, In re, Wenmoth v. Wenmoth, 57 L. J., Ch. 649; 37 Ch. D. 266; 57 L. T. 709; 36 W. R. 409.

A residuary gift to trustees, with a direction to apply such part of the interest as they might deem necessary in the maintenance of all and every the testator's grandchildren, the children of the testator's two sons, until they severally attain the age of twenty-one, and to accumulate the surplus; and when and as each of such grandchildren should attain the age of twenty-one years, to pay to each of them 2,000*l.*; and as soon as all and every the said grandchildren should have attained their ages of twenty-one, to pay and divide the trust fund unto and amongst all and every his said grandchildren:—Held, to be a gift for the benefit of all the children of the testator's two sons, born or to be born, not confined to children living at the death of the testator, and not distributable upon the youngest grandchild for the time being attaining twenty-one; but that, on attaining twenty-one, the grandchildren were entitled to the interest on their presumptive shares, until another grandchild should be born. Mainwaring v. Beevor, 8 Hare, 44; 19 L. J., Ch. 396; 14 Jur. 58.

Trust of real and personal estate by will, to apply rents and dividends for maintenance of all and every the children of the testator's daughters (except the eldest son), share and share alike, until the youngest of his said grandchildren should attain the age of twenty-one; and in case of the death of any of his said grandchildren, before the youngest shall be twenty-one, having a child or children, such child, &c., to receive the parent's share; and when the youngest of his said grandchildren living shall have attained twenty-one, one equal share of the capital, real and personal, to the use of such of his said grandchildren as shall then be living; and the children of his said grandchildren in case of the death of any leaving such issue, to have the share the parent would have been entitled to, if living at the time of distribution; and to the heirs, executors, &c., of such of his grandchildren and great-grandchildren. The division is to be among all the grandchildren living when the youngest attains twenty-one, including those born since the testator's death, and the children of those deceased; but the representatives of grandchildren dead, not leaving children, are not entitled. Hughes v. Hughes, 14 Ves. 256; 3 Bro. C. C. 352, 434.

A testator, by his will, directed that, after the death of the survivor of his widow and daughter, his trustees should stand possessed of the residue of his personal estate, upon certain trusts, for his grand-daughters; then, by a codicil, he revoked the bequest to his grand-daughters, and gave the share and interest which they, by his will, would have taken in his personal estate, to all and every the child and children of his said grand-daughters, in equal shares, to be paid to such child or children when the youngest or survivor of them should attain the age of twenty-one years:—Held, that these words gave a vested interest to the great-grandchildren who were living at the death of the survivor of the mother and daughter, and that after-born great-grandchildren took nothing. Smith v. Jackson, 1 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 231.

A. gave real and personal estate to trustees as to his household furniture, to permit his children who should be living at home to have the use of the same until such time as his youngest surviving child should have attained twenty-one, and then for all his children equally; and as to the residue of his real and personal estate, to realise the same, and to stand possessed of the net moneys upon trust, when and as all his children, being sons or a son, should have attained twenty-four, or being daughters or a daughter, should have attained the same age or have married, to divide the capital equally amongst all such children, share and share alike; and he empowered his trustees to apply the whole or any part of the annual income of the capital of his residuary estate, in or towards the maintenance and education, or otherwise, for the benefit of all his children who should continue to live together and form a home, until the time of the division of the capital, and to accumulate the unapplied income, and add such accumulations to the capital. The will contained a power to advance to any of the sons who should not have attained twenty-one, any sum not exceeding 1,000*l.* out of the share to which such son might be presumptively entitled. And he directed his trustees to pay and allow, to and for the separate use of any daughter who should marry before the capital of his residuary trust fund should be divisible and divided, an annuity. And if any of his sons who should have attained twenty-four should be desirous of being married to some person approved of by his trustees, he empowered his trustees to declare in writing that upon such marriage the contingent share of his same son in the capital of his residuary estate should become a vested share, and that in that case, upon such marriage, the same should become vested accordingly; and that for every purpose of his will such son should be deemed to have attained twenty-four. Four of the children having attained twenty-four, filed a bill against the trustees and the other children of the testator who had not attained that age, and claimed to have their shares paid to them immediately:—Held, that the estate was not divisible until the youngest child had attained twenty-four, or married. Hole v. Marsland, 4 L. T. 781—L. C.

A testator directed that all his property should be sold, the proceeds to be invested and the interest to accumulate, and after payment of debts the residue to remain until the children of A. by his wife B. should arrive at the age of twenty-one each; then the whole of the proceeds to be divided, share and share alike, between them. There was a gift over in the event of none of the children attaining twenty-one:—Held to be a gift for all children of A. and B. born or to be born, and not restricted to the children living at the testator's death:—Held also, that the shares were not distributable until all such children should have attained the specified age. Pilkington v. Pilkington, 29 L. R., Ir. 370.

—— Effect of Gift for Maintenance or Advancement.]—A testator, having one nephew and one niece, and eight great-nephews and nieces, living at his death, gave one-tenth of his residue to his nephew, and another to his niece, and the remainder to trustees in trust for their children at twenty-one, and he empowered his trustees to apply all or any part of their respective shares for their advancement:—Held, that all the great-nephews and nieces born before the eldest attained twenty-one, though after the testator's death, were entitled to shares. Titcomb v. Butler, 3 Sim. 417.

Legacies to all the children of the testator's sister of 2,000*l.* each, payable at twenty-one or marriage of daughters; and until the shares become payable, the interest, &c., thereof respectively to be paid to his sister for her separate use; a fund to be set apart for paying the legacies to his said sister's children as they became due, and in case he shall die before all her sons shall attain twenty-one, or before all the daughters attain that age or marry, the interest, &c., of the legacies for such sons and daughters as should be under age or unmarried, to be applied towards their education, &c.: all children, including those born after the testator's death, entitled, and an inquiry was directed what would be a proper sum to be set apart to answer the legacies to future children. Defflis v. Goldschmidt, 19 Ves. 566; 1 Mer. 417; 13 R. R. 259.

Bequest of a share of testator's estate, after conversion to be invested in the names of his executors, for the use of the children of J. J. M. by his (testator's) daughter, Mary Elizabeth M.; the interest thereof to be appropriated to their education, and the principal to be divided amongst them as they should severally attain the age of twenty-one years:—Held, that the bequest was for the benefit of all the children of J. J. M. by M. E. M., born prior to the period of distribution, whether before or after the testator's death. Mower v. Orr, 7 Hare, 473; 18 L. J., Ch. 361; 13 Jur. 421.

Under a bequest in trust for all the sons and daughters of A., B. and C. (who were living) who shall attain twenty-one:—Held, that the class was not to be ascertained on the first of the class attaining twenty-one, in consequence of the will containing a power of maintenance and advancement whether they shall or shall not have attained twenty-one, and notwithstanding the liability of the share to be lessened by the subsequent addition to the class entitled to the entire fund. Iredell v. Iredell, 25 Beav. 485.

A. gave his residue to his wife for her life, to be expended by her in and about the maintenance of herself and her children; and after her decease unto and amongst his children, to be paid to them as they should severally attain the age of twenty-one years, with benefit of survivorship:—Held, that each child, on attaining twenty-one, took a vested interest, but that his presumptive share would not be paid to him with the consent of the mother, as there was a trust for maintenance of the others. Part, however, was paid out, the rest being reserved as security for payment of the life income. Berry v. Bryant, 2 Dr. & Sm. 1; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 69; 5 L. T. 818; 10 W. R. 242.

Bequest of a fund in trust to apply the dividends in the maintenance and education of the children of A. until they should respectively attain twenty-one, and upon their severally attaining that age in trust as to the capital of the fund for all such children in equal shares:—Held, that the class was determined when the eldest child attained twenty-one. Pridham v. Massey, 20 W. R. 196.

Real and personal property was bequeathed on trust for division among such of her grandchildren as should attain twenty-one equally, with power for the trustees, during the minority of any of the children, to raise money for maintenance:—Held, that the objects of the gift were ascertained on the eldest child attaining twenty-one, to the exclusion of after-born children. Gimblett v. Perton, 40 L. J., Ch. 556; L. R. 12 Eq. 427; 24 L. T. 793.

Gift to one for life, remainder to four persons named, with a proviso that the share of any legatee in remainder, who should die in the lifetime of the tenant for life leaving lawful issue, should be "assigned and transferred to such issue respectively, in equal shares and proportions on their attaining twenty-one; and the dividends and proceeds in the meantime to be applied in or towards their maintenance and education":—Held, that the gift of income, being to an entire class, for maintenance only, was not sufficient to vest the legacy in the issue before twenty-one. Ashmore, In re, 39 L. J., Ch. 202; L. R. 9 Eq. 99.

—— Effect of Gift over on Default of Issue or Death under Age.]—Under a disposition by will to the children of A. and B., payable at twenty-one or marriage, with a limitation over, upon failure of issue in the lives of A. and B., it was held, that all the children without restriction were entitled; and an apportionment being directed and the interest ordered to be paid to those who had attained twenty-one; children born afterwards, though entitled to a share of the capital, were not allowed to claim the bygone interest. Mills v. Norris, 5 Ves. 335; 5 R. R. 56.

Legacy to the children of A., to be equally divided among them, and if either of them die before twenty-one their share to go to the survivors; a vested interest in the children living at the testator's death, subject to be divested in the event pointed out; after-born children therefore excluded. Davidson v. Dallas, 14 Ves. 576; 9 R. R. 350.

Testator gave 350*l.* to the children of his sister at twenty-one (with interest), and if any died before, to the survivor or survivors. A child born after the testator's death, but during the infancy of the others, is entitled to a share. Gilmore v. Severn, 1 Bro. C. C. 582. And see Berkeley v. Swinburne, and Emmet's Estate, In re, Emmet v. Emmet, supra, cols. 911–12.

Class trebly restricted—"Married Children having Issue at the Death."]—A. bequeathed to his four daughters, unmarried, 2,000*l.* each on their day of marriage, with the consent of his trustees, with interest, by way of maintenance in the meantime; and if one of his daughters should die without being married, he desired the fortune and legacies of her so being the first to die to go to and be divided equally among such of his married sons and daughters as might have issue at the death of such dying daughter. The four unmarried daughters survived the testator, and one of them died unmarried and without issue: —Held, that her legacy was divisible among the testator's sons and daughters who were married at the date of the will and survived her, and had issue living at the time of her death. Elliott v. Elliott, 11 Ir. Ch. R. 482.

ii. Issue.

Substitutionary Gift to Issue of Deceased Legatees — Death before Date of Will.]—A testatrix by her will bequeathed her residuary estate "unto and equally between all my nephews and nieces living at my death: provided that if any of my said nephews and nieces shall die in my lifetime leaving lawful issue, such issue shall take his, her or their respective parents' share or shares equally":—Held, that issue of nephews and nieces already dead at the date of the will took no share in the residuary estate. Smith's Trusts, In re (5 Ch. D. 497, n.) not followed. Brown, In re, Brown v. Brown, 58 L. J., Ch. 420; 37 W. R. 472.

A testator directed his residue to be divided on the death of his wife (who survived him) equally between his brothers and sisters by name, and declared that if any of them should die leaving issue, his, her or their share should go to his, her or their respective issue: — Held, that the class was to be ascertained, as to the issue of a legatee who had died before the testator, at the death of the testator, and as to the issue of a legatee who had survived him at the death of the legatee. Hobgen v. Neale, 40 L. J., Ch. 36; L. R. 11 Eq. 48; 25 L. T. 681; 19 W. R. 144.

A testator, after giving his residuary personal estate to all and every the children of his uncle F. or their issue in equal shares, gave his real estate to A. for life, and after her death upon trust for sale, and to hold the proceeds upon trust for "all and every the children of F. or their issue in equal shares per capita." Four of the six children of F. were dead at the date of the will, and two survived the tenant for life: —Held, that the issue of the four deceased children of F. alive at the death of the testator or born during A.'s lifetime took as by substitution the shares of their deceased ancestors in the proceeds of the realty, the issue of each of the four taking, inter se, in equal shares. Sibley, In re, 46 L. J., Ch. 387; 5 Ch. D. 494; 37 L. T. 180.

—— Issue coming into Existence before Death of Ancestor or Tenant for Life.]—A father gave his residuary estate upon trust for his three daughters for life, and if any of his daughters should die leaving issue, a share proportioned to the number of his daughters was to go to the issue of such daughter, and if only one of such daughters should die leaving issue the whole to such issue, and if all his daughters should die without issue, then to his sisters. He had three daughters. One died leaving four children, one of whom died leaving two children born after their grandmother's death; afterwards another of his daughters died a spinster:—Held, that there were implied cross limitations, so that the surviving daughter had a life interest in half the share of the daughter so last dying. Ridge, In re, 41 L. J., Ch. 787; L. R. 7 Ch. 665; 27 L. T. 141; 20 W. R. 878.

Held, also, that the gift to issue was to the issue living at the death of the daughter, and therefore the three survivors of the four children and the representative of the dead one were entitled to the second moiety, and would, if the third daughter of the testator died without issue, become entitled to the whole. Ib. And see Corrie, In re, 32 Beav. 426.

A husband gave his residuary real and personal estate to trustees to convert and invest, and pay the income to his wife during widowhood, or until his son should attain twenty-two, and then to call in half the money invested and pay it to his son, and as to the other half, to pay the income to the wife during widowhood, and then to his son for life, and afterwards to his lawful issue:—Held, that the children and remoter issue of the son living at his death took together as joint tenants. Corlass, In re, 45 L. J., Ch. 118; 1 Ch. D. 460; 33 L. T. 630; 24 W. R. 204.

A testator gave the interest of 3,000*l.* stock to his wife for life, and after her decease the interest of 1,000*l.*, part of the 3,000*l.*, to his daughter E. for life, and then to her issue; and as to another 1,000*l.* to his daughter M., and all her issue at twenty-one, with trusts for maintenance; and if she should not leave issue at her decease, or they should not attain twenty-one, to the issue of his daughters E. and S. equally, in the same terms as the former gift; and as to the remaining 1,000*l.*, to his daughter S., and her issue after her decease. He then directed a valuation of his farm stock, and gave the amount thereof, and all his personalty and estate whatsoever, to his sons J. and T. equally, and appointed his sons R., J. and T. residuary legatees, subject to the payment of 10*l.* a year to his wife out of the valuation. By a codicil the testator gave to his daughter M. 1,000*l.* consols for life, and after her decease to her issue; and in default of issue, to her two surviving sisters' issue at twenty-one. M. survived her two sisters, and was not married, and the testator left grandchildren and great-grandchildren:—Held, that M. took for life only; that the three sons of the testator, R., J. and T., all took the residue, and their issue at M.'s death took as purchasers as joint tenants; that is, such issue as were either alive at the testator's death, or came into esse before the death of M. Surridge v. Clarkson, 14 W. R. 979.

M., by her will, gave the whole of her property to A. for her life, remainder as to one-fourth to L. or her issue, as to one-fourth to the issue of C., deceased, as to one-fourth to G. or his issue, and as to the other fourth to H. or her issue. The question having been raised as to the period at which the class of issue entitled under the gift was to be ascertained:—Held, that all issue coming into existence before the death of the tenant for life were included in the class, and that they took as joint tenants. Jones, In re, Hume v. Lloyd, 47 L. J., Ch. 775; 26 W. R. 828.

iii. Descendants.

Bequest to each of A.'s sisters and brothers, or to such of them as may be living at the time of my decease, in case of those who may not be in existence at my death, to go to their respective descendants :—Held, that the descendants of a sister who was dead at the date of the will were excluded. Smith v. Pepper, 27 Beav. 86.

A. bequeathed all the residue of his property, after the death of his widow, to the brothers and sisters of her and himself, and to their descendants :—Held, that the persons entitled to take the property were those brothers and sisters of the testator and his wife who were living at the death of the tenant for life, and the children of such of them as were dead were entitled to take by way of substitution. Tucker v. Billing, 2 Jur. (N.S.) 483.

A testator, by a codicil to his will, directed his son to insure his life for 5,000*l.*, and to bequeath that sum to his wife in case she should survive him, to be invested in trust for her sole use and benefit during her life, and at her decease, or at the decease of the son if he should be the longest liver, the 5,000*l.* to be bequeathed to the testator's "daughters or their descendants in equal proportions." The son duly insured his life, and after his death the sum of 5,000*l.* was received by the trustees of the testator's will and invested and the dividends were paid to the son's wife during her life. At her death questions arose on the construction of the codicil, and it was decided that the bequest was a substitutionary gift to the descendants of those of the daughters of the testator who died in the lifetime of the son's wife leaving descendants; that "descendants" included children, grandchildren, and great-grandchildren living at the time of distribution ; and that, although the daughters were to take as tenants in common, the words "in equal proportions" did not apply as between the descendants themselves, such descendants taking as joint tenants. Subsequently the question was raised whether descendants of a daughter of the testator who might have survived such daughter, but died in the lifetime of the son's wife, having severed their joint tenancy, were entitled to participate in the gift :—Held, that it was not necessary that the descendants who took a share should survive the tenant for life. Flower, In re, Matheson v. Goodwyn, 62 L. T. 677.

iv. Relations.

At Death of Testator.]—Testator gives a residue to A. for life, remainder to B. for life, then to be divided among his (testator's) relations. This is a mere intestacy, and goes to the relations at the death of testator. Masters v. Hooper, 4 Bro. C. C. 207.

A testatrix directed all her property at the death of A. and B. "to pass to my relatives in America" : —Held, that the class was to be ascertained at her death, and that all her next of kin in America then living were entitled as joint tenants. Eagles v. Le Breton, 42 L. J., Ch. 362; L. R. 15 Eq. 148.

A testator gave a sum of money to be divided between the relations of his late wife, in such shares as if she had died a spinster, and intestate. The wife had sixteen next of kin at her death, five of whom died in the lifetime of the testator : —Held, that those living at the death of the testator each took a share, and that five shares went to the residuary legatees. Ham's Will, In re, 2 Sim. (N.S.) 106; 21 L. J., Ch. 217; 15 Jur. 1121.

A testator devised his real estates to his first cousin, Thomas Pearce, for life, and, after T. P.'s decease, he devised and bequeathed all his real and personal estates in trust for such of his relations of the name of Pearce, being a male, as T. P. should by deed or will appoint ; and in default of such appointment, for such of his relations of the name of Pearce, being a male, as T. P. should approve of or adopt, if he should be living at the death of T. P., and his heirs, executors, &c. ; and in case T. P. should not adopt any such male relation, or no such male relation should be living at the death of T. P., then to the next and nearest relation or nearest of kin of him, the testator, of the name of Pearce, being a male ; or the elder of such male relations, in case there should be more than one of equal degree, who should be living at the testator's decease, his heirs, &c., for ever. The testator had a brother, Z. P., who had gone to sea, and had not been heard of for many years ; and, supposing Z. P. to have died without issue, the nearest relation of the testator, answering the description in the ultimate limitation at his decease, was the tenant for life, T. P., and next to him R. P., the plaintiff. T. P. died without issue, and without having exercised the power of appointment or adoption given to him by the will :—Held, that T. P. took under the ultimate limitation. Pearce v. Vincent, 2 Keen, 230 ; 7 L. J., Ch. 285. Affirming 2 Bing. (N.S.) 328 ; 2 Scott, 347 ; 5 L. J., C. P. 82 ; 1 C. & M. 598 ; 2 L. J., Ex. 194. And see S. C., 2 Myl. & K. 800 ; 2 L. J., Ch. 187.

—— Child en Ventre sa Mère.]—20,000*l.* left to executors in trust to dispose of in such proportions, &c., as they should think fit amongst such of the testator's relations as should not be worth 2,000*l.*, and should apply within two years after the testator's death. One within the description applied and had a sum ordered her, but died before it was paid :—Held, her representative entitled to it. A child born after the death of the testator, who was of consanguinity, claimed and died without issue :—Held, not within the description, though en ventre sa mère at testator's death. Bennett v. Honywood, Ambl. 708.

At Death of Tenant for Life.]—Residuary bequest to a brother of the testator for life, and after his death to his wife, and at her death to go to such of the testator's relations as survived them :—Held, to give the whole to the only one of the brothers of the testator who survived the tenants for life, to the exclusion of the children and representatives of brothers of the testator who survived him, but died in the lifetime of the second tenant for life. Bishop v. Cappel, 1 De G. & Sm. 411 ; 11 Jur. 939.

Devise to trustees to invest in stock and pay dividends to testator's son for life ; and after his decease, to his eldest son and his heirs for ever ; and in case of their death without issue, to his (testator's) nearest relation, and the nearest relation of such nearest relation for ever. First, this is a double contingency, and the event of the son dying without issue is good ; secondly, it goes to the person who was nearest relation at the time, the half-sister, though there were living representatives of a person as near, viz., a half-brother. Marsh v. Marsh, 1 Bro. C. C. 293.

A married woman, by her will, made in execution of a power given to her in her marriage settlement over certain freehold estates, in which her husband had a life interest under the settlement, directed and appointed that the estates in question should be charged and chargeable with the sum of 1,500*l.*, to be paid twelve months next after the death of her husband, amongst the relations of her late mother, in such manner and form, and to such of them particularly, and in such shares, as her said husband should by his last will and testament appoint; and, for want of such appointment, amongst her mother's relations, according to the Statute of Distributions. After the death of the testatrix, the husband, in exercising the power, made an appointment, by will, of the fund, which was invalid as to 1,495*l.*, part thereof:—Held, upon bill filed after the husband's death to establish a claim to the 1,495*l.*, that the next of kin of the testatrix's mother, according to the Statute of Distributions, at the death of the testatrix's husband, were the parties entitled to the fund. Davidson v. Proctor, 19 L. J., Ch. 395; 14 Jur. 31.

Residuary bequest to the testator's daughter for life, and to her children at their ages of twenty-one, and, after the decase of his daughter and of her children under that age, to go and be distributed among his relations in due course of administration. Great-nephews and great-nieces, the next of kin of the testator, at the death of the daughter, entitled, against the claim of the personal representatives of the daughter, the sole next of kin at the death of the testator, and of the representatives of nephews and nieces, who died in her life, insisting that she was excluded by the will. Jones v. Colbeck, 8 Ves. 38; 6 R. R. 207.

A. devised a moiety of the rents of his real estates to his wife for her life, and directed the other moiety to be applied to the maintenance of his daughter; and after the death of his wife he devised all his real estates to his daughter in fee; but if his daughter should die without issue in the lifetime of his wife (which happened), in such case he gave his real estates to his wife for life, and after her decease to his relations, share and share alike. Romilly, M.R., was of opinion that the class of persons to take, was to be ascertained at the death of the testator. On appeal:—Held, that the death of the daughter was the period when the class was to be ascertained. Lees v. Massey, 3 De G. F. & J. 113; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 534; 4 L. T. 36; 9 W. R. 425.

Bequest to A. for life; and afterwards, in an event (which happened), the testator directed advertisements to be made for his relations, to such only of whom as should claim within two months he left the property, to be divided according to the discretion of his executors. The executors died in A.'s lifetime:—Held, that the next of kin of the testator, according to the statute, took equally, and that the class was to be ascertained at the death of A., and not at the death of the testator. Tiffin v. Longman, 15 Beav. 275.

At Death of Donee of Power without Appointing.]—A testator gave a legacy to his relatives in such shares as his wife should appoint. She appointed part to children of the testator's illegitimate brother:—Held, that the class of relatives who were to take the share which was badly appointed, was to be ascertained at the death of the donee of the power, and not of the testator. Saville, In re, 14 W. R. 603.

v. Cousins.

P. bequeathed to each of the first cousins of the late A., living in England at the time of A.'s death, a legacy:—Held, that those only who were living at the death of P. were entitled. Nicholson v. Patrickson, 3 Giff. 209; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 987; 5 L. T. 202.

A testator gave property, after the failure of prior limitations, "unto my first cousins by my mother's side, and the issue of such of them as may happen to be dead, per stirpes, and to their heirs, executors, administrators and assigns for ever, as tenants in common":—Held, that the words, "and the issue," &c., did not make the class ascertainable in futuro, but that the first cousins ex parte maternâ, living at the testator's death, took vested interests, liable to be divested pro tanto, so as to let in all other first cousins born before the period of distribution. Baldwin v. Rogers, 3 De G. M. & G. 649; 22 L. J., Ch. 665; 17 Jur. 267.

A testator devised a copyhold estate to his wife for life, and after her decease he devised one-half thereof unto and equally between all his first cousins, or the lawful issue of any or either of them who might be dead, as tenants in common:—Held, that the first cousins of the testator living at his death, and the issue in every degree of his first cousins who were then dead, were to take in equal shares per capita. Cogswell v. Chapman, 6 L. J., Ch. 184.

Upon the construction of a will:—Held, that the residue of the testator's personal estate devolved to his cousin-german living at his death, except that the issue of any cousin dying between the date of the will and the death took the prospective share of the parent. Upon the construction of the same will, the share of a cousin dying without issue between the date of the will and the death of the testator was held not to have lapsed, but to have fallen into the bequeathed residue. Cort v. Winder, 1 Coll. C. C. 320.

Testator bequeathed the residue of his personal estate as follows: "As to the residue of my fortune, I will and desire that the descendants or representatives of each of my first cousins deceased partake in equal shares and proportions with my first cousins now alive": the residue is divisible per stirpes amongst the first cousins who were living at the testator's death, and such of the descendants of the first cousins who died before him, as were next of kin of the deceased first cousins, and living at the time of the death of the testator. Humphreys v. Humphreys, 2 Cox, 187.

vi. Nephews and Nieces.

At Death of Testator.]—A testator gave all his personal estate to trustees, upon trust, to pay an annuity to his wife for her life, and to pay the remainder of the interest equally between his nephews and nieces, and his sister, E. W., in equal shares; but that the share of the said interest should be paid to E. W. during her life, and, after her decease, to go to her children; and he directed that, after the death of his wife and sister, the principal money should be divided between his nephews and nieces equally; at the death of the testator E. W. was living, but no other sister and no brother of the testator; E. W. had three children, and there were five other nephews and nieces:—Held, that all the nephews and nieces were equally entitled to the property, with the qualification that the shares of the children of E. W., during her life, belonged to her. Blakelock v. Sharpe, 2 De G. & Sm. 484; 17 L. J., Ch. 453; 12 Jur. 819.

Children of Brothers living at Death of Testator.]—Under a bequest "unto and to the use of and equally between all and every my brothers and sisters, their respective executors, administrators and assigns, absolutely and for ever," the brothers and sisters who survived the testator took the whole, excluding the representatives of the deceased ones. Shuttleworth v. Greaves, 4 Myl. & Cr. 35; 8 L. J., Ch. 7; 2 Jur. 957.

At Death of Tenant for Life.]—Bequest of stock to trustees in trust, after the death of A., to transfer the same to and amongst all and every the nephews and nieces that should be then living; to wit, the said J. B. or her children, and the said P. B. or his children, and D. L. or his children, and P. L. or his children: under this bequest a nephew not expressly named is not entitled to any share; and the fund is equally divisible amongst such nephews and nieces, and their children, as were living at the time of the death of A. Eccard v. Brooke, 2 Cox, 213; 2 R. R. 31.

A gift of real and personal estate to trustees for the testator's brothers and sisters for life, with a direction after the decease of the survivor of them to sell and to divide the proceeds unto and equally between all his nephews and nieces, grandnephews and grandnieces, to take per capita, with power to apply the presumptive shares for advancement and maintenance:—Held, that all the class, including those born after the testator's decease, were entitled per capita. Partington's Trusts, In re, 3 Giff. 378; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 877; 5 L. T. 559.

A testatrix bequeaths the residue of her personal estate to trustees, upon trust, to pay the interest to A. during her life; and from and after her death, to pay the interest thereof to B. during his life; and from and after his decease, to transfer the trust moneys to such of the testatrix's nephews and nieces as should be then living at the time of B.'s decease: the testatrix dies; then B. dies, and afterwards A. dies:—Held, that all the nephews and nieces of the testatrix who were living at the death of B., though not living at the death of A., were entitled to take. Netherwood v. Hall, 3 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 159.

On Determination of Prior Interests.]—A testator gave his real and personal estate to his sister for life, and if she should have any family living at her decease, they should have "their due proportion of the property"; and in case of the demise of his sister's children, his two nephews were to stand in the same situation as his sister's children would have stood had they been living:—Held, that such only of the nephews as survived the sister and the children took, and one of the nephews having died in her lifetime, that the other nephew was entitled to the whole residue. Lewis v. Lewis, 17 Beav. 221.

Where Distribution postponed to given Age.]—A testator, having one nephew and one niece, and eight great-nephews and nieces, living at his death, gave one-tenth of his residue to his nephew and another to his niece, and the remainder to trustees in trust for their children at twenty-one, and he empowered his trustees to apply all or any part of their respective shares for their advancement:—Held, that all the great-nephews and nieces born before the eldest attained twenty-one, though after the testator's death, were entitled to shares. Titcomb v. Butler, 3 Sim. 417.

Testator bequeathed his residuary estate to trustees, upon trust to transfer the same unto his great-nephews and nieces; the shares of the boys to be transferable to them at twenty-one, and those of the girls at twenty-one or marriage, and to accumulate for them in the meantime, with benefit of accruer and survivorship: and in case of the death of all the said children except one, before their shares became vested, then upon trust to transfer the whole to the survivor, at the age or time aforesaid:—Held, that a great-nephew born after the testator's death, but before any of his other great-nephews or nieces attained twenty-one or married, was entitled to a share of the testator's residuary estate. Balm v. Balm, 3 Sim. 492; 30 R. R. 192.

Effect of Gift Over in Default.]—A testator gave specific legacies to three of his nieces (daughters of his sister) by name, and the residue to his sister and her husband for their lives, subject to an annuity to A.; and, after the death of the parents and A., he directed the residue to be "divided equally between the daughters of his said sister," and which he bequeathed "to his said nieces." There was a gift over, if no daughter of his sister should be then living. The sister had four daughters born at the date of the will, and another born after the testator's death; some only survived the tenants for life:—Held, that the residue was divisible among all the nieces, and that they took vested interests, subject to be divested in an event which had not happened. Locker v. Bradley, 5 Beav. 593.

vii. Next of Kin.

At Death of Testator.]—The rule, that in a gift to the next of kin of A. the next of kin are to be ascertained at the time of A.'s death, is not affected by the fact that the gift compromises the proceeds of sale of real as well as of personal estate. Cusack v. Rood, 24 W. R. 391.

A testator having directed his executors to pay the interest of his residue to a woman during her life, and after her decease to divide the residue amongst the next of kin:—Held, the next of kin at the time of testator's death were the persons entitled. Collisam v. Sams, Tam. 346.

Testator ordered real estate to be sold, and the residue to be laid out in the funds, to remain for ten years, and, at the end thereof, gave the same to his next of kin. Although the expression "next of kin" means generally those who are so at a testator's death, yet here, upon the intention, the period of vesting was held to be at the expiration of the ten years. The testator, therefore, having but one brother, who was next of kin (at his death), but who died within the ten years, so much as was produced by the real estate was held to belong to the heir-at-law of the testator, so much as was personal going to the representatives of the brother. Spink v. Lewis, 3 Bro. C. C. 355.

Bequest to testatrix's daughter for life, and after her death as she should appoint, and in default of appointment to testatrix's next of kin, to be considered as a vested interest from testatrix's death, except as to any after-born child of daughter. The daughter having died without any child, and without executing any appointment:—Held, that the persons who would be next of kin at testatrix's death if her daughter had then been without children were entitled. Bird v. Wood, 2 Sim. & S. 400; 4 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 86; 25 R. R. 238.

Testator directed his trustees to pay the dividends of certain stock to his wife for life, and after her decease to transfer the capital to such person or persons, in such shares and proportions, at such times and in such manner, as might be expressed in any codicil or codicils to his will; and in default of such direction or appointment, to transfer and make over the same unto such person or persons as would under and by virtue of the Statutes of Distribution of Intestates' Estates have been entitled to his personal estate in case he had died intestate. The testator died without making an appointment by codicil, leaving his wife surviving him. The wife afterwards died:—Held, that the fund belonged to those who at the testator's death, and not to those who at the widow's death, would have been entitled to his personal estate in case he had died intestate; consequently that the widow was entitled to a distributive share of the fund; but semble that there was no joint tenancy between the widow and the next of kin of the testator living at his death, and, therefore, that the widow, having survived those next of kin, was not entitled to take the whole fund by survivorship. Jenkins v. Gower, 2 Coll. C. C. 537; 10 Jur. 702.

Testator bequeathed the residue of his personal estate to his wife for life, and after her decease to his sister for life for her separate use, and after her decease to such person or persons as under the Statute of Distributions should be legally entitled to the same:—Held, that the residue, after the death of the sister, was bequeathed either to the next of kin of the testator living at his death, as joint tenants, or to the next of kin of the testator or of the sister living at the death of the sister, as tenants in common, and consequently that the wife, who died in the sister's lifetime, was not entitled to anything beyond a life interest in the residue. Godkin v. Murphy, 2 Y. & C. C. C. 351.

Testator, by his will, gave the residue of his property to a trustee in trust, out of the rents of particular leaseholds, to pay the annuities given by his will, and on further trust to invest the surplus rents of such leaseholds, upon trust, when his grandson, E. R. W., the child of a deceased daughter of the testator, should attain the age of twenty-one years, to transfer the same to E. R. W. absolutely: and the testator then directed, that after E. R. W. should attain twenty-one the trustee should pay the whole surplus income of his residuary estate, after satisfaction of the said annuities, and upon the death of the last annuitant, to E. R. W. for life, with remainder in favour of his issue; and in case E. R. W. should die under twenty-one without lawful issue, upon trust to pay and apply such surplus rents and profits unto and amongst testator's next of kin, in such proportions and manner as is provided by the Statute of Distributions, until the last of the said annuitants should depart this life; and in case E. R. W. should die after twenty-one years of age without leaving lawful issue, then upon trust, when the last of the said annuitants should die, but not before, to distribute the whole of the residue unto and amongst his next of kin in such proportions and manner as aforesaid. E. R. W., after surviving the testator, died a minor, without issue:—Held, that, as sole next of kin, according to the statute, of the testator at his death, E. R. W., and not the next of kin at the time of the death of E. R. W., was entitled to the residuary estate, after payment of the annuities. Bird v. Luckie, 8 Hare, 301; 14 Jur. 1015.

A testator, after bequeathing his residuary estate to trustees upon trust for his grandson, the child of his deceased daughter, for his life, directed them, in case his grandson should die under twenty-one without issue, then to pay the rents and profits unto and amongst his (the testator's) next of kin in such proportions and manner as is provided by the Statute of Distributions; and in case the grandson should die after attaining twenty-one without leaving issue, or such issue should die under twenty-one, or unmarried, or without issue, then to distribute the whole of the residue amongst such next of kin, in the same proportions and manner:—Held, that the gift was to the next of kin of the testator at his death, and this notwithstanding his sole next of kin at the time of making the will, and at the time of his death, was the grandson of the testator, to whom the life estate was given, and the sole next of kin of the grandson at the same time was the father of the grandson, the husband of the deceased daughter of the testator. Ib.

The mere circumstance that the gift to the next of kin of a testator is not immediate, but is contingent upon a future event which might or might not happen, is insufficient to render the description applicable only to such person or persons as should form the class at the time of the occurrence of the event. Ib.

Testator directed one-half of the interest of his residue to be paid to his daughter and only child, and the other half to his wife, during their joint lives; and that if his daughter survived her mother, or married and left issue, then that the whole of the capital should be paid to her after his wife's death; but if she died first without marrying or leaving issue, then that the trustees should accumulate the interest of the residue so far as it was not directed to be paid to his wife, and that on her death one-half of the capital should be divided amongst his nearest of kin, and the other half amongst his wife's nearest of kin. The daughter was the testator's nearest of kin at his death; she died a spinster before her mother. At the mother's death the testator's sister was his nearest of kin:—Held, that by "my nearest of kin" the testator meant his nearest of kin at his own death, and not at the death of his wife; and, consequently, that the personal representative of his daughter, and not his sister, was entitled to one moiety of the residue. Urquhart v. Urquhart, 13 Sim. 613; 8 Jur. 161.

A testator gave his residuary estate to his daughter for life, with remainder to her children, and in default to his next of kin:—Held, that the class of next of kin was to be ascertained at the testator's death. Lasbury v. Newport, 9 Beav. 376.

Upon an ultimate limitation to a testator's next of kin:—Held, that the next of kin at the testator's death, and not those at the time when such ultimate limitation took effect, were entitled. Seifferth v. Badham, 9 Beav. 370; 15 L. J., Ch. 345; 10 Jur. 892.

A testatrix, having three daughters, gave one-third of a fund to each for life, with remainder to their children respectively, with cross-remainders between them, with an ultimate limitation to her own "next of kin and legal personal representatives":—Held, that the class of next of kin was to be ascertained at the death of the testatrix, and that they took as joint tenants. Baker v. Gibson, 12 Beav. 101.

A testator directed the sale and conversion of his property, and that a daughter should be entitled for life to a certain sum, to be invested in the usual way, with remainder to her husband, A., in case he should survive her, and in default of children or child, then to pay the same "according to the Statutes of Distribution of Intestates' Effects":—Held, that the next of kin of the testator at the time of his death was entitled to the principal so invested. Royds v. Royds, 1 N. R. 516; 8 L. T. 199.

A testator gave his residuary real and personal estate to his widow during widowhood, and then on trusts for the child of which his wife was enceinte when he should attain twenty-one, with maintenance in the meanwhile, but if such child died under twenty-one without having lawful issue then living, then on these trusts "in trust for such person or persons as shall be my next of kin according to the Statute of Distributions." The child, who at his father's death was his sole next of kin, died six months after his father:—Held, that the next of kin must be ascertained at the death of the testator, and not at the death of the son or of the widow. Harrison v. Harrison, 28 Beav. 21.

A testator gave his real and personal estate to trustees for his wife for life, and after her decease for his daughter for life, and for her husband and children; and in case she died without lawful issue attaining twenty-one, then after her decease he directed that his personal estate, including the proceeds of the copyholds, should be for the person or persons who, under the statutes made for the distribution of the estates of intestates, would then be entitled thereto if he were to die possessed thereof and intestate, to be divided among them, if more than one, in the shares in which the same would be divisible under the same statutes. The wife and daughter and her husband survived the testator, the daughter never having any child; and on her husband's death the fund under the ultimate trust became divisible:—Held, that the period of ascertaining the class was the testator's death, and the wife and daughter's representatives were entitled. Michell v. Bridges, 11 L. T. 727; 13 W. R. 200.

A., after giving all his real and personal estate to trustees for his children, directed his trustees, when any of his daughters should attain twenty-one or marry, to raise and settle not exceeding 5,000*l.* upon each such daughter, in part of her presumptive share, in trustees of her own nomination, in trust for her for life, with remainder for her children, and if all such children should die under twenty-one, in trust for the testator's next of kin. One of the daughters, having attained twenty-one, settled her 5,000*l.* upon herself and children, with a trust in default of children for the next of kin of the testator, according to his will. She died without having had any child:—Held, that the next of kin of the testator living at his death were entitled to the fund as joint tenants. Aspinall, In re, 30 L. J., Ch. 321; 4 L. T. 176; 9 W. R. 269.

A testator gave his residuary personal estate to trustees upon trust to pay the dividends to J. B., A. L., and J. L., for their lives, and the life of the survivor of them, and on the decease of the survivor "in trust to divide the fund among the children of J. L., and in default of such children for all and every my next of kin who shall be in equal degree, and those who legally represent them according to the statute." At the testator's death, A. L. was his sole next of kin:—Held, that she was entitled to the fund. Barber's Will, In re, 1 Sm. & G. 118.

A testator gave his residue to his wife, and on her death or marriage to his children; but in case she should die or marry again without leaving any child, or should any such child die before twenty-one, he directed the trustees to pay it to "such person or persons as might be legally entitled to the same under the Statute of Distributions." There was one child only, who was born after the testator's death, and who died three years old. The widow married again:—Held, that the class to whom the residue was given over was to be ascertained at the testator's death, and not at the death of the child, and that the widow was not excluded. Starr v. Newberry, 23 Beav. 436.

Bequest to A. for life, with remainder to B. for life, and after their deaths to the testator's next of kin; but should no claimant appear within twelve months after their death, then to charities. A. and B. were sole next of kin at the testator's death:—Held, that the next of kin were to be ascertained at the testator's death. Gorbell v. Davison, 18 Beav. 556.

A. bequeathed a leasehold for the benefit of B., and gave her a power to appoint it by will, and in default to A.'s "nearest of kindred, precisely in the same manner directed by the statute made for the distribution of intestates' effects." On B.'s death without appointment:—Held, the next of kin of A. at her own death, and not those at the death of B., were entitled. Markham v. Ivatt, 20 Beav. 579.

Where Testator supposed to die at Future Time.]—Where a testator gives property in trust for the benefit of the persons who at a time subsequent to his own death shall by virtue of the Statute of Distributions be his next of kin, the class is an artificial class, to be ascertained on the hypothesis that the testator lives up to and dies at the subsequent period of time. Sturge to G. W. Ry., In re, 51 L. J., Ch. 185; 19 Ch. D. 444; 45 L. T. 787; 30 W. R. 456.

The difference in legal effect between a gift to the "children" or "nephews," or "kindred" of A. who shall be living at his death, and a gift to the persons who shall then be his statutory next of kin, considered and explained. Parsons, In re, Stockley v. Parsons, 59 L. J., Ch. 666; 45 Ch. D. 51; 62 L. T. 929; 38 W. R. 712.

A testator gave in a certain event all the residue of his estate to "the person or persons, exclusive of my surviving grandchild, who, under the Statute for Distribution of the Personal Estates of Intestates, would, immediately after the decease of the survivor of my other two grandchildren, be entitled to my personal estate." At the period in question the surviving grandchild was the sole next of kin:—Held, that the persons who would have been next of kin if the surviving grandchild had been dead at the period in question were entitled. White v. Springett,

At Death of Tenant for Life—Next of Kin of Testator.]—Upon the construction of a will, the gift of the residue after a life interest to the testator's next of kin:—Held, to mean next of kin at the death of the wife, and not those living at the testator's death, they having express bequests under the will. Miller v. Eaton, G. Cooper, 272; 14 R. R. 259.

A testator gave his personal estate to trustees upon trust to convert into money, and invest the same and pay the interest to his mother for her life; and after the decease of his mother he gave all his estate and effects to such person or persons as she should by her will direct and appoint, and in case his said mother should die without a will, then to such person or persons as should be entitled to the same by virtue of the Statute of Distributions. The mother survived the testator and died intestate:—Held, that the testator's next of kin at the death of the mother were entitled to the bequest. Briden v. Hewlett, 2 Myl. & K. 90; 1 L. J., Ch. 114. And see S. P., Spink v. Lewis, 3 Bro. C. C. 335.

A testator directed that upon the death, without leaving issue, of his daughter, who was his sole next of kin, a certain fund should be assigned to the nearest of kin of his own family for ever:—Held, upon the construction of the will, that these words were meant to describe some person or persons to be ascertained at the daughter's death, and not the person or persons who should be his own next of kin at the time of his own death. Clapton v. Bulmer, 5 Myl. & Cr. 108. Affirming 10 Sim. 426; 9 L. J., Ch. 261; 4 Jur. 288; 5 id. 477.

After bequest of residue to testator's daughter for life, with remainder to her children, it was provided that if she should die without leaving issue, 3,000*l.* should be paid as she should appoint, and if testator's wife should survive the daughter, and the daughter should die without issue, then he gave 2,000*l.* to his wife, and the residue unto the nearest of kin of his own family for ever. The daughter, who was the sole next of kin of the testator, survived the wife, and died without issue:—Held, that her next of kin were entitled, to the exclusion of her personal representative. Affirmed by the Lord Chancellor, who observed, that the same person was next of kin of the daughter and of the testator at her death. S. C., 10 Sim. 426.

C. devised freehold estate in trust for his son D. for life, with remainder to D.'s sons in tail, with remainders over; but in case D. should die under twenty-five without leaving any children him surviving, then in trust for such persons as at the time of such failure of issue should be his (the testator's) next of kin according to the statute made for the distribution of intestates' estates, and as if he (C.) had survived D. C. made a similar devise in trust in favour of another son, and then he declared that the leasehold premises given to his sons should not vest in them during the life of his wife, but in case they or either of them should attain twenty-five, and should die in the lifetime of his wife without children, should belong to such persons as should then be his next of kin in manner aforesaid. C. then bequeathed a legacy in trust for his daughter for her separate use, and after her decease for her children; and in case she should leave no children, then in trust for his next of kin in manner aforesaid:—Held, that the persons entitled, upon the death of the testator's daughter without leaving children, were those persons who at that period, and not at the death of the testator, were the testator's next of kin. Bessant v. Noble, 26 L. J., Ch. 236; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 461; 4 W. R. 475.

Testatrix bequeathed all her personal estate to her executors, upon trust that same be placed out at interest for the sole use of E. B., until she should arrive at the age of twenty-one years, or be married; and directed her executors to draw the interest thereof during the minority of E. B., or until her marriage, and apply same towards her maintenance and education; and when E. B. should attain her age of twenty-one years, or be married, then to pay the principal and interest to her, as and for her own proper money; and in case E. B. should die under age and unmarried, the testatrix bequeathed the said principal money and interest to her (the testatrix's) next of kin, share and share alike, as tenants in common; and if but one, the whole to such one. E. B. was the sole next of kin of the testatrix at the time of her decease, and afterwards died under age and unmarried:—Held, that the personal representative of E. B., and not the next of kin of the testatrix at the time of E. B.'s death, was entitled to the trust funds. Murphy v. Donegan, 3 Jo. & Lat. 534.

A husband gave his residuary personal estate to his wife for life, and after her death he directed his trustees to pay and divide three-fifths of the residue among such person or persons as under the Statute of Distributions would have become entitled on his late father's side to his personal estate at the death of his wife if he had died intestate, and the other two-fifths he gave in similar terms to his next of kin on his late mother's side:—Held, that the period for ascertaining the classes was the date of the death of the widow and not that of the testator himself. Morley, In re, 25 W. R. 825.

G. gave to trustees a sum of money to invest, and pay the interest unto such person as his daughter M. should during her life direct; and in default of appointment, to her for life; and after decease, to her husband and children: and in case M. should not have a child, then to assign and transfer the fund unto such person or persons as should happen to be his next of kin according to the Statute for the Distribution of Intestates' Effects. M. died in 1860, without having been married. The next of kin of G. at his death were his four children, two of whom died before M., and at her death the next of kin of the testator were one child and eight grandchildren:—Held, that the persons entitled were the next of kin at the death of M., but that they took as joint tenants. Greenwood, In re, 3 Giff. 390; 31 L. J., Ch. 119; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 907; 10 W. R. 117.

A testator bequeathed part of the residue of his property to trustees in trust for his daughters during their lives, and after their respective deceases for their children, and in case there should be no children of his daughters respectively in trust for such person or persons as should happen to be his next of kin according to the Statute of Distributions:—Held, that upon the death of a daughter who survived the testator without issue her share went to the persons who were the testator's next of kin at her death. Butler v. Bushnell, 3 Myl. & K. 232; 3 L. J., Ch. 139.

—— Next of Kin of Wife.]—A testator by his will directed that the shares of his daughters in his residuary estate should be settled, the ultimate limitation, in case a daughter should not leave any child or children who should be living at the decease of the survivor of herself and her husband, being in trust for the person or persons who, under the statutes of distribution, "would on her decease have been entitled thereto in case she having survived her husband and had then died possessed thereof and intestate." A daughter having died without issue, leaving her husband surviving:—Held, that her next of kin to take under the ultimate limitation were to be ascertained at the time of her own death, and not at the time of the death of her husband. Chalmers v. North (28 Beav. 175) disapproved. Druitt v. Seaward, 55 L. J., Ch. 239; 31 Ch. D. 234; 53 L. T. 954; 34 W. R. 180.

—— Next of Kin of Third Party.]—A testator directed that the residue of his personal estate, after the death of his widow, the tenant for life, should be paid by his trustees or the survivor of them, his executors or administrators, to A. and B., to be equally divided between them, share and share alike, if then living; but if dead, to go and be equally divided to and amongst the respective next legal representatives of A. and B., share and share alike. A. and B. died in the lifetime of the testator's widow:—Held, that the next of kin of A. and B., according to the statutes of distribution, living at the death of the testator's widow, were entitled to the fund per stirpes. Booth v. Vicars, 1 Coll. C. C. 6; 13 L. J., Ch. 147; 8 Jur. 76.

At Death of Third Party—Next of Kin of Wife.]—A limitation to the next of kin of a wife after the death of the surviving husband and failure of children:—Held, to be an exception to the general rule, and to mean not the wife's next of kin at her death, but at the death of the surviving husband. Pinder v. Pinder, 28 Beav. 44.

—— Next of Kin of Third Party.]—Bequest to A. B. for life, and afterwards to her children; but, in default of children, "to pay or assign and transfer" to C. D. if living, but if dead, to his next of kin ex parte maternâ. C. D. died before A. B.:—Held, that the next of kin were to be ascertained at the death of C. D., and not of A. B. Gundry v. Pinniger, 14 Beav. 94. Affirmed 1 De G. M. & G. 502; 21 L. J., Ch. 405; 16 Jur. 488—C. A.

Effect of word "Then."]—The word "then" construed as pointing to the event, and not to the time. Ib.

A testatrix left her real and personal estate upon trust after the death of her sister to pay all income to her niece during her life, and after her death to stand possessed of the estate for the children, if any, of the niece, but in case of her niece leaving no children, then for "such persons as shall then be my next of kin." The niece died childless:—Held, that the general rule did not apply here, and that the persons to take would be the next of kin at the time of the death of the tenant for life, the niece. Travis v. Taylor, 12 Jur. (N.S.) 791; 14 W. R. 909.

A testator bequeathed a mixed residue upon trust, as to one moiety for his daughter Mary for life with remainder for her children, and as to the other moiety for his daughter Sarah for life, with remainder for her children, with cross-remainders, and proceeded thus: "And in case both my daughters should die without issue, or leaving such, all should die under twenty-one without leaving issue, then I direct my trustees to pay one moiety unto the person or persons that shall then be considered as my next of kin and personal representative or representatives, agreeable to the order of the Statute of Distributions, and the other moiety unto the person or persons that shall then be considered the next of kin and personal representative or representatives of my late wife Sarah, agreeable to the order of the Statute of Distributions." At the date of his will his daughter Sarah was the only child and sole next of kin of his late wife Sarah. The daughter survived the testator and died without issue:—Held, that the persons entitled to the second moiety were those who at the death of the surviving daughters were the next of kin, according to the statute, of the testator's deceased wife; and having regard to the juxtaposition of the bequests, that the persons entitled to the first moiety were those who at the same period were the next of kin, according to the statute, of the testator. Wharton v. Barker, 4 K. & J. 483; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 553; 6 W. R. 534.

Review of the authorities as to the time when the persons taking under bequests of this description are to be ascertained. Ib.

Where there is simply a gift to tenant for life, and then to the testator's next of kin, the class must be ascertained at the decease of the tenant for life, so that the gift then vests immediately in them, although not in enjoyment, yet in right and interest; subject, however, to open so as to admit any subsequent next of kin (if any) who may come into existence before the period of enjoyment arrives. Ib.

D., after specific bequests to different members of his family, gave the residue to three persons, in trust to pay the dividends to his son for life, and after the son's decease to pay to any widow of the son (who was not then married) an annuity for life, and the residue to his son's children, and in case there should not be any child of the son, "then to stand possessed of the same for such person or persons of the blood of me as would by virtue of the statutes of distributions of intestates' effects have become and been entitled thereto in case I had died intestate." At D.'s death, he left the son and four daughters him surviving. The son married, enjoyed the dividends of the residue during life, and died without even having had a child:—Held, that the word "then," even if treated as an adverb of time, referred only to the time when the persons entitled would come into possession of what had been bequeathed to them; that the persons entitled were to be ascertained at the death of the testator; that the son was one of those persons, and that his right as one of the next of kin was not affected by the previous gift of a life interest in the whole of the residue, so that on the death of the son without issue the residue became divisible into five shares, of which his personal representatives took one, and his sisters the other four. Bullock v. Downes, 9 H. L. Cas. 1. Affirming 25 Beav. 4.

A testator, who had four daughters, divided a fund into four equal amounts, giving one to each daughter and her children; but when one died and left no child the interest was to be paid to the others, and after the death of the last survivor the fund was to be divided among her children; "or if there be no such children, that the same be paid to such person or persons as will then be entitled to receive the same as my next of kin under the Statute for the Distribution of Intestates' Estates." One of the daughters left issue; the others had no issue. On the death of the last daughter:—Held, that under the words of the will the class of "next of kin" described the persons who filled that character at the time of the death of the testator, and not at the death of the last surviving daughter; and that the shares of the daughters who had died without issue were divisible among the persons representing the four daughters. Mortimore v. Mortimore, 48 L. J., Ch. 470; 4 App. Cas. 448; 27 W. R. 575—H. L. (E.) Affirming 37 L. T. 520.

A testator gave his residuary real and personal estate upon trust out of the income to pay an annuity to his widow for her life, and after her death he directed that the trustees should hold the proceeds of the trust property in trust, to divide them among his children on their attaining twenty-one (with full powers of maintenance and advancement in the meantime), and the issue of such children if dead; and in case there should be no child of the testator living at his death, upon trust for such persons who at "the failure or determination of the preceding trusts" would be entitled under the Statute of Distributions as his next of kin to the trust estate if he had "then died possessed thereof intestate and without leaving any wife" him surviving:—Held, that the sole next of kin at the time of the testator's own death was the person entitled under the ultimate bequest. Fletcher v. Fletcher, 3 De G. F. & J. 775.

A testator, who died in April, 1879, by his will, dated in March, 1870, gave his residuary estate to his wife for life, and, after her death, to "the nearest relatives then living (to be hereafter named in the codicil)." He died without having executed any codicil:—Held, that the class must be ascertained at the death of the testator—namely, his next of kin by blood at that date—but that only those members of the class could take who survived the wife. Nash, In re, Prall v. Bevan, 71 L. T. 5—C. A.

—— No Reference to Intestacy or to Statutes of Distributions.]—The ultimate trusts of a testator's real and personal estate were declared to be in favour of his "own right heirs and next of kin according to the nature of the said property," without any reference to an intestacy or the statutes of distributions. The several tenants for life of the property, under prior trusts, were moreover restricted from alienating their respective life interests:—Held, that nevertheless the class to take under the ultimate trusts must be ascertained in accordance with the rule established in Bullock v. Downes (supra), namely, as at the testator's death, and not at the period fixed by the will for distribution. Ford, In re, Patten v. Sparks, 72 L. T. 5—C. A.

Next of Kin of Person Dead at Date of Will.]—A bequest to the next of kin of a person who is dead at the date of will:—Held, to be analogous to a gift to the testator's own next of kin as regards the period of ascertainment. Philps v. Evans, 4 De G. & Sm. 188; 15 Jur. 809.

Therefore, where a testatrix bequeathed her personal estate in trust for her sister for life, and after her death for the sister's daughter for her life with limitations to the children of the daughter, and if there were none, to another niece for life, with a limitation to her children, and in the event (which happened) of both nieces dying without leaving any child, the testatrix directed the residue to be paid and assigned to "the personal representatives or next of kin" of her late father:—Held, that the case was in principle similar to Bird v. Luckie (8 Hare, 301; 14 Jur. 1015), and that the next of kin meant were those living at the testatrix's death, although they all took expressly under the will. Ib.

Testatrix bequeathed a sum of money "to such person or persons as would have become entitled to my said husband's personal estate under or by virtue of the Statute of Distributions had he died intestate and without leaving any widow him surviving":—Held, that the persons to take, and the shares and proportions in which they were to take, were to be ascertained at the death of the husband, and that the share of one of the husband's next of kin who predeceased the testatrix lapsed. Rees, In re, Williams v. Davies, 59 L. J., Ch. 305; 44 Ch. D. 484; 62 L. T. 362; 38 W. R. 523. See also Gundry v. Pinniger, supra, col. 931.

viii. Heirs.

At Death of Testator.]—A testator having large real estates in fee, and having one son, J., who was deaf and dumb, and had been born so, devised his estates to trustees in fee, upon trust to apply a certain sum of the rents and profits yearly in the maintenance of J., and giving other powers to the said trustees, which denoted that they were to manage the estate for him, then proceeded to limit estates tail to the first and other sons of J., then to J.'s daughters as tenants in common, then estates tail to other persons, "and for default of such issue in trust for my own right heirs for ever":—Held, that the circumstances of the case, as to the supposed incapacity of J. to manage his estate, were not sufficient to take this case out of the legal presumption in favour of the words "right heirs" meaning right heirs at the death of the testator, or from the rule of law in favour of the present vesting of estates; and that J. being the right heir of the testator at the time of his death, the equitable fee vested in him, and he had power to devise it. Boidell v. Golightly, 12 L. J., Ch. 187; 7 Jur. 53.

A testator by will gave and directed his real estates to be sold, and the interest of the proceeds of the sales to be paid to his daughter for life, with remainder as she should appoint by will, and, in default of appointment by her, then to his own heirs ex parte maternâ. By a codicil he directed the trustees (if his said daughter required it) to sink the whole or part of the same property in an annuity for her for life, to be paid to her sole and separate use, without power of anticipation. The testator left his daughter, his only child and heir-at-law, him surviving:—Held, that she was heir at the death of the testator, and that she was absolutely entitled to the real estates. Rawlinson v. Wass, 9 Hare, 673; 16 Jur. 282.

A. devised his estates to B., his son, for life, remainder to the first and other sons of B. in tail, remainder to his daughters as tenants in common, remainder to C. for life, remainder to

D., the son of C., if living at C.'s death, for life, remainder to the first and other sons of D. in tail, remainder to the male heir for the time being entitled to a certain family estate, remainder to the first and other sons of such male heir, remainder to the testator's own right heirs of his name; and he directed the residue of his personal estates to be laid out in lands to be conveyed to the same uses as his devised estates. B., his son and executor, did not lay out the personal estate as directed by the will, but by his will he directed that certain real and personal estates should be conveyed and assigned to the trustees under the will of A., upon the trusts of that will or such of them as could then be executed, adding, that he deemed such property an equivalent in value for the residuum of his father's personal estate; and he directed that the same should be settled and accepted accordingly. The real and personal estate were not conveyed or assigned according to the will. On the death of B. without issue, C. entered into possession of the real estate devised by both wills, and the personal estate bequeathed by the will of B. At the death of C., D. entered into possession of the same real and personal estate. D. died without issue, and at his death there was no male heir entitled to the said family estate:—Held, that the ultimate limitation in the will of A. to his right heirs of his name vested at his death, and not at the death of D.; that the co-heiresses at law of B. (or the parties claiming under them) were entitled to the real estate so devised by the wills of A. and B.; that, inasmuch as the estates were made equitable by the will of B., the court might properly send a case to a court of law, to try at the same time the right under the will of A. as well as under the will of B.; that the personal estate bequeathed by the will of B., though not actually converted, must be deemed to be converted into and to have descended as real estate. Wrightson v. Macaulay, 4 Hare, 487. And see S. C. at law, 14 M. & W. 214; 15 L. J., Ex. 121.

Testator devised and bequeathed all his real estate and all the residue of his personalty to trustees, upon trust to pay his wife an annuity for her life, and subject to such annuity upon trust as to the whole of his said real and personal estate for his son F., his heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, as and when he should attain the age of twenty-five; and in case his said son should die after the age of twenty-one, but before twenty-five, then as his said son should by will or deed appoint; but in case his said son should not make any such appointment, or should die before attaining twenty-five without leaving issue, then upon trust for the testator's own heirs, executors, or administrators:—Held, that the last limitation embraced those persons only who were entitled to the testator's property at the time of his death, and that it was no objection to this construction that F. himself happened to be one of those persons. Wilkinson v. Garrett, 2 Coll. C. C. 643; 15 L. J., Ch. 416; 10 Jur. 560.

A testator directed his executors to set apart a sum of stock to answer an annuity of 600*l.* to be paid to his daughter Anna Maria (who was then his only surviving child) for her life, and on her death to divide the principal among her children, if she should leave any, on their respectively attaining the age of twenty-four; if no child, or none who should attain that age, to pay thereout two small legacies; "and all the rest and residue of the said principal fund he gave and bequeathed to and amongst his heirs-at-law, share and share alike"; and in a subsequent part of his will he appointed his said daughter by name his general residuary legatee:—Held, nevertheless, that, as sole heiress-at-law and next of kin of the testator at the time of his death, she, and not his heir-at-law or next of kin at the time of her death, was entitled, under the ultimate gift, to the fund set apart to answer the annuity. Ware v. Rowland, 2 Ph. 635; 17 L. J., Ch. 147; 12 Jur. 165. Affirming 16 Sim. 587.

A testator gave certain property to his wife, and in respect to his house at P. wished her to enjoy it for her life, and at her death it was to be sold and equally divided among his children, if living, but if dead before their mother he requested the house at her death to come to his brother J. S., or his next heir-at-law. The testator then gave 2,000*l.* to his two daughters; and as his wife was then pregnant, should she be delivered, he recommended the 2,000*l.* to be equally divided when each attained twenty-one; should each die, the survivor or survivors to receive the whole; but should neither attain twenty-one, the 2,000*l.* to go to his wife for life, and afterwards to his next heir-at-law. After the testator's death his widow had a son, but that son and the two daughters died infants in the widow's lifetime, as did the testator's brother and his son, who left a son, and such son claimed the fund:—Held, first, that "next heir-at-law," although a gift of personalty, did not mean "next of kin"; and that the person to take was the heir-at-law at the time of the testator's death, that is, his own son, although then unborn. Southgate v. Clinch, 27 L. J., Ch. 651; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 428; 6 W. R. 489. And see Ford, In re, Patten v. Sparkes, supra, col. 933.

At Death of Tenant for Life.]—A. bequeathed his residue to his widow for life, and after her decease to be divided between his two brothers or their heirs in proportion to the number each might have then living, share and share alike. Both brothers died before the widow:—Held, that "heirs" was to be construed children, and that all the children living at the widow's death took in equal shares. Roberts v. Edwards, 33 Beav. 259; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1219; 9 L. T. 360; 12 W. R. 33.

One devises his freehold estate to trustees and their heirs, in trust to convey the premises to A. for life, remainder to his first, &c., son in tail male successively, remainder to his daughters in tail general; and if A. should die without issue, then the premises to be settled on B., C., D., and E., to each one-fourth in fee; and in case any of the four remaining persons die without issue, the trustees to convey such fourth part in fee to the respective heirs of the person so dying. One of the persons dies without issue; her fourth in equity belongs to her brother as her heir, and there was an executory devise to such person as would be the heir at the death of A. without issue. Blackborn v. Edgley, 1 P. Wms. 606.

Testator devised his real estate to trustees in trust to permit A. to receive the rents during his life; and, upon his decease, to permit the eldest son of A. to receive the rents during his life; and, "upon the decease of such eldest son," in trust to convey the estate "to the right heir male of A. and his heirs." A. survived testator, and died in the year 1857, leaving B. his eldest son him surviving. The trustees refusing to convey the legal estate, B. presented a petition asking for a vesting order:—Held, that the general rule, that the heir of a person named in a will must be ascertained as soon as possible, applied; that B. was ascertained to be "the right heir male of A." upon A.'s death in 1857; and that he was therefore entitled to a vesting order. Grayson, In re, 48 L. J., Ch. 354; 40 L. T. 98; 27 W. R. 534.

—— After-born Heir.]—A. devises an Exchequer annuity of 1,000*l.* to trustees in trust for J. for so many years as he should live, and from and after his decease for such person as at the time of his death should be the heir male of his body, and in case there should be no such person then in trust for the heir male of B., who was J.'s father. J. died an infant, and without issue, and about four years afterwards B. had another son born. G., who also died an infant without issue:—Held, that absolute property of annuity vested in G., and that upon his death it belonged to B. as his administrator. Montagu (Duke) v. Beaulieu, 3 Bro. P. C. 277; Ambl. 533.

At Death of Third Party dying before Tenant for Life.]—Goods devised to A. for life, and after the death of A. to the heir of B. B. dies in the life of A.:—Decreed, the goods should go to him that was heir of B. at his death, and not to him who was his heir at the death of A. Danvers v. Clarendon, 1 Vern. 35.

A testator bequeathed to A. 1,000*l.*, part of a policy of 1,200*l.*, and the remaining 200*l.*, together with all advantages arising from the policy, to his widow. By a codicil he gave the 1,000*l.* to trustees for A. and her children, and in case of A.'s death without children, to his widow "or her heirs." The widow died, having bequeathed the 1,000*l.* to B., and A. died afterwards without children:—Held, that B. was not entitled, but that the next of kin of the widow (ascertained at her death, and not at the period of distribution) took the 1,000*l.* by substitution. Craven, In re, 23 Beav. 333.

3. Gifts to Survivors.

a. Meaning of "Survive," "Survivor."

Survive—Outlive.]—The meaning of the word "survive" in a limitation of property is, that the person to survive shall be living at the death of the person whom, or at the time of the event which, he is to survive; it does not mean living at any time whatever after the event referred to; consequently a gift over, if there should be no child or remoter issue of A. who should survive the testator and A., and should live to attain twenty-one, is not void for remoteness. Gee v. Liddell, 35 Beav. 631, 658; 35 L. J., Ch. 640; L. R. 2 Eq. 341; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 541; 14 W. R. 853.

A husband gave his residuary estate to his wife for life, and afterwards to his cousin for her sole use; and should she have any legal issue by marriage, to be divided amongst them equally at twenty-one. "Should my cousin not survive my wife, and die without the said legal issue by marriage," he gave his residuary estate to M. The cousin survived the wife, but had no children:—Held, that the words "not survive" must be construed as equivalent to "die in the lifetime of," and that the gift over could only take effect on the death of the cousin, without children, in the lifetime of the testator's widow, which event not having happened, it failed. Reed v. Braithwaite, 40 L. J., Ch. 355; L. R. 11 Eq. 514; 24 L. T. 351; 19 W. R. 697.

, Survivor—Longest Liver.]—When a gift is given to a class and the survivors, the obvious and natural meaning of the word "survivor" is not the person surviving any particular event, but the longest liver of the class. Taaffe v. Conmee, 10 H. L. Cas. 64; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 919; 6 L. T. 666.

Devise to trustees and their heirs, in trust for A. and his wife for their lives, and after the death of the survivor to the testator's four grand-daughters, as tenants in common during their respective lives, with benefit of survivorship, remainder to the trustees "and their heirs," upon trust to preserve contingent remainders, remainder to the issue male of the four grand-daughters successively, remainder to the testator in fee:—Held, that the survivorship had reference to the extent of the estate, and not to the persons who were to take, and that the grand-daughters took for life as tenants in common, with survivorship to the survivors and survivor of them; and that after the death of the last survivor their issue took several inheritances in tail. Haddelsey v. Adams, 22 Beav. 266; 25 L. J., Ch. 826; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 724.

Semble, that, to effect the expressed intention of the testator, the word "survivor" may receive a different sense in different parts of a will. Winterton v. Crawfurd, 1 Russ. & M. 407; 8 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 134.

D. by will gave all his real and personal property to his wife for life, and, after certain gifts not material to the question argued, he gave to his five first cousins, naming them, or the survivors of them, the sum of 1,050*l.* stock, to be equally divided between them, share and share alike; the whole to be paid as soon as possible after his wife's death. D.'s wife survived him. Three of the cousins died in the lifetime of D., and only one survived D.'s widow:—Held, that the word "survivors" must include the case of one legatee alone surviving. Hearn v. Baker, 2 K. & J. 383.

Who Included.]—A gift of residuary estate among surviving children not extended to deceased children by reason of ambiguities in the will, shewing merely a tendency to treat all the children with equality. Crosse, In re, 1 N. R. 419; 32 L. J., Ch. 344; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 429; 8 L. T. 299; 11 W. R. 396.

An intention of equally benefiting all the children is to be assumed in a settlement, but not in a will. Ib.

A testator gave 5,000*l.* to each of his four daughters for their separate use, and if they had any children the principal to be divided between them after her death, if they should attain twenty-one; if not, it was to be divided among "her surviving sisters." A. B., one daughter, died, leaving two children, both of whom died infants, but one of them left a child surviving. Another daughter died before her sister A. B.'s children, leaving three children. The testator had a fifth daughter, for whom he had separately provided:—Held, that the separate provision was no reason for excluding her from taking under the words "her surviving sisters." Carver v. Burgess, 7 De G. M. & G. 96; 3 Eq. R. 421; 24 L. J., Ch. 401; 3 W. R. 308.

Maintenance having been allowed by an order of this court out of the income of the legacy, and the surplus having been invested, it was held that such surplus passed to the legal personal representatives of the infants. Ib.

—— After-born Children.]—A gift by will to C. for life, "and after her death to all and every the children of C. who shall survive me," includes children of C. born after the death of the testator. Clark's Estate, In re, 3 De G. J. & S. 111; 13 W. R. 115.

A testator gave the proceeds of the sale of real and personal estate to trustees for C. for life, and after his decease as to one moiety for the reputed daughter of C. for life for her separate use, and after her decease to divide the same equally among all her children who should survive the testator, with benefit of survivorship, and if there should be no child who should survive the testator, then over. C.'s reputed daughter was twelve years old at the death of the testator. She afterwards married and died, leaving several children; the legatees in remainder were also dead:—Held, that the children born after the testator's death were entitled to their mother's moiety on her decease. Ib.

A testator by his will directed that his four children should be made wards of court, and having made provisions for maintenance, and bequeathed pecuniary legacies to his younger children, appointed his eldest son, W., residuary legatee and devisee, and directed as follows: "In case of any of the younger children dying before they attain the age of twenty-one years or leaving legitimate issue, I direct their portion or portions to be divided among the survivors, share and share alike; and failing all my own children, I devise the whole of my property to the children of my sister," &c. The testator left four children, all minors, him surviving; namely, W., his eldest son, and J., R., and H. At the time of the death of the testator, his widow was enceinte of a child, C., who was born after the testator's death. R., one of the children, having died under twenty-one and unmarried:—Held, that W., the eldest son, and C., the posthumous child, were not entitled, upon the construction of the will, to any share of the legacy bequeathed to R. Wallis v. Wallis, 13 L. R., Ir. 258.

b. When Construed "Others."

"Survivors" construed strictly, not as importing "Others."]—The rule of law, as laid down by modern authorities, is, that the word "survivors" is to be confined to its literal signification of survivors at the period spoken of by the testator in every case where it is possible to do so without violating the clear meaning of the rest of the will. Keep, In re, 32 Beav. 122.

Testatrix, before the statute 1 Vict. c. 20, bequeathed the residue of her personal estate to her son A. and her daughter B., to be divided equally between them, in case they were both living at the time of her decease; but if either of them should happen to die before her, or at any time after, without issue, then she bequeathed the share of him or her so dying, and without issue, to the survivor of them. A. and B. survived the testatrix. A. died unmarried in the lifetime of B.:—Held, that the moiety of the residue given to A. devolved to B. Turner v. Frampton, 2 Coll. C. C. 331; 10 Jur. 24.

Where there were different bequests to different classes of children, followed by a general clause that the shares of all such legatees as died under twenty-three should go over to the survivor and survivors, such clause was construed distributively as to each class, and the word "survivor" was taken in its usual sense. Cromek v. Lumb, 3 Y. & C. 565.

A testator gave a fund between the children of H., and provided that the legacies should vest at twenty-three, and that if any should die under twenty-three without issue, their legacies should go to the survivors; there were five children of H., of whom one, who attained twenty-three, died between the deaths of two of his brothers, who died under that age:—Held, that he took an original fifth, and a part of the share of the one who died before him, but no part of the share of the one who died after him. Ib.

Gift of a residue of real and personal estate to trustees to sell, get in, and pay and divide the money arising therefrom unto and equally among the testator's children so soon as the youngest should attain twenty-one; the daughter's shares to be invested and secured, and the interest paid to such daughter, and the principal to be disposed of amongst her children as she might direct; if no child, the share to be divided amongst the survivors of the testator's children equally; and in case of the death of any of his children leaving lawful issue, the testator gave to such issue the share the parent would have been entitled to have. Semble, that the word "survivors" in the residuary clause must be construed in its natural sense, and not as importing "others," and that this construction of the word in one part of the will must govern the construction of the same word in the other parts. Leeming v. Sherratt, 2 Hare, 14; 11 L. J., Ch. 423; 6 Jur. 663.

Bequest to one for life, and then to be divided among four legatees equally, as tenants in common; if either died in the life of the tenant for life, his share to be divided among his children; if either died during that period without leaving issue, then his share to go to the survivors or survivor of them. One died leaving nine children, and then another died without issue, and then the tenant for life died:—Held, that the children of the legatee who died first took no interest in the share of the one who died afterwards without issue. Moate v. Moate, 16 Jur. 1010.

Where testator, after giving legacies to daughters for their respective lives, with remainder to their respective issue, and in default of issue the share of the daughter so dying to go to the survivors, directed that if any daughter should die before vesting of legacy leaving issue, the legacy should descend to such issue:—Held, that the word "survivor" must be strictly taken, but that under the clause of substitution a survivor's share of a deceased daughter's legacy passed to the children of a daughter predeceasing testator, leaving issue surviving him. Willetts v. Willetts, 7 Hare, 39; 17 L. J., Ch. 457; 12 Jur. 670.

Gift of a certain sum to each of the children of A. and B. who should attain twenty-one, but in case any of them should die under that age his share to go to his surviving brothers and sisters; the word "surviving" in such a limitation cannot be read "other," so as to entitle a child to the share of a brother who died before he was born. Mann v. Thompson, Kay, 638; 18 Jur. 826; 2 W. R. 582.

The rule as settled by modern authorities is, that the word "survivor" is to be construed strictly, and is not to be read "other," unless the rest of the will should render the more liberal and less literal construction essential, for the purpose of carrying into execution the objects expressed by the will. Hodge v. Foot, 34 Beav. 349.

The words "survivor or survivors" in a will must be taken in their proper and usual sense, unless the context plainly shews that the testator employed such words in some other signification. Ustieke, In re, 35 Beav. 338; 14 W. R. 447.

The words "survivors and survivor" of parents construed strictly, although the children of some of them took an interest in remainder. Ib.

A testator devised all his estate to trustees (subject to an annuity to his wife), to pay the rents to his six daughters, share and share alike, as they should respectively attain twenty-one, or be married, and to continue during their respective lives; and in case any of his children should die without having any child or children, then as to the share or shares of her or them so dying in trust to pay the same to the survivors or survivor of them, to be equally divided between them, if more than one; and if but one, to pay the whole to her; provided that such shares should be paid to his daughters for their separate use; and in case any of his daughters should have any child or children living at their respective deaths, it should be lawful for such of his daughters to dispose of their property, thereby devised to them, to and amongst her child or children as she might appoint, and for want of appointment to and among such child or children equally; and in case all his daughters should die without having any child or children, as aforesaid, then for his wife; and he devised all the residue of his property to his six daughters: —Held, that "survivors or survivor" were to be construed in their ordinary sense of "longest liver," and that a surviving daughter took for her life the share of one who died without children, to the exclusion of the children of another deceased daughter. Browne v. Rainsford, Ir. R. 1 Eq. 384; 16 W. R. 198.

A father devised real estate to trustees upon trust to receive the rent, and to pay one-fourth part of such rent unto each of his four daughters for her separate use during her life, and after the death of either or any of his daughters, he gave and devised one equal undivided fourth part or share of and in the premises unto the child or children of each of his daughters so dying and leaving lawful issue, and the heirs and assigns of such children for ever, and as tenants in common if more than one child; and in case any or either of his daughters should happen to die without leaving any lawful issue surviving her, then the testator gave and devised the share or shares of any such daughter so dying unto the survivors or survivor of his daughters, and their or her heirs and assigns for ever; and in case all his daughters should die without leaving lawful issue, then he gave and devised the premises unto his two sons:—Held, that the words "survivors or survivor" must be taken in their natural and primary sense, and that on the death of a daughter without leaving a child, the children of a daughter who predeceased her took no interest in her share. Twist v. Herbert, 28 L. T. 489.

Where legacies were given to each of four persons for life, interest at 5 per cent., to be paid till heir attained twenty-one, and "in case of the demise of any of them without legitimate issue, then his or her proportions to be divided equally among the survivors," and one of the legatees died without having been married:—Held, that the survivors were absolutely entitled to the legacy. Ranelagh v. Ranelagh, 4 Beav. 419.

A. devised freeholds to two or their heirs as tenants in common, and in case either should die without leaving lawful issue surviving her, then he devised her part unto the survivor:—Held, that "survivor" was to be read in its ordinary sense, and not in the sense of "other." Greenwood v. Percy, 26 Beav. 572.

Testator being possessed of a mill, &c., which had been granted to him and heirs for three lives, devised his property to trustees and their heirs upon trust to let and to pay one-fifth of the profits to his wife for life, and the other four parts he directed to be applied for the maintenance, education, and bringing up of his four children until they severally attain twenty-five, at which time, as they should severally attain that age, he gave, devised and bequeathed unto such of his children as should attain that age, one-fifth of the property, to hold to them and their heirs. The testator then provided that, if any of his children should die under twenty-five and leave no lawful issue, then he gave, &c., the part of him, her, or them so dying unto the survivors or survivor of his said children, to be equally divided amongst them, their heirs, &c., with a like proviso if any of such children should happen to die under twenty-one; and after the death of his wife he gave the other fifth part to his children subject to the same trusts, provisoes and conditions. The testator left all his four children, E., M., J. and Joseph, him surviving. E. attained twenty-five and married S.; M. married P. and died under twenty-five; J. attained twenty-five, married G., and had one child, who died an infant, and afterwards J. died. Joseph died under twenty-five unmarried. On bill filed by E. and her husband against the children of M. and G., the husband of J., in order to ascertain the rights of the parties to the mill:—Held, that the children of the testator did not take vested interests until they severally attained twenty-five. That the words "survivors or survivor" could not be read "others or other"; that the husband of J. was not entitled to the share of J. during his life as tenant by the curtesy. Stead v. Platt, 18 Beav. 50.

Testator bequeathed the residue of his estate equally between his two sons and his daughter with a direction that in case either of his sons should die under twenty-one, or in case his daughter should die unmarried, the share of the son or daughter so dying should go to his, the testator's, two then surviving children; and that in case both sons should die under twenty-one, or one son die under that age, and the daughter die unmarried, the share of the second child so dying should go to the only surviving child and, further, that in case both the sons should die under twenty-one, and the daughter die unmarried, the residue should go over; the two sons attained twenty-one; daughter survived them and died unmarried:—Held, that there was an intestacy as to the daughter's share Cooper v. Palmer, 1 Coll. C. C. 665.

On a gift to a class and their issue, and in case of the death of one without leaving issue, to the survivors or survivor and their issue:—

Held, that the word "survivors" could not be read "others" merely on the ground of the improbability of the testator intending the interests of the issue to depend on the period of their parents' death. Corbett, In re, Johns. 591 ; 29 L. J., Ch. 458 ; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 339 ; 8 W. R. 257.

A sum bequeathed to trustees, in trust for A., and to pay the income to her, with limitations over to her issue, and to the survivors of A., B. and C., and their issue :—Held, upon failure of the subsequent limitations, that A. was absolutely entitled to the bequest. Ib.

Under a devise of real and personal estate to the widow for life, and afterwards to the testator's four children, "or" their children, share and share alike ; and if any of such children should die without leaving a child, his share was to be divided between "the survivor or survivors" of them "or" their children :—Held, that "or" could not be read as "and," nor "survivors" as "others," and that the effect of the gift was to substitute children for their parents who had died in the life of the tenant for life. One child died in the life of the tenant for life, without issue ; and at the death of the latter, the three other children and several grandchildren were living ; also, that the three children took exclusively as tenants in common. Blundell v. Chapman, 33 Beav. 648. And see Parsons v. Cole, 4 Drew. 296.

The word "survivor" cannot be construed as "others," where the gift over is partly to persons whose interests are not given over. De Garagnol v. Liardet, 32 Beav. 608 ; 2 N. R. 296.

A testator gave legacies to each of his four daughters for life, with remainder to their children ; and he provided, that if either of the daughters should die without children, her share should go over to the survivors of his sons and daughters :—Held, that "survivors" could not be read "others," in consequence of the gift over being to a different class from those whose shares were to go over. Ib.

A testator gave stock to the four children of his daughter (a son and three daughters), the shares of the grand-daughters to be held in trust for their separate use for their lives ; and he directed, that in case of any of his grand-daughters dying without issue, their shares should accrue and survive to the "survivors" of all the children of his daughter, including the son, the accruing shares of the grand-daughters to be subject to the same conditions as their original shares :—Held, that upon the death of the last surviving grand-daughter without issue, her share, both original and accrued, was undisposed of, and fell into the residue. Nevill v. Boddam, 28 Beav. 554 ; 29 L. J., Ch. 738 ; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 573 ; 8 W. R. 490.

H. in 1823 bequeathed the interest of a fund in trust for her niece S. for life, and after the death of S. to her three daughters H., M. and L., in equal shares and proportions. She declared, that in case any of them should die without leaving any lawful issue, the share or shares of her or them so dying should go to the survivors of them in equal shares ; and if but one, then to such one only ; but if any or either of them should leave any child or children, then she gave the share or shares of her or them so dying unto her or their child or children respectively in equal shares ; provided that if H., M. and L. should all die without lawful issue, in the lifetime of their mother, S., then the fund should go to S. absolutely. H. and L. died in the lifetime of S., leaving children, and M. survived S., and was unmarried :—Held, that the share of M., in the event of her dying without issue, was at her absolute disposal, and did not pass to the children of her sisters H. and L. Hays' Trusts, In re, 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1068 ; 9 L. T. 197.

A testatrix bequeathed two sums of money upon trust respectively for her nieces M. and E. The legacy given to E. was bequeathed upon trust for E. for life for her separate use, and after her decease for her children, if any, living at her death, as she should appoint ; and in default of appointment equally amongst them ; or if but one child, the whole to be in trust for such only child. The legacy to M. was bequeathed upon similar trusts ; and the testatrix directed that in case her said nieces, or either of them, should die without leaving issue, the legacy of the niece so dying should be equally divided between the children of whichever of the testatrix's nieces should happen to survive, and the children of C. (a nephew of the testatrix), in equal shares, on attaining twenty-one years or day of marriage ; and if only one such child then living, the whole should go to such only child. There was no gift over of the whole fund, in the event of their being no children to take it. M. died in 1877, E. died in 1881 without issue, and at the time of her death there were living children of M. and children of C. :—Held, that the children of C. were entitled to the whole of the legacy so bequeathed to E., to the exclusion of M.'s children, and that the words "whichever should happen to survive" should receive their literal meaning, and could not be construed as equivalent to "the other." Dunlevy's Trusts, In re, 9 L. R., Ir. 349—C. A.

Testator gave, by will made in 1834, the residue of his estate to trustees to pay the income, after the death of his wife, unto such of his four named children as should be living at the decease of his wife, during their lives ; and after the decease of any one or more of such children who should leave children, he gave the share, whether original or accruing, of the one so dying in trust for his or her children ; and in the event of any one of his children dying without leaving children who should attain twenty-one years, then he gave the share, whether original or accruing, of such of them so dying in trust for the survivor or survivors of his said children during their lives, and after their deaths for their respective children, and their heirs, executors and administrators. There was no gift over. The four children of the testator survived the widow. One child died leaving two children who attained the age of twenty-one years, and the other three children died without issue :—Held, that the words "survivor or survivors" must be so read, and not as "other or others." Horner's Estate, In re, Pomfret v. Graham, 51 L. J., Ch. 43 ; 19 Ch. D. 186 ; 45 L. T. 670.

A testator, by will in 1826, gave real and personal estate to trustees in fee, in trust for his four nieces, M., B., S. and J., for their respective lives, as tenants in common, and on the death of any of them, then in trust as to the share of her so dying, to stand possessed of and interested in such share for the child or children of such of them as should have died, and if any of them should die without issue, then he directed the share or shares of her or them so dying to go to the survivor or survivors of them and their heirs, and be conveyed to them and their heirs accordingly. B. and J. died leaving children. M. died a spinster, S. was a spinster and over sixty :—Held, first, that the equitable fee was given to the children of the nieces. Maden v. Taylor, 45 L. J., Ch. 569.

Held, secondly, that seeing that S. was past the age of child-bearing, she was entitled to her own one-fourth share in fee, under the gift over to the survivor of the nieces. Ib.

By codicil of same date, the testator devised freehold estate on trust for M., B., S. and J., for their respective lives, as tenants in common, and on death of all or any of them, then as to the part of her or them so dying, in trust for all and every the child and children of them respectively, and the heirs of their bodies ; and if any of them should die without leaving issue living at her death, then in trust for the survivors and survivor of them and the heirs of her and their bodies ; and if all except one should die without leaving lawful issue, then in trust for such only or surviving niece and the heirs of her body, and in case of a total failure of issue of them, then in trust for his heirs. B. died, having had four children, three of whom died infants, and unmarried. J. died, having had three children, one of whom died an infant and unmarried. Then M. died a spinster. S. was a spinster, and over sixty :—Held, first, that cross-remainders in tail were to be implied between the children of the tenants for life. Ib.

Held, secondly, that "survivor" was not to be read "other," but that S. took M.'s share. Ib.

Held, thirdly, that S. being past the age of child-bearing, was entitled to her own one-fourth share in tail under the gift over to the survivors and survivor of them. Ib.

A testator bequeathed the dividends of a sum of 10,000*l.* consols unto and equally between his four daughters, and from and immediately after their several and respective deceases he bequeathed the 10,000*l.* to their children respectively, viz., one-fourth part thereof unto and equally between the children of each daughter. And, in case any one or more of the daughters should die without leaving issue her or them surviving, he bequeathed the share or shares of the stock as bequeathed to and intended for the issue (had there been such) "unto the survivors or survivor" of the four daughters, equally if more than one, and if but one, to that one, absolutely. Three of the daughters married, and died leaving children. The fourth was the longest liver, and was a spinster of the age of fifty-four :—Held, that on her death without leaving issue she would be entitled to her own one-fourth share of the 10,000*l.* absolutely ; that it might be assumed that she would never have any children ; and that the share might be transferred to her at once. Maden v. Taylor (supra) approved and followed. Davidson v. Kimpton, 18 Ch. D. 213 ; 45 L. T. 132 ; 29 W. R. 912.

A testator gave legacies to four named persons for their respective lives, and continued, "the interest on all these legacies is to be paid regularly to the respective parties as it becomes due ; and in the event of either of the parties dying, and without child or children, then the legacy of the deceased is to be at once divided amongst the survivors." The will contained a residuary gift. The last survivor of the four named persons having died without children :—Held, that his legacy fell into the residue. Nevill v. Boddam (supra) and Corbett's Trusts, In re (supra), followed. Maden v. Taylor (supra) and Davidson v. Kimpton (supra) considered. Mortimer, In re, Griffiths v. Mortimer, 54 L. J., Ch. 414 ; 52 L. T. 383 ; 33 W. R. 441.

A testator devised to each of his children an estate for the life of that child, with remainder to the children of that child, and in case any or either of the testator's children should die without leaving any child or children, him, her, or them surviving, then the testator devised the estates to which their child or children respectively would have been entitled under his will, if living, to his, the testator's, surviving children for their respective natural lives, and after their deceases respectively he gave their respective shares to their respective children, their heirs, executors, administrators and assigns. There was no gift over on the death of all the testator's children without leaving children. C., one of the testator's children, died without leaving issue. Some of the other children were then living ; others had died leaving children of theirs then living :—Held, that the word "surviving" was to be read in its proper sense, and that the children of those children of the testator who had predeceased C. took no interest in the estate of which C. was tenant for life. Benn, In re, Benn v. Benn, 29 Ch. D. 839 ; 53 L. T. 240 ; 34 W. R. 6—C. A.

The fact that the original shares are all settled by the will, and that the shares which the "survivors" take in the share of a child who dies without issue are settled in the same way as their original shares, is not by it itself sufficient to shew that "survivors" is used otherwise than in its proper sense. Ib.

A testator directed his personal estate to be converted and invested in consols sufficient to provide life annuities to a specified amount for his wife and his four children, George, Jane, William and Robert ; upon the death of his wife her annuity was to be distributed among his said four children for their lives ; upon "the decease of either of his said children" the testator bequeathed one-fourth of the said fund of consols to the children or child of such deceased child absolutely, and in the event of either of his said children dying without issue he gave "the fourth part or share to which the children of such dying child would have been entitled unto the survivors of my said children in equal shares." The will contained a residuary gift. George, the last survivor, having died without issue :—Held, following Maden v. Taylor (supra) and Davidson v. Kimpton (supra), in preference to Mortimer, In re (supra), and Askew v. Askew (57 L. J., Ch. 629), that George, as the longest liver, became absolutely entitled on his death without issue to the corpus of his one-fourth of consols, and consequently, that it belonged to his representatives. Roper's Estate, In re, Morrell v. Gissing, 58 L. J., Ch. 439 ; 41 Ch. D. 409 ; 61 L. T. 42 ; 37 W. R. 731.

Pecuniary legacies were severally given to four persons during their natural lives, and in case of the decease of any of them without legitimate issue his or her proportion was to be divided amongst the survivors. The last surviving legatee died without leaving issue :—Held, that this legacy fell into residue. King v. Frost (15 App. Cas. 548) followed ; Maden v. Taylor (supra), Davidson v. Kimpton (supra), and Roper's Estate, In re (supra), not followed. Ranelagh v. Ranelagh, 3 R. 315 ; 41 W. R. 549.

Construed Others.]—Bequest to three children in thirds respectively, with a direction that they should not be put in possession till their respective attainment of particular ages, and in case of the death of either of the above-named children before the ages mentioned, that third to be equally divided between the two surviving children; and in the event of the death of two before the respective ages above mentioned, then the whole to devolve to the surviving child; but should all the testator's children die before they should attain their said respective ages, then the whole of his estate was given over. One died, having attained the age mentioned; afterwards another died under that age; the share of the latter a vested interest in the child who died first, and the survivor attaining the age specified. Wilmot v. Wilmot, 8 Ves. 10; 6 R. R. 196.

J. having three unmarried daughters, A., L. and C., bequeathed to A. and L. 2,000*l*. each, and to C. 2,500*l*., to be invested for their benefit, and there to remain until their day of marriage; and in case one or more of his daughters should die before her marriage, then the portion or portions of her so dying should go to and be divided between his surviving daughters, share and share alike; and if only one should survive, then to that daughter; and if all his said daughters should die before their marriage, then their portions should be divided between all his sons. The testator had also three married daughters. C. married, and died in the life of A., who died unmarried, leaving L. surviving:—Held, that C.'s personal representative was entitled to a moiety of A.'s share. Jackson, In re, 14 Ir. Ch. R. 472.

Testator bequeathed a sum of stock to A. and B. for their lives, and on their deaths to their children then living who should attain twenty-one, with a gift over to the survivor of A. and B., in case the children of either of them should die under twenty-one. A. died, leaving a child who had attained twenty-one. B. afterwards died without having had a child:—Held, that A.'s personal representatives were entitled to B.'s moiety of the stock. Aiton v. Brooks, 7 Sim. 204.

Testator by will directed his executors to place out upon government securities such a sum of money out of the interest thereof as should be sufficient to produce an annuity of 50*l*., which he gave unto his daughter J. for her life; and after her decease, in case she should leave issue, he gave the principal unto and equally amongst his surviving children and their legal representatives, share and share alike. The testator had four children living at the date of his will and of his death, of whom the daughter J. was the survivor; she died without leaving issue:—Held, that the words "surviving children" meant children surviving the daughter J., and that the words "legal personal representatives" must be construed in their ordinary sense, and not as importing kindred or representatives in blood; consequently, that the fund, of which the testator's daughter was the tenant for life, fell into the testator's residuary estate. Taylor v. Beverley, 1 Coll. C. C. 108; 13 L. J., Ch. 240; 8 Jur. 265.

A gift over to "surviving daughters," on the decease of daughters without issue, is a gift over to "other" daughters. Crowther v. Evans, 11 Jur. (N.S.) 902; 13 L. T. 271.

A testator bequeathed all his property to his four daughters, share and share alike, the share of each to be given to each on their days of marriage, with consent; and if his daughters should happen to die unmarried, then the share of the child to go, share and share alike, among his surviving daughters, or daughter so surviving:—Held, that surviving daughters meant other daughters, and therefore that the children of a deceased daughter were entitled to a share of the legacy of a daughter who died unmarried. Connellan, In re, 16 Ir. Ch. R. 524.

When a testator manifests a clear intention to give a benefit to certain objects in an event which happens, the legatees shall not be deprived of it, although a circumstance inadvertently coupled with it in the language used does not literally take place. Therefore, under a bequest of equal sums for the benefit of each of two grand-daughters, A. and B., for life, and their children respectively; but if either died without issue, her share to go to the children of the surviving grand-daughter; A. marries and dies leaving children in the lifetime of B. Then B. dies unmarried:—Held that A.'s children took each of their shares, though their mother did not actually survive B. Harman v. Dickenson, 1 Bro. C. C. 91.

A. bequeathed to four nieces, C., D., E. and F.; and on death of any, the whole bequest should go to survivor or survivors; but if any died leaving a child, then her share should go to such child; if all died without issue, then to B. C. married, and had issue G. and H., who died in life of their mother, H. having issue L. and M.; C., D., E. and F. died in succession, F. being last surviving:—Held, that L. and M. were entitled to the whole bequest. Pitt v. Harbin, Lofft, 19.

A testator bequeathed 10,000*l*. equally between his four daughters for life, with remainder to their issue; and directed that the share of every of them dying without issue should devolve to the survivors and survivor of them. There was a gift over, if they should all die without issue:—Held, that "survivors and survivor" were to be read "others and other," and that the issue of one daughter, who died, was entitled to participate in the share of another daughter, who subsequently died without issue. Lowe v. Land, 6 L. J., Ch. 234; 1 Jur. 377.

Testator by a will made since the statute 1 Vict. c. 26, after directing payment of his debts and bequeathing several specific articles of plate to his sister L., desired that all his other plate, jewellery, books, pictures and other property, except freehold and leasehold property, should be sold, and the produce, after deducting funeral and other expenses, be divided in equal parts amongst L., M., N., O. and P. He then directed that his freehold house and his leaseholds, some of which were held for years, and others for years determinable on lives, should be kept in hand and let to the best advantage, and the produce be divided every half-year among the above-named L., M., N., O. and P., or to their lawful heirs; and in case of there being no heirs, the share or shares to be divided in equal parts among the surviving legatees. The testator at his death left L. his heiress-at-law and sole next of kin; M., N., O. and P. were not related to L., but were related to and capable of inheriting from each other; M. died unmarried in the testator's lifetime:—Held, first, that M.'s share of the residuary personal estate lapsed for the benefit of the next of kin; secondly, that M.'s share of the freehold property did not lapse, but went to the surviving devisees, the words "heir and lawful heirs" referring to heirs of the body, and "or" being construed "and"; thirdly, that M.'s share of the leaseholds for years lapsed and fell into the residue, the words "there being no heir" referring to an indefinite failure of issue, and the word "surviving" meaning "other." Harris v. Davis, 1 Coll. C. C. 416; 9 Jur. 269.

Where a testator has directed his trustees to convey one-third of his real and leasehold property to each of his three daughters for life, with a power to each daughter to appoint her third share among her children, and in default of appointment to go to her children equally as tenants in common in fee-simple, but in default of issue of any one or more of his daughters, then the share or shares of such one or more dying without issue to be limited, so as to go to her surviving sisters and to their issue in like manner as their original third parts were directed to be conveyed to each of them, with a gift over in case all three daughters should die without issue in the lifetime of their mother, and the testator directed, in such conveyance to be made to his daughters, that all necessary trustees and trusts should be inserted therein for the purpose of protecting the entail and succession designed by him to be effected upon his three daughters and the issue of them:—Held, that this was a case for reading "surviving" as "others." Hurry v. Morgan, 36 L. J., Ch. 105; L. R. 3 Eq. 152; 15 W. R. 87.

The word "surviving" interpreted to mean "other" upon a consideration of the whole scope of the will. Holland v. Allsop, 29 Beav. 498; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 856; 9 W. R. 683.

In a gift over, upon the death of any of a class without leaving issue, to the survivors, the word "survivors" was construed "others," in consequence of the ultimate gift over being only to take effect on the death of all the class without issue. Ib.

The word "survivors" of nieces construed "others" in consequence of the gift over and of the subsequent part of the will referring to the issue of a deceased niece participating in an accrued share. Keep, In re, 32 Beav. 122.

T. devised real estate to her three nephews, A., B., and C., for their lives, share and share alike, with remainder, as to the share of each nephew, to his first and other sons in tail male, with remainder to his daughters as tenants in common in tail, and in case of the death of any or either of the nephews without lawful issue, male or female, then to such of her nephews as should survive, and to their and his issue in the manner thereinbefore mentioned, and in case of the death of all the nephews and their issue, then to the right heirs of the testatrix. A. died leaving a son; then B. died without issue; then C. died leaving a son:—Held, that the words of the will "such as shall survive" of the nephews must be construed as meaning "the others or other" of them, and consequently that A.'s son was entitled to one moiety of B.'s share. Tharp, In re, 1 De G. J. & S. 453; 2 N. R. 253; 33 L. J., Ch. 59; 8 L. T. 558; 11 W. R. 763.

A testator gave one-third of his real and personal estate to each of his three daughters for life, and after their respective deaths to their respective children; but in case any or either of the daughters should die without leaving any child, or if all should die under twenty-one, then the share of the daughter so dying should be for the separate use of surviving daughter or daughters and their children, per stirpes:—Held, that "surviving" ought to be construed "other." Consequently one having died leaving children in 1803, and a second in 1837 leaving a child, and the third in 1864 leaving no child:—Held, that the share of the last was divisible per stirpes amongst the children of the two former. Hodge v. Foot, 34 Beav. 349.

A father gave a sum of money in sixths, and directed his trustees to hold one-sixth in trust for each of his six daughters for life, with remainder to her children, to be transferred and vested at twenty-one or marriage; and he provided that in case any of his daughters should die without leaving a child, then her share should go in trust for his surviving daughters in equal shares, if more than one, during their respective lives, and after their decease for their respective children per stirpes, and not per capita, in the same manner as the original shares:—Held, that on the death of a daughter without leaving a child who attained twenty-one or married the children of other daughters who had predeceased her took shares in her one-sixth. Waite v. Littlewood, 42 L. J., Ch. 216; L. R. 8 Ch. 70; 28 L. T. 123; 21 W. R. 131.

A testatrix devised and bequeathed all her real and personal estate upon trust to sell and convert, and directed her trustees to stand possessed of her residuary personalty upon trust to invest, and as to one-fourth to pay the income to her daughter A. for life, and after A.'s death to assign, transfer, and make over the same to and amongst A.'s child and children, to be assigned, transferred, and paid at twenty-three. Any child attaining twenty-three in the lifetime of A. was to acquire a vested interest. In case of the death of A. without leaving any such child or children as aforesaid, she directed the trustees to pay, apply, and dispose of the income of the fourth to and amongst her (testatrix's) surviving daughters, such benefit of survivorship to extend to the surviving as well as to the original shares; and directed that the principal should go and belong to, and be divisible amongst, the several child or children of such daughter or daughters. As to the remaining three-fourths, she directed the trustees to stand possessed of the income on similar trusts for the benefit of her other three daughters, B., C., and D., for their lives, and of the principal for their respective children, in such manner and form as before directed. In case of the death of all her four daughters without leaving such children as aforesaid, or leaving such, and they should all die under twenty-three, the trustees were to hold the fund in trust for the testatrix's next of kin. Upon the death of a daughter without leaving children:—Held, that the children of a deceased daughter were entitled to participate in the share of the daughter so dying; in other words, that "surviving" must be read as meaning "other." Badger v. Gregory, L. R. 8 Eq. 78; 21 L. T. 107; 17 W. R. 1090.

A testator devised freeholds in moieties to the use of A. and B. respectively for life, with remainder to the use of their respective children equally as tenants in common in tail, and in default of issue of either A. or B., then to the same uses in favour of the "survivor of them" and her issue as thereinbefore declared concerning their original shares, remainders over. A. died leaving a child, who thereupon became tenant in tail of A.'s moiety. Subsequently B. died without issue:—Held, that A.'s child then became tenant in tail of B.'s moiety, "survivor" being read "other." Row, In re, 43 L. J., Ch. 347; L. R. 17 Eq. 300; 29 L. T. 824.

A testator devised real estate upon trust for his three grand-daughters for their lives respectively, share and share alike; and after the death of each of them, he gave one-third of his said estate to the children of each of them who should attain twenty-one, or die under twenty-one leaving issue. And in case any one of such three grand-daughters should die without leaving such issue, the testator gave his said estate during the lives of his two surviving grand-daughters upon trust for them in equal shares; and after the death of each of two such surviving grand-daughters, he gave one moiety of his said estate to their children who should attain twenty-one, or die under twenty-one leaving issue. And in case either of such two surviving grand-daughters should die without leaving such issue, he gave his said estate during the life of the last survivor of such grand-daughters upon trust for her, and after her death to her children who should attain twenty-one, or die under twenty-one leaving issue:—Held, that, according to the true construction of the will, "survivors" and "surviving" must be construed "others." Beck, In re, 37 L. J., Ch. 233; 16 W. R. 189. S. P., O'Brien v. O'Brien, [1896] 2 Ir. R. 459—C. A.

A father directed the income of the residue of his estate to be divided between all his sons as tenants in common, with benefit of survivorship between them, in case any or either of them should die without issue, and in case any child or children who should be entitled under the trusts of his will to any principal money or income should die leaving issue, the principal money or share, from which the interest of such child or children should be derived, should go to and be divided amongst such issue as tenants in common. The testator left five sons, two of whom died leaving issue, and three died without issue, the last survivor of the five dying without issue:—Held, that on the death of the last surviving son the principal set free accrued to the children of the sons who had died leaving issue. Cross v. Maltby, L. R. 20 Eq. 378; 33 L. T. 300; 23 W. R. 863.

After a bequest to testator's children for life, with remainder to their respective children, a clause of accruer of the shares of any of the testator's children dying without leaving issue in favour of his surviving children was held to carry an accruing share to the then living children of the testator and children of those then dead, although the will contained no gift over on the death and failure of issue of all the testator's children. Walker's Estate, In re, Church v. Tyacke, 48 L. J., Ch. 598; 12 Ch. D. 205.

A father gave the residue of his property to trustees, on trust to pay and divide the income equally among his three children during their respective lives, and after the death of each child the share of the fund to the income of which the deceased child was entitled for life was to be in trust for his or her issue; and in case, and so often as, any of the three children should die without leaving issue, the share to which such child should become entitled during his or her life, as well originally as by survivorship or accruer, was to be in trust for the survivors or survivor of the children during their, his, or her respective life or lives, and in equal shares if more than one; and, after the decease of each such survivor, the surviving or accruing share, to which such survivor for the time being should become entitled for his or her life, was to be in trust for his or her issue; and in case all the children should die without leaving issue, the fund was to be in trust for the representatives of the survivor. After the death of the testator one of his children died without issue, then another child died leaving issue, and, lastly, the third child died without issue:—Held, that the issue of the second child, though she was not the survivor, became entitled on the death of the third to the whole of the fund. Wake v. Varah, 45 L. J., Ch. 533; 2 Ch. D. 348; 34 L. T. 437; 24 W. R. 621—C. A.

A testator directed his trustees to pay one-seventh part of his residuary estate, after conversion, to each of his two sons upon their attaining twenty-one, and to pay the income of one other seventh part to his daughter E. for her life, and after her death to divide the capital thereof among such children of E. as should attain twenty-one, and as to the other four-sevenths upon like trusts for the benefit of his daughters A., B., C., and D., and their children; and the testator directed that in case any of his daughters should die without leaving issue surviving them, then the shares, as well original as accruing, of such daughters should be divided among his surviving sons and daughters, the shares of any daughters to be held upon the trusts therein declared concerning the other shares as accretions thereto:—Held, that "surviving" was to be read as equivalent to "other." Jackson v. Sparks, 38 L. J., Ch. 75.

A father gave his residuary estate to his six children in equal shares, and directed the shares of his sons who conducted themselves with propriety to be paid to them at twenty-five, and the shares of his sons who did not so conduct themselves to remain vested in his trustees upon trust for such sons for life, and afterwards for their children. The testator also directed the shares of his daughters to remain vested in his trustees upon trust for his daughters for life, and afterwards for their issue; and in case of the death of his daughters or his sons without having received their shares and without lawful issue, then he directed such shares to be divided equally between his "surviving children" in the same manner as the original shares. All the six children of the testator survived him. His three sons attained twenty-five, and their shares were all paid to them. His three daughters all married; one died in 1876 without leaving issue. At that time one son only was living. Two daughters died leaving issue; one son died leaving issue, and one without leaving issue. The question before the court was the distribution of the share of the daughter who died without leaving issue:—Held, that "surviving children" must be construed "other children," and that the share must be divided into fifths amongst the representatives of all the brothers and sisters. Lucena v. Lucena, 47 L. J., Ch. 203; 7 Ch. D. 255; 37 L. T. 420; 26 W. R. 254—C. A. Varying 36 L. T. 87.

Testator bequeathed a leasehold estate to his son Charles, and directed that, if his son should die without issue, the leasehold estate should be considered as part of his residuary estate, and be divided amongst the children of his three daughters, Isabella, Matilda, and Mary, as hereinafter mentioned; and he gave the residue of his estate to trustees, in trust for his son and three daughters, or such of them as should be living at the death of his wife, equally during their lives; and he directed that after their deaths the whole of the residue should be divided amongst all the children of his said son and daughters in equal parts, shares, and proportions; and in case any of his said son and daughters should die without leaving issue, that the share of him, her, or them so dying should be divided amongst the survivor or survivors of his said children and their issue in the like equal parts, shares, and proportions. Isabella died in the lifetime of the testator's widow, leaving children; Mary died after the widow, leaving children. Then Charles died without issue. Matilda was still living, and had children:—Held, that Isabella's children were entitled to one-fourth of the residue, notwithstanding their mother died before the widow; that Mary's children were entitled to another fourth; and that Matilda was entitled to another fourth for her life, with remainder to her children; and that, as Charles had died without issue, the remaining fourth was divisible into three parts, and one of those parts belonged to Isabella's children, another to Mary's children, and the remaining part to Matilda for life, with remainder to her children. Hawkins v. Hamerton, 16 Sim. 410; 13 Jur. 2.

Where there is in a will a gift to two designated devisees, as tenants in common in tail, and if either should die without issue, then to the "surviving" devisee, that word must be taken to mean "other." Smith v. Osborne, 6 H. L. Cas. 375; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 1181; 6 W. R. 21.

O., in anticipation of marriage, executed a settlement, which recited, that, "whereas O. is entitled to a contingent remainder on failure of the issue of G. C., party hereto in the town and lands of S., and in certain tenements in W., subject only to such powers over the same as shall appear to be vested in G. C., under and by virtue of the last will of T. C."; and it went on to covenant, that when and as soon as "the said remainder" should become vested in O. in possession he would then convey the property to the uses of the settlement. By the will of T. C., both these properties were devised to G. C. for life, remainder to his first and other sons in tail, remainder to the testator's daughters Elizabeth and Frances, as tenants in common in tail, and if either daughter should die without issue, then "to the use of my surviving daughter and the heirs of her body lawfully issuing, and in default of such issue to my own right heirs." G. C. died unmarried, and the lands of S. and W. descended to the two daughters (one of whom was O.'s mother), as tenants in common. The two sisters executed disentailing deeds as to S., but not as to W., and soon afterwards O.'s mother died intestate, and her property descended to O., her son, the covenantor. The other sister by will gave all her property to O., her nephew, subject to annuities and legacies:—Held, that as to the lands at S., the entail of which had been barred, and which had not descended to O., under the will of T. C., this covenant did not take effect, but it did take effect as to the lands at W., for the word "surviving" in the will of T. C. must be construed to mean "other," and the words "such issue" include the issue of both daughters, and therefore O. succeeded to both moieties of that estate as tenant in tail under the will. Ib.

A testator devised to J. certain hereditaments, to E. certain other hereditaments, to M. certain other hereditaments, to A. certain other hereditaments; J., E., M., and A. were children of M. and the estates given to them were in tail general. By a subsequent clause in his will he devised as follows:—"In case if either or all the within-named children of M. shall happen to die leaving no lawful issue, or if they leave lawful issue if such issue die leaving no lawful issue, in any of such cases the property of him, her, or them so dying shall be equally transferred to the use and uses of the surviving child or children of M. that are herein named" in tail general. E. died leaving an only son. A. died leaving a daughter, and after the deaths of E. and A., J. died without having been married, and M. survived E., A., and J.:—Held, that the word "surviving" must be read as the word "other," and E.'s only son was entitled to recover from M. one undivided third part of the hereditaments devised to J. Williams v. James, 20 W. R. 1010.

A testatrix devised her real estate, after the death of her daughter, as to one-fourth part thereof, to the use of Thomas (a son of the daughter) for his life, with remainder to the use of his children as tenants in common in tail, with cross-remainders in tail. The testatrix devised the other three-fourths of her real estate upon similar limitations in favour of the three other children of the daughters and their issue. By a codicil she directed that, in case any of her grandchildren named in her will should die without leaving any child or children, then the share or shares of them, him, or her so dying in the hereditaments devised by her will should go to and devolve on the "survivor or survivors" of her grandchildren and the heirs of his, her, or their respective bodies. One grandchild died a spinster. Then two of the grandchildren died leaving children. Thomas was the last survivor, and he died without having had a child:—Held, that Thomas could not take his own share as "survivor," that cross-remainders were to be implied between the four grandchildren, or else the words "survivor or survivors" were to be construed "other or others," and that consequently Thomas's shares devolved, on his death without having had a child, upon the two grandchildren (who left children) equally as tenants in common in tail. Askew v. Askew, 57 L. J., Ch. 629; 58 L. T. 472; 36 W. R. 620.

A testatrix bequeathed 8,000*l.* to her nephew upon trust to invest and pay the income equally amongst her four nieces during their respective lives, and after the decease of any of them to pay the principal of her share among her children as she should appoint, and in default of appointment equally, the shares of sons to be vested interests at twenty-one, and the shares of daughters at twenty-one or marriage, with benefit of survivorship among them as to the original and accruing shares of any who should die before attaining a vested interest, and in case any of her said nieces should die without having any children who should have attained a vested interest, she gave the share of such niece and the interest thereof to her nephew upon trust "to pay and dispose thereof to or among her" (the niece's) "surviving sisters and their respective children in the same manner as I have hereinbefore directed respecting their original shares"; and she gave her residuary personal estate to her nephew. The four nieces survived the testatrix. One of them died leaving children, and two others subsequently died without issue:—Held, that the children of the niece who first died were entitled to participate in the shares of those who died subsequently. Previous decisions considered and their effect stated. Bowman, In re, Whytehead v. Boulton, 41 Ch. D. 525; 60 L. T. 888; 37 W. R. 583. See also Barlow v. Salter, 17 Ves. 482; Arnold's Estate, In re, infra, Eyre v. Marsden, post, col. 960.

Where "Others" Associated with "Survivors."]—Legacies to the children (by name) of the testator's late niece M., to be assigned to them when and as soon as they should respectively attain twenty-five, provided that if any should die under twenty-five leaving issue, the issue to take the parent's legacy; but if any should die under twenty-five without having issue then living, the legacy of the child so dying to go and be paid to the "survivors and survivor and others and other" of the same children, in equal shares. At the death of the testator, all the children of M. are under twenty-five. All afterwards attain twenty-five except A., who dies under that age, without issue, having survived two of the children: B. and C. The share of A. devolves to the representatives of B. and C., together with the children who survive A. Slade v. Parr, 1 Y. & C. C. C. 565; 7 Jur. 102.

Semble, that, to effect the expressed intention of the testator, the word "survivor" may receive a different sense in different parts of a will. Winterton v. Crawfurd, 1 Russ. & M. 407; 8 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 134.

A father directed his trustees to pay and divide the residuary moneys arising from the sale and conversion of his real and personal estate among all such of his five daughters as should be living at his death in equal shares, and he directed his trustees to invest every share given to a daughter of his living at his death, and during the life of each such daughter to pay the income of her share to her for her separate use, and after her death to hold the same in trust for her children as therein mentioned, and declared that if there should be no child of such his daughter who should attain a vested interest, then, subject to a power of appointment given to her over a portion of her share, as well the original share of such daughter as any share or shares which might accrue to her under that provision or otherwise should accrue to his other daughters or daughter surviving in equal shares, if more than one, each accruing share to be held upon the same trusts as the original. The will contained no gift over in the event of all the daughters dying without issue. All the five daughters survived the testator. Then one of them died leaving a child; then another died without issue:—Held, that the words "other daughter or other surviving daughters" referred to survivorship at the death of the daughter whose share was to be distributed, and that the child of the daughter who died first took no interest in the share of the daughter who died next. Beckwith v. Beckwith, 46 L. J., Ch. 97; 36 L. T. 128; 25 W. R. 282—C. A.

A testator gave property upon trust for his four children as tenants in common during their lives, and after the decease of his children respectively in trust for the children of his children respectively per stirpes, and in case of a failure of such issue of either of his children then in trust for his other surviving children or child. One of the testator's children predeceased him, leaving an infant daughter. Another of the testator's children survived him, and afterwards died without issue:—Held, that the infant grandchild took one-third of the lapsed share concurrently with the two surviving children of the testator. Arnold's Estate, In re, 39 L. J., Ch. 875; L. R. 10 Eq. 252; 23 L. T. 337; 18 W. R. 912.

"Others" Construed "Survivors."] — A mother, having two daughters, A. and B., and three sons, C., D., and E., bequeathed a fund upon trust for A. for life, and after her death for her children, with a gift over in default of children "to the others or other of them, B., C., D., and E., equally to be divided between or amongst them, if more than one." The will contained a like bequest in favour of B. and her children, with a like gift over "to the others or other of my children, that is to say, A., C., D., and E., equally to be divided." A. died a spinster; C. and D. predeceased her:—Held, that the words "others or other" could not be read as equivalent to "survivors or survivor at the death of A.," and that upon her death the fund bequeathed upon trust for her life became divisible in fourths. Hagen, In re, 46 L. J., Ch. 665.

A testator, in case of the death of any of his children without leaving issue, before payment of any part of reversionary legacies, directed such parts to be divided among the others and other of them, and in case of the death of a child leaving issue before such payment, he directed such parts to be divided among the children of such child:—Held, that "others" meant children other than those who had died without leaving issue. Chaston, In re, Chaston v. Seago, 50 L. J., Ch. 716; 18 Ch. D. 218; 45 L. T. 20; 29 W. R. 778.

c. Accruing Shares and Clause of Accruer.

General Rule—No Survivorship.]—A survived share shall not survive again without express words. West, Ex parte, 1 Bro. C. C. 575; 1 P. Wms. 275.

A. devises to his grandchildren, B., C., and D., 1,000*l.* each, the interest to their use, and if any dies to the survivors or survivor, share and share alike, the interest to be paid to their father to their use. B. dies an infant; then C. dies. The share which C. took by the death of B. shall not survive to D., but go to the father, administrator of C. Rudge v. Barker, Cas. t. Talb. 124.

A testator gave his residuary personal estate to trustees, upon trust to pay the income to his wife until his youngest child should attain twenty-one years, she thereout maintaining the children during their respective minorities; and on the youngest child attaining twenty-one years, upon trust to divide the trust fund among the testator's wife and children as tenants in common, with benefit of survivorship:—Held, that the shares of children dying before the youngest child attained twenty-one went to the survivors. But whether the accrued shares survived as well as the original shares, quære. Vorley v. Richardson, 8 De G. M. & G. 126; 25 L. J., Ch. 335; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 362; 4 W. R. 397.

Effect of Words "Share" or "Portion."]—T. by will appointed the interest that should be made of his personal estate to be paid to his father for life, then to his mother for life; and he gave the residue of his personal estate to his brother and sisters, and to A. and B., sisters of his late wife, share and share alike; and then said "in case of the death of any of them before me, or the survivor of my father and mother, then the share of the deceased to go among the survivors." The brother died in testator's lifetime; but after the will was made the sisters (in the lifetime of testator's mother, who survived her husband and then died) and A. and B. claimed the residue of the personal estate:—Held, that they were entitled, as the only surviving legatees, not only to their own original shares, but to all accumulations. Pain v. Benson, 3 Atk. 78.

A. gave 1,000*l.* among four persons, as tenants in common, and directed, if one of them die before twenty-one or marriage, it shall survive to the other; if one dies, and three are living, the share of that one so dying will survive to the other three; but if a second dies, nothing will survive but his original share, for the accruing share was a new legacy, and there is no survivorship. Id. 80.

One devises several parcels of land to his several children in tail, and if any of them die before twenty-one or unmarried, such child's part to go to the surviving children: if any of the children die unmarried, though above the age of twenty-one, his share shall go to the surviving child, but such survivor shall have such share for life only; what goes over on one child's death shall not go over again a second time. Woodworth v. Glassbrook, 2 Vern. 388.

Testator gave a sum to the four children of A., to be divided into equal shares, and paid to them at twenty-one, and the interest of their shares to be paid to their parents in the meantime; and in case of any dying under twenty-one, his, her, or their shares to be divided among the survivors. Two of the children died under twenty-one, in the testator's lifetime:—Held, that the original share of each had accrued to the then survivors, but that the accruing share of the one who died last lapsed. Rickett v. Guillemard, 12 Sim. 88; 5 Jur. 818.

A testator gave all the property he possessed in the parish of K., consisting of houses, lands, debts, ready money and other effects which he then possessed or might possess at the time of his decease, and also all his funds in the Bank of England, or that of the United States of America, to his reputed children, Anthony, James and Richard, and their heirs, share and share alike, as soon as they should have attained twenty-one, it being his will that if one of them should die before he attained that age, his share should vest in and belong to the survivors. James died under twenty-one, leaving Anthony and Richard surviving:—Held, that the share of the testator's property, which James would have been entitled to if he had attained twenty-one, vested in Anthony and Richard as joint tenants. Jones v. Hall, 16 Sim. 500.

A testator gave stock to trustees, to be divided after the death of the two persons who had life interest in it among A., B., C., D. and E., in equal shares; and he directed that, if any of them should die without issue, before their respective shares should become payable, the share of him, her, or them so dying without issue should go to and be equally divided among the survivor and survivors of them. A. died, leaving issue, who were living at the time fixed for the distribution of the fund; then B. died, leaving a son, who died without issue before the period of distribution; shortly afterwards, and also before the period of distribution, C., died without issue:—Held, that B.'s personal representatives were not entitled to any portion of the fund; that the one-third of B.'s share, which on the failure of her issue survived to C., did not, on C.'s death, survive to her other legatees, but was transmitted to her personal representative; that the words "survivor and survivors" were to be construed in their natural sense, and not as equivalent to "other and others," so that no part of the shares of B. and C. went over to A.'s personal representatives. Crowder v. Stone, 3 Russ. 217; 7 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 93; 27 R. R. 68.

One devises portions to his children, A., B. and C., and if any die before twenty-one or marriage the portion of the child so dying to go to the survivor; one of the children dies in the lifetime of the testator. This is not a lapsed legacy, but shall go over to the surviving children. Perkins v. Micklethwaite, 1 P. Wms. 274.

A married woman, by a testamentary instrument, made in execution of a power contained in her marriage settlement, gave 2,000*l.*, subject to the life interest of her husband, to trustees upon trust for the benefit of her child or children, to be equally divided between them, share and share alike; but, in case the 2,000*l.* should become payable before her children, being sons, should have attained twenty-one, or, being daughters, should have attained that age or day of marriage, then in trust to invest and apply the interest to their maintenance and education, and when they should attain twenty-one or day of marriage, to pay to them their respective shares of the principal; and, in case any of the children should happen to die before their portions should become payable, then they should go and belong to the survivors or survivor of them. The testatrix left a son and two daughters, all of whom had attained twenty-one at her decease. The son and afterwards a daughter died in the lifetime of their father:—Held, that on the death of the father the surviving daughter was entitled to the 2,000*l.* by survivorship, except as to that share of it which accrued to the deceased daughter upon the death of the son, which belonged to the representative of the deceased daughter. Bright v. Rowe, 3 Myl. & K. 316.

A. gave his leasehold and general residuary estate to trustees in trust, "as to the clear annual residue of his estate," to divide the same between his three daughters N., P. and M., for their separate use; but in case any or either of his daughters should die, leaving lawful issue surviving, to pay such "shares or share" to the children of such one or more of them; and if one of his daughters died without issue surviving, upon trust to pay her annual share unto the survivors equally; and in case there should be only one surviving daughter during the continuance of the trusts, then the whole of his estate and effects was to be paid to such surviving daughter, for her own absolute use. All three daughters were married, and died without ever having had children. The husband, as the representative of the survivor, P., who died in 1857, claimed the whole of the estate, but the representatives of M., who died in 1839, submitted that there was an intestacy:—Held, upon the whole language of the will, that the plaintiff, as the representative of the survivor, was entitled to the estate and effects absolutely. Pulbrook v. Bratt, 5 Jur. (N.S.) 330.

Gift to A. for life, and afterwards to seven named persons, equally, "the share of each who shall happen to die to be equally divided amongst the survivors, unless A. (one of them) should die, leaving children; in that case, I mean that her children should inherit the share of the parent." The seven all died before the tenant for life, A. being the survivor of them:—Held, first, that the seven took equally; secondly, that the children of A. took no more than one-seventh; and, thirdly, that the share of one of the seven, who predeceased the testatrix, was undisposed of. Cambridge v. Rous, 25 Beav. 409.

Accruing share held to go over with the original share, by force of the words "part share and interest." Douglas v. Andrews, 14 Beav. 347.

A testator gave his estate to one for life, with remainder to her children equally, with a gift over (in case of the death of any child in the life of the tenant for life) of the "part and parts, share and shares, and interest" of such child to his issue:—Held, that the gift over comprised the accrued as well as the original share. Ib.

The word "share" alone, when there is no gift over of the whole fund, in case of the failure of all the members of the class, is not sufficient to carry over an accrued share. Evans v. Evans, 25 Beav. 81.

Bequest to four equally, "and as each dies, his or her part shall be equally divided amongst the others that's living":—Held, that the accrued shares did not go over. Goodwin v. Finlayson, 25 Beav. 65.

A testator gave certain securities to trustees upon trust that a moiety should be set apart for his two sons, T. and C., share and share alike, to pay the interest to them respectively until T. succeeded to the F. estates, when the whole of the moiety should be transferred to C., until he attained twenty-seven, then to be paid to him for his absolute use. And in case either of his sons died unmarried his share should go to the survivor; and if both died unmarried under twenty-seven, then over. T. succeeded to the estates, and C. died unmarried, under twenty-seven:—Held, that the whole of the moiety belonged to T. Edmonstone v. Farley, 18 L. T. 847.

A testator in case of the death of any of his children without leaving issue, before payment of any part of reversionary legacies, directed such parts to be divided among the others and other of them, and in case of the death of a child leaving issue before such payment, he directed such parts to be divided among the children of such child:—Held, that the gift over applied to accrued as well as original shares. Chaston, In re, Chaston v. Seago, 50 L. J., Ch. 716; 18 Ch. D. 218; 45 L. T. 20; 29 W. R. 778.

Accrued Shares directed to go in same manner as Original Shares.]—Residuary bequest to the testator's nephews and nieces, per stirpes, equally for their lives, and after the death of either that share of the principal to be paid equally to and among the children of such of his said nephews and nieces as should die; and if any die without leaving any child or children, that share to go to and among the survivors or survivor of them in manner aforesaid. Upon the death of one without a child, that share goes to the survivors for their respective lives only, and will pass to their children respectively with the original shares; but upon the death of the last survivor without a child, his shares both original and accrued are undisposed of, notwithstanding another has left a child. Milsom v. Awdry, 5 Ves. 465; 5 R. R. 102.

A gift between grandchildren living at the testator's death, to be divided between them on the death of the survivor of three persons, with a gift over to the survivors, in case of the death of any before he should be entitled to receive his share, and to be paid at the same time, and in the same manner, as before mentioned, touching the original share. The gift over held to apply to the accruing as well as to the original share. Eyre v. Marsden, 2 Keen, 564; 7 L. J., Ch. 220. Affirmed, 4 Myl. & Cr. 231; 3 Jur. 450—C. A.

After a bequest for the benefit of children and their issue, it was declared that, if any should die without issue, his share should go among the survivors in the manner directed concerning the original shares:—Held, that the gift over comprised an accrued share. Goodman v. Goodman, 1 De G. & Sm. 695; 17 L. J., Ch. 103; 12 Jur. 258.

Devise of estates to testator's son and four daughters, "and their lawful issue respectively in tail general, with benefit of survivorship, to and amongst their issue respectively as tenants in common; but such issue, being sons, not to have vested interests until twenty-one, or daughters until twenty-one or marriage, with powers to trustees to advance, &c., to the extent of one-half the presumptive share of each child; and in case his son or daughters, or either of them, should die without leaving lawful issue, or with lawful issue, and such issue being a son should not attain twenty-one, or a daughter not attain twenty-one nor be married, then the share of the party so dying to be for the benefit of the survivors and their issue, in same manner as their original shares":—Held (confirming the certificate of the Court of Exchequer), that the son and daughters took estates for lives as tenants in common, with contingent remainders in their shares to their respective children, by purchase, as tenants in common in tail, with cross-remainders in tail between such children in each respective share, with cross-remainders over in the whole of each of such shares respectively (on failure of all the children of any one son or daughter and their issue), to the survivor or survivors of the testator's son or daughters, for life, remainder in tail general to the children of such surviving son or daughters respectively, in like manner as in the original share given to such son or daughters respectively; and that the son and daughters and their children respectively took corresponding interests in the leaseholds devised by way of executory bequest after the death of the testator's widow. Cursham v. Newland, 2 Beav. 143. And see S. C. at law, 2 Bing. (N.S.) 58; 2 Scott, 105; 5 L. J., C. P. 137; 4 M. & W. 101; 7 L. J., Ex. 212.

—— Consolidation of Shares.]—By a settlement trustees were directed to be possessed of 1,760*l.* in trust for a daughter, and her sons, at twenty-one, and daughters at twenty-one or marriage. Like trusts of two other sums of 1,760*l.* were declared for two other daughters and their children. Benefit of survivorship and accruer between the three daughters and their children, in default of children, was declared, with a declaration that the provisions applicable to the original shares should apply to such surviving or accrued shares; and it was provided, that if either of the three daughters should die without having or leaving any children who should attain a vested interest, she might dispose of any part of "her share" not exceeding one-third by deed or will. On the death of one of the three daughters, her share accrued among the survivors; one of the survivors then died without a child, and appointed by will "one-third of her share or shares, as well accrued as original, in the said sum of 5,280*l*." The trustees paid so much of the share of the testatrix as had accrued into court, under the Trustee Relief Act:—Held, that the previous provisions of the settlement consolidated the accrued with the original shares, and that the power to appoint overrode the whole share thus consolidated. Hutchinson's Settlement, In re, 5 De G. & Sm. 681; 17 Jur. 59.

Fund treated as a whole Fund.]—Testator leaves a residue in trust for four, with survivorship; two died: the survived share shall survive as well as the original shares, being the case of an aggregate fund. Worlidge v. Churchill, 3 Bro. C. C. 465. And see Langley v. Langley, 6 L. R., Ir. 277.

Where residuary real and personal estate was directed to be all converted into personalty, and to be applied in payment of debts, &c., and the residue to be divided among testator's children, J., M. and C., and grandchild R., the share of M. to be paid as soon after his decease as convenient, and the shares of C. and R. at the ages of twenty-two and twenty-one respectively; and in case any of his children should die before their shares became so vested as aforesaid, the shares to go to the survivors equally; and if but one, the whole to that one. J. and C. died in testator's lifetime, C. under twenty-two, and R. survived testator, but died under twenty-one:—Held, first, that "vested" must mean "payable," and that the original shares of the deceased children survived to the survivors; and, secondly, that "whole" meant the whole residue, and therefore that the accruing as well as original shares devolved to M. as sole survivor. Sillick v. Booth, 1 Y. & C. C. C. 121, 739; 6 Jur. 142.

A testator bequeaths the residue of his property to his nephews and nieces on their respectively attaining twenty-five, with a direction that his trustees shall, in the meantime, apply the profits to their maintenance; but in case of the death of any of them unmarried, and without issue, he gives the shares of those so dying unto the survivors equally, to be paid at the same time with their original shares; first a nephew, and then a niece die, under twenty-five, unmarried, and without issue; the whole residue is divisible among the survivors who attain the specified age, and the niece does not, upon the death of the nephew, acquire, under the clause of survivorship, a vested interest in her proportional part of his share. Barker v. Lea, Turn. & R. 413; 24 R. R. 85.

A testator gave a fund in trust for W. for life, and after her death in trust for the children of A., of B., and of C. who should survive the testator, "such children taking per stirpes, with benefit of survivorship among members of the same family":—Held, that the survivorship extended to accrued as well as original shares, so that the whole of each third share of the fund went to those objects of gift who survived the tenant for life. Crawhall's Trusts, In re, 8 De G. M. & G. 480; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 892.

The general rule is, that where a fund is given to a class of persons, with a direction that on the death of any of them their "shares" are to go over, the original and not the accruing shares will go over. But a testator may express a contrary intention, thus: where he shews an intention to keep the fund "aggregate" and unsevered, the rule does not apply. Douglas v. Andrews, 14 Beav. 347.

Where in the disposition of real estate amongst various persons in different shares, with clauses of accruer and gifts over in certain events, the intention is shewn of keeping the estate together in an aggregate mass, the word "share" will be construed to include accrued as well as original shares. Dutton v. Crowdy, 3 N. R. 234; 33 L. J., Ch. 241; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 28; 9 L. T. 630; 12 W. R. 222.

Real estate was devised to A. for life, with remainder to his children, as tenants in common in tail; and in case any of such children should die without issue, then, as to the share or shares of him, her or them so dying, to the eldest surviving son for the time being of A. in tail; and in case there should be no son, then to the others or other of the children of A., as tenants in common in tail; and if all such children but one should die without issue, or if there should be only one such child, then to such one or only child in tail; and in default of such issue, over:—Held, that the will shewing an intention to keep the estate in an aggregate mass, and to accumulate all the shares which failed upon the eldest surviving son, the word "share" must be construed to extend to accrued as well as to original shares. Ib.

Upon a bequest of equal legacies to testator's six children, to be paid on their respectively attaining twenty-one, or the marriage of the daughters; the interest to be paid in the meantime, and the principal as they might direct to their issue, but in case they should die without issue the principal to go among "the survivors" of his children in equal proportions; after directing his freehold estate to be sold and all the residue of his personal estate, he declared the trusts to be, equally to pay and divide the money therefrom, so soon as his youngest child should attain twenty-one, unto and amongst all his children, share and share alike, and in case of the death of any, leaving lawful issue, the share of the parent so dying to such issue:—Held, that the gift of the parent's share to such issue applied both to the original and accruing shares of the residue, but not to the specific legacies mentioned in the former clause. Leeming v. Sherratt, 2 Hare, 14; 11 L. J., Ch. 423; 6 Jur. 663.

A will contained this clause: "With regard to the residue of my estate my executors shall pay the interest in equal parts half-yearly to my sons F., E. and A., the share of a predecessor to be equally divided to the survivors or survivor." A. alone survived the testator:—Held, that A. was entitled to the capital of the residue. Tandy, In re, Tandy v. Tandy, 34 W. R. 748—C. A.

Accrued Shares whether subject to Limitations of Original Shares.]—A testator gave the proceeds of real and personal estate to trustees upon trust to divide the same into six equal shares, one share for each of the testator's children; the shares of sons to be paid to them as soon as conveniently might be after his decease, the shares of daughters to be vested interests immediately after his decease, and to be settled upon them and their children. The will contained a proviso that, if any of his sons should die without having any issue living at their deaths, the share intended for the son so dying should accrue for the benefit of the survivors of his said children, their executors, administrators and assigns, in equal shares. One of the sons died in the testator's lifetime :—Held, first, that the surviving children took his share as well as their original shares absolutely, and not as an interest defeasible on their death without issue ; secondly, that the accruing shares of the daughters belonged to them absolutely, and were not subject to the trusts for the settlement of the original shares. Ware v. Watson, 7 De G. M. & G. 248 ; 3 W. R. 496.

A father bequeathed a fund equally for the use of his five sons, Edward, John, Charles, Crofton and Henry, but directed that they were only to receive the interest on their legacies during their lives, and that after their respective deaths the interest was only to be applied for the use of their wife and children, if any, until the youngest of the children should reach twenty-one, and then the principal be divided among the survivors ; and in case of those not leaving a wife or children, their proportion was to go to the next elder brother down to the youngest. Charles having died unmarried, and Crofton, his next younger brother, having subsequently died leaving a wife and children :—Held, that the accrued share which Crofton took on the death of Charles remained his absolute property. Fitzgerald v. Fitzgerald, Ir. R. 7 Eq. 436.

Testator gave a sum of stock to his wife for life, and, after her death, to his sons and daughters, and he directed the interest of his daughter's share to be paid to her for her separate use for life, and, at her decease, the capital to be divided amongst such children as she should have living at his decease, the shares of the sons to be paid at twenty-one, and the daughters at twenty-one or marriage, provided their mother was then dead, otherwise her children's shares were not to be paid to them until her decease ; her share was to be equally divided amongst such of his sons as should be then living, and if any of his said sons and daughters should die before his wife, and without leaving issue, their shares were to be divided amongst his other children :—Held, that the daughter's children living at the testator's death took absolute vested interests at twenty-one, though their mother was still living ; and that her interest in the share of one of the testator's sons, who died in the lifetime of his widow, was not subject to the same trusts as her original share, but vested in her absolutely. Gibbons v. Langdon, 6 Sim. 260.

A testator bequeathed the residue of his personal estate to trustees in trust for his daughter, and after her decease, for all and every the child or children of his daughter, share and share alike, when they should respectively attain twenty-one, with maintenance in the meantime ; and in case any of the said children should die under twenty-one, and have one or more child or children who should survive the testator's daughter, and live to attain twenty-one, such child or children to be entitled to his or their parent's share ; provided, also, that in case any child or children of his daughter should die before attaining twenty-one the share or shares of such child or children should go to the survivor or survivors, and the issue of any deceased child or children who should marry and die under twenty-one to be equally divided between them if more than one, the issue of any deceased child or children to stand in the place of the parent or parents ; with a limitation over, provided there should be no child of his daughter, or there being any such, no one of them should live to attain twenty-one, nor leave any issue who should live to attain that age :—Held, that the limitation over was intended to take effect only on failure of grandchildren who should survive the testator's daughter, and not live to attain twenty-one, and was therefore not too remote. Trickey v. Trickey, 3 Myl. & K. 560.

A testator gave his real and personal estate to A., B. and C., as tenants in common. By a codicil he declared that if any of the devisees should die in his lifetime, his estate and interest should "go to the survivors or survivor of them, and the heirs, executors, administrators and assigns of such survivor." A. died in the testator's lifetime :—Held, that B. and C. took as joint tenants the share intended for A. Leigh v. Mosley, 14 Beav. 609. And see Jones v. Hall, ante, col. 957.

A., by will, directed as to his general residue, to pay and divide same, with the accumulations from the time of the decease of his mother (who had a life interest therein), between and amongst a brother and four sisters, naming them, "and he did further will and direct that in case his brother, or any of his sisters, should depart this life before his or her share or shares of such residue should become payable, without leaving lawful issue him or her surviving, that in such case the share or shares of him or her so dying should be paid to the survivors or survivor in equal shares," with directions for maintenance and education of infant children of his brother and sisters so dying :—Held, that the original and accruing shares of any of the legatees so dying without issue went to the survivors in equal shares. Spilsbury v. Kent, 5 L. T. 343.

Held, also, that the children of either of the legatees took vested interests in the parent's share or shares on the death of such parent. Ib.

Three annuities for a term of years bequeathed in trust for three children, A., B. and C. respectively for life ; in case of the death of either leaving any child or children, his or her annuity to be equally divided between such child or children, share and share alike ; in case of the death of either without issue, his or her annuity to go to the survivor or survivors of them equally, share and share alike, with a limitation over in case of the deaths of all without issue as aforesaid ; A. died without issue ; A.'s annuity went to B. and C., subject to the contingent limitation over ; and upon B.'s death, leaving children, belongs in moieties absolutely to his administrator and C. Vandergucht v. Blake, 2 Ves. 553.

A father gave his residuary estate upon trust for his three daughters for life, and if any of his daughters should die leaving issue, a share proportioned to the number of his daughters was to go to the issue of such daughter, and if only one of such daughters should die leaving issue the whole to such issue, and if all his daughters should die without issue then to his sisters. He had three daughters. One died leaving four children, one of whom died leaving two children born after their grandmother's death ; afterwards another of his daughters died a spinster :—Held, that there were implied cross limitations, so that the surviving daughter had a life interest in half the share of the daughter so last dying. Ridge, In re, 41 L. J., Ch. 787 ; L. R. 7 Ch. 665 ; 27 L. T. 141 ; 20 W. R. 878.

Held, also, that the gift to issue was to the issue living at the death of the daughter, and therefore the three survivors of the four children and the representative of the dead one were entitled to the second moiety, and would, if the third daughter of the testator died without issue, become entitled to the whole. Ib.

Gift by testator to his daughters, "the share or shares of such daughters to be for their sole and separate use," followed by a contingent gift over to the survivors :—Held, that the separate use attached to the accrued as well as the original shares. Jarman's Trusts, In re, L. R. 1 Eq. 71.

And see Eyre v. Marsden, supra, col. 960 ; Cursham v. Newland, supra, col. 960 ; Macgregor v. Macgregor, 2 Coll. C. C. 192 ; Walker v. Main, post, col. 1052.

d. Words of Survivorship, to what Period Referable.

Principles.]—Under a bequest over, after an interest for life by words importing both a joint interest and a tenancy in common as to three, "or the survivor, share and share alike," the period to which the survivorship relates depends not on any technical words, but on the apparent intention collected from the particular disposition, or the general context. Newton v. Ayscough, 19 Ves. 534.

In construing limitations to a parent for life, and afterwards to his children, with a provision relating to survivorship annexed, whether occurring in wills or settlements, the rule for determining both the class who are to take, and the contingency to which the survivorship refers, is to lean to that construction which will include as many objects of the gift as possible, consistently with the declared purpose of the author of the instrument. Bouverie v. Bouverie, 2 Ph. 349 ; 16 L. J., Ch. 411 ; 11 Jur. 661. Reversing the judgment below.

Words of survivorship are to be referred to the period of division and enjoyment, unless the contrary intent be especially shewn. Cripps v. Wolcott, 4 Madd. 11 ; 20 R. R. 268.

A testator gave and bequeathed three legacies of 3,000*l.* each to his three brothers, in the words following : "I leave and bequeath to my brother James 3,000*l.*, in trust to his surviving child or children ; to my brother Robert W., 3,000*l.*, in trust to his surviving child or children ; failing issue, I leave the 3,000*l.* to my brother William W., in trust to his surviving child or children ; failing such issue I leave the 3,000*l.* to my brother Daniel O. W., in trust to his surviving child or children ; failing issue, I leave the 3,000*l.* to the children of my brother James W." Similar legacies of 3,000*l.* each were given to the brothers Robert and Daniel, with the same phraseology as to "failing of issue, &c." :—Held, that the word "surviving" in the bequest meant surviving at the deaths of the respective fathers, and that the brothers of testator took life interests in these legacies. Blount v. Wheble, 21 L. T. 259.

A., by will, in 1841, gave the residue of his estate and effects, subject to a life interest vested in his wife, to his six grandnephews and nieces equally, share and share alike, and to their respective heirs or assigns, "declaring that if any of his residuary legatees shall die without leaving lawful issue before his or her share vest in the party or parties so deceasing, the same shall belong to and be divided equally, share and share alike, among the survivors of his grandnephews and grandnieces equally" :—Held, that the word "vest" did not alter the general rule, but that "survivors" meant the survivors at the death of the tenant for life. Young v. Robertson, 8 Jur. (N.S.) 825. S. C., nom. Richardson v. Robertson, 6 L. T. 75.

It is a settled rule of construction that words of survivorship in a will should be referred to the period appointed by that will for the payment or distribution of the subject-matter of the gift. Ib.

The word "vest" means primâ facie "come into possession," and not "accrue in point of interest." Ib.

If a testator gives a sum of money, or the residue of his estate, to be paid or distributed among a number of persons, and refers to the contingency of any one or more of them dying, and then gives the estate or the money to the survivor, the period of distribution is the period of the death of the testator ; and accordingly the event of the death upon which that contingency is to take place is referable to the interval of time between the date of the will and the death of the testator, and the words are construed to provide for the event of the death of any one of the legatees during the lifetime of the testator. But where a testator gives a life estate in a sum of money, or the residue of his estate, and at the expiration of that life estate directs the money to be paid or the residue to be divided among a number of objects, and then refers to the possibility of some one or more of those persons dying, without specifying the time, and directs, in that event, the payment to be made or the distribution to be made among the survivors, it is understood and regarded by the law that he means the contingency to extend over the whole period of time that must elapse before the payment is made or the distribution takes place ; and in such case the survivors are to be ascertained in like manner by a reference to the period of payment or of distribution, namely, the expiration of the life estate. Ib.

A testator bequeathed to his executors the sum of 3,000*l.* in trust, to apply the interest thereof for the support and maintenance of his son W. during his life, and on the death of his said son W. then the testator bequeathed the said sum to be divided between his sons I. and S. and his daughter S., share and share alike, or to the survivors or survivor of them attaining the age of twenty-one years. All the children attained to age of twenty-one years. The daughter alone survived her brother W. :—Held, that the period of survivorship was the death of the tenant for life, and that the daughter was entitled to the entire fund. Shaw v. Shaw, 25 L. R., Ir. 30.

A testator left five sons, and by his will he gave a specified portion of his real estate and an equal share of the residue to each, so that each son took for life with remainder to his children, if more than one, as tenants in common in tail, with cross-remainders between them. Then followed this clause : "I do hereby declare that, in case any or either of my said five sons shall depart this life without leaving any child or children him or them surviving, then I devise the share or shares of such son or sons unto and equally between the survivors or survivor of them my said sons and their respective heirs as tenants in common in tail." There was no gift over in the event of all the sons dying without issue. W., the youngest son, survived all his brothers, and died without issue. Three of the other sons had left children. The eldest son died without issue and intestate:—Held, that the survivorship indicated in the accruer clause was survivorship with reference to the person on whose death the share was to go over, and that W.'s share was not disposed of. King v. Frost, 15 App. Cas. 548; 63 L. T. 422—P. C.

A testator by his will bequeathed to his wife for life so much of the income of railway shares as would amount to 200*l.* per annum, and to his children A. and B. during the life of his wife, as much more of the income as would produce 100*l.* per annum; and after the death of his wife, bequeathed the said annual sums of 200*l.* and 100*l.* per annum, derivable from the said shares, to and amongst his three children, A., B. and C., and their executors and administrators, in equal shares, with benefit of survivorship between them. All three children survived the testator, but predeceased the widow. C. survived A. and B.:—Held, that A., B. and C. took vested interests, liable to be divested, as to each, in the event (which did not happen) of his or her dying before their mother, leaving others or other of them who should survive the mother, and that the capital representing the annual sums of 200*l.* and 100*l.* per annum belonged, in equal shares, to the personal representatives of A., B. and C. Wiley v. Chanteperdrix, [1894] 1 Ir. R. 209.

Immediate Gift, but not Expressly Contingent.]—Bequest to A. and B. in equal moieties, but, in the event of the death of either, the whole to the survivor; and on the demise of either, should they have no children, then over:—Held, that the survivorship was confined to death in testator's lifetime. Clarke v. Lubbock, 1 Y. & C. C. C. 492; 6 Jur. 548.

A testator gave a leasehold house, which was let for twenty-eight years, to trustees to pay the rents and profits for the benefit of his five children, whom he named, or the survivors or survivor of them, in equal shares and proportions, share and share alike:—Held, that the words "survivors or survivor" referred to the death of any of them in his lifetime; that the words "share and share alike" referred to those children who should survive him, and created a tenancy in common; and that the interests were vested in the children on the death of the testator. Ashford v. Haines, 21 L. J., Ch. 496.

Bequest to the children of A. who should be living at the testator's decease, equally, with survivorship in case of death without leaving issue; if leaving issue, the issue to have the parent's share. The survivorship cannot be restrained to the period of the testator's death, as upon the construction the clause would be repugnant. Shergold v. Boone, 13 Ves. 370; 9 R. R. 195.

Bequest of personal estate in equal shares "to each and every of my children and their issue, whether sons or daughters, with benefit of survivorship":—Held, that the period of survivorship was the death of the testator. Caulfield v. Giles, 12 Ir. Eq. R. 427.

Bequest to four persons in equal shares; and in case of the death of any one in the lifetime of the other or others, the share or shares of him or them so dying to go to the survivor or survivors:—Held, that the survivorship referred to the period of distribution, that is, the testator's death; and that consequently, on the death of one of the four legatees in the testator's life, there was not a lapse. Howard v. Howard, 21 Beav. 550.

By a will property was given to trustees, to apply the rents, interest and proceeds for the maintenance of the testator's son Edward for his life, and not to be paid to any person under an assignment by or execution against the son; and after the decease of the son, for the two daughters of the testator absolutely. By a codicil it was declared, that, in case of assignment by Edward, the trustees should stand possessed of the property upon trust for the daughters of the testator, in the same manner and form as declared by his will in the event of the death of Edward. By another codicil the testator gave 600*l.* stock to Edward, in addition to what he had left him by his will, subject to the same controlling powers and restrictions as were appointed by the will; and he gave a like sum to his son William, subject to the like control, "and to the survivor of them, and in the event of both their deaths" for the benefit of the said daughter:—Held, that the true construction of the second codicil was that, in the event of the death of either of the legatees, both the legacies of stock should go to the survivor, and not that on the death of either his legacy should go to the survivor, which would cut down an absolute gift into a life interest. That, although in one codicil the words "in the event of the death of Edward" meant upon the death of Edward, it did not follow that the words in another codicil "in the event of both their deaths" meant upon both their deaths; for one expression was applied to a life interest and the other to a capital sum. That the period of survivorship must be referred to the period of distribution, namely, the death of the testator. That therefore Edward, having survived the testator, took the legacy of stock absolutely. More's Trust, In re, 10 Hare, 171.

Future Gift not Expressly Contingent—No Prior Estate.]—A. B. bequeathed 1,000*l.* to such persons, and in such proportions, as his wife should by deed or will appoint; and in default of appointment he bequeathed the 1,000*l.* unto, and to be equally divided between her surviving brothers and sisters. The wife, by her will, which was held not to be an exercise of the power, not referring at all to her husband, or to his will, or to the power, bequeathed many legacies, to the exact amount of 1,000*l.*, and gave her clothes (she having no other property) to one of her sisters. When A. B. made his will, one brother of his wife had died. When A. B. died, there were two brothers and three sisters of his wife. When the wife died, there were no brothers and only two sisters living:—Held, that, under the words "surviving brothers and sisters" of the wife, the two sisters of the wife living at her death were entitled to the 1,000*l.* in equal moieties. Davies v. Thorns, 3 De G. & Sm. 347; 18 L. J., Ch. 212; 13 Jur. 383.

Testator gave a portion of his personal estate to the seven children of his son and his wife, naming them, "together with every other child hereafter to be born of the said (wife) during the life of the said (husband), or within nine months after his decease, in equal shares, with benefit of survivorship." He then directed their maintenance with the dividends until the youngest child should attain thirty; then upon trust for them respectively and the survivors and survivor of them in equal shares, with power to the trustees to make such distribution sooner if they think fit, provided the youngest child should have attained twenty-one:—Held, that the period of division was the death of the husband, or the short period limited after his death; that the clause of maintenance till thirty, and proposing payment till then, did not disturb the previous vesting in the children surviving at the death of the husband, so as to introduce remoteness; and that consequently one child having died living the father, her share went over to those who should be surviving at his death. Hodson v. Micklethwaite, 2 Drew. 294; 2 Eq. R. 1157; 23 L. J., Ch. 719; 2 W. R. 440.

Future Gift, not expressly Contingent, after Prior Interest—Death of Testator.]—J. devised lands to his son M., and other lands to his son J., and in case both of them should die unmarried, and without lawful issue, then his three daughters were to have the lands as tenants in common, and not as joint tenants. Both the sons died unmarried, and without issue; and two of the daughters died in the lifetime of the surviving son, leaving issue:—Held, that the three daughters had such a contingent interest vested in them upon their father's death as was transmissible to their representatives, and that the surviving daughter was not entitled to the whole. Wilson v. Bayly, 3 Bro. P. C. 195.

A testator gave to his wife an annuity, and 100*l.* a year for each of his three children during their minority, and from and after the decease or marriage of his wife, then the 300*l.* to be divided amongst his said children; and subject thereto, he bequeathed his leasehold and personalty unto three children, and the survivors and survivor of them. One died under twenty-one:—Held, that he took a vested interest at the death of the testator. Bass v. Russell, Tam. 18; 7 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 177.

On a bequest of stock to the wife for life, and afterwards a moiety to be received and divided equally amongst the testator's brothers and sisters, and their issue:—Held, that the brothers and sisters living at the testator's death took vested interests, liable to be divested by their dying, leaving issue, before the period of division, and that the issue took by substitution. Shailer v. Groves, 6 Hare, 162. But see 16 L. J., Ch. 367; 11 Jur. 485.

W. S. by his will directed the interest of the residue of his estate to be paid to his children during their respective lives; and, after their decease, to be divided equally between all his surviving grandchildren who should be then living, share and share alike, until the youngest should attain twenty-one years, when he directed the whole to be turned into money, and to be divided equally between all such of his said grandchildren, and the children and child of any such grandchild as might then be dead leaving lawful issue, such children or child to take only his or their parent's share; and if there should be only one such grandchild who might live to attain the age of twenty-one, then upon trust for such grandchild, his or her heirs, executors, &c.:—Held, that the bequest was confined to the children of the grandchildren who should be living at the death of all the testator's children; and that the children of a grandchild who died in the lifetime of some of the testator's children did not take any interest under his will. Quære, if the bequest was not void for remoteness. Smith v. Farr, 3 Y. & C. 328; 8 L. J., Ex. Eq. 46.

Gift by a testator of his real and personal estate to his wife for her life, and the residue to be equally divided between her brothers and sisters, and, in case any of them should be dead at the time of her decease leaving issue, such issue to stand in their parent's place:—Held, that the brothers and sisters who survived the testator, and afterwards died without issue in the lifetime of the wife, were entitled to shares in the residue. Gray v. Garman, 2 Hare, 268; 12 L. J., Ch. 259; 7 Jur. 275.

Testator gave 5,000*l.* stock to his sister for life; and at her decease the stock was to be equally divided among the testator's nieces, E. T., M. R. R., F. R. B., M. A. G. R., and A. L. R., or the survivors of them; and, after bequeathing another legacy, the testator directed that the remainder of his property should be divided into two equal shares, of which he gave one to his niece M. R. R., and the other between his nieces E. T. and F. R. B. The will then contained the following clause: "In case my niece E. T. should not survive me, her child or children are to inherit what I have bequeathed to her, and the same of any other of my nieces who may marry and leave children":—Held, that the words of survivorship occurring in the gift of the 5,000*l.* stock to the testator's nieces were to be referred to the testator's death. Rogers v. Towsey, 9 Jur. 575.

Gift for life followed by a gift to the surviving children of B. and C., "or their heirs and assigns":—Held, that Cripps v. Wolcott (supra, col. 965) did not apply, and that the period of survivorship was the death of the testator. Hopkins, In re, 2 H. & M. 411.

Held, also, that the "heirs and assigns" could not be read next of kin, and that all who survived the testator took vested interests. Ib.

Survivorship as to a class, in a gift after the death of the tenant for life, referred to the death of the testator, and not to the death of the tenant for life. Evans v. Evans, 25 Beav. 81.

Gift to A. for life, and after her decease to "the surviving children of B. and C., except the youngest son of B.," who was to have 30*l.* to his share more than the other. The will proceeded: "Should either of these children die leaving no issue, his or her share to be then equally divided amongst the survivors":—Held, that the children of B. and C. took vested interests at the death of the testator in remainder expectant on the decease of A., with a gift to the survivors in the event of any one dying without issue in that interval. Ib.

A testator gave his residuary estate upon trust to pay to A. an annuity during her life, and to accumulate the surplus income till the expiration of six months after A.'s death, and then to divide the residue and accumulations into as many shares as there should be children "living" of A. and of B. who should have lived to attain twenty-one, or in case of any of them being dead under that age who should have left issue, and pay and apply one share to each of the children of A. and B. that should have lived to attain twenty-one, and to their respective executors, administrators, and assigns, and one share to the issue of each child who should have died under that age leaving lawful issue:—Held, that the word "living" was not referable to the period of distribution, but to that of the testator's death, so that each child on attaining twenty-one took a vested interest absolutely. Kidd v. North, 3 De G. M. & G. 947.

A gift of residuary estate to A., and such of the children of B. as should be living at the death of C., their respective heirs, executors, &c., in equal shares as tenants in common, and not as joint tenants; but if any such children should die under twenty-one, their shares to be in trust for the survivors and other or others of them (the said children of B. and the said A.) living at the decease of C., and his and their respective heirs, executors, &c., in equal shares, as tenants in common, and not as joint tenants, so and in such manner that the children of B. attaining twenty-one, and surviving C. and the said A., in case A. survive C., should take equally her capital:—Held, that A. surviving the testator, and dying in the lifetime of C., took nevertheless, with the children of B. who survived C., a vested share in the residuary estate. Falkner v. Grace, 9 Hare, 282.

A testator devised and bequeathed his residuary estate in trust for his widow for life, and at her death to sell and pay, assign, or transfer the moneys arising therefrom to the testator's four children by name, equally to be divided between them, share and share alike, "or equally to divide the aforesaid effects between the survivors of" his children, immediately after his wife's decease, in case the youngest of the said children for the time being should then have attained twenty-one years; but if the youngest should not then have attained twenty-one years, the testator directed the trustees to receive the annual interest, produce, profits, and proceeds of the trust moneys, and pay and apply so much of the interest as should arise from the equal share of each child in the maintenance and advancement of each such child as the trustees should deem expedient:—Held, that there was a clear gift to the children equally, that the provision as to survivors was not sufficiently clear to control it, and that consequently all the children took vested interests, which were not divested by their dying in the lifetime of the widow. Blackmore v. Snee, 1 De G. & J. 455.

S. gave all his hereditaments to his wife for life, or until her second marriage, and after her decease or marriage to trustees to sell and dispose thereof, and the money to arise therefrom, he directed, should be considered as part of his personal estate. After bequeathing legacies to his sons, he gave to his three daughters, S., E., and C., 600*l*. each; and after directing that his wife should be permitted to carry on the farming business during her life or widowhood, the testator directed that if she should marry again, his trustees should sell his effects, pay her a certain sum out of the produce, and the residue thereof unto and amongst all his children living at his decease (except A.), in equal shares and proportions, with benefit of survivorship and accruer among them in the event of the death of any one of them without issue. But in case C. S. should continue his widow, then he directed his effects to be sold at her death, and gave the produce thereof amongst all his children living at his decease (except A.), in equal shares and proportions, with benefit of survivorship and accruer among them. All the residue of his personal estate not disposed of he gave unto and amongst all his children (except A.), in equal shares and proportions, with the usual benefit of survivorship and accruer among them. And as to the legacies given to his daughters, S., E., and C., he directed that, in case any one of them should die under twenty-one without having been married, the legacy of such one should be equally divided amongst all his surviving children living at his decease (except A.), in equal shares and proportions, with benefit of survivorship and accruer among them. C. S. survived her co-executors, and died a widow and intestate in 1854. The testator left eight children surviving, including A. All attained the age of twenty-one, and his daughters, S., E., and C., married. E. died in 1836, leaving her husband surviving, who subsequently married again, and died in 1854. The plaintiff, as the executor of this husband, claimed his first wife's share of the testator's estate and residue. On bill for the administration of the estate, the court held that the three daughters took absolute interests in the property. Gooch v. Slater, 3 Jur. (N.S.) 881.

—— Death of Testator where Tenant for Life predeceases him.]—A testatrix bequeathed her property to her mother for life, and at her decease gave a legacy of 200*l*. to A., directing that then the residue should be equally divided between her surviving brothers and sisters:—Held, that the word "surviving" referred to the period of distribution, and the mother having died before the testatrix, that the brothers and sisters living at the death of the testatrix were entitled to the benefit of the gift, and that there was in the events which happened no bequest to the brothers and sisters who died before the testatrix. Spurrell v. Spurrell, 11 Hare, 54; 1 Eq. R. 192; 22 L. J., Ch. 1076; 17 Jur. 755; 1 W. R. 322.

Where there is a gift to several persons, or the survivors of them, after the determination of previous life estates, the period of distribution of the fund is the period of ascertaining the persons in whom the fund vests. Ib.

—— Period of Division.]—Legacy after limitations for life, and in default of children to be paid equally between two persons, or the whole to the survivor of them:—Held, not vested till the time of division. Daniell v. Daniell, 6 Ves. 297; 5 R. R. 308.

Gift of real and personal estate, after a life interest to the testator's widow, to trustees to be converted into money, and divided among several persons named, and the survivor or survivors of them. Those only are entitled who survived the widow. Hoghton v. Whitgreave, 1 J. & W. 146; 20 R. R. 259.

A testator bequeathed the residue of his personal estate to his widow in trust, to apply the interest and proceeds for her own use, and after her decease he gave what should be remaining of such residuary moneys unto and equally amongst all the daughters of T. D. and their issue, with benefit of survivorship and accruer. T. D. had three daughters living at the testator's death. One of them died without issue in the lifetime of the testator's widow. The two others survived the widow, and had issue living at her death:—Held, that the parties only in existence at the time when the property to be taken was to be ascertained were entitled, and that the two surviving daughters at the widow's death were absolutely entitled. Gibbs v. Tait, 8 Sim. 132; 5 L. J., Ch. 344.

Upon a bequest to one for life, with remainder to two others, with clause of survivorship between the latter, "if one or the other should die":—Held, that the survivorship had reference to the death of the tenant for life, and that one of the remaindermen having survived the testator, but predeceased the tenant for life, the surviving remainderman was entitled by survivorship. Whitton v. Field, 9 Beav. 368.

Testator bequeathed his residuary estate to his wife for life, after her death to his son and daughter, and their respective issue, with benefit of survivorship unto and between his said children or their issue respectively:—Held, that the survivorship was to take place only in the event of death and failure of issue of the son or daughter happening during the lifetime of the testator's widow, and that upon her death the son and daughter were absolutely entitled. Turner v. Capel, 9 Sim. 158.

Devise and bequest of real and personal estate to trustees upon trust (subject to certain legacies and annuities) for A. for life, and after his decease upon trust to convey, assure, and pay the whole of the said real and personal estate to and amongst the children of A. and the issue of such children, but in case A. should die without issue, then to pay and distribute the same equally amongst all and every the children of B. and C. and the survivors of them; but in case any such children should be then dead leaving issue of his, her, or their body or bodies lawfully begotten, then such issue to have as well such original share or shares as the father or mother of such issue so dying would have been entitled to if then living, as also such other share or shares thereof as the father or mother of such issue so dying might have been entitled to by survivorship or otherwise. A. survived the testator, and died without issue:—Held, that the period of the survivorship of the children of B. and C. is not to be referred to the time of the death of the testator, but to that of the death of A., being the period of distribution; and that the children of B. and C. living at the date of the will, and those born after that date and before the death of A., were entitled to the real and personal estate, with survivorship between them in case of the death of any such children without issue before the death of A., the children of such of the said children as died before A., leaving issue, being substituted for the original legatees. Buckle v. Fawcett, 4 Hare, 536; 9 Jur. 891.

Testator bequeathed his personal estate to his wife for life, and after her death to a trustee in trust to pay the rents and profits of his personal estate for and towards the support and maintenance of his six nephews and nieces, and in case of the death of any of them for the maintenance and support of the survivors. All the nephews and nieces survived both the testator and his widow. One of the nieces then died:—Held, that her share did not become undisposed of, but that she by surviving the testator's widow had become absolutely entitled to it. Clarke v. Gould, 7 Sim. 197.

A testator, after various bequests, gave to his wife, for her life only, all his remaining estates, and also gave her all his capital in trade, with three-quarters of the profits arising therefrom, for her life, but, nevertheless, in trust at his death for his then surviving children, share and share alike, independent of the rental of his said estates, which he gave and bequeathed to his surviving female children to be paid to them as he directed. The testator then proceeded thus: "On the decease of any of these children, should they die without issue lawfully begotten, that share to fall to the rest, and so on to the last female child; but should they marry and have children, then their share to go to the said child or children, and from my last female child to the males of my body lawfully begotten, with the same restrictions as before expressed, and to the heirs and assigns of the last of them." One of the testator's daughters, after his death, married, and died in the lifetime of his widow, leaving children:—Held, that such children did not take any interest under the will, the word "surviving" having reference to testator's widow's death, and not his own. Wordsworth v. Wood, 1 H. L. Cas. 129; 11 Jur. 593. Affirming 4 Myl. & Cr. 641; 9 L. J., Ch. 29.

Where there is a gift to one for life, and after her decease to be equally divided between three persons and the survivors of them, it is a gift vested subject to be divested, depending upon a special contingency, which not occurring, it was not vested; and therefore, two out of the three persons dying in the lifetime of tenant for life, that one who survived her took the whole. Bowyer v. Currall, 2 W. R. 328.

A testatrix by her will gave thus: "to my sister C. N.'s surviving children 30*l.* each"; she then gave to C. N. thus: "the interest of my funded property for and during her natural life, and after her decease such property to be equally divided between her surviving children":—Held, that though on the construction of the word "surviving" in the first clause the period of vesting and distribution was referable to the death of the testatrix, yet that the period of vesting in the last clause was to be referred to the death of C. N., and that those children who survived C. N. were entitled. Neathway v. Reed, 3 De G. M. & G. 18; 22 L. J., Ch. 809; 17 Jur. 169.

A testatrix made a gift to her daughter C. S. to be paid to her weekly for "her natural life, and from and immediately after her decease" she directed the same to be divided among "her surviving children":—Held, that the remainder was to the children who survived C. S. Pritchard's Trusts, In re, 3 Drew. 163.

A testator gave some property to his wife for life, and proceeded thus: "At the decease of my wife, I leave the last-named sum to be equally divided between the families of my two brothers, viz., one-half to the widow and children of my deceased brother J. B., the widow, if surviving, to have an equal share with the children":—Held, that the survivorship had relation to the death of the tenant for life, and not of the testator; and, secondly, that the children took in joint tenancy. Hesketh v. Mugennis, 27 Beav. 395.

A testator gave all his real and personal property to his wife for life, and he gave a sum of stock to his five cousins by name, or the survivors of them, to be equally divided between them, and to be paid as soon as possible after the death of his wife:—Held, that, following the rule in Cripps v. Wolcott (supra, col. 965), the survivorship must be referred to the death of the testator's wife, so that one of the cousins who survived the testator, and died in the lifetime of his widow, took nothing. Hearn v. Baker, 2 Kay & J. 383.

Held, also, that "survivors" must be construed to include a sole survivor, so that where only one of the legatees survived the widow such survivor took all the stock. Ib.

A testator bequeathed a fund in trust for his sister A. for life, and after her death to be divided between the children of his sisters, B., C., and D., who should survive the testator, such children taking per stirpes "with benefit of survivorship among members of the same family":—Held, that the latter words of themselves meant survivorship at the death of the tenant for life, and could not be otherwise interpreted by comparison with other bequests in the same will, shewing an intention that those bequests should not go over if the legatee had children. Crawhall's Trusts, In re, 8 De G. M. & G. 480; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 892.

A testator gave certain dividends to his son, and at his death to his (the testator's) surviving daughters and their lawful offspring. The testator left his son and also four daughters him surviving. The will was attested by two of the daughters, and of these two one died in the son's lifetime, and the other survived the son:—Held, that the period for ascertaining the survivorship was the death of the son; that the word "offspring" meant "issue"; and that therefore the daughters took absolutely as joint tenants. Young v. Davies, 2 Dr. & Sm. 167; 32 L. J., Ch. 372; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 399; 11 W. R. 452.

A legacy to A. for life, and at her death to be equally divided between her two sons (who were named), or given to the survivor of them; the survivorship has reference to the death of the tenant for life. Naylor v. Robson, 34 Beav. 571.

A testator bequeathed a house, described as a copyhold, to his wife for life, "and at her death to be disposed of for the benefit of his surviving children, share and share alike." The house was, in fact, leasehold:—Held, that only those children who survived the widow were entitled to share in the proceeds of the house. Thompson v. Thompson, 29 Beav. 654; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 1263; 9 W. R. 728. And see Cripps v. Wolcott, supra, col. 965.

—— Period of Division where several Life Interests.]—A testatrix bequeathed stock to T. P. and J. S. for their lives, and from and after their decease to the surviving children of the said T. P. and J. S., share and share alike:—Held, that the children living at the death of the survivor of T. P. and J. S. were alone entitled, and that they took per capita, and not per stirpes. Stevenson v. Gullan, 18 Beav. 590.

Devise to trustees in trust to pay the yearly produce to A. and B. in equal shares for life, with survivorship in case of the death of either "without issue"; but if either should die "leaving issue," then her part to be paid to her "children" equally; and after the death of both A. and B., to convey "to the heirs of the body" of A. and B., share and share alike, or to the survivors, and if but one, then to such "only child." There was a gift over if A. and B. should die "without issue":—Held, the children took as purchasers, and that a child of A. which survived its parent but died in the lifetime of B. was entitled to a share. Gummoe v. Howes, 23 Beav. 184; 26 L. J., Ch. 323; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 176; 5 W. R. 219.

Bequest to A., and at his death (with certain exceptions) to B., and at her decease to be divided amongst four named persons, "or as many of them as may be living":—Held, that those only took who survived both A. and B. Knight v. Poole, 32 Beav. 548.

Devise of residue to the testator's wife for life, then to his daughter A., upon her decease equally between his surviving brothers and sisters and those of his wife. The wife and daughter survived the testator, but the daughter predeceased the widow. Some of the brothers and sisters predeceased the daughter; the others survived her, but predeceased the widow:—Held, that the words "surviving brothers and sisters" referred to those who should survive the last living tenant for life, and that, in the events that happened, there was an intestacy. Howard v. Collins, L. R. 5 Eq. 349.

The period for ascertaining the survivorship among a class of legatees is the time for the distribution of their legacy, unless the testator has himself otherwise directed. Drakeford v. Drakeford, 33 Beav. 43; 9 L. T. 10; 11 W. R. 977.

Where a testator left all his unfunded property in cash, bills, jewels, plate, furniture, &c., to his widow, and bequeathed the interest on his funded property to his widow for life, and then to H. for his life, at whose death the principal was to be equally divided amongst H.'s surviving legitimate children and the testator's niece and grand-daughter, R., H. died in the lifetime of the widow; R. died in the lifetime of the testator, and two of the surviving children of H. died in the lifetime of the testator's widow:—Held, that the survivorship had reference to the death of the brother only. Ib.

Bequest of successive estates for life in residuary personal estate to the widow and sister of the testator, and after the death of the sister a direction to divide the residue among the testator's surviving brothers and sister and their children. The widow survived the sister and brothers of the testator. Two of the brothers left issue:—Held, that the class of persons to take was to be ascertained at the death of the widow, and that they took per capita. Fox, In re, 35 Beav. 163; 6 N. R. 374; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 735; 13 W. R. 1013. And see Beckwith v. Beckwith, ante, col. 955.

After two successive life estates, a testator devised freehold houses (which were sub-demised) to "J. S. and W. S., or the survivor of them, the N. Street front to go to J. S., the H. Street front to W. S., and an equal portion of the back-ground to go to each tenement after the lapse of the present lease, whatever time the holding becomes the property of J. S. and W. S., provided the lease now in existence has not terminated; the rent to be divided equally between them, after paying the chief rent, until the fall of said lease":—Held, that the survivorship was to be referred to the determination of the tenancies for life, and therefore J. S., who had then survived W. S., was entitled to the houses. Belfast Town Council, In re, Sayers, Ex parte, 13 L. R., Ir. 169.

—— Rule in Case of Gifts of Real Estate.]—The word "survivor" in gifts of personal estate may be taken as referring to the period of distribution. It is not equally settled that with regard to real estate it applies to the determination of the prior limitation. Taaffe v. Conmee, 10 H. L. Cas. 64; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 919; 6 L. T. 666.

The benefit of survivorship may be given to those who have life interests as tenants in common. Ib.

In gifts of personalty the word "survivor" is considered as referring to the period of distribution; and if the same rule were applicable in respect of real estate, it would be referred to the determination of the prior limitations; but the law in respect of real estate is unsettled. Ib.

A testator gave real estate to his wife for life, and directed that after her death it should be divided, share and share alike, amongst twelve persons mentioned by name "or the survivors of them." All those persons survived the testator, but some of them died before the widow:—Held, that the rule laid down in Cripps v. Wolcott (supra, col. 965), applies to real as well as personal estate, and that the estate belonged to such of the twelve persons as survived the tenant for life. Gregson, In re, 2 De G. J. & S. 428; 5 N. R. 99; 34 L. J., Ch. 41; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 1138; 11 L. T. 460; 13 W. R. 193.

Gift Expressly Contingent — Survivorship whether referred to Death of Tenant for Life, or happening of Event.]—W. devised all his real and personal estate to R. and E. during their lives, and after their deaths he devised "the whole of his estate unto the seven children of R. and E.," to be equally divided amongst the survivors or survivor of them, share and share alike; and should any of the children die leaving issue then the share of him so dying to be equally divided among such issue, the surviving parent or parents of such children receiving the interest of such share until the youngest should attain twenty-one. The seven children survived their parents:—Held, that they took absolute interest in the estate as tenants in common in fee. Bird v. Swales, 2 Jur. (N.S.) 273; 4 W. R. 227.

Bequest to A. for life, and after her decease to eight persons in equal shares, their interests therein to be vested from the time of the testator's decease; and in case of the death of any of the eight legatees before the tenant for life, the share or shares of him, her, or them, so dying to be paid to the survivors or survivor equally. The eight residuary legatees survived the testator, but all died before the tenant for life:—Held, that survivorship was to be referred to the death of the tenant for life; and that as none of the residuary legatees survived her, the divesting clause had no operation, and each of the residuary legatees took his original gift. Marriott v. Abell, 38 L. J., Ch. 451; L. R. 7 Eq. 478; 20 L. T. 690; 17 W. R. 569.

Immediate gift to four residuary legatees and devisees in equal shares, "with benefit of survivorship" in case any of them should die without issue; and in case any of them should die leaving children, then the share, whether original or accruing, of each so dying to go to such children:—Held, that the clause of survivorship, and the limitation over to children of the legatees, were not confined to the lifetime of the testator, and intended merely to guard against lapse; and that the residuary legatees did not upon surviving the testator at once acquire absolute indefeasible interests in their shares. Bowers v. Bowers, 39 L. J., Ch. 351; L. R. 5 Ch. 244; 23 L. T. 35; 18 W. R. 301.

A testator, by will, made in 1851, having directed his executors to invest his personal estates, after payment of his debts, upon trusts therein expressed, thus proceeded: "As to 5,000*l.*, or the stocks, funds or securities upon which the same shall be from time to time invested, upon trust to pay the dividends, interest and produce thereof unto my wife for and during the term of her life, to and for her own absolute use and benefit; and from and after her decease, upon trust to pay, transfer and assign the 5,000*l.*, or the stocks, funds or securities upon which the same shall be invested, between my son E. and my grandson A., in equal shares and proportions; and in case of the death of either of them in the lifetime of my wife, then upon trust to pay the whole of the trust fund and interest as aforesaid unto the survivor of them, E. and A., his executors, administrators or assigns." E. died in the lifetime of testator's wife:—Held (reversing 6 Jur. (N.S.) 209; 8 W. R. 267), that A. was absolutely entitled to the whole fund, subject to the life interest of the widow. White v. Baker, 2 De G. F. & J. 55; 29 L. J., Ch. 577; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 591; 8 W. R. 533.

A testator bequeathed to trustees 800*l.* upon trust to invest and pay the income equally amongst his four daughters, A., B., C. and D., for their lives, to their separate use; and in case of the decease of any or either of them, leaving issue of her or their body or bodies, then he bequeathed one-fourth of the said principal sum to be equally divided amongst such issue, and if but one to such one only; and in default of issue, then the share of her or them so dying he bequeathed to the survivors of them equally, and if but one to such only. By a subsequent clause in his will, the testator directed that, in case any or either of his children, to whom or to whose benefit any legacy or bequest was given by his will, should die before such legacy or bequest should have become vested in her or them, leaving lawful issue, then such legacy or bequest should descend to and become the property of such issue. A. died before the testator, but after the date of the will, leaving issue, and B. survived the testator and died without issue:—Held, that, by the effect of the subsequent clause in the will, the issue of A. were entitled to participate with C. and D., the surviving children, in the one-fourth share given over in the event of the death of B. without issue. Willetts v. Willetts, 7 Hare, 38; 17 L. J., Ch. 457; 12 Jur. 670.

Under a direction, that, after the decease of A., a fund "should be transferred to A. B. and C. D., or the survivor or survivors":—Held, that A. B., who survived C. D. but died in A.'s lifetime, was entitled to the whole. Antrobus v. Hodgson, 16 Sim. 450; 18 L. J., Ch. 93.

Interest of legacy to A. for life, remainder to B. and C., or in case one should die, living A., then to the survivor. B. and C. both die in the life of A.; the legacy was vested, and went to the survivor. Scurfield v. Howes, 3 Bro. C. C. 90.

A testator devised copyholds, subject to life interests, to his cousins A. and B., their heirs and assigns, as tenants in common; but if either should die in the lifetime of the tenants for life, and without having lawful issue then living, he devised her share to the survivor of them, her heirs and assigns. A. died, leaving issue; then B. died without issue; afterwards the tenant for life died:—Held, that B.'s share went to A.'s representative, though A. did not survive B. Johnson, In re, Hickman v. Williamson, 53 L. J., Ch. 1116.

A testator gave certain property to trustees upon trust for his widow for life; and after her death directed the same to be sold, and the proceeds divided into two equal shares, one of which he gave, in five equal shares, to A., B., C., D. and E., and directed that, in case of the death of any or either of them before the widow, their respective shares should go to their respective husbands or wives, if any, and if not, then to their children, and, in failure of children, to the survivors of them, share and share alike. He gave the residue of the other moiety, after payment of a legacy, as follows: "To F., G., H., I. and K., and in case of the death of any or either of them, then their respective shares to their children, if any, and if not, then to the survivors of them, share and share alike":—Held, that the second moiety was given to F., G., H., I. and K., in five equal shares, as tenants in common; held, also, that the words "in case of the death," in the gift of the second moiety, meant in case of death before the period of distribution, and applied to death in the testator's lifetime as well as to death after the decease of the testator, but before the decease of the testator's widow; held, also, that although F. was dead when the will was made, the gift in favour of her children took effect; held, as to each moiety, that the share of each legatee who died before the period of distribution vested absolutely in such of his children as were living at the death of their parent, or at the death of the testator, whichever last happened. G. died a bachelor in the testator's lifetime, leaving H., I. and K. surviving him. H. died in the testator's lifetime. K. survived the testator, but died before the period of distribution. I. survived that period:—Held, that under the gift to the survivors G.'s share was divisible in moieties between I. and the personal representatives of K. Ive v. King, 16 Beav. 46; 21 L. J., Ch. 560; 16 Jur. 489.

Devise of real estate to three daughters for life, and after their decease to three grandchildren as tenants in common in fee; and in case of either of the grandchildren dying in the lifetime of the daughter, the share of them so dying to be "transferred" to the "survivors," and if only one should be living, then to him or her so "surviving." The survivor of the daughters outlived the three grandchildren:—Held, that the survivorship had reference to the death of the last tenant for life, and not to a survivorship between the grandchildren; that the divesting clause never took effect, and that on the decease of the survivor of the three daughters the heirs of the three grandchildren took as tenants in common in fee. Littlejohns v. Household, 21 Beav. 29.

A. gave his residuary estate, upon trust, that the whole should, on his youngest child attaining twenty-one, be valued, and specifically divided into three equal parts for his widow and two daughters respectively, and at the death of the widow her share was to be equally divided between the daughters, with a proviso that if either of the daughters should die before such division of the property should have been made, leaving no surviving issue, then the part of the deceased should be given to the surviving sister; but if either should die and leave surviving issue, the part of her so dying should be equally divided amongst her surviving children. The income to go to the support of the widow and children. Both daughters having died before the widow:—Held, that the real and personal residuary estate of the testator had devolved on the two daughters in equal moieties, subject to the widow's life interest in one-third thereof. Maddison v. Chapman, 1 J. & H. 470.

A married woman, having power to dispose of 1,500*l.*, by her will gave the interest of it to her husband for his life, and directed that, after his decease, the principal should be divided equally between the five daughters of her sister B.; and if any of them should die during her husband's lifetime, leaving issue, that the respective issue of such deceased daughters should have equally divided among them their mother's share; but in case any of them should die during her husband's lifetime without lawful issue, that the 1,500*l.* should be divided, share and share alike, among the surviving daughters:—Held, that the word "surviving" had reference to the testatrix's husband; and therefore, as all the daughters died in his lifetime, and only one of them left issue, that four-fifths of the 1,500*l.* were undisposed of. Watson v. England, 15 Sim. 1; 9 Jur. 648.

A testator bequeathed his residue to his widow for life, with remainder to his nephews and nieces living at her decease, and he substituted their children for any who should die in her life. But if any of the nephews and nieces should die in the life of the wife without having any child "then living," he directed his share to go to the survivors of the nephews and nieces. A nephew died without children, in the life of the widow:—Held, that his share did not go to the survivors at his death, but the survivors at the death of the widow. Essex v. Clement, 30 Beav. 525.

Gift by a testator to his widow, for life, and after her death amongst his four children, naming them, as tenants in common; but if any of his children should die before his, her or their share or shares should become payable, leaving issue, then such issue to take his, her or their parents' share or shares; but if any one or more of his children should die before his or her share or shares should be payable, leaving no lawful issue, then such share or shares to devolve and go to his surviving child or children:—Held, that survivorship was not to be referred to the period of distribution, but to the time of the death of the legatees dying in the lifetime of the widow. Wilmott v. Flewitt, 11 Jur. (N.S.) 820; 13 L. T. 90; 13 W. R. 856.

Bequest of 3,000*l.* to trustees, upon trust to invest same either in a purchase or at interest, and pay interest to testator's wife during her life, and after her decease to divide the whole, principal and interest, "among his four children, share and share alike, and the survivors of them, but not before they should have respectively attained the age of twenty-one years, or days of marriage." C., the plaintiff's wife, who was one of the four children, attained twenty-one, but died in the lifetime of her mother. Trustees laid out greatest part of the money in the purchase of freeholds and copyholds, and lent another part on bond:—Held, that C. had a vested interest, and that survivors meant such as should be living at the death of the child before twenty-one, and not such as were living at the death of the mother, and that representative of C. was entitled to a fourth of the bond, and a fourth of the whole in government securities, and which had not been invested in land. Weedon v. Fell, 2 Atk. 124.

A testator devised all his real and personal estate to his wife for life, and after her decease to such of his children as should be then living, their heirs, executors, administrators and assigns, share and share alike, as tenants in common, with benefit of survivorship, in case any died without issue under twenty-one; but if any of them should die, leaving lawful issue, the testator willed that such issue should take their father's or mother's share. The testator left several children, of whom one only, a son, survived the wife, but one of the others, a daughter, left issue:—Held, that the son was entitled to the whole property. Hunter, Ex parte, 3 Y. & C. 610.

A testator, by deed of disposition according to the Scotch law, after giving annuities to three persons, went on to direct that "the capital sums to be set apart to answer such annuities as and when the same should become tangible by the deaths of the said annuitants respectively, should be paid to and amongst seven persons nominatim (being respectively the children of two of the annuitants), and the survivors or survivor of them, on the first term of Whit-Sunday or Martinmas after their respectively attaining twenty-one or marriage." Then followed a provision for maintenance of the legatees during minority, also a power of advancement as to one of the legatees, and then a declaration that in the event of the deaths of any one or more of the said legatees before the term of payment of their shares as aforesaid, leaving lawful issue, and such issue should be in life at the time their fathers and mothers would have been entitled to receive payment of their shares, had they survived, then the share of the parent should go to the issue:—Held, affirming the judgment of the Court of Session, that the legatees had not a vested interest during the lifetime of the annuitants, the survivorship spoken of having reference to the periods of the deaths of the latter. Pearson v. Casamajor, Macl. & R. 685.

A husband gave moneys in trust to pay the income to his wife for life, on her death to divide the trust fund amongst his six children, share and share alike, with benefit of survivorship to be paid to them when the youngest survivor shall attain the age of twenty-one:—Held, that the period of survivorship was the death of the wife. Wellock v. Ostle, 27 L. T. 481; 21 W. R. 118.

Bequest of a fund to three grand-daughters, in equal shares, for their respective lives, and afterwards to their respective issue; and in case any of the three should die without issue, her share to accrue and survive to the survivors, and the accrued shares to be subject to the same conditions:—Held, that the survivorship as to each share had reference to the death of each grand-daughter, and that on the death of the last surviving grand-daughter without issue, her share fell into the residue. Nevill v. Boddam, 28 Beav. 554; 29 L. J., Ch. 738; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 573; 8 W. R. 490.

A. gave a life interest in all his property to his wife, and, after her death, he directed that all his property in the funds or elsewhere, of every description, should be sold, and equally divided between his children, B., C., D., E. and F.; and he further directed that his executors should, upon dividing the whole of his said property equally as above directed, immediately lay out the whole of the moneys that would belong to D., E. and F., his above three daughters, as their shares of his said property, in 3 per cent. consolidated annuities; and that neither of them, his before-mentioned daughters, should have the power of receiving more than the dividends due upon their respective shares. But in case of the marriage of all or either of his aforesaid daughters, the child or children of either of them his said daughters that should outlive their mother or mothers, should have his, her or their mother's shares at their own disposal, both principal and interest; and in case of the death of one or more of his aforesaid children that might die unmarried, his, her or their shares and share should be equally divided among the survivors of the aforesaid children or their children; and he gave and bequeathed unto his executrix and executor all the rest and residue of his estate and effects, both real and personal. The testator's widow died in 1838; and one of the daughters, who outlived the testator and the tenant for life, died without having been married:—Held, (affirming the decision of the court below), that the period of division as to the daughters' shares was, not the death of the tenant for life, but the deaths of the daughters; and that the gift over, upon dying unmarried, was not to be restricted to dying unmarried in the lifetime of the tenant for life. Walker's Trust, In re, 16 Jur. 702; 1 W. R. 408—L.JJ.

A testator bequeathed a money fund to trustees, to be invested for his "five daughters, share and share alike, for their lives, and after the respective deaths of such of his daughters as should die without leaving issue, or leaving issue, if such issue should die under twenty-one years, to divide the fifth part or share of each of his said daughters who should so die without leaving lawful issue as aforesaid, in the following manner: "immediately, or as soon as conveniently can be after her decease, unto and amongst my son George and the survivors of them, my five daughters, share and share alike, to whom I do give and bequeath the same accordingly, or to their respective personal representatives":—Held, that the word "survivors" referred to the death of the tenant for life whose share was to be divided. Bate's Trust, In re, 2 N. R. 265; 9 L. T. 226; 11 W. R. 768.

On the death of the last survivor of the five daughters without issue:—Held, that "personal representatives" were to be construed in their ordinary sense, and her entire share was directed to be paid to the executors of George, the son. Ib.

A testator by his will gave all his real and personal estate remaining after payment of debts, &c., to J. S., for life, and at her decease he gave the same to M. A. and W. A. "if they are both living at the time of her decease, and in case of the death of either of them before J. S.," he gave "the whole to the survivor of them for their own use and benefit absolutely." The testator died seised of real estate; after the testator's death W. A. died, then M. A., and J. S. last of all:—Held, that upon the true construction of the will the word "survivor" in the ultimate gift meant the survivor of M. A. and W. A. living at the death of J. S. the tenant for life; that since M. A., though she survived W. A., had predeceased J. S., she had not come within the terms of the ultimate gift, and that upon the death of J. S., there was an intestacy as to the property given by the will, and the real property consequently passed to his heir-at-law. Hill to Chapman, In re, 54 L. J., Ch. 595; 52 L. T. 290; 33 W. R. 570—C. A. And see Jenour v. Jenour, 10 Ves. 562; Page v. May, infra, col. 987.

—— Survivorship referred to Death of Testator.] — A testator gave stock to trustees, the interest to be paid to A. for life, and after his death the capital to be divided amongst the children of the testator's late daughter B., or their descendants, but should there be none of them surviving, then the capital to be equally divided amongst such other grandchildren as might then be living, or in default thereof to his legal representative. B. had seven children, three of whom died without children in the lifetime of testator; of the remaining four one alone survived, A., the tenant for life; three died before A., and only one of these three left issue:—Held, that the words "should there be none of them surviving" referred to the testator's death, and that the children of B. who survived the testator took vested interests. Dawes, In re, 4 Ch. D. 210. And see Bowers v. Bowers, supra, col. 977.

—— Gift to a Class at Twenty-one after a Life Interest, with Benefit of Survivorship.]—The word "survivors" in a bequest to children:—Held, upon the context of the will, to mean surviving so as to attain their respective ages of twenty-one. Crozier v. Fisher, 4 Russ. 398; 6 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 118.

A testator bequeathed the interest of 3,000*l.* to his daughter for life; and, after her death, he bequeathed the principal in trust for her children, in equal shares, to be paid to sons at twenty-one, and to daughters at that age or on marriage, with interest in the meantime for their maintenance, with "benefit of survivorship in the event of any of the said children dying without issue":—Held, that the period of survivorship was limited to the time appointed for payment; and that therefore a daughter of the legatee for life, who died in the lifetime of the latter without having been married, but having attained twenty-one, took a vested interest, which did not become divested by the survivorship clause. Tribe v. Newland, 5 De G. & Sm. 236; 21 L. J., Ch. 283; 16 Jur. 286.

On a gift, after a tenancy for life, to a class equally, with benefit of survivorship, upon their severally attaining twenty-one, the survivorship held to refer to the attaining twenty-one; and the representatives of one who attained twenty-one, but died in the lifetime of the tenant for life, held entitled to a share. Knight v. Knight, 25 Beav. 111.

A testator gave a fund to trustees upon trust to pay the income to A. during his life, and after the decease of A. leaving issue, upon trust to pay, apply, assign and transfer both principal and interest to and amongst all and every the child and children of A., equally to be divided between them, and if but one, then to such only child, to be paid to them, if sons, at twenty-one, and, if daughters, at that age or marriage, with benefit of survivorship; and in case there should be no child or children of A. at the time of his death, or if all and every such child or children should die before attaining twenty-one or marriage, then over. A. had eight children, of whom three died infants in their father's lifetime, two attained twenty-one and died in his lifetime, and three attained twenty-one and survived him:—Held, that the two children who attained twenty-one and died in their father's lifetime took vested interests, and that their representatives were entitled to share in the fund along with the children who survived their father. Corneck v. Wadman, L. R. 7 Eq. 80.

Devise of a sum of money to A. for life; then to her daughters and younger sons in such shares as she should appoint; and in default of appointment for the daughters and younger sons equally, and to the survivors; and in case no daughter or younger son, or that they should die before twenty-one or marriage, then over:—Held, that the portions vested in A.'s children at twenty-one, though they died in her lifetime. Salisbury v. Lambe, Ambl. 384; 1 Eden, 465.

A husband gave property to his wife for life, and after her death to their children, share and share alike, "and the survivors and survivor of them," to be paid on the youngest of them attaining twenty-one; with a gift over in the event of "such issue dying before majority":—Held, that the survivorship was to be referred to the period of attaining twenty-one, and not to the death of the tenant for life. Alty v. Moss, 34 L. T. 312.

A testator bequeathed a reversionary interest, to which he was entitled on the death of a tenant for life, to such of the children of his three daughters as should attain twenty-one, and directed their several shares to be paid on their attaining twenty-one, with benefit of survivorship:—Held, that a grandchild of the testator who survived the testator and attained twenty-one, but died in the lifetime of the tenant for life, was entitled to a share. Reid v. Worsley, 14 Jur. 325.

Bequest of stock to trustees on trust for testator's sister for life, and after her death then to pay the stock to her children, with a direction that the same should be paid to them in the manner therein mentioned, and with a gift over in case there should be no child of his sister living at her death, the stock to be paid in the same manner and in the same proportions as was thereinbefore "directed, had any or either of the children of" his sister "survived so as to have become entitled thereto":—Held, that the word "survived" here meant survived the sister, and that consequently on the whole will the interests of the children did not vest until the death of the tenant for life, and a sole surviving child took the whole fund. Daniel v. Gosset, 19 Beav. 478.

G. F. bequeathed his personal estate upon trust for the benefit of his wife for life, and at her death upon trust to transfer the same unto his three sons, G., W. and S., or to the survivors of them, if they, or the survivors of them, should all have attained the age of twenty-one years; but in case they should not have attained that that age, upon trust to pay the rents, &c., for the maintenance, &c., of his said sons until they should have attained that age, and then upon trust to convey the trust estate to his said sons, or the survivors of them, as aforesaid; but in case neither of his said sons should survive his said wife, then upon trust to dispose of the said trust estate as his said wife should appoint. G. F. died in 1818, leaving his wife and his three sons surviving. Each of the sons attained twenty-one, but G. alone survived his mother:—Held, that G. F. did not intend that any son dying in the lifetime of the widow should have a vested interest. Fisher v. Moore, 1 Jur. (N.S.) 1011; 3 W. R. 584.

Bequest to A. for life, and "at her decease to her surviving children," when they have attained twenty-one:—Held, that the survivorship had reference to the death of A., and that those children only who survived her were entitled. Huffam v. Hubbard, 16 Beav. 579.

After certain bequests for life, the general residue was bequeathed to the surviving children of A., who was living :—Held, that the survivorship had reference to the death of the testator. Lill v. Lill, 23 Beav. 446.

A testatrix gave the interest of the residue to her brother during his life, and, after his death, she gave the residue to her executors, in trust for four persons by name, and the survivors and survivor of them, to be paid to them respectively when they should attain twenty-one, with interest in the meantime ; of those four persons, two died during the life of the brother :—Held, that they did not take a vested interest in any part of the residue, but that the whole of it belonged to the two survivors. During the lifetime of the testatrix's brother, one of the two survivors assigned all her furniture, plate, &c., and all the other estate and effects of or to which she was then possessed or entitled, to trustees upon trust for her creditors ; the assignment did not pass her contingent interest in the testatrix's residuary estate. Pope v. Whitcomb, 3 Russ. 124 ; 6 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 53.

Testator devised certain messuages to trustees upon trust to pay the rents to his wife for her life, and after her decease he gave and devised the said messuages to the same trustees in trust to sell, &c., and apply the proceeds amongst all his (the testator's) nephews and nieces, children of his brothers A. and B. and his sister C., and the survivors and survivor of them, share and share alike, to be paid to them respectively as they attained the age of twenty-one years. The testator's wife survived him :—Held, that the property was divisible among such only of the children of A., B., and C. as survived the widow. Williams v. Tartt, 2 Coll. C. C. 85.

Testator bequeathed 50,000*l.* to trustees in trust for his wife for life, and after her death he gave one-fifth of that sum to the same trustees in trust to invest it and pay the interest to his daughter for her life, and, upon her demise, to appropriate the interest for the use of any of her child or children until they reached the age of twenty-one years, and then the principal to be paid to the survivor or survivors of the children of his said daughter, share and share alike. The testator also gave 2,000*l.* to the same trustees in trust to invest it and to pay the interest to his daughter for her life, and after her decease to appropriate the interest for the use of any of her child or children until they reached the age of twenty-one years, when the 2,000*l.* was to be paid to the survivor or survivors of the said children of his said daughter. The daughter had two children who attained twenty-one, but only one of them survived her :—Held, that that child became entitled on her death to the whole of the trust funds in which she had a life interest. Turing v. Turing, 15 Sim. 139 ; 15 L. J., Ch. 272 ; 10 Jur. 366.

Testator bequeathed a fund in trust for Elizabeth D. for her life, and after her decease in trust for four of her children, whom he named, "or the survivor or survivors of them, for their maintenance until they severally attain the age of twenty-one years, when each of them will be entitled to claim a fair proportion of the principal." Only one of the children survived the mother :—Held, that that one was entitled to the whole fund, though two of the deceased children attained twenty-one. Dorville v. Wolff, 15 Sim. 510 ; 16 L. J., Ch. 179 ; 11 Jur. 160.

Gift of residue in trust for a testator's wife during widowhood, and on her death or marriage to pay it amongst his five children, or the "survivor or survivors" of them, at such ages as his wife should appoint, or in default at twenty-one ; but in case of the death of any before his share should become "payable" leaving issue, then to pay his share to such issue. A child attained twenty-one, and died in the life of the wife, leaving issue. No appointment having been made :—Held, that the survivorship had reference to the cesser of the wife's estate, and that the issue, and not the representatives of the child, took the share. Hind v. Selby, 22 Beav. 373.

—— Direct Gift at Twenty-one.]—A testator bequeathed to his four children, A., B., C., and D., 8,000*l.*, to be equally divided between them, share and share alike, as tenants in common, and not as joint tenants, but with benefit of survivorship, the same to be paid and payable to them respectively upon their attaining the age of twenty-one years, the interest thereof in the meantime, or so much as by his executors should be considered sufficient, to be applied to their maintenance and education ; and he left to B. and C. all the residue of his personal estate, and, in case of their decease before twenty-one, he bequeathed the said residue to A. and D. or the survivor of them, share and share alike, and, in case of the decease of all his before-named children before twenty-one, he gave the residue, including his lapsed legacies, to his brother. By a codicil he gave to his children E., F., G., and H. (who were born after the will), 4,000*l.* sterling, in equal shares, with the benefit of survivorship, not only as to them, but to the rest of the children named in the will, payable at twenty-one, maintenance to be granted by the Court of Chancery :—Held, that the share of G., who died under twenty-one, went to all his surviving brothers and sisters, and not to his widow and child. Forrester v. Smith, 2 Ir. Ch. R. 70.

The cases as to the period to which survivorship is to be referred reviewed and classified. Ib.

Personal estate was bequeathed upon trust to pay the income to the testator's wife till his youngest child attained twenty-one, she maintaining the children during their minorities, and then the capital was to be divided among the wife and children (by name), with benefit of survivorship :—Held, that the survivorship referred to the period of distribution, and that a child did not, on attaining twenty-one, acquire an indefeasible interest. Vorley v. Richardson, 8 De G. M. & G. 126 ; 25 L. J., Ch. 335 ; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 362 ; 4 W. R. 397.

—— Gift on a Contingency to a Class of Survivors.]—A testator bequeathed his residuary estate to R. S., the eldest son of P. S., and failing him, to the next male child of P. S., and failing the male children of P. S., to seven persons whom he named, and the survivors and survivor of them, in equal proportions. R. S. died in the lifetime of his father, and P. S. died without any other issue. All the legatees died in the lifetime of P. S. :—Held, that the word "survivors" referred to the period of distribution at the death of P. S., and therefore the gift to the legatees failed, and the residue went to the next of kin of the testator. McDonald v. Bryce, 16 Beav. 581 ; 22 L. J., Ch. 779 ; 17 Jur. 335 ; 1 W. R. 261. But see next case.

The case of Cripps v. Wolcott (supra, col. 965) is a decision binding on this court. Ib.

On a bequest to A. for life, and after her decease to three legatees, to be equally divided, or in case of the demise of each or either of them to be divided between the survivors or survivor or their representatives:—Held, that, the three legatees having predeceased A., the plaintiff, who was the legal personal representative of all three, was entitled. McDonald v. Bryce (supra) overruled. Page v. May, 24 Beav. 323; 27 L. J., Ch. 242; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 1047; 5 W. R. 840.

A testator bequeathed as follows: "I give to my daughter S. 50*l.* per annum for life. I give to each of my other daughters 5,000*l.*, the interest of which for their use independent of any husband they may have, and if they should have any children, the principal to be divided among them after her death if they should attain the age of twenty-one years; if not, it is to be divided between her surviving sisters, share and share alike." The testator died, leaving S. and four other daughters, A., B., C., D., surviving; of these A. afterwards died, leaving two children, both of whom died under twenty-one, and B. survived A., but died before the survivor of her children:—Held, that the 5,000*l.* bequeathed to A. became, upon the death of the survivor of her children, divisible amongst her sisters, including S., then surviving, in exclusion of the representatives of B. Carver v. Burgess, 7 De G. M. & G. 96; 3 Eq. R. 421; 24 L. J., Ch. 401; 3 W. R. 308.

Testator, by will, directed his executors to place out upon government securities such a sum of money as should be sufficient out of the interest thereof to produce an annuity of 50*l.*, which he gave unto his daughter J. for her life; and after her decease, in case she should leave issue, he gave the principal unto and equally amongst his surviving children and their legal representatives, share and share alike. The testator had four children living at the date of his will and of his death, of whom the daughter J. was the survivor; she died without leaving issue:—Held, that the words "surviving children" meant children surviving the daughter J., and that the words "legal personal representatives" must be construed in their ordinary sense, and not as importing kindred or representatives in blood; consequently that the fund, of which the testator's daughter was the tenant for life, fell into the testator's residuary estate. Taylor v. Beverley, 1 Coll. C. C. 108; 13 L. J., Ch. 240; 8 Jur. 265.

4. Distribution per Stirpes or per Capita.

Per Capita—Gift to the Children of A. and B.]—One devises the surplus of his personal estate to the children of A. and B.; neither of them has a child at the making of the will or the death of testator; the devise is executory, and shall extend to any children that A. and B. shall afterwards have; and the children of each shall take per capita, and not per stirpes. Weld v. Bradbury, 2 Vern. 705.

Bequest of stock to testator's wife for life, and then as she should by will direct amongst A., B., and C. and their respective children, and in default of appointment the same at his wife's death to go amongst all the said children equally. No appointment was made:—Held, first, that A., B., and C. took nothing; secondly, that the children of A., B., and C. took per capita. Pattison v. Pattison, 19 Beav. 638.

Testator gave the residue among his five grandchildren, A., B., C., D., and E., his grandson A.'s two children, and the two children of his niece, one of them a son, the other a daughter; and in case any of the said last-mentioned children should die before twenty-one, and should leave no lawful issue, then the survivors were to have his or her share. One of the children of A. died under twenty-one without issue:—Held, that his share was divisible among all the surviving legatees, children, and grandchildren. Walker v. Moore, 1 Beav. 607; 8 L. J., Ch. 333.

Bequest of shares, the profits to be invested, and the interest applied in the education of the children of A. and B. in equal shares; "and on their attaining twenty-one, the whole to be sold and divided equally among them." There was a gift over if A. and B. should die without issue. A. and B. had no child at testator's death:—Held, that all the children of A. and B. took, and that the class was not limited to those born when the first attained twenty-one; and, secondly, that the children of A. and B. took per capita, and not per stirpes. Armitage v. Williams, 27 Beav. 346.

On construing an appointment of stock in these words, "unto and among my said brother and my sisters and my nephews and nieces living at the decease of my wife, in equal shares and proportions," it was held, that the qualification of living at the death of the wife attached only to the nephews and nieces, the last antecedent. The direction as to the shares and proportions in which the legatees are to take the property does not affect the construction of the words which describe the persons who are to take. The legatees took per capita. Baker v. Baker, 6 Hare, 269; 11 Jur. 585.

Testator directed the residue of his personal estate, after the death of his wife, who was tenant for life, to be divided as follows:—to his five nephews and nieces, A., B., C., D., and E., two shares each, and to their children one share each. The nephews and nieces survived the testator:—Held, that the residue vested in the nephews and nieces and their children living at the testator's death or born in the lifetime of the tenant for life, the children taking per capita, but the shares of each of the nephews and nieces being double that of each child. Cooke v. Bowen, 4 Y. & C. 244.

—— Gift to the Children of A. and the Children of B.]—Bequest of one-fourth to the children of A., and one other fourth among children of B.:—Held, distributable per capita. Lincoln (Lady) v. Pelham, 10 Ves. 167; 7 R. R. 370.

Testatrix gave 200*l.* to her brother R., and in case of his dying before her, the 200*l.* to go to his children, and 200*l.* to her sister M., to go to her children in the event of her predeceasing the testatrix. The testatrix, after sundry other pecuniary gifts to other parties, gave all her residue "to all the children of my brother R. and my sister M. equally." R. had five children, and M. two children, at the date of the will, and also at the decease of the testatrix:—Held, that all these seven children took equally as tenants in common. Lloyd's Estate, In re, 2 Jur. (N.S.) 539.

—— Gift to A. and the Children of B.]—Bequest "to A. and to the children of B., to be equally divided":—Held, that they took per capita. Dowding v. Smith, 3 Beav. 541; 10 L. J., Ch. 235.

Gift of a legacy to A. for life, with remainder to B. for life, and after the death of the survivor upon trust to pay it "to, between, or amongst C., if then living, but if then dead, to, between, and amongst C.'s children and the children of B. then living equally, &c." :—Held, that C. and the children of B. took per capita. Rickabe v. Garwood, 8 Beav. 579.

J. H. gave all his residuary real and personal estate to trustees upon trusts for conversion, and directed the trustees to divide the proceeds amongst the brothers and sisters of S., and the nephews and nieces of C., and "my late housekeeper, H." On the question whether this was a gift in equal third parts to the classes, or a gift per capita to all the individual members of the three classes :—Held, to be a gift per capita to all the individual members of the classes. Amson v. Harris, 19 Beav. 210.

Legacy to A. and B. and the children of C. equally; they take per capita. Legacy to the descendants of A. and B. equally; all descendants (children and grandchildren) take per capita. Butler v. Stratton, 3 Bro. C. C. 367.

Gift in equal shares to Mrs. M., Mr. and Mrs. W. and children, likewise H. H. :—Held, that Mrs. W. was entitled to an equal share as tenant in common with her husband and her children, and with Mrs. M. and H. H. Paine v. Wagner, 12 Sim. 184.

One having had five children, A., B., C., D., and E., B. is dead, leaving several children, and by will the testator devises the residue of his personal estate to his son A., and to B.'s children, and to his daughter C. and D.'s children, and to his daughter E.; D. is living, and has children :—Decreed, the children of B. and the children of D. shall take per capita, and not per stirpes, as if all named. Blackler v. Webb, 2 P. Wms. 383.

Testatrix bequeathed residue to one for life, and then to be equally divided between her two nieces A. and B., and C., a third niece, and her children. C. had eight children at the death of the testatrix, and one born afterwards, during the life of tenant for life :—Held, that all the children, including this one, took equally per capita with the nieces. Lenden v. Blackmore, 10 Sim. 626.

Bequest of the residue to executors, in trust to invest and pay the interest, dividends, and premiums, as the same shall be received, "to my living brothers and sisters, and the children of my brothers and sisters who have deceased, or who may die before me, share and share alike" ; —Held, to be a gift per capita. Hyde v. Cullen, 1 Jur. 100.

A testator gives 400*l.* to his executors, to divide equally between his son P. and the children of his son R. P. and the children take equal shares per capita. Williams v. Yates, C. P. Cooper, 177; 1 Jur. 510.

Testator directed his residuary real and personal estate to be divided by his trustees, in such shares and at such times as they should think proper, amongst his nephews, A., B., and C., and his other nephews and nieces, sons and daughters of his late sisters, T. and H., who should be living at his decease, and the children of any other such nephews and nieces who, having died in his lifetime, had left issue. There were several children, and children of deceased children, both of T. and H., living at the testator's death. The trustees not being able to agree as to the division of the property, the court ordered it to be divided amongst the children, and the children of the deceased children of T. and H., per capita. Tomlin v. Hatfield, 12 Sim. 167.

A testator had a son and two daughters (A. and C.) living; another daughter (B.) was dead, having left five daughters. He bequeathed 15,000*l.*, as to 5,000*l.* for A. for life, with remainder to her children. He then gave the residue "equally amongst his son, his daughter A., the five daughters of B., and his daughter C., to be settled as he had directed the three sums of 5,000*l.* upon them and their issue" :—Held, that the five daughters of B. took per capita, so that each was entitled to one-eighth of the residue. Tyndale v. Wilkinson, 23 Beav. 74; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 963; 4 W. R. 695.

A father gave his residuary estate to his children, A., B., C., D., E., "and to the children of" his daughter F., deceased, "and the children of" his daughter C., deceased, "to be divided amongst them in equal shares and proportions" : —Held, that the grandchildren took per capita and not per stirpes. Payne v. Webb, 31 L. T. 637; 22 W. R. 43.

—— Gift to A. and B. and their Children.]—A testator gave his property (all being personalty) to trustees, upon trust to pay his debts, and he gave certain legacies and three annuities to three ladies, and he gave the residue of the dividends arising during the lives of the three annuitants to H. S. and A. C., married ladies, for their lives; and after the deaths of the three annuitants, as to all the rest of his estate, he bequeathed the same to the said H. S. and A. C. and their several children, to be divided between them in equal shares :—Held, that the gift to H. S. and A. C., and their several children, was a gift per capita, and not per stirpes. Cunningham v. Murray, 1 De G. & Sm. 366. S. C. on appeal, 17 L. J., Ch. 407; 12 Jur. 547—C. A.

Bequest of residue, in moieties, in trust for two tenants for life, and at death of each in trust, as to her moiety, to the children of the two who should be living at the death of the deceased tenant for life, and the issue of such of the children who should then be dead :—Held, to take effect per capita. Abbay v. Howe, 1 De G. & Sm. 470; 16 L. J., Ch. 437; 11 Jur. 765.

Under a disposition by will to A.'s and B.'s families, the children are entitled exclusively of their parents, and per capita. Barnes v. Patch, 8 Ves. 604; 7 R. R. 127.

—— Gift to a Class and their Children.]—Residuary bequest in trust for A. for life, and after her decease to be distributed "between the testator's brothers and sisters and such of their children as should be then living, the parents and children to be classed together and to share in equal proportions" :—Held, that those brothers and sisters and children only who survived A. were entitled, and that they took per capita. Turner v. Hudson, 10 Beav. 222; 16 L. J., Ch. 180.

A testator devised "one-half of the freehold houses and property to his brothers and sisters for their life and then to come to their children, and in the same manner to his wife's brother and brothers' children and grandchildren." He had but one brother alive at the date of the will, and left no brother or sister surviving him, and only one brother of the testator's wife was alive at the date of the will, but he survived the testator :—Held, that under these circumstances all the children living at the testator's death of all his brothers and sisters took per stirpes shares in one moiety, and that, subject to the life interest of the wife's surviving brother, the other moiety was divisible amongst all the children and grandchildren living at his death or coming into existence during the lifetime of the tenant for life, of himself and the other wife's brothers, who left children or grandchildren, the families taking per stirpes and the children and grandchildren of such family per capita. Barnaby v. Tassell, L. R. 11 Eq. 363; 24 L. T. 221; 19 W. R. 323.

A testator gave all his property to trustees upon trust for his wife for life, and at her death upon trust to sell and pay debts and legacies, and after payment thereof he gave the residue of the money to his sister E., his sister H., H. D., daughter of his late sister M. D., and to the children of his said two sisters E. and H. as should be living at the death of his wife, to be equally divided between them his said niece H. D., his sisters E. and H., and the respective children of them his said sisters, share and share alike. The sisters and niece died in the lifetime of the tenant for life, the wife, one sister leaving three children:—Held, that the three children and the representatives of the deceased niece and sisters took equally per capita. Boughen v. Farrer, 3 W. R. 495.

A testator gave real estate to his daughter for life, remainder to his "children and issue," and if but "one such child" that child to take the whole, and if she died without leaving "such issue," then over. He gave the residue of his personal estate to his daughter for life and her children and issue; and if she died without leaving such children or issue, then over:—Held, that the children of the daughter and their children took pari passu. Cancellor v. Cancellor, or Chancellor v. Chancellor, 1 N. R. 12; 2 Dr. & Sm. 194; 32 L. J., Ch. 17; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 1146; 7 L. T. 307; 11 W. R. 16. And see Shailer v. Groves, infra, col. 1004.

A testator by his will, after giving life estates to his widow and his sister successively, directed that after the death of his sister his residuary personal estate should go to his surviving brothers and their children, to be divided equally between them. The widow survived her sister-in-law, as also her brothers-in-law, two of whom only left issue surviving the widow:—Held, that the class was to be ascertained at the death of the widow, and that the surviving children of the two brothers took per capita. Fox, In re, 6 N. R. 374; 35 Beav. 163; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 735; 13 W. R. 1013.

—— Gift to the Descendants of A.]—Under a devise to the descendants of F. T. in a certain district, grandchildren and great-grandchildren take per capita. Crosley v. Clare, 3 Swan. 320, n. S. C. nom. Crossly v. Clare, Ambl. 397.

—— Gift to Next of Kin, both Paternal and Maternal.]—Bequest of 2,000*l.* to be equally divided amongst testator's next of kin, both maternal and paternal:—Held, that the fund was divisible between the two classes per capita, and not per stirpes. Dugdale v. Dugdale, 11 Beav. 402. And see cases ante, col. 834.

Per Stirpes.]—A bequest of a fund to be divided among the children of A., the children of B., the children of C., the children of D., and to E. if he should be then living, and if not E.'s share to be divided into four parts and paid to the children of A., B., C., and D. "in manner aforesaid":—Held, that the fund was divisible among the children per stirpes, and not per capita. Nettleton v. Stephenson, 18 L. J., Ch. 191; 13 Jur. 618.

Bequest of 1,200*l.* to A. and B., upon trust to appropriate and apply in two equal shares to and for the benefit of all their children respectively:—Held, on the context, to give legacies of 600*l.* to each family severally. Overton v. Banister, 4 Beav. 205.

A legacy to three families equally. The children of the families shall take per stirpes, and not per capita. Alexander v. Douglas, Romilly's Notes of Cases, 93.

A testator bequeathed 800*l.* to trustees upon trust to pay the income to A. for her life; and after her decease he gave the principal to her children and their representatives in equal shares, with a gift over in the event of A. dying without issue of the representatives of such issue. A. left one child surviving her, and children and grandchildren of another child of A.; and A. had also had other children, who died without issue:—Held, that the surviving child of A. was entitled to one moiety of the trust fund, and that the other moiety was to be equally divided among the children of the deceased child of A. Alker v. Barton, 12 L. J., Ch. 16.

Money bequeathed to A. for life, and if she died in the life of her husband to go to the children of her sister B. in such shares as A. should advise. Some of the children of B. died, leaving issue, and then A. dies in the life of her husband, making no appointment:—Decreed, the money to be distributed among the children of B. and their representatives per stirpes, and not per capita. Crook v. Brooking, 2 Vern. 50.

Testator bequeathed the residue of his personal estate as follows: "As to the residue of my fortune, I will and desire that the descendants or representatives of each of my first cousins deceased partake in equal shares and proportions with my first cousins now alive." The residue is divisible per stirpes amongst the first cousins who were living at the testator's death and such of the descendants of his first cousins who died before him as were next of kin of the deceased first cousins, and living at the time of the death of the testator. Humphreys v. Humphreys, 2 Cox, 187.

A., by will, bequeathed property in trust for all his grandchildren (the children of his son and daughter) who should be living at his decease, equally to be divided between them, such shares to be vested in possession in the grandsons at twenty-one, and the grand-daughters at twenty-one or marriage, with a gift over, in case any of the grandchildren should die before attaining a vested interest in possession, to the surviving brothers and sisters of the deceased grandchild. By a codicil he gave a sum of money to his executors to be invested, and directed the interest to be paid in equal moieties to his son and daughter during their lives, and at their decease the same to be for the benefit of his grandchildren, agreeably to the instructions contained in the will:—Held, that the effect of the codicil was to create a tenancy in common between the son and daughter during their lives in the fund directed to be invested, and that on the death of the son one moiety of the fund became divisible among his children, the grandchildren taking their shares under the will and codicil per stirpes, and not per capita. Archer v. Legg, 31 Beav. 187 ; 10 W. R. 703.

Gift of personal estate, to divide the principal and interest among the children of A. and B. living at the time of the respective deceases of A. and B. with a proviso that the share of any such child or children dying under twenty-five, without issue, should go over to the survivors and survivor of them equally :—Held, that this was a gift to the children of A. living at his decease, and to the children of B. living at his decease, and that the fund was divisible per stirpes in moieties. Ayscough v. Savage, 13 W. R. 373.

A testator directed his residuary estate to be equally divided between his two sisters and the lawful issue of his two deceased sisters, in equal shares if more than one of such respective lawful issue :—Held, that it was divisible not per capita but into four parts, each surviving sister taking one part, and the issue of each deceased sister taking another part, as tenants in common. Davis v. Bennet, 4 De G. F. & J. 327 ; 31 L. J., Ch. 337 ; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 269 ; 5 L. T. 815 ; 10 W. R. 275.

Gift of residue to be equally divided between the testator's sisters J. and M., and the lawful issue of his deceased sisters E. and A., in equal shares, if more than one of such respective lawful issue. There were living at the testator's decease children, grandchildren and great-grandchildren of one of the deceased sisters :—Held, that J. and M. were entitled to two equal fourth parts, the issue of E. were entitled to another equal fourth part as tenants in common, and the issue of A. to the remaining equal fourth part as tenants in common. Ib.

A testatrix directed her trustees to divide the rents, &c., of her real estate equally between A., B., C. and D. the widow of E., until E.'s children attained twenty-one ; and upon their attaining twenty-one, the trustees were to sell and divide the produce between A., B., C. and the children of E., in equal shares and proportions as tenants in common ; but if D. married, her part of the income was to be applied to the maintenance of E.'s children ; and she gave the residue of her real and personal estate "equally between" A., B., C. and the children of E. who attained twenty-one. There were four children of E. who attained twenty-one :—Held, that they did not take the property per capita with A., B. and C., but one fourth only between them. Brett v. Horton, 4 Beav. 239 ; 10 L. J., Ch. 371 ; 5 Jur. 696.

A testator gave his real and personal estate to trustees on trust, to sell and convert the same and pay the interest and annual produce to his ten nephews and nieces nominatim for their respective lives, and after their respective deceases the share of such nephew or niece so dying "to be held in trust for all and every the children or child of my nephews and nieces, who being a son or sons should attain the age of twenty-one, or being a daughter or daughters should attain that age or marry, to be divided between and amongst such last children, if more than one, in equal shares and proportions ; and if any one or more of them my nephews and nieces shall not have any child, who being a son shall attain twenty-one, or being a daughter shall attain that age or marry under it, then and in each or any such case, as well the original share or shares of, as also the share or shares surviving or accruing to each or any such last-mentioned nephew or niece and his or her child or children, or to such child or children only in possession or expectancy, &c., shall go and accrue to and vest in the survivors or survivor or others or other of them my nephews and nieces and their respective children, at and in such and the same times, shares and proportions, and manner as are hereinbefore expressed of and concerning their respective original shares," &c. One of the nephews having died, leaving an only child, an infant :—Held, that such only child exclusively became presumptively entitled to his father's share, subject to its going over as provided by the will in the event of his dying under twenty-one without children. Hunt v. Dorsett, 5 De G. M. & G. 570 ; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 1053. Reversing 3 W. R. 531.

The testator gave a residuary fund to his brothers and sisters for life, and from and after the decease of the survivor to pay the principal to their issue who should live to attain twenty-one, or the issue of such of them as should be then deceased, such class of issue, whether in first or second degree, to take only as amongst themselves the shares which their parents would have been entitled to if living :—Held, that the children of the brothers and sisters took per stirpes, and that the children of one of the testator's nephews who died in the testator's lifetime took with their uncles and aunts the share which their father would have taken if living. Shand v. Kidd, 19 Beav. 310.

Testator gave one-third of his residue to his niece, which he desired might be settled by his executors on her for her separate use for her life, but to devolve to her issue at her death ; and failing issue, then to revert to his nephew. The court directed the third to be settled in trust for the niece for her separate use for life, and after her death in trust for her issue then living, and if there should be no such issue then in trust for the nephew. Stonor v. Curwen, 5 Sim. 264.

A testator gave his personal estate to A. for life, and after the decease of A. he directed his executors to divide it among the six children of his late sister, A. J. (naming them), "who should be living at the time of his decease, and the issue of such of them as should be living at the time of his decease, and the issue of such of them as should then be dead leaving issue then living ; the issue to take only such part or share as their parents if then living would have taken." If any of the children should die without leaving issue, his or her share was to go over to the others ; and if any of the children should die leaving issue, they were to take as therein mentioned. All the six children of A. J., survived the testator and the tenant for life, and some of them had issue :—Held, that the six children were entitled to the fund absolutely, and that in the events which had happened their issue took nothing. Johnson v. Cope, 17 Beav. 561 ; 2 W. R. 90.

A testator gave some houses to trustees upon trust to receive the rents and to pay the same in equal moieties to his son and daughter during their lives, and after the death of either of them without issue living, upon trust to pay the whole thereof to the survivor during the life of such survivor ; but if there should be issue living of the first of them so dying, then upon trust to pay one moiety to the survivor and to divide the remaining moiety between the children of the one so first dying ; and after the decease of the survivor of the testator's children, on trust to sell the property and to divide the proceeds equally amongst all and every the child or children of each of them the testator's son and daughter who should attain twenty-one in equal shares and proportions :—Held, that the proceeds of sale were divisible among the grandchildren per stirpes and not per capita. Campbell's Trusts, In re, 55 L. J., Ch. 911 ; 33 Ch. D. 98 ; 55 L. T. 463 ; 34 W. R. 629—C. A. And see Pearson v. Stephen, post, col. 1071.

—— Gift to Next of Kin.]—A testator directed that the residue of his personal estate after the death of his widow, the tenant for life, should be paid by his trustees or the survivor of them, his executors or administrators, to A. and B., to be equally divided between them, share and share alike, if then living ; but if dead, to go and be equally divided to and amongst the respective next legal representatives of A. and B., share and share alike. A. and B. died in the lifetime of the testator's widow :—Held, that the next of kin of A. and B., according to the Statute of Distributions, living at the death of the testator's widow, were entitled to the fund per stirpes. Booth v. Vicars, 1 Coll. C. C. 6 ; 13 L. J., Ch. 147 ; 8 Jur. 76.

A testator devised real estate in trust for the persons who at his decease should be the next of kin of R. D., deceased, according to the Statute of Distributions, and their heirs, as tenants in common ; the next of kin consisted of great-grandchildren's children and the children of great-grandchildren's children :—Held, that they took per stirpes, and not per capita. Mattison v. Tanfield, 3 Beav. 131 ; 4 Jur. 933.

A testator directed his executors to pay and divide the residue "unto and amongst his own next of kin under the Statute of Distributions" : —Held, that brothers and deceased brothers' children took per stirpes. Lewis v. Morris, 19 Beav. 34.

Whether per Stirpes throughout.]—Testator bequeathed to G. two sums of stock, and in case of his death in the testator's lifetime without issue, the two sums were to be equally divided amongst the testator's nieces thereinafter named, under the same conditions and restrictions as were thereinafter mentioned respecting the several bequests thereinafter to them respectively given. The testator then gave 12,000*l.* stock to trustees, upon trust to pay the dividends (in thirds) to the testator's three nieces, A., B. and C., for their lives, and after their respective deaths to transfer the capital (in thirds) to the children of the nieces, with limitations over in the nature of cross-remainders, in the event of any of the nieces dying without leaving children, witn an ultimate limitation in the event of all the nieces dying without leaving children, in favour of the residuary legatee, a stranger. G. died without issue in the testator's lifetime. The nieces had children :—Held, that the children took the same interest in the stock given to G. as they did in the 12,000*l.* consols. Ross v. Ross, 2 Coll. C. C. 269 ; 9 Jur. 795.

A testator, in an obscure will, gave a life interest to A., with remainder to his children, and in the event of A. dying without leaving a child who should attain twenty-one, directed his estates to be converted, and the moneys arising therefrom to be divided, "share and share alike, amongst the children of X., Y. and Z., each and every of the persons so to be benefited, then living, to have an equal share one with the other ; and if any of the persons so intended to be benefited shall be then dead, and leave a child or children, grandchild or grandchildren, such child or children, grandchild or grandchildren, is and are to be entitled to the same share as their father, mother, grandfather or grandmother, as the case might be, would have been entitled to had each such person thereby intended to be benefited been then living." A. died a bachelor : —Held, first, that the children of X., Y. and Z., who were living at A.'s death, were alone, of the first class of takers, entitled to a share. Palmer v. Crutwell, 8 Jur. (N.S.) 479.

Held, secondly, that the children or grandchildren of the first takers, dying in the lifetime of the tenant for life, must themselves be living at A.'s decease to be entitled to a share. Ib.

Held, thirdly, that such last-named children or grandchildren took per stirpes, and not per capita. Ib.

P. gave all the residue of his real and personal estate to trustees "upon trust for all my brothers and sisters who shall be living at the time of the death of my wife and the children and issue of such of them as shall be then dead leaving children or issue, nevertheless such children or issue of any of my deceased brothers and sisters to have and take among them in equal shares such proportions of my residuary real and personal estate as such deceased brother or sister would have taken and been entitled to had he or she been living at the death of my wife." Nine of the testator's brothers and sisters survived him, but predeceased the wife, who died in 1869, some of them leaving children, and some of them also issue :—Held, that the children and issue of the testator's deceased brothers and sisters did not take concurrently with their parents, but took per stirpes the shares to which their respective parents would have been entitled. Powell v. Powell, 28 L. T. 730 ; 21 W. R. 725.

A testator gave the interest of 400*l.* during the life of J., his daughter, and after her decease, in case she should die without issue, the principal to his other eight children then living, equally ; and if any should be then dead, his or her issue (if any) should be entitled to the shares or share of him or her then dead ; but if J. should happen to leave any issue surviving, then the 400*l.* to be divided into nine equal shares, one to go to such her issue, and the other eight to be divided in such manner as the whole was directed to be divided in case of her dying without issue. J. died unmarried, the eight other children having survived the testator, but died in her lifetime, leaving issue :—Held, that the legacy should be divided into eighths, and go to the grandchildren and remoter issue living at the death of J. Southam v. Blake, 2 W. R. 446.

N. gave to trustees all his real estates in trust, after payment of debts, for the benefit of his wife and daughter for their lives ; and in the event of his wife dying in the lifetime of the daughter (which happened), then he directed the trustees after the death of the daughter to convey the fee-simple of the estates unto and equally between A., B., C. and D., share and share alike, or unto such of them as should be then living, and the issue of such of them as should be then dead leaving lawful issue, and to his, her and their heirs, executors, administrators and assigns for ever. But in case any one of them should happen to die in the lifetime of his wife or daughter leaving issue, such issue then living should be entitled equally among them to the share only which his, her or their parent or parents would have been entitled to if living. N. died in 1834. A. died in 1840, leaving three children, X., Y., Z., all of whom died in the lifetime of the testator's widow and daughter, and all of whom left children surviving, viz., X. four, Y. one, and Z. six children :—Held, that the grandchildren of A. took his share of the property per capita, and not per stirpes. Birdsall v. York, 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1237.

Under a bequest to a daughter for life, and after her death to her children ; but if she died without issue, then to her two sisters if then living ; but if either sister should be then dead, the testator gave her share to her issue equally divided among them :—Held, that under the last bequest children, grandchildren and remoter issue took per capita. Weldon v. Hoyland, 4 De G. F. & J. 564 ; 5 L. T. 96. And see Orton, In re, post, col. 1077.

Effect of Words "per Stirpes."]—The words per stirpes held to import not only distribution, but succession or some species of representation. Dick v. Lacy, 8 Beav. 214 ; 14 L. J., Ch. 150 ; 9 Jur. 21.

Upon a gift over, after an estate for life of residue real and personal, to "daughters of B., and their decendants, per stirpes, to hold to them, their heirs and assigns, for ever," paying an annuity to L. for her life. B. left three daughters, one of whom survived the testator, and died in the lifetime of the tenant for life without ever having had issue :—Held, that the residuary estate belonged to the two surviving daughters. The words per stirpes are to be taken in a distributive sense, and "decendants per stirpes" to be considered as words of purchase, giving an absolute estate to the children, who took not concurrently with their parents, but by substitution. Ib.

Bequest to the brothers and sisters of A. living at the testator's death, "such descendants to take as tenants in common per stirpes, and not per capita" :—Held, that the fund was primarily divisible into as many equal shares as there were brothers and sisters of A. of whom any descendant was living at the testator's death ; that such shares respectively were divisible into as many equal shares as there were children of such brothers and sisters of A. respectively living at the testator's death, or having died and left any descendant then living ; that the same principle was to be applied to every subdivision, and that no descendant was entitled to any share concurrently with a living ancestor. Gibson v. Fisher, 37 L. J., Ch. 67 ; L. R. 5 Eq. 51 ; 16 W. R. 115.

A testator directed his property to be divided and paid "to the persons being such descendants as next hereinafter mentioned in equal shares among and to the lawful descendants living at the time of my death of such of the brothers and sisters of my late grandfather as have died leaving lawful descendants, such descendants respectively to be entitled to share the same moneys in a course of distribution per stirpes, and not per capita" :—Held, that the words per stirpes and not per capita were applicable to the descendants, who were to be classified secundum stirpes, or according to their families, and that the property was to be divided into as many shares as there were stirpes or families, each stirpes or family taking an equal share. Robinson v. Shepherd, 4 De G. J. & S. 129. And see Selby v. Whittaker, 47 L. J., Ch. 121 ; 6 Ch. D. 239 ; 37 L. T. 514 ; 26 W. R. 117.

—— "According to the Stocks."]—A testator gave the income of a trust fund to his wife for her life, and subject thereto the fund was to be held in trust for such of his cousins (the children of four deceased aunts and two deceased uncles of the testator named in the will) living at the determination of the wife's life interest, and such issue then living (if any) of his said cousins then dead as, either before or after the determination of such life interest, should attain twenty-one, or should die under twenty-one leaving issue living at his, her or their death, to take (if more than one) in a course of distribution according to the stocks, and not according to the number of individuals. At the time of the death of the tenant for life, there were living one cousin of the testator (a child of one of the uncles named in the will) and children and other issue of fifteen deceased cousins (children of the other uncle and of the four aunts named in the will):—Held, that the words, "according to the stocks," applied to the descendants of cousins, and not to the cousins themselves, and that the fund was divisible into sixteen shares. Robinson v. Shepherd (supra) preferred to Gibson v. Fisher (supra). Wilson, In re, Parker v. Winder, 53 L. J., Ch. 130 ; 24 Ch. D. 664.

Gift to A. and B. for their Lives—Remainder to their Children — Construed per Capita.]—Bequest of a legacy "to be equally divided between A. and B., after which to be equally divided between their children, that is to say, the children of A. and B. above named" :—Held, that the children of A. and B. took per capita, and that on the death of A. and his wife a moiety became divisible, equally, amongst the children of A. and B. Abrey v. Newman, 16 Beav. 431 ; 22 L. J., Ch. 627 ; 17 Jur. 153 ; 1 W. R. 156.

A testator gave a residue upon trust to pay the produce thereof between his grandchildren A. and B., during their respective lives, in equal shares, and after the death of A. and B. to transfer the capital unto and amongst the children of A. and B. in equal shares, and if there should be no children living at their decease, then upon trust for his personal representatives. A. died, leaving children, in the lifetime of B. :—Held, that B. was entitled to the whole for life, and that the capital was to be divided per capita among the children of A. and B. who might be living at B.'s death. Pearce v. Edmeades, 3 Y. & C. 246 ; 8 L. J., Ex. 61 ; 6 Jur. 245.

B. devised copyholds to his sons, G., J. and F., upon certain trusts during the life of his wife, and after her death upon trust to pay the rents equally between his three daughters, R., M. and H., or to sell the same and invest the produce as therein mentioned, and to pay it to his three daughters during their lives for their separate use, and upon further trust "that in case my daughters shall depart this life leaving lawful issue," then the trustees should appropriate "the share of such daughter or daughters to the maintenance and education of such child or children until the age of twenty-one," and directed that his copyhold estates or their produce should be divided amongst "the whole of my grandchildren, share and share alike, in case there should be no lawful issue but of one of my daughters, that is, the children of George, James and Frederick, with the child or children of only one of my daughters, share and share alike," and directed that his trustees should then sell if they had not before done so, the produce to be divided amongst such grandchildren, share and share alike, and as they should respectively attain the age of twenty-one, but should he have no grandchildren or not one who should attain the age of twenty-one, then the estate was to go to K.; and as to all the rest, residue and remainder of his estate and effects, he devised and bequeathed the same to his wife for her own use. All the daughters survived their father; R. died without leaving children, H. died leaving children, M. died having survived her children, but leaving grandchildren:—Held, that the word "issue" was to be read in its widest sense, and would include grandchildren, and that the respective issue of M. and H. took their respective shares by implication, and that they took per capita. Mitchison v. Buckton, 32 L. T. 11; 23 W. R. 480.

By his will a testator gave all the residue of his property (after payment of debts and legacies) to trustees, to get in, convert and invest, and declared the trusts to be, as to one-third of the annual proceeds, for his daughter A. for life, to her separate use; and after her decease the trustees were to apply, for the maintenance, education and advancement of her children, such one-third of the income, or so much thereof as the trustees should in their judgment think fit, until the decease of the survivor of his three daughters A., E. and M.; and as to another one-third of the income, for his daughter E. and her children; and as to the remaining one-third of the income, for his remaining daughter M. and her children; and on the decease of the survivor of A., E. and M., the whole of the principal moneys, and all such income as should happen to be due and unapplied as aforesaid, was to be divided among all and every the children and child of A. E., and M. in equal shares. A. had one child, E. had four, and M. had seven children:—Held, that on the decease of the survivor the whole residue was to be divided per capita, and not per stirpes, among the testator's grandchildren. Nockolds v. Locke, 3 K. & J. 6; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 1064; 5 W. R. 3.

Held, that there was in the will no gift of the income of each one-third share to the children of any one daughter; but that the whole, or so much as should be unapplied at the decease of the survivor of the daughters, fell into the residue. Ib.

The direction as to maintenance of the grandchildren:—Held, not to afford grounds for presuming that the testator intended a division per stirpes of the capital. Ib.

Bequest of stock after previous life estates to T. P. and J. S. during the term of their natural lives, and from and after their decease to the surviving children of J. S. and T. P., share and share alike:—Held, that the survivorship must be referred to the death of the last tenant for life, which is the period for distribution; and that the persons then taking took per capita, not per stirpes. Stevenson v. Gullan, 18 Beav. 590.

A mother gave the income of one moiety of her residuary estate to her daughter Margaret for life, and the income of the other moiety to her daughter Mary Ann for life, and then directed her trustees to stand possessed of one moiety of her estate from and after the death of Margaret, and of the other moiety from and after the death of Mary Ann, to pay, transfer and assign the same unto and amongst all the children of Margaret living at her decease, and the issue then living of any children of hers who should have died in her lifetime, and all the children of Mary Ann who should be living at her decease, and the issue then living of any children of hers who should have died in her lifetime, to be equally divided between or among them if more than one, and if there should be but one such child and no issue of any deceased child, or no such child and only one grandchild or such other issue, then the whole to such one child, grandchild, or other issue; the issue of a deceased child taking their parents' share:—Held, that the full and elaborate language of the will, which clearly imputed a distribution of the whole fund per capita among the children of both daughters, could not be controlled on the ground of the inconvenience of keeping a moiety of the fund in suspense from the death of one daughter till the death of the other, though in some cases, where the language was very concise and obscure, the court had held the share of each of the tenants for life divisible on his death among his own children exclusively. Swabey v. Goldie, 1 Ch. D. 380; 33 L. T. 306.

Bequest to executors of 4,000*l.* in trust to pay one-half of the interest to A., and the other half to B., during their lives; "and as their lives drop and expire, I direct that the principal and interest be reserved and equally divided among their children, when they shall severally attain twenty-one." A. died without issue; the entire principal vests in the children of B., on their severally attaining twenty-one. Smith v. Streatfield, 1 Mer. 358; 15 R. R. 132.

A testator having three species of property, viz., his own property, property derived from his wife, and a reversion in 10,000*l.* consols, bequeathed his own property to his two sisters with benefit of survivorship, his wife's property to his cousin Margaret, and he proceeded thus: "In case of the death of the above three females, the interest to be divided amongst my cousins (naming four) for their lives," and the property, including the 10,000*l.* trust money, "to devolve" to the children of three of those cousins (naming them) in equal proportions:—Held, that Margaret was not, by implication or otherwise, entitled to more than the wife's property. Held, also, that the four cousins took life interests in the trust fund, as tenants in common, and that on the death of each of their shares then set free, went over to the children of the three cousins per capita, and not per stirpes. Swan v. Holmes, 19 Beav. 471.

By a will the residue was given to seven persons as tenants in common for life, and on the death of the survivor was to be divided amongst their children then living per stirpes. By a codicil the gift to the children was revoked, and the residue was to be divided from and after the several deceases of the seven, and after the decease of the survivor of them, amongst their children per capita:—Held, that the words "from and after," &c., were to be read disjunctively, and that, on the death of any of the seven, one-seventh was divisible amongst children of the seven per capita. Cope v. Henshaw, 35 Beav. 420.

—— Construed per Capita.]—Bequest to testator's wife of the use and usage of all his effects for her life, and at her death bequest of the same to four nieces by name, to be by them equally divided, share and share alike, and at their deaths to go equally, share and share alike, to their children :—Held, to give the respective children their parents' shares only. Arrow v. Mellish, 1 De G. & Sm. 355.

Legacy of 600*l.* to F., and at her death to two daughters in equal shares, and at their death to their children. One daughter having died without issue :—Held, that children of other did not take her share. Tuniere v. Peurkes, 2 Sim. & S. 383 ; 4 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 81 ; 25 R. R. 229.

Gift in trust to be equally divided between A., B. and C., separate from "their" husbands, and for "their" sole use, and at their decease to be divided amongst "their" daughters :— Held, that A., B. and C. each took one-third for life, with remainder as to her one-third to her daughters. Wills v. Douglas, 10 Beav. 47 ; 11 Jur. 702.

An annuity to wife, and after her death "the annuity to be equally divided between my two sons, but not the principal ; that I bequeath to their children, to be equally divided between them at the death of my sons" :—Held, that upon the death of either of the sons his children took their parent's share. Turner v. Whittaker, 23 Beav. 196 ; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 848 ; 4 W. R. 689.

A testator bequeathed renewable leaseholds and copyholds to the four grandchildren equally, and after their death "for such children as they, or any or either of them, should leave her or him surviving" :—Held, that on the death of each grandchild his "children" then surviving took as tenants in common. Waldron v. Boulter, 22 Beav. 284.

Gift to A. and B. equally for life, and after their death in trust for and to the use of all and every the child or children of A. and B., both or either of them, if more than one, share and share alike, and until the youngest should attain twenty-one :—Held, on the death of A., that his children living at his death were entitled in equal shares to his moiety of the rents and profits until the youngest of the children of A. and B. had attained twenty-one. Prankerd v. Baker, 14 L. T. 11.

A testator gave certain leaseholds for 999 years, and a share in the R. Waterworks, and all his estate and interest therein to M. and A. and their assigns during the term of their respective natural lives, as tenants in common, and not as joint tenants, and from and immediately after the decease of them (the said M. and A.) he gave the same unto all and every the lawful child and children of the said M. and A. equally as tenants in common, and not as joint tenants, and their respective executors, administrators and assigns for all the residue unexpired of the term of 999 years, or during all his estate and interest therein, subject to the payment of the rent and the performance of the covenants, with a gift of the residue to M., A. and others. M. and A. both survived the testator ; M. had seven children: A. died leaving two children surviving. M. was in possession of the estate ; and upon the question what was the effect of the gift to M. and A. and their children :—Held, that the estate was given in equal moieties to M. and her children on the one hand, and A. and her children on the other, and that on the death of A. her share was divisible amongst her children. Milnes v. Aked, 6 W. R. 430.

Devise to trustees to pay the rents to and amongst testator's four daughters, share and share alike, during their lives ; and in case either should die leaving issue, the share of her so dying to be paid to the child or children of each daughter so dying ; but in case either of the daughters should die without leaving issue, then her share was to be paid to A. and B. :—Held, first, an estate tail in the daughters in remainder after the life estates of them and their children ; secondly, the children of the daughters took their life estates per stirpes. Coles v. Witt, 2 Jur. (N.S.) 1226.

A testator, after certain legacies and bequests as to 400*l.*, directed his executors to invest, raise and pay the dividends to his son Richard for life, "and after his decease upon further trust to pay or assign the principal sum of 400*l.*, with the accruing dividends or interest on the securities in which the same had been invested, unto his sons John, William and James Blackwell, and his daughter Mary Garner, to be equally divided between them, share and share alike, or such of them as should be living at the time of the decease of the said Richard, and the issue of such of them as should be then dead leaving issue ; such issue to take no greater or other share or shares than his, her or their respective parent or parents would have been entitled to if living." The three sons and the daughter died before the tenant for life. He died on the 6th April, 1863. Each of the sons left children. The daughter died without issue :—Held, that the legacy vested in fourths ; that the children of the three sons took one-third each as joint tenants, and the personal representatives of the daughter took the other fourth. Blackwell, In re, 11 L. T. 335.

Under a gift to three persons by name for their respective lives, and subject thereto for their respective children as tenants in common, the life tenants are tenants in common, and the children take per stirpes. Sutcliffe v. Howard, 38 L. J., Ch. 472 ; 17 W. R. 819.

Gift of the income to arise from residue to A. and B. for their lives, share and share alike, and, after their death, of the principal to the children of A. and the children of B., to be divided between them, share and share alike :—Held, that the children of A. and the children of B. took per stirpes. Notts, In re, 26 L. T. 679 ; 20 W. R. 569.

J. L. "gave and bequeathed unto his niece C. B. and his nephew J. T. all his houses situate at W., each to have one-half, to be share and share alike ; and what debts he should owe at his decease, they should pay both of them a like share of the same ; all the above premises he gave, devised, and bequeathed unto his niece C. B. and his nephew J. T., each to enjoy one-half during their lives, and at their decease the said premises to go to their children." J. L. died in 1786. J. T. died in 1804, without children and intestate, leaving C. B. his heiress-at-law, and the heiress-at-law of J. L. C. B. had thirteen children, six of whom survived her. (Part of the premises were taken by the commissioners under the Whitby Improvement Act, and the purchase-money paid into court.) C. B. devised all her estate, right, title and interest in and to the premises and the purchase-money unto her daughter J. B. :—Held, that C. B. and J. T. each took an estate for life in a moiety of the property ; that upon the decease of C. B. and J. T. their children took their parents' moieties respectively as joint tenants in fee ; but that as J. T. had no children, C. B. took his moiety as his heiress-at-law, and that that moiety passed to her devisee. Laverick's Estate, In re, 18 Jur. 304 ; 2 W. R. 113.

A testator gave real and personal estate to trustees during the lives of eight nephews and nieces whom he named, and the survivors and survivor of them, upon trust to pay one-eighth of the rents to each during their respective natural lives; and directed that, in case any should die without leaving issue, the share of him, her or them so dying should go among the survivors in the same manner as their original shares; and in case any of the eight legatees should die leaving issue, the share original and accruing of him, her or them, so dying, should be paid to and equally among such issue; and after the decease of the survivor of the eight legatees, the testator devised such real and personal estate unto the issue then living of the eight legatees and their heirs, the share of the issue in the fee simple to be in the same proportion as the rents and profits he or they might then be in receipt of:—Held, that on the death of the survivor of the eight legatees who had died and left children such children to take per stirpes, but the members of each stirps to take equally. Bradshaw v. Melling, 23 L. J., Ch. 603.

A testatrix bequeathed personalty in trust for A. B. for life, and after his decease for his issue, and on failure of his issue to F. H. S. and R. S. share and share alike, "and after the decease of the said F. H. S. and R. S. to their children share and share alike, and to their heirs for ever." F. H. S. died without having had issue, R. S. survived him and died leaving children, and A. B., who survived them both, died without issue. Upon a petition by the children of R. S. for payment out of a portion of the trust fund which was in court:—Held, that, upon the authorities, the bequest must be construed as a gift after the respective deaths of F. H. S. and R. S. to their respective children, and that, there having been an absolute gift to each of them in the first instance only cut down in favour of his children, in the events which happened the fund was divisible in moieties between the representatives of F. H. S. and the children of R. S. Hutchinson's Trusts, In re, 51 L. J., Ch. 924; 21 Ch. D. 811; 47 L. T. 573. And see Flinn v. Jenkins, 1 Coll. C. C. 365; 8 Jur. 661.

—— Construed per Stirpes to Families and per Capita to Children and Grandchildren of each.]—A testator devised "one-half of the freehold houses and property to his brothers and sisters for their life and then to come to their children, and in the same manner to his wife's brother and brother's children and grandchildren." He had but one brother alive at the date of the will, and left no brother or sister surviving him, and only one brother of the testator's wife was alive at the date of the will, but he survived the testator:—Held, that under these circumstances all the children living at the testator's death of all his brothers and sisters took per stirpes shares in one moiety, and that, subject to the life interest of the wife's surviving mother, the other moiety was divisible amongst all the children and grandchildren, living at his death or coming into existence during the lifetime of the tenant for life, of himself and the other wife's brothers who left children or grandchildren, the families taking per stirpes, and the children and grandchildren of each family per capita. Barnaby v. Tassell, L. R. 11 Eq. 363; 24 L. T. 221; 19 W. R. 323.

When Gift to Children Substitutionary—Per Stirpes.]—Bequest (in effect) to A. for life, and in default of her appointment equally amongst "her sisters, or their children, living at her decease":—Held, first, that the children took by substitution, and therefore that the children of a sister who was dead at the date of the will could not take; and, secondly, that such of the children as were entitled took per stirpes. Congrere v. Palmer, 16 Beav. 435; 23 L. J., Ch. 54; 1 W. R. 156.

Distinction between a gift to several with remainder to their children and one to several with a substitutionary gift to their children in respect to the children taking per stirpes or per capita. Ib.

On a bequest of stock to the wife for life, and afterwards a moiety to be received and divided equally amongst the testator's brothers and sisters and their issue:—Held, that the brothers and sisters living at the testator's death took vested interests, liable to be divested by their dying, leaving issue, before the period of division, and that the issue took by substitution. Shailer v. Groves, 6 Hare, 162. But see this case as reported in 16 L. J., Ch. 367; 11 Jur. 485. See also 2 Jarm., 4th ed., page 737, n.

Bequest of residue upon trust for A. for life, and then to divide unto and equally between all the children of A. living at his death except B., and amongst the issue of any children of A. who should be then dead, and also among the issue of B., such issue taking their respective parents' share:—Held, that the issue of B. took per stirpes, as though a share had been given to B. with the other children of A., and B.'s issue were taking such share by substitution. Minchell v. Lee, 17 Jur. 727.

A testator bequeathed to his daughter a perpetual annuity of 250*l.* a year. By a codicil he directed, that instead of the money being paid to her it should be paid to trustees for her, and he proceeded thus: "After my daughter C.'s death, I give the above money to be divided as follows: to her sister A. 100*l.* a year, and all the rest to be equally divided between her other brothers and sisters or their children." All her brothers and sisters predeceased C.:—Held, first, that A. was entitled to a capital sum sufficient to produce 100*l.* a year; secondly, that the grandchildren who survived their parents took by substitution; and thirdly, that they took per stirpes. Timins v. Stackhouse, 27 Beav. 434.

Bequest to A. for life, and after her decease to the testator's four children, the survivor or survivors of them, equally, or their heirs lawfully begotten. One of the four children died in the life of A.:—Held, that his children took one-fourth by substitution. Price v. Lockley, 6 Beav. 180; 7 Jur. 143. And see Armstrong v. Stockham, 7 Jur. 231.

A testator gave a legacy of 200*l.* to each of his twelve first cousins, nominatim, and then, noticing that one was dead, he gave the legacy intended for him to his children. He gave his wife a life interest in his residuary and personal estate, to be enjoyed in specie; and, from and immediately after his wife's decease, he gave his executors full power to collect all his property together, and sell the houses and other estates, and to convert into money all his funded property, and then to pay first certain legacies, and then the whole of the remainder of his property was to be divided, share and share alike, among his aforesaid twelve first cousins and their children. By a codicil he took away the legacy given by his will to his cousin Mrs. B., but expressed his intention not to exclude her children from the benefit she might thereafter possess in the final division of his property after his wife's decease :—Held, that the cousins who survived the testator took vested interests absolutely, subject, as to those who died leaving issue, to be divested for the benefit of their children, by way of substitution, and that the children of the cousin alluded to by the testator as already dead were entitled to a twelfth share of the residuary estate, as representing such deceased cousin. Burrell v. Baskerfield, 11 Beav. 525 ; 18 L. J., Ch. 422 ; 13 Jur. 311.

—— Per Capita.]—Bequest to the testator's two sisters for their lives, and after the death of the survivor "to be equally divided between the testator's surviving brothers and sisters, or their children equally." The brothers and sisters having all died in the life of the last tenant for life :—Held, that those children only who survived the tenant for life participated, and that they took per capita. Atkinson v. Bartrum, 28 Beav. 219 ; 9 W. R. 885.

Survivorship held to apply not only to the original, but to the substituted class. Ib.

Bequest to executors in trust, that they shall pay, &c., unto and amongst the testator's two brothers and his sisters, or their children, in such shares, &c., as the trustees or the major part of them, or the survivor, his executors, &c., shall think fit. All the children living at the death of the testator held entitled with the parents per capita, the court not having a discretion. Longmore v. Broom, 7 Ves. 124.

Where a testator gave the income of certain property equally among his brother and his three sisters, the share of any one who should die going among his or her children, and directed that on the death of all the corpus should be equally divided between the children of the same brother and sisters, share and share alike :—Held, that, on the construction of the ultimate gift, the corpus was clearly divisible among the children per capita, and the case of Brett v. Horton (4 Beav. 239) did not oblige the court to direct, contrary to the testator's obvious intention, that the ultimate division should be per stirpes. Stone, In re, Baker v. Stone, 64 L. J., Ch. 637 ; [1895] 2 Ch. 196 ; 12 R. 415 ; 72 L. T. 815 ; 44 W. R. 235—C. A.

—— Per Stirpes to Families, per Capita among Issue.]—A testator gave, devised and bequeathed the residue of his estate unto all and every his brothers and sisters, or their issue, to be equally divided between or amongst them, share and share alike, as tenants in common, and not as joint tenants, and to their respective heirs, executors, administrators and assigns. The testator had four brothers and three sisters. All the brothers died several years before the date of the will. Two of the sisters survived the testator, and three of the brothers and the deceased sister left issue :—Held, that the residue was divisible into six equal shares, the surviving sisters each to take one share, and the issue of each deceased brother who left issue and of the deceased sister to take respectively one share, the issue of each stirps, of whatever degree, to take inter se equally per capita. Gowling v. Thompson, 19 L. T. 242 ; 16 W. R. 1131.

A testator, after giving his residuary personal estate to all and every the children of his uncle F. or their issue in equal shares, gave his real estate to A. for life, and after her death upon trust for sale, and to hold the proceeds upon trust for "all and every the children of F. or their issue in equal shares per capita." Four of the six children of F. were dead at the date of the will, and two survived the tenant for life :—Held, that the issue of the four deceased children of F. alive at the death of the testator or born during A.'s lifetime took as by substitution the shares of their deceased ancestors in the proceeds of the realty, the issue of each of the four taking, inter se, in equal shares. Sibley, In re, 46 L. J., Ch. 387 ; 5 Ch. D. 494 ; 37 L. T. 180.

Gift to Children of A. and B.—Children per Capita—B. taking no Interest.]—Bequest between and amongst all and every the child or children of Thomas T., deceased, and Henry T., in equal shares :—Held, that all the children of Thomas and Henry took equally per capita, and not per stirpes, and that Henry himself took nothing. Davies, In re, 29 Beav. 93 ; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 118 ; 9 W. R. 131.

A testator bequeathed life interests in four distinct funds to four nieces respectively, and directed that, upon the decease of any or either of them, the principal of the fund, the interest of which was to be received by her or them, should be held in trust for "the benefit of all and every the lawful children of her or them so dying and of the survivors or survivor of my other nieces hereinbefore named in equal shares." One of the nieces having died, leaving two children :—Held, that her fund was divisible among these children, and among the children of the three other nieces, it being proper to give some force to the word "of," and that word being referable to the word "children" as the last antecedent. Peacock v. Stockford, 3 De G. M. & G. 73.

A bequest of residue "to all the children of my brother R. and my sister M., to be equally divided between them, share and share alike." R. and M. having equal legacies in a former part of the will, and there being nothing in the context from which an intention could be inferred that M. was personally to take an equal share in the residue with the children of R., this construction was rejected, and the gift was held to pass the residue to the children of R. and the children of M. in equal shares. Mason v. Baker, 2 K. & J. 567.

Testator bequeathed to J. W. 1,000*l.* ; to his sister M. W. 200*l.* ; to their mother 200*l.* ; and to the three aunts of J. W. and his sister M. W. 100*l.* each :—Held, that under the last bequest the aunts only, and not the sister, took. Trail v. Kibblewhite, 12 Sim. 5 ; 10 L. J., Ch. 200 ; 5 Jur. 501.

—— B. taking with Children of A. per Stirpes.]—A testator devised and bequeathed his real and personal estate to trustees absolutely, upon trust, as to one moiety of the personalty, to pay and divide the residue equally between and amongst his nephew John and his niece Hannah (whom he described as the children of his late brother Joseph), "and all and every the children of my late nephew Mark Ingle and my niece Eliza Wheelwright," share and share alike. He then desired his trustees to stand possessed of a moiety of the proceeds of the sale of his realty, upon trust to divide the same as before mentioned. In a codicil he referred to the "legacy left and apportioned to my niece Eliza." Some years before the date of the will a brother of the testator, named Mark, had died, leaving three sons, one of whom was named Mark. The evidence shewed that, at the testator's death, the nephew Mark, who had had a son born to him in England, and had emigrated to America, where he had another child, was still living; also that the testator knew of the birth in England of the child of Mark, and of his emigration to America, and that from such circumstances he (the testator) had, shortly before the date of the will, been led to suppose that Mark might be dead:—Held, that by the words "and my niece Eliza" the testator intended a gift to Eliza, and not a gift to the children of Eliza. Ingle, In re, 40 L. J., Ch. 310; L. R. 11 Eq. 578; 24 L. T. 315; 19 W. R. 676.

A bequest of a residue to be divided equally "amongst all the children of my late cousin E., and my cousin P., and their lawful representatives," is a bequest to the children of E. and to P. himself, and not to the children of P. Lugar v. Harman, 1 Cox, 250; 2 Bro. C. C. 85.

A testator directed some property to be divided at a future period amongst the then surviving children of John and Sarah Worn, and Catherine Hales. Sarah was a sister of the testator, but Catherine was a stranger, and Sarah had children, but Catherine was a spinster at the date of the will:—Held, that Catherine personally, and not her children, was entitled to participate. Lugar v. Harman (supra) followed. Stummvoll v. Hales, Johnstone, In re, 4 N. R. 473; 34 Beav. 124; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 716; 10 L. T. 807; 12 W. R. 1137.

A testator gave his real estate to trustees upon trust to sell, the proceeds to be subject to the disposition of his personal estate to the same trustees upon trust to pay certain legacies, and subject thereto "unto and equally amongst all the children of my said brother-in-law, Dr. J. D., and the said R. A., of C., and I direct that the same shall be vested legacies at the time of my decease":—Held, that the gift was to the children of Dr. J. D. and R. A. himself. Featherstone's Trusts, In re, 52 L. J., Ch. 75; 22 Ch. D. 111; 47 L. T. 538; 31 W. R. 89.

Gift to A. and B. for Life, Remainder "on Death of either to Children of each."]—Real and personal property was devised and bequeathed to trustees on trust to pay a moiety of the income to J. for her life, and the other moiety of the income to E. for her life; and on the death of "either" the property was to be held in trust for all the children of "each" who should be living at her decease when and as they should respectively attain the age of twenty-three years, or, being daughters, should marry under that age, in equal shares:—Held, that on the death of J., who died first, her children took the moiety held in trust for her of the property in exclusion of the children of E. England v. England, 20 L. T. 648; 17 W. R. 719.

Held, also, that the gifts to the children of J. and E. were not void on the ground of remoteness. Ib.

5. VESTED AND CONTINGENT INTERESTS.

See VESTED CONTINGENT AND FUTURE INTERESTS.

6. DEATH SIMPLY REGARDED AS A CONTINGENT EVENT.

Immediate Gift — Construed strictly.] — Bequest to the use and behoof of A., and in case of her decease to the use and behoof of her children, share and share alike:—Held, a life interest only in A., the capital to her children after her decease. Douglas (Lord) v. Chalmer, 2 Ves. 500.

Bequest of 1,000*l.* to testator's sister, and, in case of her demise, 800*l.* to A., and the remaining 200*l.* to B. The sister entitled for life, then to go in the proportions. Billings v. Sandom, 1 Bro. C. C. 393.

The will of S. C., after bequeathing her property to A. C. and J. C., continued thus: "In case of the demise of either the said A. C. or J. C., I do hereby bequeath the same . . . to the survivor for her sole use and benefit during her or their natural lifetime":—Held, that the residue was not disposed of, and that A. C. and J. C. took only as tenants for life. Watson v. Watson, Clarke, In goods of, 51 L. J., P. 13; 7 P. D. 10; 47 L. T. 24; 30 W. R. 275.

—— Construed Death before Testator.]—Rule that a bequest to any person, and in case of his death to another, with no reference to the period within which that event is to take place, vests absolutely if such person survive the testator. Home v. Pillans, Coop. t. Brough. 198; 2 Myl. & K. 15.

Testatrix bequeathed as follows: "I give the legacy of 4,000*l.* to A., and in case of his decease I give the same legacy to his wife, and at her decease to their eldest daughter":—Held, that A., having survived the testatrix, was absolutely entitled to the legacy. Crigan v. Baines, 7 Sim. 40.

Words of will after giving legacy were, "and in case of legatee's death then to children":—Held, that words referred to legatee's death before testator, and that legatee surviving him took absolutely. Slade v. Milner, 4 Madd. 144.

Bequest to A., and, in case of her death, to B.:—Held, an absolute interest in A. Hinckley v. Simmons, 4 Ves. 160.

Legacy to "A., or in case of his death," &c., construed to mean to A. absolutely, if living. Turner v. Moor, 6 Ves. 557.

A clause of survivorship between two legatees, if either of them should die, confined to a case of lapse, and did not prevent the legacies vesting. King v. Taylor, 5 Ves. 806; 5 R. R. 172.

Legacies to two sisters, with a direction, in case of the death of either, reciprocally to devolve to the other; that direction confined to the case of lapse by the death of either in the life of the testator, and did not prevent the vesting absolutely. Cambridge v. Rous, 8 Ves. 12; 6 R. R. 199.

Residuary bequest in trust for the use and benefit of A., and in case of her death to be equally divided between the children of B. Payment decreed to the executor of A., as having taken the absolute interest. Ommaney v. Bevan, 18 Ves. 291.

A testator resident abroad gave a legacy to A., "or in case of his decease, or at his decease, to be equally divided amongst his children." He gave other legacies in similar terms to B., C., &c., and he directed these sums to be paid to the above persons, then residing in Wales; and he appointed executors in trust, to send them to the respective individuals within six months:—Held, that the parents took absolute interests. Arthur v. Hughes, 4 Beav. 506.

Legacy of stock in trust for the use, exclusive right, and property of A., but should she happen to die then in that case among her children; another legacy of stock to A., to be paid her as soon as possible, or, in the event of her death, among her children; another legacy of stock to B., and in case of her death among her children; all these legacies held absolute in the respective mothers. Webster v. Hale, 8 Ves. 410; 7 R. R. 103.

One devises to A. 500*l*., to B. 500*l*., and so to five others the like sum; "and if any to whom I have given any money legacy happen to die, then his or her legacy, and also the residue of my personal estate, to go to such of them as shall be then living." Decreed, it should be taken to be living at the death of the testator, and not at any time after, so that the death of any of the legatees after would not carry it to the survivors. Trotter v. Williams, Pre. Ch. 78.

Residuary personal property held to be vested in A. and B. in equal moieties, and descendible in the same proportions to their respective children, notwithstanding words giving the property to the survivor "in the event of the death of either," the word "death" being held to refer to death in the testator's lifetime. Clarke v. Lubbock, 1 Y. & C. C. C. 492; 6 Jur. 548.

Bequest of a legacy to the plaintiff for her sole use and benefit, and "in the event of her death, then" to her youngest surviving son:—Held, that the event contemplated a death in the testator's lifetime, and that the plaintiff, having survived him, was entitled absolutely. Schenk v. Agnew, 4 K. & J. 405.

Bequest to four persons equally, and "in case of the death" of any or either of them, "in the lifetime of the other or others," their shares to go to "survivor or survivors of them":—Held, that the survivorship had reference to the period of the testator's death. Howard v. Howard, 21 Beav. 550.

A testator gave certain gifts to different persons, including some express estates for life. He then gave certain leaseholds to his daughter M. (a married woman) for her own proper and absolute use and benefit; and afterwards provided, that in case she should die, the premises should go and be for the sole use and benefit of her children living at her decease. The testator appointed M. his sole executrix. M. survived:—Held, first, that the gift was not for her separate use independent of her husband. Taylor v. Stainton, 2 Jur. (N.S.) 634; 4 W. R. 538.

Held, secondly, that the subsequent gift for the benefit of her children was only substitutionary, to prevent a lapse in case of her decease before the testator; and that, as she survived the testator, it did not cut down the absolute interest given to her in the first instance; and the property was therefore held to belong to her husband, and to pass to his assignees in bankruptcy. Ib.

A testator gave legacies to his two brothers, and directed that if either of them "die in my lifetime" his legacy should go to his children, but the legacies were not to be paid till six months after his wife's death. By a codicil reciting the effect of his will and the death of one of his brothers, he directed his legacy to be held for the benefit of his widow for life, and after her death the principal to be paid to her children; and he directed that if his other brother "shall die leaving a widow," such widow should have an interest in the legacy given him in like manner as he had directed the legacy of the deceased brother:—Held, that the words "shall die leaving a widow" meant die in the testator's lifetime, and that interest was payable from the death of the widow. Hood v. Hood, 18 W. R. 88.

A testator left legacies to three persons, and if any of them died their share was to go to the others. One of the legatees and the testator died at the same instant:—Held, that "death" must, according to the ordinary rule, mean death in the testator's lifetime, and that the legacy of the legatee so dying became part of the residue. Elliott v. Smith, Elliott, In re, 52 L. J., Ch. 222; 22 Ch. D. 236; 48 L. T. 27; 31 W. R. 336. And see Chalmers v. Storil, 2 V. & B. 222.

—— Construed Death during Minority.]—Devise to "children, share and share alike." First codicil appointed a guardian "during minority,"—second codicil "in the event of the death of any of the children, their portion to be divided among the survivors share and share alike":—Held, that "in the event of the death" meant death during minority. In a will "in the event of the death of the devisee" are never construed to mean the event of a lapse by death before the testator, except from necessity. Montgomery v. Montgomery, 2 Ir. Eq. R. 161.

Future Gift—Construed strictly.]—A testatrix bequeathed a legacy to A., his executors, &c., "but in case he should die leaving lawful issue," she bequeathed it to A.'s children. A. survived the testatrix:—Held, that A. took a life interest only. Johnston v. Antrobus, 21 Beav. 556.

In order to advance the apparent intention of the testator, the words "if he should die" were construed "when he should die." Smart v. Clark, 3 Russ. 365; 5 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 111; 27 R. R. 96.

A testator gave his whole property to his wife, upon condition that she should pay an annuity of 150*l*. to his mother during her life, and after her death to his wife, to be equally divided between those of his children who should survive her, share and share alike. All the testator's children died in the lifetime of his widow, who married again, and died leaving her husband surviving her:—Held, upon her death, that in the events which had happened, the testator's property was undisposed of, and that the next of kin, and not the second husband in right of his wife, were entitled to it. Joslin v. Hammond, 2 Myl. & K. 113; 3 L. J., Ch. 148.

A testator gave freehold and leasehold property to his wife for life, and after her death, to A., B. and C., share and share alike (there being neither words of inheritance nor of restriction as to their interest), and after their decease to their children. A., after the death of the testator and tenant for life, died without issue:—Held, that A. was not absolutely entitled, and that his share fell into the residue. Waters v. Waters, 26 L. J., Ch. 624; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 654.

—— When construed Death before Testator.]—Whether the expression in a will, "in case of death," refers to a death in the lifetime of the testatrix, or to a death at any time, depends upon the context. Tilson v. Jones, 1 Russ. & M. 553.

Legacy of 3,000*l*. to testator's wife A. for life, and after her death one-third to each of his daughters, M. and H., with proviso that if either daughter should die unmarried, or without issue, benefit of survivorship; and if both should die unmarried or without issue, then to son. Also, two-thirds of residue in same manner subject to such contingencies in favour of their issue, and with like benefit of survivorship as was before declared as to the 3,000*l.* A. died in life of testator:—Held, on her death the daughters M. and H. took vested interests in shares of 3,000*l.*, and of the residue. Laffer v. Edwards, 2 Madd. 210.

Bequest over in case of death of devisee generally, and not expressly referable to any certain event or time, within or before which such dying must occur, to give effect to the remainder:—Held, not necessarily to refer to a dying in the lifetime of the testator, but will be construed so as to give effect to such intention on part of testator as may be presumed from the language of the will to have been his object. Hervey v. M'Laughlin, 1 Price, 264; 16 R. R. 713.

The expression "in case of either of their deaths," in a gift over:—Held, not to be confined to deaths taking place during the life of the tenant for life after the testator's death only. Le Jeune v. Le Jeune, 2 Keen, 701; 1 Jur. 235.

Bequest of copyhold and leasehold property to the testator's widow for life; and at her death, the whole to be sold and divided into five parts, one of which was to be paid to each of the testator's four sons living at her decease; and in case of either of their deaths, his share to be paid to his issue; and in case either should die without issue, his share to be divided amongst the surviving children:—Held, that the child of a son who died in the testator's life was entitled to such share as her parent, if he had survived the widow, would have been entitled to. Ib.

—— Construed Death before Tenant for Life.]—The words "in case of the death" construed to refer to death in the life of the tenant for life. Galland v. Leonard, 1 Swan. 161; 1 Wils. Ch. 129; 18 R. R. 44.

Words importing contingency applied to an inevitable event, construed to refer to the occurrence of the event under peculiar circumstances. Ib.

Bequest to A. for life, and after her death to B. and C. or their children, in case of their decease. B. died in the lifetime of the tenant for life, leaving children:—Held, that B. took a vested interest, liable to be divested in the event which happened. Bolitho v. Hillyar, 34 Beav. 180; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 526; 13 W. R. 600.

Bequest to A. for life, and afterwards to the testator's brothers and sisters, share and share alike, or their children in case of their decease:—Held, that the children of a brother, who survived the testator, but died in the life of the tenant for life, were entitled. Ib.

In a bequest of 1,000*l.* to certain persons for life, and (after their decease) of 400*l.*, part thereof, to A. and B., part and part alike; viz., 200*l.* to A. and 200*l.* to B. for the trouble they might have in the execution of the will; "but in case of either of their deaths," to the survivor, "and in case of both their deaths, to the heirs, executors and administrators of such survivor, 200*l.* only." The words, "in case of death," were held to refer to death in the lifetime of the tenant for life of the 1,000*l.* Green v. Barrow, 10 Hare, 459; 1 W. R. 197.

A. bequeathed stock to his aunt for life, and, after her death, to his father; "and, in case of his death, then to devolve on his brothers and sisters, or their representatives." The father and two brothers predeceased the aunt:—Held, that the death of the father meant death in the life of the tenant for life; that the brothers and sisters who survived the aunt, and the representatives of those who predeceased her, were entitled to the stock. Henderson, In re, 28 Beav. 656. And see Astley v. Declieve, 8 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 20; Ive v. King, ante, col. 979.

Devise of Real Estate.]—The rule established in numerous cases, that a bequest to A., and in case of his death to B., gives A. an absolute interest in case he survives the testator, is not to be extended to devises of real estate. Accordingly, upon a devise of a certain share of a real estate to the testator's sisters, Mary and Lucy, share and share alike; "and in case of their demise," to be equally divided amongst their children, or their lawful heirs:—Held, that the sisters took estates for life only, with remainder to their children as tenants in common in fee. Bowen v. Scowcroft, 2 Y. & C. 640; 7 L. J., Ex. 25.

7. Words "Death without Issue."

a. Whether they refer to Indefinite Failure of Issue or Failure at the Death.

i. Gifts of Personalty.

General Rule—Indefinite Failure—Void for Remoteness.]—Limitation of personal property after an indefinite failure of issue void, as too remote, otherwise if confined to the time of the death. Courts endeavour to support such limitation, taking advantage of any expression to construe the event, never having had issue, or to confine it to the death. Widdison v. Hodgkin, 2 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 9.

Personal estate bequeathed to F., her executors, administrators and assigns; but in case of the death of F. without issue, remainder over; this remainder over too remote, as it must be construed a general dying without issue. Bigge v. Bensley, 1 Bro. C. C. 187.

No personal property can be limited on so remote a contingency as the death of a person dying without issue generally. Grey v. Montagu, 3 Bro. P. C. 314. Affirming 2 Eden, 205. S. P., Pearse v. Reeve, Pol. 29; Green v. Rod, Fitzg. 68; Warman v. Seaman, Pol. 114; Gibbs v. Barnardiston, Pre. Ch. 323; Exel v. Wallace, 2 Ves. Sen. 120; Everest v. Gell, 1 Ves. 286; 2 R. R. 107; Boehm v. Clarke, 9 Ves. 580; Beauclerk v. Dormer, 2 Atk. 308; Jeffrey v. Sprigge, 1 Cox, 62.

Limitation of sum of money to K. for life, then to her children, and if no children to L., is void. Boucher v. Anthram, Pol. 37.

Limitation of trust of term to A. after death of B., without heir of his body, is void. Burges v. Burges, Pol. 40.

Remainder of trust of term limited after another's dying without heirs is void. Backhouse v. Bellingham, Pol. 33. S. P., Bodens v. Galway (Lord), 2 Eden, 297.

Devise of leasehold for years to A., if he dies without issue, remainder over, the whole interest vests in the first taker; otherwise if a lease for lives; for if the taker makes no use of his power on his death, it vests in the remainderman, who takes as special occupant. Saltern v. Saltern, 2 Atk. 376.

Bequest of money to testator's wife, and the issue of her body, and failing such issue, to such of her heirs whom she should appoint by written will :—Held, that the subsequent words did not control the previous limitation, and, therefore, that a bequest over of the money was void, as being too remote. Howston v. Ives, 2 Eden, 216.

Bequest of money to A., upon condition that he should pay an annuity to B., and in case B. should die without issue, then to be equally divided amongst such of the testatrix's nearest relations as should at that time be living :—Held, the bequest over was too remote. Destouches v. Walker, 2 Eden, 261.

Legacy given upon a man's dying without issue ; the man dies leaving issue, which issue within six months after died without issue ; the legacy not due, it not being intended to arise upon any remoter contingency than the man's dying without issue living at his death. Nichols v. Hooper, 1 P. Wms. 198 ; 2 Vern. 686.

A., possessed of a term, devised it to his wife for life, remainder to his first son for life, and if he died without issue, to his second son, &c. The remainder to the second son was held void. Love v. Windham, 1 Lev. 290 ; 2 Ch. Rep. 14.

Residue of personal estate bequeathed to the children of the testator's two daughters, their executors, &c., with a limitation over in case both his daughters should die without issue, a vested interest in the grandchildren, and the limitation over, is too remote. Rawlins v. Goldfrap, 5 Ves. 440.

Testator bequeathed 5,000*l.* in trust to pay the interest to his nephew John for life, remainder to John's first son for life, remainder as to the principal for the children of John, and for default of such issue to pay the interest to the second and other sons of John successively and to their respective issue ; and for default of issue male of John, to pay the interest to the testator's nephew Charles for life, &c., &c. :—Held, that the words in italics did not mean "if John shall never have a son," so as to make the limitation to Charles take effect by way of substitution, but that that and all the other limitations subsequent to the limitation to the first son of John were void for remoteness. Burley v. Evelyn, 16 Sim. 290 ; 12 Jur. 712.

Testatrix gave all her estate, real and personal, to her daughter and her heirs, and half the navigation money for her natural life, and in case she died without issue all to be divided between four nephews and nieces named ; the part of one only for life, and then to be divided between the survivors. The limitation over too remote, there being no expression or circumstance to limit the the generality of the words to a failure of issue at the time of the death : as to what property it extends to, quære. Barlow v. Salter, 17 Ves. 479.

Devise for life, and in default of issue to another for life and in default of his issue remainder over ; the limitation over void, as to the personal property, either as too remote, or an estate tail by implication. Id. 484.

A., by will, gives the surplus of his personal estate to his daughter, whom he makes executrix, and willed, that if she died without issue, it should go over to B., and that she should give security that if she died without issue it should go over accordingly. The devise is void ; but whether the directing a bond to be given, &c., does not alter the case, quære. Deering v. Hanbury, 1 Vern. 478.

A gift over of money upon the death of a legatee without issue is void, unless from the words of the will it can be collected that the testator meant a death without issue at the time of the death of the legatee. A testator gave to his brother 300*l.* per annum during his life, and to each of two nephews 150*l.* during their lives ; but if either of the nephews died, the other to inherit the whole 300*l.*, and, if the brother died without issue, the two nephews to inherit from the brother ; and he then proceeded to state that the reason why he left only the interest to his brother and two nephews, was, that if they died without issue, the money might go to his three cousins, to be divided equally between them. The brother and nephews all died without issue :—Held, that the gift over to the cousins was void, as being too remote. Lepine v. Ferard, 2 Russ. & M. 378 ; 1 L. J., Ch. 150.

A. limited 10,000*l.*, on failure of issue of the body of husband and wife, to B. in tail ; the remainder is void as an executory devise, being too remote ; otherwise, where the limitations are for life, that confining it to a failure of issue during the lives in being ; and in the case of executory devises, it has been held to be a reasonable construction, if it falls within the compass of ever so many lives in being at the same time. Trafford v. Boehm, 3 Atk. 449.

A testator, who was an Armenian merchant, by his will, made in India in the year 1791, directed that his property of every description should be administered according to the law of England. He then gave various legacies, and directed the residue of his estate and effects to be divided into sixteen shares, six of which were to be placed in the government funds of Great Britain, there to remain for ever in the testator's name, and the interest thereof to be received by his three sons, Alexander, John and Lewis, successively for life, and after the death of the survivor of his three sons the interest to be received by the first and other sons of Alexander, and their issue in succession for life ; and in default of issue of Alexander, the interest to be received by the first and other sons of John, and their issue in succession for life, with a similar direction in default of issue of John, for the benefit of the issue of Lewis :—Held, that after the life estates to the testator's three sons, the rest of the gifts were void for remoteness. Raphael v. Boehm, 22 L. J., Ch. 299.

A father, by will made in 1821, after a gift of leaseholds to his daughter, gave all the remainder of his property whatsoever to his wife, the income to her for life, and at her death to his daughter, for her own benefit and her children, or one only child if she should have any (all that was given to her being for her own benefit, and not to be subject to the debts, control or disposition of any husband she might marry) ; but if she should die without issue the leaseholds were to be enjoyed by his wife for life, and at her death to his sister S. for her life, and at her death, together with all that was left to his wife for her life, to be equally divided between all the grandchildren of his sister. The daughter died without having had a child :—Held, that she was entitled absolutely both to the leasehold specifically bequeathed to her and to the residue given subject to the widow's life interest, and that the limitations over, if the daughter "should die without issue," were void for remoteness. Fisher v. Webster, 42 L. J., Ch. 156 ; L. R. 14 Eq. 283 ; 26 L. T. 765. And see Att.-Gen. v.

Hall, Fitzg. 314; Down v. Penny, 19 Ves. 548; 1 Mer. 20.

When restricted to Failure of Issue at the Death.]—Devise of 400*l.* to A., and if A. die without issue, then to B.; this is good, and must be intended, if A. die without issue living at his death. Pleydell v. Pleydell, 1 P. Wms. 748.

If the court should admit of a distinction between chattels real and personal, it would introduce confusion. Ib.

Limitation of personal property, if A. should die without issue male, to B. if living, if not C. and D. in succession of age to enjoy, &c., not too remote. Southey v. Somerville (Lord), 13 Ves. 486.

A father is the judge of the quantum, and also of the time when his daughter's provision shall take place, and a limitation to a daughter on failure of issue male of an eldest son or sons, is not too remote, but shall be considered as a provision. Goring v. Nash, 3 Atk. 191.

A father limited a copyhold estate to a first son in tail, and to a second, third, fourth and fifth son, but not having surrendered it, the second son brought his bill to have the want of a surrender supplied. The court will decree it for all the sons in the same order that the father left it; for where it does not introduce a hardship, or leave other children in distress, the court will always decree the provision made for one child to be as extensive as he intended. Ib.

A. gives all his worldly substance to his daughter J., provided she marries with the consent of his executors; but if she should marry without such consent, or should die without issue, then he gives his estate to other persons; the daughter married with consent, but died without ever having any issue; upon a question when this bequest over took effect, it was held to take effect upon the death of the daughter without issue living at that time. Kelly v. Fowler, 3 Bro. P. C. 299.

Bequest of personal estate after a contingent limitation in tail, which did not take effect, established. Phipps v. Mulgrave (Lord), 3 Ves. 614; 2 R. R. 607.

A devise of real estate to A., and the heirs of his body lawfully begotten, and in case of his death without leaving issue of his body, to go over. The testator then bequeathed the residue of his personal estate to A.; and in case he should happen to die without issue of his body lawfully begotten, that in such case the residue should also go over. The bequest over of the residue not too remote, but a good executory bequest, as depending on the same event on which the real estate had been limited over. Foley v. Irwin, 2 Ball & B. 435.

A. limited 10,000*l.* on failure of issue of the body of husband and wife to B. in tail, the remainder is void as an executory devise, being too remote; otherwise where the limitations are for life, that confining it to a failure of issue during the lives in being, and in the case of executory devises, it has been held to be a reasonable construction if it falls within the compass of ever so many lives in being at the same time. Trafford v. Boehm, 3 Atk. 449.

A testator, by his will, gave his residuary estate to trustees, upon trust to permit his two sisters to receive the income thereof for their lives, and after the death of the survivor to pay the capital among their children. If they should die without issue, then in trust for the testator's brother Thomas; but if he should be dead, in trust for his children; and if Thomas and his children should be then dead, in trust for the testator's next of kin. By a codicil, the testator gave as follows: "In addition to my will, I do leave my effects, failing my brothers and sisters and their heirs, to my cousins," naming them. The testator had, in addition to his sisters and brother, one other brother. They all died without leaving any children:—Held, that the gift in the codicil was to take effect or to fail at the time of division; that the bequest to the cousins was not too remote, but took effect. Pattison, In re, 5 De G. & Sm. 591; 22 L. J., Ch. 286.

A testator bequeathed to his daughters A. and C. 1,000*l.* each, to be left at interest by his executors and trustees, and the interest regularly paid to them; and should they marry, it must be with the consent of their brother; and even in that case their husbands were to have no control over principal or interest; and the receipt of his daughters was to be a sufficient discharge of the interest. Should either of his daughters die, or both of them, without issue, they might by their last will and testament dispose of 500*l.* each of 2,000*l.* to any of their brothers or sisters, or nephews and nieces, but to no other person; the remaining 1,000*l.* to be divided amongst his surviving children, share and share alike; and should his daughters, or either of them, wish to purchase an annuity with their share of the 2,000*l.* for their life or lives, with the consent or under the direction and advice of their guardians, they were to be at liberty to do so. C. died intestate and without issue:—Held, first, that the daughters took life interests only in the 1,000*l.* O'Neill v. Montgomery, 12 Ir. Ch. R. 163.

Held, secondly, that as to 500*l.* of C.'s share, a trust was created for the brothers and sisters, and nephews and nieces, living at her death, and that they were entitled equally to the 500*l.* in default of appointment. Ib.

Held, thirdly, that the brothers of C. who survived her were entitled to the remaining 500*l.*, her sisters having died before her. Ib.

And see Chamberlain v. Jacob, Ambl. 72.

—— Death without leaving Issue.]—One possessed of a term devises it to A. and B., and if either of them die and leave no issue of their respective bodies, then to C.: this held a good limitation to C., if A. or B. left no issue at their death. Forth v. Chapman, 1 P. Wms. 664.

According to Lord Hardwicke's note of Forth v. Chapman (supra), Lord Macclesfield held, that the words "leave no issue" must relate to the time of the deaths of the testators' two nephews, and could not be extended to a dying without issue generally. See Beauclerk v. Dormer, supra, col. 1012.

Devise of a term to A. for life, remainder to such children as the testator shall leave at his death; and if all his children die without leaving issue, then to B. The children die without leaving any issue at the time of their death; this is a good devise over to B. Atkinson v. Hutchinson, 3 P. Wms. 258.

Where the words of a devise of leasehold would make an express estate tail in the case of a freehold, there a devise over of such leasehold is void; secus, if the words in the former devise would, in the case of a freehold, make an estate tail only by implication. Id. 259.

Devise of bank stock to daughter for life, remainder to such child or children of hers as should be living at her death; and if she should not leave any child, or if all children should die without issue, then to J.; the daughter had a son born at the time of making the will:—Held, the words "without issue" were to be construed "without leaving issue," and that the remainder over to J. was a good remainder, and not too remote. Sheppard v. Lessingham, Ambl. 122.

Personal estate may be limited on life of child in esse, and twenty-one years after. Id. 124.

The court never held a limitation after the death of a person not in esse, without issue, good. Ib.

In general a limitation of personalty, after dying without issue, is void; but the court will, if possible, so construe the words "dying without issue" as to support the limitation over. Ib.

Testator devises leasehold premises to his executor, after payment of certain sums, to pay the rents to A. for life, and then that his natural daughter should have the same for her life; and in case she should die leaving no lawful issue, he bequeathed the premises to his executors, to be sold for the purposes of the will:—Held, the devise over to the executors not too remote. Taylor v. Clarke, 2 Eden, 202.

A man gives his estate to his wife so long as she shall remain unmarried, but if she marries then to his daughter; and in case the daughter should die without leaving issue, then to J. The daughter died without issue in the mother's lifetime, who still remained a widow:—Held, that the reversionary interest belonged to J. upon the death of the daughter without issue then living. Gordon v. Adolphus, 3 Bro. P. C. 306.

Devise of freehold and leasehold estate to A. and B., as tenants in common, and if either of them should die without leaving issue, then, as to the share of such of them as should so die without issue as aforesaid, to the use of the survivors of them (the said A. and B.) and the heirs of his body; and in case both of them should die without issue of his or their body or bodies, then to the use of C. for life, with remainder to the trustees to preserve, &c., and divers remainders over:—Held, that the limitation to the survivor was a good limitation by way of executory devise, that by the word issue in the succeeding clause, the testator intended such issue as were to take under the prior limitation, and that consequently the limitation over to C. was not too remote. Radford v. Radford, 1 Keen, 486; 6 L. J., Ch. 138.

Bequest of 2,000*l.* in trust for testator's niece, who was then unmarried, with a bequest over if she should die without leaving any issue to attain twenty-one:—Held, not to give her an absolute vested interest in the 2,000*l.*, as the death referred to could not be construed to mean a death in the lifetime of the testator. Daniel v. Warren, 2 Y. & C. C. C. 290; 7 Jur. 462.

Bequest of residue to A. for his life, and his heirs male after him; and, if he should not leave any son, then to go to B. and his heirs male. Upon the death of A. without leaving male issue, the limitation to B. takes effect. Mansell v. Grove, 2 Y. & C. C. C. 484; 7 Jur. 666.

Testatrix by her will gave 500*l.* to each of her two nieces, to be settled as she should thereinafter describe, and directed that the provision therein made for her nieces should not be subject to the control of any husbands they might marry, but should remain vested in her executors in trust until a proper settlement was made; and by a codicil she directed that if either of her nieces should die without leaving issue, the legacy given to her should devolve to the other niece and her children, with a gift over if both should die without issue:—Held, that this was an executory trust, and that the nieces took life interests with remainder to their children and cross-remainders between them. Holloway v. Collier, 1 W. R. 266.

As to limitation of personal estate after contingent limitation in tail. See Sabbarton v. Sabbarton, Cas. t. Talb. 245.

A testator, by his will, dated in 1850, gave all his property real and personal, whether land in New South Wales, or in the island of Ceylon, or funds in the hands of A. & Co., of Calcutta, or of G. in England or elsewhere, to the members of the firm of A. & Co., in trust for the benefit, in equal portions, to the extent of the annual income of his property, of his brothers E. and C., or the heirs of their bodies lawfully begotten; and the meaning of his will was, that if either brother should die leaving lawfully begotten heirs of his body, then should the share or portion of such brother descend to such lawfully begotten heirs; but if one brother should die without lawful issue, then should the whole annual income be paid to the surviving brother, or in case of his death also to his lawfully begotten heirs; but in case both brothers should demise without lawfully begotten heirs, then should the whole property be divided among his nearest of kin. The testator then appointed executors, with power to appoint other executors, also with full power to get in all moneys, and to sell, dispose of, and convert into money all his real and personal estate, either by public auction or private contract, as to his executors should seem meet:—Held, that the testator's personalty was subject to an executory gift over on the death of his two brothers without leaving issue living at his death. Greenway v. Greenway, 2 De G. F. & J. 128; 29 L. J., Ch. 601. Affirming 6 Jur. (N.S.) 138; 8 W. R. 176.

—— Gift Over "at Decease."]—Testator gave fourth of personal estate to son absolutely, but by codicil directed that son's share should be only for life of himself and wife, provided they had no issue, and that at their death it should fall into the residue:—Held, son did not take absolutely, but subject to executory bequest over in case there was no issue of him and wife living at death of survivor. Rackstraw v. Vile, 1 Sim. & S. 604; 2 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 102; 24 R. R. 252.

—— "After Decease."]—Testator gave the residue of his personal estate to trustees for the use of B. during his life, and to the lawful heirs of his body after his demise; "but in case of his dying without issue of his body after his decease I give all such residue to O."; this creates a contingency with a double aspect, and in the event of B. having no child, the limitation to O. is good. Trotter v. Oswald, 1 Cox, 317.

One by will gives all his lands, money, &c., to his wife, provided if wife dies without issue, then 80*l.* shall remain to his brother after his wife's death. The brother dies in the lifetime of the wife. It was decreed, the legacy good. Pinbury v. Elkin, 2 Vern. 758, 766; Pre. Ch. 483; 1 P. Wms. 563.

—— "In Case of Death."]—Bequest to testator's daughter and her children, and in default of such issue, and in case of her death, to A. and B.; the limitation over takes effect on her dying without children. Gawler v. Cadby, Jac. 346.

A testatrix bequeathed a moiety of her residuary estate to her daughter E. B. O., so that the annual interest thereof should be received by her for her natural life, and upon her decease to go and be equally divided amongst all and every her children lawfully begotten; and in case of her decease without lawful issue, then to J. O. E. B. O. married, and had only one child, which died an infant in her lifetime:—Held, that the word "then" did not mean the instant of death of E. B. O., the mother, but death without issue generally, or without ever having had issue; and that the child of E. B. O., notwithstanding its death in its mother's lifetime, took under the will of the testatrix an absolute vested interest in a moiety of her residuary estate. Pye v. Linwood, 6 Jur. 618.

—— To Several and the Survivor.]—One having two nephews, A. and B., devises his personal estate to them; and if either die without children, then to the survivor; this is good. Hughes v. Sayer, 1 P. Wms. 532.

If separate legacies are given to two or more persons, with a limitation over to the survivor or survivors in case of the death of either without issue, the presumption, primâ facie, is that the testator had not in his contemplation an indefinite failure of issue. Where pecuniary legacies were bequeathed to several persons for their lives, and if any of them should die without issue, their proportions to be divided among the survivors, the sums were directed to be secured in court, and the dividends paid to the legatees for their respective lives, with liberty to any person to apply upon the death of each legatee. Whether such legatees took an absolute interest in their respective legacies, subject to an executory bequest over in case of their death leaving no issue, or whether they took an interest for life only, quære. Ranelagh v. Ranelagh, 2 Myl. & K. 441; 1 L. J., Ch. 183.

A testator, who had two sons and one daughter, gave the interest, dividends, and annual proceeds of 3,000*l.* stock, standing in his name, to W., one of his children, for life; and, after his decease, he gave the said principal stock or sum of 3,000*l.* unto all and every the child and children of W., to be equally divided between and amongst them, if more than one, share and share alike, and if but one, the whole to such one, to be paid or transferred to him, her or them, on his, her or their attaining twenty-one, and the interest to be in the meantime applied for maintenance and education. He gave similar legacies to each of his other two children and their children; "and upon the death of either of my said sons or daughters without issue, then I direct that the interest, dividends and produce so, as aforesaid, given and bequeathed to him, her or them so dying, shall be paid and payable to the survivors or survivor of them (my said sons and daughter) in equal shares and proportions." The testator's son W. survived him and had one child, who predeceased him:—Held, that the limitation over referred to the death of either of the testator's children without leaving issue living at his death; that the child of W. took a vested interest at his birth, but liable to be devested by the death of W. without leaving issue living at his death, and that the gift over, therefore, took effect. Westwood v. Southey, 2 Sim. (N.S.) 192; 21 L. J., Ch. 473; 16 Jur. 400.

Testatrix, before the statute 1 Vict. c. 20, bequeathed the residue of her personal estate to her son A. and her daughter B., to be divided equally between them in case they were both living at the time of her decease; but if either of them should happen to die before her, or at any time after, without issue, then she bequeathed the share of him or her so dying, and without issue, to the survivor of them. A. and B. survived the testatrix. A. died unmarried in the lifetime of B.:—Held, that the moiety of the residue given to A. devolved to B. Turner v. Frampton, 2 Coll. C. C. 331; 10 Jur. 24.

A., seised and possessed of real and personal estates, devises a chattel interest to B., her executors, administrators and assigns, and freehold and chattel estates and interests to C., her heirs, executors, administrators and assigns, with a proviso that in case either should die unmarried, or being married should die without issue, then that the bequests so appointed for such of them so dying unmarried, or being married so dying without issue, should go to and remain to the survivor of them, her heirs, executors, administrators and assigns:—Held that the words "without issue" meant an indefinite failure of issue, and not issue living at the time of the death of the devisee. O'Donohoe v. King, 8 Ir. Eq. R. 185.

Devise of an estate charged with two several legacies to A. and B.; and in case A. or B. die without lawful issue, then the whole of the said two legacies to go to the survivor, his executors, &c. A. dies without issue in the testator's lifetime:—Held, the legacy lapsed, the contingency on which it was given over being too remote. Massey v. Hudson, 2 Mer. 130; 16 R. R. 158.

—— To Persons then living.]—J. H., by his will, gave to C. H., his adopted daughter, 20,000*l.* 3 per cent. consols, and his house and landed property at C. and M. The will then proceeded in the following terms: "But in case of her death without lawful issue, I then will the money so left to her to be equally divided betwixt my nephews who may be living at the time; and the land, &c., at C., to my nephew the Rev. J. H.; and that at M. to my nephew Lieut. J. H., &c. I request R. C. and D. S. to be her guardians, and allow whatever they please for her education annually, and after she has left school; and if she marries, it must be with their consent, and the property to be solely settled upon herself and children, and in no way changed or alienated":—Held, that, under this limitation, the 20,000*l.* consols vested absolutely in C. H. Candy v. Campbell, 8 Bligh (N.S.) 469; 2 Cl. & F. 421.

A testator directed that as his sons attained twenty-five his executors should pay them a share of his estate and effects, it being his will that his sons and daughters should receive equal shares of his estate; and as his daughters attained twenty-five, the executors were to invest 1,000*l.* each for them for life, and the difference between this and their share was to be paid to them. In case any daughter "should die without issue," the 1,000*l.* was to be divided "amongst such of his children as might be then living and the issue of such as might be dead, share and share alike," the issue to take the like share as the parent would if living have been entitled to :—Held, that the gift over was on an indefinite failure of issue ; that there was an absolute gift of the 1,000*l.*, in the first instance, to the daughters, which had not effectually been cut down, and that the daughters were absolutely entitled to the 1,000*l.* Webster v. Parr, 26 Beav. 236.

H., after devises and bequests to his son S., and to his daughters M. and E., gave the whole that was contained in the lease upon the White Lion premises between his wife and his daughter E., share and share alike, during his wife's life ; and after her death he devised her share to his daughter E., but should she die without legal issue, then he devised the White Lion property between such of his aforesaid children as might be then living ; or, if none of them should happen to be then alive, he gave the same between his grandson R. and the legal issue of his son S. Upon his death his widow and his daughter E. entered into possession of the White Lion premises, and they continued in such possession until 1853, when E. died, without ever having been married :—Held, that as the gift over was so framed as to shew that a personal benefit to R. was intended, the words "should A. die without legal issue," did not mean an indefinite failure of issue, but issue living at the death of E. ; and that, in the event which had happened, the testator's children living at the death of A. were entitled. Jones v. Cullimore, 3 Jur. (N.S.) 404 ; 5 W. R. 539.

A testator, after making a gift to the issue of his nephew, directed that if there should be no child or children, or remoter issue, of his nephew, who should survive him and his nephew, and should live to attain the age of twenty-one, then the gift should go over :—Held, that the will must be construed to mean issue born in the lifetime of the testator and his nephew, and that the gift over was not void for remoteness. Gee v. Liddell, 35 L. J., Ch. 640 ; L. R. 2 Eq. 341 ; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 541 ; 14 W. R. 853.

A. bequeathed to his son Hugh and to his heirs a chattel interest in certain premises, and should his son die without lawful child, he directed that the yearly produce of the premises should be divided in equal portions between the testator's wife and his daughters Isabella and Mary Jane, or such of them as might then be in existence. The wife predeceased Hugh, who died unmarried :—Held, that upon the death of Hugh Isabella and Mary Jane became entitled in equal shares to the testator's interest in the premises. Wilson v. Chesnut, Ir. R. 1 Eq. 559 ; 16 W. R. 417.

Testator, after giving property to his three children, and the longest liver of them and their heirs, directed "that, should all his children die without heirs, the property was to be divided between the children of his brothers and sisters alive on the death of his last child" :—Held, that the limitation over was void for remoteness. Garratt v. Cockerell, 1 Y. & C. C. C. 494 ; 6 Jur. 909.

—— On Death under Twenty-one.]—Devise of a term to J. S. and his assigns for ever ; but if he dies without issue before twenty-one, then to go over to his brother. This is a good devise over. Martin v. Long, 2 Vern. 151 ; Pre. Ch. 15.

Bequest of 1,300*l.* to testator's daughter, provided if she died before twenty-one, and without issue, the legacy should go over to A. ; decreed, the devise over in case of the grand-daughter's dying without issue under twenty-one is good, the contingency being to happen before the legatee attains twenty-one. Pawlet v. Dogget, 2 Vern. 86.

Bequest of 100*l.* to A., to be improved till he should attain the age of twenty-one ; and in case he should die before twenty-one, or afterwards without issue, then the money to be equally divided between the testator's sons and daughter :—Held, the limitation over too remote. Gray v. Shawne, 1 Eden, 153.

Bequest to the testator's two natural sons with survivorship upon the death of either before twenty-one and without issue, but in the event of both dying without issue, over ; the interest beyond maintenance to be added yearly to the principal for their benefit to be paid when they attain twenty-one. The limitation over upon the death of both established : as to the accumulation :—Held, a vested interest : and the payment only postponed. Kirkpatrick v. Kirkpatrick, 13 Ves. 476 ; 9 R. R. 212.

A. devises portions to his four children, payable at their respective ages of twenty-one or marriage ; and in case any of them should die before the time of payment, or should die without issue, then his or their share to the survivor or survivors of them. One of them died under age, and without issue. This, though a limitation of a personal estate, is good, but liable to the contingency of survivorship till it comes to the last of the four children. Nicholls v. Skinner, Pre. Ch. 528.

—— Where Implied Gift to Issue.]—Testator gave a legacy to his son, an estate in fee to a nephew, then several parts of his freehold estates, and the future purchase of freehold to be made with part of his personal property, and all his leasehold to his wife for life ; then to his son and his issue lawfully begotten, or to be begotten, to be divided among them as he should think fit. If he die without issue, as well present freehold and leasehold as the estates to be purchased to be sold, the produce to go over, no part of his present freehold and leasehold, or the estates to be purchased, to be sold during life of wife and son ; all the rest, residue and remainder of his property and effects whatsoever and wheresoever, after paying debts, &c., to the wife ; the son is tenant for life, and the devise over is good : but estates not mentioned do not pass by it. Hockley v. Mawbey, 1 Ves. 143 ; 1 R. R. 93.

Bequest of a term of years to R. for life, remainder to the issue of R., in such manner as he should appoint, and for want of appointment, remainder to the first son of the body of R., and if no issue male, to the daughters of R., as tenants in common, and not as joint tenants, and for default of such issue remainder over :—Held, that R. took an estate for life only. Keating v. Keating, Ll. & G. t. Plunk. 291.

A testator gave all his real and personal property in trust to be disposed of for the benefit of his daughter for life, and at her decease that she should be at liberty to will the same to issue as she might think fit, but in case of her dying without issue, then he wished the property to go to his brother and sister for their lives, or if his brother should die in the lifetime of his daughter then to his brother's children :—Held, that the daughter took an estate tail in the realty, and an absolute interest in the personalty. Simmons v. Simmons, 8 Sim. 22 ; 5 L. J., Ch. 198.

Absolute Interest taken under Words giving Estate Tail in Realty — Where Interest only Given.]—A bequest that 4,000*l.* and a further sum of 1,500*l.* shall pertain to J. after the death of R. without lawful issue is too remote, and the whole shall vest in R. Glover v. Strothoff, 2 Bro. C. C. 33.

Interest of money is devised to A. for life, and if he die without issue, then the principal to go over to another. The remainder over is good. Smith v. Clerer, 2 Vern. 38.

N. devised an annuity of 300*l.* per annum to his wife for life, then to accumulate to make a portion for his first daughter who should marry, then in order to raise portions for other daughters, then to remain to his eldest son, and on his decease to the heirs male of his body, and, in case of his having no issue, remainder to the next eldest son and his heirs male. The daughters married in the life of the wife: the eldest and two other sons of testator died, leaving the wife without issue: this is not personal estate vesting absolutely in the eldest son (on the principle that it would be an estate tail in land), neither does it vest as an executory devise in the fourth son of testator, who survived; but it is an annuity, and being exhausted by the events, there being nobody to take it as such, sinks into the residuary estate of the testator. Turner v. Turner, 1 Bro. C. C. 317; Ambl. 776.

A testator gave to each of his five daughters 400*l.* per annum for their lives, and after their respective deceases he gave the same to their children respectively, share and share alike, such children not to be entitled to more than their deceased parent's share; and in case any or either of his daughters should die without issue, then he directed such annuity to cease, and fall into the residue of his estate:—Held, that the words, "in case any or either of his daughters should die without issue," did not give to the daughters an absolute interest in the annuities. Hedges v. Harpur, 3 De G. & J. 129; 27 L. J., Ch. 742; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 1209; 6 W. R. 842.

—— Where Corpus given.]—Personal estate bequeathed to F. H., her executors, administrators and assigns; but in case of the death of F. H. without issue, remainder over; this remainder over too remote, as it must be construed a general dying without issue. Bigge v. Bensley, 1 Bro. C. C. 187.

A testator, by his will, gave certain real and personal estate to his daughter for life, with power for her "to will the same to her issue as she might think fit; but in case of her dying without issue," the testator directed that the property should go to his brother and sister; but if the brother died before the daughter, then to the brother's children in equal shares:—Held, that the testator's daughter took an estate tail in his real estate, and an absolute interest in his personalty. Simmons v. Simmons, 8 Sim. 22; 5 L. J., Ch. 98.

A testator, by his will, devises all his real estate to executors for the purposes thereinafter stated; and after empowering them either to continue his business, or to dispose of it, he gives the profits of it in the one case, and interest of the money arising from such sale in the other, and also the interest of the securities on which the rest of his capital should be invested, to his daughter for life, her receipt to be a discharge. He then gives the rents and profits of all his real estates to her during her life, and at her decease he devises and bequeaths to her heirs all his estates, real and personal, as tenants in common; if his daughter has but one child, such child is to possess the whole, but if she should die without issue, then at her decease he gives certain legacies. He next directs all his goods and effects to be sold, his said legacies to be paid, and a sum invested sufficient to purchase 150*l.* a year, which is to be paid to the husband of the daughter. He then orders the real estates to be sold at the decease of his daughter, or at the decease of his brothers and sisters, according as a particular event may turn out; and he gives over to certain persons all the residue of his personal estate, including the proceeds of the sale of the real estates when sold, and the rents of them until they are sold. The daughter died without having had issue:—Held, that the daughter took an estate tail in the freeholds; that, the real and personal estate being given over together, she took the personal estate absolutely; that the annuity of 150*l.* was charged both on the real and personal estate. Dunk v. Fenner, 2 Russ. & M. 557.

Devise and bequest to A., and the heirs of his body, with limitation over in case of no such heirs:—Held, an estate tail in real estate, and an absolute interest in personal, the limitation over being void; but if expressed "if he leaves no such heirs," it would be good, as confined to the time of the death, and not after an indefinite failure of issue. Crooke v. De Vandes, 9 Ves. 197.

Bequest of personal estate to one for life, and if he has no heirs, over:—Held, he took an absolute interest. Boden v. Watson, Ambl. 398.

J. H., by his will, gave to C. H., his adopted daughter, 20,000*l.* 3 per cent. consols, and his house and landed property to C. and M. The will then proceeded in the following terms: "But in case of her death without lawful issue, I then will the money so left to her to be equally divided betwixt my nephews and nieces who may be living at the time; and the land, &c., at C., to my nephew the Rev. J. H.; and that at M. to my nephew Lieutenant J. H.; and I request R. C. and S. D. to be her guardians, and allow whatever they please for education annually, and after she has left school; and if she marries, it must be with their consent, and the property to be solely settled upon herself and children, and in no way changed or alienated":—Held, that under this limitation the 20,000*l.* consols vested absolutely in C. H. Candy v. Campbell, 8 Bligh (N.S.) 469; 2 Cl. & F. 421.

Bequest of portion of a chattel real "to my son J., and if he die without a lawful male heir, his part of the land falls to his brother R. I also order that the part of the lands which I bequeath to my son J. is to fall to his youngest son, without any incumbrance":—Held, that J. did not take an absolute interest in his portion of the lands, and that the gift over to R. was not too remote. Dodds v. Dodds, 11 Ir. Ch. Rep. 374, 476.

A gift by will of all testator's funded property and other personal and real estate to his daughter S., she paying all his debts; "and S. shall in no way dispose of any of the funded property, but to hold the same for her natural life; and if she should die without issue, the landed property should go to J. for life. I will and direct that all the funded property shall go to W. and her heirs for ever":—Held, that S. took the funded property for life only, and that on her death it belonged to W. Hovill, Ex parte, Banks' Trust, In re, 2 K. & J. 391.

ii. Gifts of Real Estate.

Death without Issue—Absolute Gift when cut down to Estate Tail.]—A testator, in 1825, left all his property to his executor for the purpose of paying the following bequests, first paying debts and funeral expenses. He then bequeathed lands for ever to his illegitimate son T., giving him power to will and dispose of same if he had a family, but if he shall die without issue, then to go to the use of his daughter J., also illegitimate:—Held, that the executor took the fee in the lands, and that T. took an estate tail, the limitation over being not an executory devise, but a remainder, and that this limitation conferred the fee upon J. on indefinite failure of issue of T., J. taking the entire estate remaining in the executor. Ormsby v. Anderson, 14 W. R. 379.

A., owner in fee, by his will, left his third son, M., the lands of G. for ever; "but in case he should die unmarried, or without lawful issue, in that case he may will one-half of it as he pleases, and the other half to go, share and share alike, between my surviving sons and their families." The will ended in these words: "All the bequests given my son R., my grandson M., son to my son J., and also my other three sons M., C. and H., of my property, no part of it shall or will be liable or pay any debts they may contract, nor sell or mortgage same; but always go in the male line, free of any debt of theirs." M. did die without issue, having executed a disentailing deed of the lands of G., and devised them to B. and his heirs:—Held, that M. took an estate tail under A.'s will. Thompson, In re, 14 Ir. Ch. R. 517; 16 Ir. Ch. R. 228.

H., by will, gave his personalty to his wife, and all his real estate by description for the maintenance of herself and his three children, until his son G. attained twenty-one, when he gave him certain portions of the property charged with an allowance to his (testator's) wife; to his son H., when twenty-one, certain portions on the same condition; and to his daughter E., at twenty-one, certain portions; as to some to the wife for life, and at her decease to the daughter absolutely. If G. died without issue, then H. to possess the property: and if H. died before G. without issue, then G. to have H.'s property. If E. died without issue, her property to be equally divided between her brothers, or the survivor; but if she survived them and they left no issue, then she to have all the property. But if the wife survived all the children, to her for life; remainder to his (the testator's) nephews and nieces equally. If there should be an after-born child which survived G. and H., they leaving no issue, the whole to such child; and if such child died without issue, to the wife for life, as if there had been only three children. Testator left four children, one after-born, and nephews and nieces. G. died an infant and unmarried; and on petition by H. to have certain money paid into court by a railway company, paid out to him—ordered accordingly; and held, that the wife took a life estate until eldest son attained twenty-one, and that there were three estates tail successively, and H. was now tenant in tail. The after-born child presented a counter-petition, which was dismissed with costs as against the company; but the costs of the daughter and H. appearing separately:—Held, not costs occasioned by adverse claimants. Hinks's Estate, In re, 2 W. R. 108. And see Cole v. Goble, 22 L. J., C. P. 148; 1 W. R. 309; Bamford v. Chadwick, 2 W. R. 531.

—— When not cut down.]—Under a devise of one estate to R. and his heirs, and if he dies without lawful issue then to W., he paying his two sisters 500*l.* apiece, and a devise of another estate to W. and his heirs, and if W. die without lawful issue then his estate to R., he paying his two sisters 500*l.* apiece, and if R. and W. die without lawful issue then to testator's three daughters and their surviving issue; R. took an estate in fee which was not cut down to an estate tail. Fisher v. Barry, 2 Hog. 153.

A testator devised real estates to his son and his heirs, and then declared that in case his said son should die without leaving lawful issue, then and in such case the estate should go to his son's next heir-at-law, to whom he gave and devised the same accordingly:—Held, that the contingency of death without leaving issue was not confined to death in the lifetime of the testator, but referred to death at any time; and that the gift over was repugnant and void; and that the devisee took an absolute estate in fee simple. Parry and Daggs, In re, 55 L. J., Ch. 237; 31 Ch. D. 130; 54 L. T. 229; 34 W. R. 353—C. A.

B. by will, dated 1822, gives to his daughter S. certain lands in consideration that she pay to C., or her heirs, 50*l.* by instalments of 10*l.* per annum for five years, to commence twelve months after testator's decease; but in case S. dies without lawful issue, the lands to go to testator's son T. or his heirs, in consideration that he pays to testator's son J. or his heirs the sum of 250*l.* twelve months after the decease of testator's daughter S. After the testator's death S. executed a disentailing deed, by which she affected to convey the property to trustees upon trust for the survivor of herself and her husband. S. died without issue, leaving her husband surviving, and the title deeds of the property were in his possession. On a special case, submitting the questions whether the husband of S. was entitled to retain the deeds, and whether the charge of 250*l.* in favour of J. was a valid charge upon the property:—Held, having regard especially to the two charges of 50*l.* and 250*l.* created by the testator's will, that S. took an estate in fee-simple with an executory devise over in the event of her dying without leaving issue living at her death, and therefore that the husband of S. was not entitled to the deeds, and that the 250*l.* was a valid charge on the property. Blinston v. Warburton, 2 K. & J. 400; 25 L. J., Ch. 468; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 858.

A testator devised realty to trustees on trust to pay the rents and income thereof to his wife for the maintenance, education, and benefit of his infant son until twenty-one, without liability to account for the same, and upon his said son attaining twenty-one, then upon trust for him absolutely; but if he should die under twenty-one without leaving issue, then upon trust for his said wife during life or widowhood, with remainder over:—Held, that the infant son was a tenant in fee-simple in possession, with an executory limitation over. Morgan's Estate, In re, 24 Ch. D. 114; 48 L. T. 964; 31 W. R. 948.

Death "under Twenty-one and without Issue."]—A testator by his will devised S. and

H. estates to trustees upon trust for R. and the heirs of his body, but in case he should die under twenty-one, and without issue, H. estate was to be in trust for A. and the heirs of her body, but in case she should die under twenty-one, and without issue, upon the same trusts as were thereinafter declared concerning S. estate; and if R. should die under twenty-one, and without issue, as to S. estate, for the testator's son and daughter-in-law for their lives and subject to the trusts thereinbefore thereof declared, in trusts for other persons named. Both R. and A. attained twenty-one, and died without issue. Per Lord St. Leonards:—The proper construction of the devise is, that the estate should go over if R. died at any time without issue. Grey v. Pearson, 6 H. L. Cas. 61; 26 L. J., Ch. 473; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 823; 5 W. R. 454.

Death without leaving Issue.]—Death without leaving issue signifies, as to real estate, a general failure of issue. Franklin v. Lay, 6 Madd. 258.

Feme covert, by will pursuant to power, leaves to her husband "all the profits and revenues of my estate of A. and B. for life, and after his death my said estates to my children, if I should leave any to survive me; but if I leave no such child or children, nor the issue of such, the said estates to J. H., making him sole heir in default of issue, and after the death of my husband." The children take an estate tail, not fee-simple, and the remainder to J. H. is good, not a contingent executory limitation on her dying without children living at her death, but a general dying without issue. Southby v. Stonehouse, 2 Ves. 611.

A gift of real estate to A. for life, with remainder to her children as tenants in common, and in case A. should die without leaving lawful issue, then with remainder over, is a gift to A. for life, with remainder to her children for life, with remainder to A. in tail. Parr v. Swindels, 4 Russ. 283; 6 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 99; 28 R. R. 90.

Devise to A., B. and C., &c., share and share alike, for their lives, remainder to their respective children, for their lives, and so to be continued from issue to issue for life; but if any of them die, leaving no issue, their shares to go to the survivors for their lives, and the issue of such of them as shall be dead, and for default of any issue then over:—Held, that A., B., C., &c., take estate tail with cross-remainders. Mortimer v. West, 2 Sim. 274; 29 R. R. 104.

Devise to A. for life, with remainder to B. and his heirs, but if B. died in the lifetime of A., without leaving lawful issue, then immediately after the death of A. the lands were to be sold, and the produce divided. And in case B. should outlive A. and die "without leaving any lawful issue," then the lands were to be sold by B.'s executors, and the proceeds divided. B. survived A.:—Held, that he took an estate tail, and not an estate in fee, with an executory devise over, and therefore that he could make a good title to a purchaser. Feakes v. Standley, 24 Beav. 485.

—— Confined to Life of Tenant for Life.]—Where a testator, after making particular dispositions during the lifetime of his widow, and certain absolute dispositions in favour of his children to be effected by conveyance from the trustees of the will at her decease, directed that "if any of my said children shall die without leaving lawful issue them surviving the property hereby devised and bequeathed to each of my said children shall be equally divided amongst my surviving children":—Held, that, according to the whole scope and intention of the will, the time of dying without lawful issue was confined to the time before the grant of the absolute interest, that is during the lifetime of the widow; and that after conveyance of the absolute interest, no defeasance was contemplated. Lewin v. Killey, 13 App. Cas. 783; 59 L. T. 675—P. C.

Death without leaving Heirs of the Body.]—Devise to A. and the heirs of his body, but if he leaves no such heirs, over:—Held, that limitation over would be good as confined to the time of his death and not after an indefinite future of issue. Crooke v. De Vandes, 9 Ves. 197.

Gift over after Legitimate Heirs.]—Limitation over after legitimate heirs, too remote, unless capable of being confined to the period of the party's death. Barret v. Beckford, 1 Ves. Sen. 519.

Death leaving no Son.]—One devises all his lands, after the death of his executors, to A. and his heirs for ever; but if he die, leaving no son, then to B. This is a good executory devise to B. if A. dies without issue, because the contingency must happen within the compass of a life. Fairfax v. Heron, Pre. Ch. 67.

Gift over on Failure of Testator's own Issue.]—The testator, being married and in ill health, devised the estates in question, after failure of issue male of his own body (and issue male would have taken under his marriage settlement), to the defendant, who was his heir-at-law, for life, with remainder over:—Lord Northington declared, that the devise, being after a general failure of issue male, was too remote and void, and that the defendant took as heir-at-law; but reversed upon a bill of review. Lytton v. Lytton, 4 Bro. C. C. 441.

A testator was tenant for life of two estates with remainder to his wife for life, with remainder to their first and other sons in tail male, with remainder to himself in fee. By his will (made before 1837) he devised one of the estates, "in default of issue of his body, and subject to the life interest of his wife," to trustees for his brother E., for life, with remainder to his first and other sons in tail male. And he devised his other estate, "in the same terms," to the same trustees, to raise money to pay his debts and subject thereto, in trust for his brother R. for life, with remainder to his first and other sons in tail male. The testator died without issue:—Held, that by the words "in default of issue," the testator in the case of the estate devised to pay debts, clearly referred, not to a general failure of issue, but to a failure at the time of his death; that the same construction must prevail as to the other estate; and consequently that both estates were well devised. Bagot v. Legge, 4 N. R. 492; 34 L. J., Ch. 156; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 994; 10 L. T. 898; 12 W. R. 1097.

A devise to A. and B. and their heirs in default of issue male and female of the testator's own body, is, at the testator's death, a devise in possession, and not an executory devise; the contingency being determined at the instant the will takes place, viz., at the death of the testator without issue. French v. Caddell, 3 Bro. P. C. 257.

An estate at C. was settled on A. for life, remainder to his first and other sons in tail male, remainder to A. in fee. A. devised as follows: "As to the reversion and inheritance of the freehold estate at C., purchased by me in pursuance of my marriage articles, bearing date, &c., in case of failure of issue of my body by my said wife, I give and devise the same," &c. He then limited the estate to his brothers in succession, and to their respective first and other sons in tail male. The court was of opinion that the devise was good. Egerton v. Jones, 3 Sim. 409; 1 Russ. & M. 694; 30 R. R. 178.

A term being limited in trust for H. in tail, remainder if I die without male issue in the life of H. to C. in tail: the remainder is good. Howard v. Norfolk (Duke), 2 Swan. 454.

If personalty be bequeathed to wife and children, and in case she die without issue by him a bequest over:—Held a good executory bequest. Evit v. Williams, 9 Mod. 209.

Estates settled on the husband for his life, with remainder to his sons successively in tail, remainder to the husband in fee, were devised by the husband, in case he should die without having any issue by his wife, to his wife for her life, remainder to his brother for his life, with remainder in trust for sale, with a direction to pay 4,000*l.* out of the proceeds, rents and profits, to the eldest daughter of the brother, to be a vested interest on her attaining twenty-one or on day of marriage:—Held, that, upon the true construction of the will, the ulterior limitation depended on the failure of issue at the death of the testator, and not on the general failure of issue, and that the daughter was entitled to the 4,000*l.* Rye's Settlement, In re, 10 Hare, 106; 22 L. J., Ch. 345; 16 Jur. 1128; 1 W. R. 29.

Where the ulterior limitations in a will are made to depend upon a failure of issue of the testator, and there are found amongst the ulterior limitations provisions which could not reasonably be meant to depend upon a general failure of issue, the will is to be construed as referring to a failure of issue at the death, and not to a general failure of issue. Ib.

The fixing of the time of the death of living persons as the period of payment, considered as inconsistent with the notion that the legacy was to take effect only on general failure of issue. Ib.

—— "At Decease."]—A testator who died in 1833, devised his residuary real and personal estate to his eldest son and his heirs, executors, &c.; provided that his will was, that, in case his said son should die without leaving any lawful issue of his body, such part of his said residuary estate as was freehold and situate in certain places should at his death be divided into two equal parts, one of which parts he gave to his second son and his heirs, and the other to his daughter and her heirs:—Held, as to such part of the testator's residuary estate as was freehold and situate in the places named, that his eldest son took, not an estate tail in it, but an estate in fee, with an executory devise over to take effect at his death, in case he should have no issue then living. Davies, Ex parte, 2 Sim. (N.S.) 114; 21 L. J., Ch. 135; 15 Jur. 1102.

A devise to J., W., C., &c., and their heirs, each in due succession as named, with usual limitations in failure of issue in A. B., and on the decease of A. B., does not import an indefinite failure of issue in A. B., but the limitation over to J., W., &c., is good by way of executory devise, these words meaning issue living at the time of decease of A. B., the first taker. Stratford v. Powell, 1 Ball & B. 1.

—— "After Decease."]—A testator devised lands to his son A. and his heirs for ever, and in case A. should die without lawful issue, desired that, after his death, all the property should go to his daughter and her heirs; and in case both A. and the daughter should die without lawful issue, desired the property should go to his brothers:—Held, an estate tail in A., and not fee-simple, with an executory devise over. Jones v. Ryan, 9 Ir. Eq. R. 249.

A devise of real estate to A., "and his heirs and assigns for ever," and, from and after his decease without issue, "to be equally divided amongst the then surviving legatees, share and share alike":—Held, that the first limitation to A., being of an estate in fee in the largest terms, and the gift over being to the survivor of certain ascertained persons, a personal benefit was intended for them, and therefore the gift over must be taken to refer, not to an indefinite failure of issue, so as to cut down A.'s estate in fee to an estate tail, but to a failure of issue to take place within the lives of the executory devisees; and that event not having happened:—Held, that the executory devise had failed, and the estate in fee of A. became absolute. Greenwood v. Verdon, 1 K. & J. 74; 3 Eq. R. 181; 24 L. J., Ch. 65; 3 W. R. 124.

—— "In Case of Death."]—A devise to A. and to his heirs and assigns for ever, and in case he should die without child or children of his body lawfully begotten, a gift over to the children of B., their heirs and assigns for ever, on the decease of A.:—Held, to confer an estate in fee-simple upon A., subject to be defeated by an executory devise, if, at his decease, there should be no issue of A. living. Parker v. Birks, 1 K. & J. 156; 24 L. J., Ch. 117; 3 W. R. 102.

A testator was possessed of two estates in Ireland, Flesk Castle and Dick's Grove. The former he held under a lease for lives renewable for ever; the latter he held in fee. In 1833 he made a will, in which he said, "I give, devise, and bequeath to my son John Coltsmann all those my property, lands, tenements, and premises at and about Flesk Castle," together with plate, furniture, &c. "I also devise and bequeath to my son John Coltsmann my lands, tenements, and premises at Dick's Grove." All his estates, &c., were made chargeable with an annuity to his wife. He afterwards made a codicil, in which he said, "If it should happen that my son John Coltsmann die without heirs of his body lawfully, &c., in that case, and in default of such heirs, I do hereby devise and direct that my lands, &c., at Flesk Castle, and the plate and furniture in my will specified, also my lands, &c., at Dick's Grove," all charged with the annuity to his wife, "and also with a reasonable provision, made with my consent, by my son for his wife, payable for her life, shall at my son's death descend and be transferred to my grandson Daniel Cronin, his heirs, &c., for ever, the heir for the time being to add the name of 'Coltsmann' to the name of Cronin." In the event of the contemplated death of the son without heirs, a charge was created in favour of a married daughter. The son never had any child. While in possession he executed disentailing deeds of both estates, and devised them to his wife:—Held, that, reading the will and codicil together, John Coltsmann took the estate of Flesk Castle in fee, with an executory devise over to Daniel Cronin, in the event that happened of John Coltsmann dying without heirs of his body living at his death; and, as to Dick's Grove, that as the law then (1835) stood, the gift was a gift of that estate to John Coltsmann for life only, with a contingent remainder to Daniel Cronin, in the event of John Coltsmann dying without heirs of his body living at his death. Coltsmann v. Coltsmann, L. R. 3 H. L. 121; 16 W. R. 943. See also Fay v. Fay, 5 L. R., Ir. 274.

Implied Gift to Issue.]—Testator devised the residue of his freehold estates to his son S. for life, remainder to such issue male or female as S. should appoint; but if S. should die without issue male or female, testator devised same to his daughter M., if she married with consent, and to the issue of such marriage male or female. M. married with consent, and S. died without issue:—Held, that the defendant, a son of M., took no estate under the will. Beasley v. Hourigan, Hay. & J. 497.

Devise to testator's son A., and to his issue male and female, in such shares, manner and proportions as he might by deed or will appoint, with power to jointure a wife; and in case of the death of A. without lawful issue, then to testator's three daughters equally, share and share alike, as tenants in common, and not as joint tenants, and to their heirs and assigns:—Held, that A. took an estate tail. Whitsitt v. Thompson, 12 Ir. Eq. R. 119.

A testator devised the lands of A. to his son S. during his natural life sans waste, remainder to trustees to preserve, &c., and from and after the decease of the said S. to the use of the heirs male of the said S., in such shares and proportions and subject to such charges as the said S. should by deed or will appoint; and in case of the said S. dying without issue male, to permit his second son J. to receive the rents for his life sans waste, remainder to trustees to preserve, &c.; and from and after the decease of the said J. to the use of the male children of the said J. in the same manner and with the like power of appointment, and charging as he had hereinbefore devised the same to the male children of his son S., with remainders over in the same terms to testator's third son T., and remainder to his male children, and remainder to his own right heirs. He then devised the lands of B. to his son J. for life, with remainder to his male children as he should appoint, and in default of appointment to the first son of J. and the heirs male of his body, remainder in like manner to the second, third, and every other son of J., and if J. died without issue male to S., to be disposed of among his issue as he should think proper; and he directed that if S. should die without issue male, and that in consequence thereof the lands of A. should descend to his second son J. and issue male, then the lands of B. should immediately descend and go to T. and his issue male, and he gave powers of leasing to S., J. and T., as they should respectively become seised of the said estates:—Held, that S. took an estate tail in the lands of A. Phillips v. Phillips, 10 Ir. Eq. R. 518.

Express Gift for Life enlarged into Estate Tail by Implication.]—An express limitation for life, followed by a limitation over, in case the taker should die without issue not leaving any children:—Held, on objection to title taken in a suit for specific performance, to confer an estate tail. Machell v. Weeding, 8 Sim. 4; 5 L. J., Ch. 182.

Devise in trust for the testator's daughters, M. and C., for their lives, for their separate use; and in case both M. and C. should die without leaving issue, then over-implied estates tail to M. and C., with cross-remainders in tail. Stanhouse v. Gaskell, 17 Jur. 157; 1 W. R. 77.

An estate for life cannot be enlarged to an estate tail by connecting it with a gift on failure of issue living at a particular time, as it may by connecting it with a gift upon the failure of issue generally. Jenkins v. Hughes, 6 Jur. (N.S.) 1043; 8 W. R. 667.

A gift of real estate to A. for life, with remainder to her children as tenants in common, and in case A. should die without leaving lawful issue, then with remainder over, is a gift to A. for life, with remainder to her children for life, with remainder to A. in tail. Parr v. Swindells, 4 Russ. 283; 6 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 99; 28 R. R. 90.

In a devise of land to A. for life, and if A. die without issue then to B.; though here is an express estate for life to A., yet the subsequent words will turn it into an estate tail: but where lands are devised to A. for life, remainder to trustees, &c., remainder to his first, &c., son in tail male, &c., and if A. dies without issue, then, &c., this will not give an estate tail to A.; but the words "without issue," must be intended "without such issue." Blackborn v. Edgley, 1 P. Wms. 606.

J. being seised of some lands in fee and cestui que trust or other lands, devises them to A. for life; remainder to his first and second son in tail male (going no further); and after A.'s death without issue male, then to a charity:—Held, that A. was tenant in tail until issue born, saving as to the trust estate. Att.-Gen. v. Sutton, 3 Bro. P. C. 75; 1 P. Wms. 754.

Devise to S. for life, remainder to his eldest son and his issue male, and for want of issue of S., to, &c. S. died without issue, and:—Held, he took an estate tail in remainder, as in Langley v. Baldwin, 1 Eq. Cas. Abr., pl. 29, cited in 1 P. Wms. 759; 1 Ves. Sen. 26. Stanley v. Lennard, Ambl. 355; 1 Eden, 87.

The court held, upon the particular language of a will, that an estate tail would not be implied in A. and B., though an estate was given to them for life, and the property was, upon failure of their issue male, limited over to their grand-daughters, and there was no express limitation which would include all their issue male. Houston v. Platt, 7 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 20.

A testator, in a very ungrammatical and obscure will, devised real and personal property, so as to vest the whole legal interest in trustees, in trust for A. and B., during their lives to their separate use. Some unfinished and unconnected portions of sentences succeeded, and these were followed by a direction that, after the decease of A. and B., and failure of their male issue, the property should go to the grand-daughter. A. and B. had each only one child, a daughter, and both these daughters were mentioned in the will:—Held, upon the whole context of the will, that A. and B. were only tenants for life, and that an estate in tail male was not to be raised in them by implication. Houston v. Hughes, 5 Russ. 116.

When the general intent is to make a strict settlement, it shall prevail, though some of the limitations may seem contingent; but where the intent to create an estate tail is not plain, but doubtful, the court will lay hold of anything, rather than put it in the power of a person on a remote contingency to bar all subsequent remainders. Lethieullier v. Tracy, 3 Atk. 781, 797.

J. devised all his lands, &c., to his daughter, B., for life, remainder to trustee to preserve, &c., remainder to the use of the first son of B., remainder to the heirs male of the body of said first son, with divers remainders over, and in case of the death of B. without issue of her body living at her decease, then testator devised said lands to his trustees until his cousin C. should attain the age of twenty-one; and in case of the death of C. under twenty-one without issue, then to B. for life, remainder to his first, &c., son in tail, remainder to E. for life, remainder to his first, &c., son in tail, remainder over. The Lord Chancellor inclined to confine the contingency in the will of J. of B.'s dying without issue of her body living at her death to the death of C. under twenty-one, and that the subsequent limitations to C. after attaining twenty-one, and to D. and E., are not contingent but vested remainders. Ib. 775; Ambl. 204. And see 2 Ken. Ch. 40.

Testator devised to S. K. certain real estate for life, charged with the annuities mentioned in his will, and then proceeded: "But in case the aforesaid annuitants, or any of them, shall survive the said S. K., I then give the aforesaid estate unto the eldest surviving son of S. K., charged with the aforesaid annuities; but in default of issue male, I give the above-demised premises unto his brother T. K., charged in like manner with the aforesaid annuities, and unto his eldest surviving son on the same conditions; but in default of issue male, my will is, that the aforesaid demised premises do descend unto my heirs-at-law, charged nevertheless with the above-mentioned annuities." S. K. survived all the annuitants mentioned in the will, and after his death J. K., his eldest son and heir-at-law, enjoyed the estate during his life, and then died, leaving a widow and an only daughter:—Held, first, that the dispositions of the devised estate after the death of S. K. were not meant to be contingent on his being survived by all or any one of the annuitants mentioned in the will; secondly, that S. K. took an estate in tail male, and this estate not having been barred either by himself or by his eldest son J. K., his second son S. K. was entitled to the estate as tenant in tail male, subject to the dower of J. K.'s widow. Key v. Key, 4 De G. M. & G. 673; 1 Eq. R. 82; 22 L. J., Ch. 641; 17 Jur. 769.

Devise to T. during his natural life, and from and after his decease unto his eldest son if he should have arrived at the age of twenty-one years, and in default of his having a son, then over. T. died leaving an eldest son a minor:—Held, that on the death of T. the eldest son took an estate in fee liable to be devested on his death under the age of twenty-one, with an executory devise over in that event to T. in tail. Andrew v. Andrew, 45 L. J., Ch. 232; 1 Ch. D. 410; 34 L. T. 82; 24 W. R. 329.

G., who died in 1837, by will devised certain freehold hereditaments to W. B. for life, and if he should die without having a son, over. W. B. entered into possession of the property and died in 1882, leaving a son, W. E. B., who entered into possession of the property, and contracted to sell it. The purchaser having objected to the title, a summons was taken out under the Vendor and Purchaser Act:—Held, that there was an implied gift to the son of W. B., and this implied gift following on the gift to W. B. for life, was equivalent to a word of limitation, and, therefore, by the rule in Shelley's case, gave W. B. an estate in tail male, and as this had not been barred, W. E. B. was entitled to the property for an estate in tail male. Bird and Barnard, In re, 59 L. T. 166. And see Grattan v. Langdale, 11 L. R., Ir. 473.

iii. Effect of the Wills Act.

Object of s. 29.]—The object of the 29th section of the 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26 is to redress the inconvenience arising from the words "dying without issue," and similar words having acquired a legal meaning different from the popular meaning. Greenway v. Greenway, infra.

Operation when Excluded.]—In ascertaining whether the words "die without issue," in a will made subsequently to the 1 Vict. c. 26, mean an indefinite failure of issue, a contrary intention, within the meaning of s. 29, is not to be inferred from the use of those very words. O'Bierne, In re, 1 Jo. & Lat. 352; 7 Ir. Eq. R. 171.

Under a bequest of personalty by will executed subsequently to the 1 Vict. c. 26, to "A. and B., to be divided equally, with a request to A. that, should he die without lawful issue, the property which I bequeath him shall revert back to the sons of B.," A. does not take an absolute interest in the moiety. Ib.

Mere presumption of intention is not sufficient to exclude the operation of the 29th section of the Wills Act. Mid-Kent Ry. Act, 1856, In re, Bate, Ex parte, 1 N. R. 470; 11 W. R. 417.

A testator, seised in fee of one moiety of estates, of the other moiety of which he was tenant for life, with the remainder to his eldest son T. in tail male, after reciting in his will that he had expended large sums of money in improvements on his house and demesne of M., of which T. would have the advantage, charged the moiety which he held in fee, and which he stated he intended leaving to T. as thereinafter mentioned, with 1,000*l.* for his second son G., and 1,500*l.* for his third son J. R., to be secured to them by T. at the testator's death or on T. coming of age; and in case either should die without issue, his portion was to be paid or secured to the survivor; and in case T. should die without issue, or G. should become possessed of the estates, that then he should secure that sum of 2,500*l.* to J. R.; and after reciting that the house and demesne of M., as well as a moiety of estates, were settled on his marriage in tail male, he left the other moiety to his son T. during his life and to his eldest son and his heirs in tail male; and in default of his issue male, then to his son G. for life and his issue in tail male; and in default of his issue male, to his son J. R. and his issue in tail male; subject to 3,000*l.* for any younger child or children of any of them who inherited; and in default of male issue, he devised his said estates to the daughter or daughters of T., G. or J. R. respectively; and in default of issue male or female, to his (the testator's) daughters in fee, as tenants in common:—Held, (1) that T. took an estate for life, with remainder to his eldest son in tail male, and reversion to him in tail male; and (2) that the will did not come within the Wills Act (1 Vict. c. 26, s. 29), as the words "in default of issue male" appeared from the context to mean an indefinite failure of issue male. Neville v. Thacker, 23 L. R., Ir. 344—C. A.

—— By Variation of Words Used—Death without Issue under Twenty-one.]—The 29th section of the Statute of Wills has no application to cases in which the words "dying without issue" are combined with other words, such as "dying under twenty-one," which additional words, upon the authority of decided cases, modify their meaning. Morris v. Morris, 17 Beav. 198; 1 Eq. R. 167; 17 Jur. 966; 1 W. R. 377.

A testator devised an estate in fee to his son, but if he should die under twenty-one, over. By a codicil he limited the estate over in the event of the son dying without issue, "or" under twenty-one:—Held, that "or" must be read "and," and that the executory devise over took effect only on the happening of both events, and consequently that A., on attaining twenty-one, had an absolute estate in fee simple. Ib.

Semble, also, that if the clauses were construed disjunctively, the devisee would have an estate tail by virtue of the words "die without issue," notwithstanding the 1 Vict. c. 26, s. 29. Ib.

—— Death without Male Issue.]—The principle of construction applied, in the case of wills made since 1837, to the words "die without issue" by the Wills Act (7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26), s. 29, is not affected by the limitation over being in case the first taker shall "die without male issue." Upton v. Hardman, Ir. R. 9 Eq. 157.

By a will made in 1839, a perpetually renewable freehold was devised to A., subject to payment of debts and legacies, and in case he should "die without male issue," to B., but with a power to A. to charge the lands with a jointure and portions for his female issue:—Held, first, that A. took an estate quasi in fee, with an executory devise over in the event of his dying without leaving male issue at his death. Ib.

Held, secondly, that the language of the will did not evince any contrary intention excluding the application of the rule. Ib.

The words "die without leaving any male issue" are words importing an indefinite failure of issue within the meaning of s. 29 of the Wills Act. Upton v. Hardman (supra) followed. Edwards, In re, Edwards v. Edwards, 64 L. J., Ch. 179; [1894] 3 Ch. 644; 8 R. 618; 43 W. R. 169.

—— Death of A. without Issue in Lifetime of B.]—A testator since the Wills Act devised real estate to A., and if he should die without leaving lawful issue in the lifetime of B., then over. A. died in the lifetime of B., leaving issue one child, who also died in the lifetime of B.:—Held, that the gift over took effect. Jarman v. Vye, 35 L. J., Ch. 821; L. R. 2 Eq. 784; 14 W. R. 1011.

—— Death without Heirs of the Body.]—A., by will dated in May, 1839, bequeathed to his illegitimate son R. certain leaseholds, and if R. should die without "heirs or issue," over:—Held, that as s. 29 of the 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26 is expressly confined to the word "issue," it makes no change in the meaning of the expression "die without heirs of the body," and therefore ("without heirs," in the will, meaning "without heirs of the body," R. being illegitimate) the will did not confer the absolute interest on R., with an executory devise over in the case of his dying without issue living at his death, but an estate tail, and, the property being leasehold, the absolute interest. Sallery, In re, 11 Ir. Ch. R. 236.

A testator, in 1846, gave his residuary real and personal estate to J. S. L. and the heirs male of his body lawfully begotten for ever; but in case of his death without heirs male of his body lawfully begot, then the property to go to P. C. L. in the same manner; and if P. C. L. should die without heirs male of his body lawfully begot, then the property to go to A. in the same manner. By a codicil the testator, after reciting that by his will he had directed that in the event of the death of J. S. L. "without leaving male issue him surviving" the residue of his real and personal estates should go to P. C. L., revoked that bequest, and in the event of the death of J. S. L. "without leaving male issue him surviving," gave the residuary estate to the eldest daughter (if any) of J. S. L.:—Held, that the Wills Act (1 Vict. c. 26), s. 29, did not apply, and that the gifts over to P. C. L. and A. were void as to the personalty, as being on an indefinite failure of heirs male, and that the codicil did not alter their effect, and that under the will and codicil J. S. L. took an absolute interest in the personalty, subject only to an executory gift over in favour of his eldest daughter if he died leaving no male issue surviving him. Dawson v. Small, L. R. 9 Ch. 651.

—— "Death without Issue" following Gift to Heirs.]—A. gave his real and personal estate upon trust as to the income for his brothers, E. and C., or the heirs of their bodies, and declared that if either brother should die leaving heirs of his body, then the share of such brother should descend to such heirs, but if one brother should die without lawful issue, then the whole income should be paid to the surviving brother, or in case of his death also to his lawfully begotten heir; but in case both brothers should demise without issue lawfully begotten, then the whole property should be divided among the testator's nearest of kin; and he appointed executors, with power to appoint other executors, as to them might seem fit, also with full power to get in and receive all moneys or securities for money, and to sell, dispose of, and convert into money all other his real and personal estate, either by public auction or private contract, as to them should seem meet:—Held, that there was an effectual gift over of the personalty to the next of kin in the event of E. and C. dying without leaving issue at their respective deceases. Greenway v. Greenway, 2 De G. F. & J. 128; 29 L. J., Ch. 601. Affirming 1 Giff. 131; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 888.

A testator devised his fee simple lands to be equally divided between his sons J. and T., and then proceeded as follows: "The fee simple estates and the freeholds to descend to the heirs of J. and T. for ever; but in the event of both sons dying without issue, then to be equally divided between my daughters, share and share alike":—Held, that J. and T. took estates tail with cross-remainders between them. Fay v. Fay, 5 L. R., Ir. 274.

A testator bequeathed 1,000*l.* to trustees upon trust for his son A. for life, with remainder to the children of A. He then gave the residue of his estate and effects to his trustees, upon trust for all his children in equal shares, and the heirs of their respective bodies. The following words were then added in a parenthesis: "except as to my son A. and his children, whose share, in consequence of the 1,000*l.* set apart for him and them as aforesaid, shall be rated at 1,000*l.* less than that of any other child." The will then declared that, in case of a failure of issue of any child, the share of him or her whose issue should fail should be held on the trusts therein mentioned. The testator left freehold estates and personalty applicable to the trusts declared of the residue :—Held, that the words "failure of issue" were not made by the 29th section of the Wills Act to mean failure of issue at the death of A. Green v. Green, 3 De G. & Sm. 480 ; 18 L. J., Ch. 465 ; 14 Jur. 73.

b. When Referable to the Objects of a Prior Devise.

i. Gifts of Personalty.

"Issue" read "Such Issue" and confined to Children.]—The words "if he shall happen to die without issue" may be so controlled by the context of a will as to mean children, and the remainder over will in that case not be too remote. Att.-Gen. v. Bayley, 2 Bro. C. C. 553.

Three annuities for a term of years bequeathed in trust for three children, A., B. and C., respectively for life ; in case of the death of either leaving any child or children, his or her annuity to be equally divided between such child or children, share and share alike ; in case of the death of either without issue, his or her annuity to go to the survivor or survivors of them equally, share and share alike, with a limitation over in case of the deaths of all without issue as aforesaid. A. died without issue ; A.'s annuity went to B. and C., subject to the contingent limitation over ; and upon B.'s death leaving children, belongs in moieties absolutely to his administrator and C. Vandergucht v. Blake, 2 Ves. 533.

Produce of estate devised for sale directed to be paid between J. and A., the wife of B., in equal proportions, share and share alike ; and in case either should die leaving children, trustees to stand possessed of moiety so given to J. and A. to and for the use and benefit of such child or children at twenty-one, equally to be divided if more than one, and until twenty-one money to be invested in funds, interest for children's maintenance. If either J. or A. should die without children, survivor to take share :—Held, J. and A. only tenants for life. Farthing v. Allen, 2 Madd. 310 ; 17 R. R. 223.

Limitation of a trust of a term to a man for life, remainder to his first, &c., son in tail, and for want of issue male then to all his daughters ; there never having been a son, adjudged the trust to the daughter good. Higgins v. Dowler, 1 P. Wms. 98 ; Salk. 156 ; 2 Vern. 600.

Bequest of an annuity to A. and B., and to the survivor for life ; and if A. should have any "children," then to be equally divided between them ; but if A. should die "without lawful issue," then to C. and his heirs for ever :—Held, that the children of A. took absolute interests in a perpetual annuity. Robinson v. Hunt, 4 Beav. 450.

Bequest of personal estate to A. for life, remainder to the children of A. equally, and in default of issue of A., upon trust to sell and divide equally amongst B. and C. and all their children "then" living, share and share alike : —Held, that the gift was not too remote, and that B. and C. and their children living at the death of A. alone took the personal estate as tenants in common absolutely. Cormack v. Copous, 17 Beav. 397.

Gift to daughters for life, with remainder to the child or children of such daughters as they should appoint in default of appointment equally, and on the death of such of the said daughters after attaining twenty-one as should die without issue her share to be paid to her personal representative :—Held, that "issue" meant issue who should be entitled under the former gift, i.e., children. Wyndham's Trusts, In re, L. R. 1 Eq. 290.

A testator bequeathed a sum of stock to trustees upon trust to pay the interest to his son during life, with a direction, if he married a woman with a fortune of a specified amount, to settle the fund upon her and the issue of such marriage ; but in case of the son's decease leaving no issue of his body, the stock was given over to various persons ; and the testator also disposed of the residue of his estate. The son married a woman who had not the fortune required by the will, and died leaving issue of that marriage :—Held, that the son's life interest in the stock was not extended by implication to a quasi estate tail ; that the issue of his marriage took no interest in the stock ; that the gifts over failed ; and that after the son's death the stock belonged to the residuary legatee. Andree v. Ward, 1 Russ. 260 ; 4 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 98 ; 25 R. R. 36 ; and Greene v. Ward, 1 Russ. 262 ; 4 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 99 ; 25 R. R. 38.

Upon a bequest of equal legacies to testator's six children, to be paid on their respectively attaining twenty-one or the marriage of the daughters, the interest to be paid in the meantime, and the principal as they might direct to their issue, but in case they should die without issue the principal to go among "the survivors" of his children in equal proportions ; after directing his freehold estate to be sold, and all the residue of his personal estate, he declared the trusts to be equally to pay and divide the money therefrom, so soon as his youngest child should attain twenty-one, unto and amongst all his children, share and share alike, and in case of the death of any, leaving lawful issue, the share of the parent so dying to such issue :—Held, that the first bequest was limited to issue living at the death of the children, and that the gift over, on failure of issues, referred to the same objects. Leeming v. Sherratt, 2 Hare, 14 ; 11 L. J., Ch. 423 ; 6 Jur. 663.

Termor devises the term to A. for life, remainder to such of his issue as he shall appoint ; and if A. die without issue, remainder to B. This is a good devise to B. Target v. Gaunt, 1 P. Wms. 432 ; Gilb. Eq. R. 149 ; 10 Mod. 402.

The testator gave his real and personal estate in trust for his nephew John for life, and after his death to be conveyed and transferred to the eldest son of John on his attaining twenty-one, with limitations over in like manner, if there were no such son of John, to two other nephews of the testator, and their sons successively ; and in case none of them (the said three nephews) should have a son who should survive the survivor of them, and attain twenty-one, the testator then devised the estate in like manner to a fourth nephew and his sons, with remainders over to their respective daughters :—Held, that the testator, in the words of devise to the fourth nephew, must be construed to mean that such limitation should take effect in case none of the first three nephews should leave a son surviving his parent and attaining twenty-one, a different construction being repugnant to specific directions as well as to the general scheme of the will, creating cases of intestacy, and supposing a capricious and irrational intention; and that, therefore, a son of John, surviving his father and attaining twenty-one, was entitled to an absolute conveyance and transfer of the real and personal estate. Hillersdon v. Lowe, 2 Hare, 355; 12 L. J., Ch. 321; 7 Jur. 482.

A testator by his will gave to C., described as his natural daughter, a sum of stock, and his house and land at C., with a direction that if she married, the property should be settled solely upon herself and children, but in case of death without lawful issue, the money so left to her to be equally divided betwixt his nephews and nieces who might be living at the time, and the land at C. to his nephew J. H.:—Held, that C. took an absolute interest in the stock. Campbell v. Harding, 2 Russ. & M. 390.

By a settlement made in 1811 the Cardigan family plate was settled upon trust for Robert Earl of Cardigan for life, and after his death for James Thomas Lord Brudenell, the son and heir apparent of Robert Earl of Cardigan, for his life, and after his death in trust for the first son of the body of James Thomas Lord Brudenell, his executors and assigns; but if such first son should die under twenty-one without leaving issue male living at his death, then for the second son, his executors, administrators and assigns, with like executory trusts in favour of the other sons of James Thomas Lord Brudenell; and if he should not have any son or sons, or having such, all of them should die under twenty-one, and some of them should leave issue male living at his death, then in trust for the second son of Robert Earl of Cardigan, his executors, administrators and assigns; but if such second son should die under twenty-one without leaving issue male living at his death, then in trust for the third and other sons of Robert Earl of Cardigan; and if there should not be any son of Robert Earl of Cardigan or James Thomas Lord Brudenell who should live to attain twenty-one or should die under that age leaving issue male living at his death, then in trust for the settlor. Robert Earl of Cardigan had only one son, James Thomas Lord Brudenell, who attained twenty-one and died without issue:—Held, that upon his death the ultimate trust in favour of the settlor took effect, the words "any son" in the gift over being read "any such son as is hereinbefore mentioned." Cardigan v. Curzon-Howe, L. R. 9 Eq. 358; 22 L. T. 640.

Under a gift by a testator to his daughter for her life, with remainder to her children, with remainder, in the event of any such children dying under twenty-one, to their children who should survive his daughter and attain twenty-one, and after several intermediate limitations with a limitation over, provided there should be no child of his daughter, or, being such, they should not attain twenty-one, or leave issue who should attain twenty-one:—Held, that the limitation over was intended to take effect only on failure of grandchildren who should survive the testator's daughter, and not attain twenty-one, and was therefore not too remote. Trickey v. Trickey, 3 Myl. & K. 560.

A testator gave his residuary estate to such children as his nephews and niece W. T. and D. should leave at their respective deceases, one-third to the "child or children" of W. and the two other thirds similarly to the "child or children" of T. and D. respectively, and directed that, in case of the death of a nephew or niece without leaving any "children or child," then that third share should be paid to the "children or child" of the other or others leaving "children or a child"; but that if W., T. and D. should all die "without leaving any issue lawfully begotten," the whole residue should go to the children of G. W., T. and D. All died without leaving children, but one of them left grandchildren:—Held, that "children" must be construed in its natural sense, and not so as to include grandchildren; that "issue" was not to be read "such issue," so as to be confined to children; and that therefore, in the events which had happened, the fund was undisposed of. Pride v. Fooks, 3 De G. & J. 252; 28 L. J., Ch. 81; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 158; 1 L. T. 292; 7 W. R. 109.

A father gave a fund of 66,666*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* consols to trustees, upon trust to pay 1,000*l.* a year to each of his two daughters for their lives, and after the death of each daughter he gave 33,333*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* consols, which he described as the share of each daughter, unto and among all and every such child or children she might happen to leave at her decease, to be equally divided between them when and as they should attain the age of twenty-one years, and if but one child, then to such only child; and in case either of his daughters should die without issue, he directed that the 33,333*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* consols, being the share of her so dying, should be transferred by his trustee to such person or persons, and in such manner, as she by her will and testament in writing duly executed might direct and appoint. There was a general residuary gift. One of the daughters executed the power and died, having had one child, who died in her lifetime, leaving children who survived their grandmother:—Held, that the words "die without issue" meant such issue as were previously mentioned, and that the power was validly exercised. Merceron, In re, Davies v. Merceron, 4 Ch. D. 182; 35 L. T. 701. And see Carter v. Bentall, post, col. 1046; Hockley v. Mawbey, ante, col. 1022.

—— Where Word "Such" expressly Used.]—Devise of a personal estate to A. for life, and afterwards for her children, and the yearly interest and produce to be for their maintenance till the sons attain twenty-one, and the daughter eighteen, at which ages their respective portions to be paid, and for want of such issue, then to B. A. dies without issue, and the devise over to B. was held good, the words "for want of such issue" being the same as "for want of such children." Staines v. Maddock, 3 Bro. P. C. 108. S. C., nom. Maddox v. Staines, 2 P. Wms. 421.

One possessed of a term devises it to A. for life; remainder to his first, &c., son in tail successively; remainder to his daughter; and if A. shall have neither son nor daughter, then to J. S. A. dies, having never had a son or daughter; the devise over to J. S. is good. Stanley v. Leigh, 2 P. Wms. 686.

Limitation of trust of term to several persons for life successively, then to the child, &c., of one of them, and for want of such issue, or after their decease, to S. for life, is a good limitation to S. Oakes v. Chalfont, Pol. 38.

A term was limited to A. for life, then to B. for life, then to such child as B. should leave at his death, and for want of such a child to C.

Quære, if the remainder to C. is good. Heyward v. Rogers, 1 Vern. 461.

Bequest to the children of testator's daughter, to the number of four, of the sum of 1,000*l.* each, if more the 4,000*l.* to be divided between such as should be living at testator's death; but if his daughter should die without issue, then over: a child by another husband, born after testator's death, cannot take, and the bequest over is good, being not a limitation over, but an absolute legacy. Bequest of the residue to his daughter and her issue, and for want of such issue over; the limitation over too remote, and therefore void. Salkeld v. Vernon, 1 Eden, 64.

ii. Gifts of Real Estate.

"Issue" read "Such Issue."]—Where real and personal estates are given together for life, and so limited over that a child of the tenant for life would take a vested interest in the real estate at its birth, and in the personal estate, at twenty-one, being a son, or at twenty-one or marriage, being a daughter, and there is a gift over in the event of the tenant for life dying without issue, it is to be intended a dying without such issue as would take by force of the prior limitations. Malcolm v. Taylor, 2 Russ. & M. 416.

A testatrix devises to A. for life, remainder to A.'s first and other sons in tail male, remainder to A.'s daughters as tenants in common in tail, with cross-remainders between them in tail, remainder to trustees for a term of years upon trusts to raise and pay such legacies as she had thereafter given or should give by any codicil; and in a subsequent part of the will she bequeaths various legacies from and immediately after the decease and failure of issue of A.:—Held, that "failure of issue" in the gift of the legacies must be construed "failure of such issue" as were included in the limitation of the estate; and that therefore the bequests were not too remote. Morse v. Ormonde (Lord), 1 Russ. 382; 25 R. R. 85; 4 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 158; 5 Madd. 99; 21 R. R. 284.

Devise to A. for life, with power for trustees to settle a jointure on his wife, and subject thereto in strict settlement on the issue of such marriage; but if A. should die without any issue of his body, then over. The latter words give him an estate tail by implication. Allanson v. Clitherow, 1 Ves. Sen. 24.

On a gift of real and personal estate to A. and B. for life, with estates tail to their issue in certain events only, as it was held, followed by a limitation over on a general failure of issue male of A. and B., estates tail were raised by implication in A. and B. Franks v. Price, 3 Beav. 182; 9 L. J., Ch. 383. And see S. C. at law, 5 Bing. (N.C.) 87; 6 Scott, 710.

Testator, after giving various life estates in his real and personal property, directed that, if M. H. should, after the death of J. and certain other first tenants for life, die before N. H., the last tenant for life, leaving issue male, then his trustees should convey one moiety of his real estate to trustees, to the use of the first and other sons of M. H. successively in tail male, with remainder to N. H. for life, with remainder to his sons in tail male; and he directed one moiety of his personal estate to be invested in the purchase of real estate to be settled to the same uses. The testator then gave corresponding directions with regard to the other moiety, in the event of N. H. dying before M. H. And in case M. H. and N. H. should both die without issue male, then the testator directed his trustees to convey his real estate to such persons as would be his right heirs at the death of the survivor of M. H. and N. H., and to transfer his personal estate to such persons as would be his next of kin. M. H. died without issue in the lifetime of J., &c. On J.'s death N. H. claimed an absolute interest in the personal estate, and suffered a recovery of the real estate, and afterwards died without issue:—Held, that although M. H. died in the lifetime of J., and although, from the circumstance of M. H. dying in the lifetime of N. H., the events in which the estate was limited to the issue of N. H. did not take place; still, under the terms of the will, N. H. became entitled, on the death of J., to both moieties; and that he took the personal estate absolutely, and took an estate tail in the real estate. Ib.

A testator by his will expressed his desire of bequeathing his estates to his children, "in such manner that the same shall be enjoyed by them respectively only for and during the period of their natural lives; in order, therefore, to limit the same strictly in entail on them, my said children, and to their several and respective heirs of their bodies respectively." He then devised his real estates to trustees, upon trust, as to part of his real estates, to his son W., for life, "and after his decease the same to go and descend to his first and other sons and daughters in tail in order of primogeniture, males to be preferred to females, and to the several and respective heirs of their bodies, so as that each possessor shall take only a life estate and interest in the same"; and in the event of W.'s decease without issue, then he devised his estates to his trustees, upon trust to allow his other children, whom he enumerated, "to possess and enjoy the same, strictly limited to life interest, and in tail to each of them respectively, in the order of primogeniture, males to be preferred to females":—Held, that W. took an estate for life only. Towns v. Wentworth, 11 Moore, P. C. 526; 6 W. R. 397.

V. bequeathed his residuary estate to M., in trust to be invested in land, and to go with the entail as in his father's (N.'s) will. N. had devised his estates to V. for life; remainder to his first and other sons successively in tail; remainder to his son J. for life; and similar remainders to the first and other sons of J. in tail; remainder as to one moiety, to the use of his eldest daughter Marianne during natural life; remainder to the use of the first son of Marianne and the heirs of his body; remainder to the use of the second, third, and every succeeding son of Marianne, and their heirs, according as they should be in seniority of age and priority of birth; remainder to the use of the daughter or daughters of Marianne and their heirs, share and share alike, as tenants in common, &c.; remainder to the use of his second daughter Eliza Maher during her natural life, with the like remainders and limitations over to the sons and daughters of Eliza, and their heirs, as thereinbefore contained respecting the sons' daughters of Marianne; and as to and for the other remaining moiety of the devised lands to the use of his daughter Eliza Maher during her natural life, with the like remainders and limitations over to the sons and daughters of Eliza and their respective heirs as thereinbefore contained respecting the sons and daughters of Marianne as to the first-mentioned moiety. And in default of issue of Eliza, to the use of his daughter Marianne during her life, with the like remainders and limitations over to the sons and daughters of Marianne and their respective heirs as thereinbefore contained respecting the sons and daughters of Eliza. J. survived V., and died in 1850. Both died without issue. Marianne died in 1854, leaving two sons: Edmond, who died without issue in 1870, and Lory. Eliza died in 1875, without ever having had issue. Edmond, after his mother's death, barred the entail in the moiety, in which she took a life estate, and was paid the half of the residuary estate in a cause instituted to administer V.'s assets:—Held, that on Eliza's death, Lory, the then surviving son of Marianne, became tenant in tail of the half of V.'s residuary estate, in which she had a life interest, and that he, having barred the entail, was absolutely entitled to that half of the funds; as, on the true construction of N.'s will, Eliza's second and other children would take successive estates tail, as well as her first son, and as (although her daughters would take as tenants in common in fee) the words which prefaced the gift over "in default of issue" were to be construed in default of her children, according to the rule approved of in Foster v. Hayes (4 El. & Bl. 717, 734). Smyth v. Power, Ir. R. 10 Eq. 192.

—— Where Gift to some only of the Issue.]—Devise to S. for life, remainder to his eldest son and his male issue, and for want of issue of S., to, &c. S. died without issue:—Held, he took an estate tail in remainder, as in Langley v. Baldwin (1 Eq. Cas. Abr., pl. 29, cited in 1 P. Wms. 759; 1 Ves. Sen. 26). Stanley v. Lennard, Ambl. 355; 1 Eden, 87.

J. being seised of some lands in fee and cestui que trust of other lands, devises them to A. for life; remainder to his first and second son in tail male (going no further); and after A.'s death, without issue male, then to a charity:—Held, that A. was tenant in tail until issue born, saving as to the trust estate. Att.-Gen. v. Sutton, 3 Bro. P. C. 75; 1 P. Wms. 754.

Devise to trustees to invest in stock and pay dividends to testator's son for life, and after his decease to his eldest son and his heirs for ever; and in case of their death without issue, to his (testator's) nearest relation, and the nearest relation of such nearest relation for ever. This is double contingency, and in the event of the son dying without issue, is good. Marsh v. Marsh, 1 Bro. C. C. 293.

A testator, before the Wills Act came into operation, devised his "estate" at A. to S. K. for life, charged with life annuities; but in case the annuitants, or any one of them, survived S. K., he gave the aforesaid "estate" to S. K.'s eldest surviving son, charged with the annuities; but in default of issue male he gave the aforesaid "estate" to T. K., charged in like manner, and unto his eldest son upon the same conditions; but in default of issue male the premises were to descend to the testator's heirs, charged as above:—Held, first that the limitation to S. K.'s eldest surviving son ought not to be construed literally so as to make it dependent on S. K. being survived by one of the annuitants; secondly, that the words "in default of issue male" were not to be construed referentially as meaning in default of an eldest surviving son, but generally, so as to give S. K. an estate in tail male; thirdly, that the use of the word "estate" was not in the above will sufficient to give the eldest surviving son of S. K. an estate in fee simple; fourthly, that where, upon the careful perusal of an instrument, it is impossible not to be satisfied that a strict and ordinary interpretation of its language would disappoint the intention with which it was framed, such an interpretation is not to be adopted. Key v. Key, 4 De G. M. & G. 73; 1 Eq. R. 82; 22 L. J., Ch. 641; 17 Jur. 769.

A devise to trustees and their heirs, in trust for A. for life, and his first, &c., sons in tail; but if A. dies without an heir male of his body begotten, then to go over. A. is only tenant for life, and the words "if he dies without an heir male," &c., do not give him an estate tail by implication. Bamfield v. Popham, 2 Vern. 427; 1 P. Wms. 54; Salk. 236.

Devise to A., and after his death to his first and other sons, and in default of male issue then unto his eldest and other daughters, and to their heirs male for ever, an estate in tail male in A. Wight v. Leigh, 15 Ves. 564; 10 R. R. 120.

A. being seised of an estate for lives renewable for ever, devised it to B., C. and D. as tenants in common for their respective lives, with remainder to the issue male of B., C. and D. respectively, in such shares as B., C. and D. respectively should appoint, with powers to each of charging for daughters' portions; and in case either should die without issue male or female, then the share of B. to go to C. and his issue male with like powers; that of C. to D., and that of D. to B. And in failure of issue male of B., C. and D., then to their issue female as tenants in common during their lives. And in default of such issue, then to E. and his issue:—Held, that C. took an estate quasi in tail. Briscoe v. Briscoe, Hayes, 34.

J. M. by his will devised the Maytham Hall estate, being of gavelkind tenure, to trustees, upon trust to sell a competent part for the payment of debts, and subject thereto upon trust for P. M. for life, and after his decease for the first son of P. M. for life, and after his decease for the first son of such first son and the heirs male of his body, and in default of such issue for every other son of P. M. successively for the like interests and limitations, and in default of issue of the body of P. M., or in case of his not leaving any at his decease, for T. G. M., the eldest son of T. M., for life, and after his decease for the first son of T. G. M., and the heirs male of his body; and in default of issue of the body of the said T. G. M. for every other son of T. M. successively, for the like estates and interests, and on failure of all such issue of the body of T. M. upon trust for him and his heirs and assigns for ever. P. M. never had any children:—Held, that P. M. took an estate for life, with remainder to his first unborn son if such son had been born, and that all the remainders over were void; held, also, that effect was to be given to the gift over to T. M. and his sons, in default of issue of the body of P. M., &c., as an independent claim, and that it was subsequently valid. Monypenny v. Dering, 2 De G. M. & G. 145; 22 L. J., Ch. 313; 17 Jur. 457. And see S. C., 7 Hare, 568; 14 Jur. 1083; 15 Jur. 1050.

Devise to A. for life, with remainder to his first son who should attain twenty-one, in fee, and in default to all his daughters in fee; but in the event of A. dying without any issue male who should attain twenty-one, or any issue female, then over:—Held, that A. took for life only, and that his estate was not enlarged by the gift over in default of issue. Sanders v. Ashford, 28 Beav. 609.

Bequest of a residue upon trust for the testator's grandson, B., the son of Isaac, at twenty-five, for life; and, after the death of B., in case he shall have a son who shall attain twenty-one, then for such son of B. who shall first attain twenty-one, absolutely; and in default of such son of B., and after B.'s death, then upon like trust for the testator's grandson J., &c., with like limitations successively in favour of any other grandsons, sons of Isaac, born in the testator's lifetime, and their respective sons first attaining twenty-one; and in default of a son of any such grandson attaining twenty-one, then upon trust for any son of Isaac, born after the testator's decease, who shall first attain twenty-one, absolutely; and in case no son of any son of the testator's son Isaac then born, or thereafter to be born in the testator's lifetime, nor any son of his son Isaac, born after his decease, shall live to attain twenty-one, then from and immediately after the decease of all the sons and grandsons of his son Isaac, upon trust for the testator's nephew G., for life; and upon the decease of his nephew G., in case he shall have a son who shall live to the age of twenty-one, then upon trust for such son who shall first attain twenty-one, absolutely:—Held, upon the whole context of the will, that the words "after the decease of all the sons and grandsons" must be read as if they had been "after the decease of all the aforesaid," or "all such sons and grandsons"; and that the limitation over in favour of the first son of G. attaining twenty-one was therefore not too remote. Ellicombe v. Gompertz, 3 Myl. & Cr. 127.

A gift to children in tail not comprehending all the issue, followed by a limitation over in terms "on failure of issue," will generally be read as meaning all such issue as are before mentioned, unless it appears from the context that other issue than those provided for were intended to take. If the question had arisen entirely under the will making the gift, and the words "there being a failure of issue of," &c., had been found in that will, following limitations to the issue like those contained in a previous will, in this case those words would have been construed to refer to a failure, not of issue generally, but of such issue as the will had previously provided for. For the purpose of determining the meaning of such a limitation, the principles of construction must be the same whether the instrument be a deed or a will. Eno v. Eno, 6 Hare, 171; 16 L. J., Ch. 358; 11 Jur. 746.

It is a rule of construction that where there is a gift to some only of a class, and then a gift over upon failure of all the class, it is to be construed upon failure not of the whole class, but of those only who are specified before. Bryan v. Mansion, 5 De G. & Sm. 737; 22 L. J., Ch. 233; 17 Jur. 202.

A testatrix gave a fund to trustees, upon trust to pay the dividends to her niece; and, after her decease if her husband should survive her, and she should leave no "issue" living at her decease, then to the husband for life; but if she should leave "issue," then upon trust to pay a moiety of the dividends to the husband, and to apply the other moiety, during his life, for the benefit of "such issue" during their minorities. After the decease of the niece as to one moiety of the fund, and after the decease of the survivor of her and her husband then as to the whole of the fund, the trust was to transfer and divide the same unto and amongst the "children" of the niece, the shares of sons to be vested at twenty-one, and of daughters at that age or marriage with consent, with survivorship in case of the death of any child before his portion should become vested, with a provision for maintenance for "children," during minority; and in case the niece should die in the lifetime of the husband leaving issue, and all should die unmarried, then the trust was to pay the whole of the dividends unto the husband. "And from and after the decease of my said niece and her husband, and the survivor of them, and failure of issue of my said niece, upon trust to transfer the fund to other persons":—Held, that the word "issue" in previous parts of the will obviously meant "children," and that the gift over on failure of "issue" meant a failure of "children," and that the gift over took effect. Ib.

—— Where Word "Such" expressly used.]—In a devise of land to A. for life, and if A. die without issue, then to B., though here is an express estate for life to A., yet the subsequent words will turn it into an estate tail; but where lands are devised to A. for life, remainder to trustees, &c., remainder to his first, &c., son in tail male, &c., and if A. dies without issue, then, &c.; this will not give an estate tail to A., but the words "without issue" must be intended "without such issue." Blackborn v. Edgley, 1 P. Wms. 606.

A testator gave the income of his personal and the rents of his real estate to his daughter for life for her separate use; and after her decease and that of his wife, he gave the residue of his real and personal estate to trustees in trust, to sell and pay half the produce "to the issue" of his daughters equally, to be paid at twenty-one; and if only one child, then to such one child; and he directed the trustees to apply the interest in the maintenance and education of such issue; "and in default of such issue," he gave such moiety of the residue between his nephews and nieces living at the death of his daughter; and he gave the other moiety of the residue at the decease of his wife and daughter, without issue, to the trustees to permit his godson to take the income for life, and after his decease to certain charities:—Held, that "issue" in the first clause was to be construed "children," but in the second clause in its ordinary, unrestricted sense, and consequently that the gift over of the first moiety upon the death of the daughter without issue was good, but was too remote as to the second. Carter v. Bentall, 2 Beav. 551; 9 L. J., Ch. 303; 4 Jur. 691.

J. devised all his lands, &c., to his daughter B. for life, remainder to trustees to preserve, &c., remainder to the use of the first son of B., remainder to the heirs male of the body of said first son, with divers remainders over; and in case of the death of B. without issue of her body living at her decease, then testator devised said lands to his trustees, until his cousin C. should attain the age of twenty-one; and in case of the death of C. under twenty-one without issue, then to D. for life, remainder to his first, &c., son in tail, remainder to E. for life, remainder to his first, &c., son in tail, remainder over. The Lord Chancellor inclined to confine the contingency in the will of J. of B.'s dying without issue of her-body living at her death to the death of C. under twenty-one, and that the subsequent limitations to C. after attaining twenty-one, and to D. and E., are not contingent but vested remainders. Lethieullier v. Tracy, 3 Atk. 775; Ambl. 204. And see 2 Ken. Ch. 40.

A testator devised to his grandson C. an estate for his own use during his life, remainder to the first son of the body of C. lawfully begotten, severally and successively in tail male, of the name of C.; and for want of such lawful issue of that name, "either by my grandson C. or my son, then I give and devise it amongst my daughters and their children, share and share alike, to hold unto them, his or her or their heirs for ever, as tenants in common, and not as joint tenants": —Held, that C. took an estate for life, with remainder to his first and other sons in tail. Parker v. Tootal, 5 N. R. 378; 11 H. L. Cas. 143; 34 L. J., Ex. 198; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 185; 12 L. T. 89; 13 W. R. 442. And see S. C., nom. Barrow v. Tootal, 7 H. & N. 962; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 991; 6 L. T. 472; 10 W. R. 357.

Testator devised an estate to A. for life, remainder to trustees to preserve, &c., remainder to all the children of A., as tenants in common, and not as joint tenants, and for want of such issue to B. for life, remainder to trustees to preserve, &c., remainder to all the children of B. as tenants in common, and not as joint tenants, and for want of such issue to C. in fee:—Held, that the children A. took estates for life, with cross-remainders between them for life, with remainder to B. for life, with remainder to her children, as tenants in common, with cross-remainders between them for life, with remainder to C. in fee. Ashley v. Ashley, 6 Sim. 358; 3 L. J., Ch. 61.

Devise to several for life; and after the death of the surviving tenant for life, to a son of my nephew A. and his heirs and assigns, and for want of such issue over:—Held, that this was a gift in fee to the first-born son of A. Ashburner v. Wilson, 17 Sim. 204; 19 L. J., Ch. 330; 14 Jur. 497.

Testator devised lands to his son A. F. for life, and after the decease of A. F. to his first son lawfully issuing, and for default of such first issue to the use of the second, third, and every other son, and the heirs of his or their bodies, the elder to be always preferred before the younger of such sons and the heirs of his body, and for default of such issue, then to the use of all and every the daughters of A. F. and the heirs of the body of such daughter and daughters, with remainders over:—Held, that the first son of A. F. took neither by construction nor by implication an estate tail, but a life estate only. Barnacle v. Nightingale, 14 Sim. 456; 9 Jur. 221.

A. being seised in fee, devised one moiety of his estate to his sister M. for life, remainder to her first and other sons in tail male, and for want of such issue, remainder to her issue female and the heirs of their body, with power to M. to charge 1,000*l.* for younger children, and for want of such issue, remainder to his sister I. for life, with precisely similar remainders to her issue. The other moiety was limited to I. for her life, and to her issue, and then to M. and her issue, in precisely the same way as the first moiety; and for want of issue of M. and I., the whole to L. for life, with remainders over. By codicil, reciting the marriage of M. and D., he devised one moiety to M. for life, remainder to the issue of M. successively, and the heirs of their bodies, "as in said will limited, and for default of such issue to D. for life, with remainder over, as in said will limited." The codicil contained the following clause: "I ratify my will with respect of my real estate in every particular not hereby altered; the only alteration I intend hereby is, that if my sister Margaret should die without issue, or failing issue, that the said D., her husband, or any other husband she may have, should hold a moiety of my estate during his life." M., after the death of D., suffered a recovery to the use of herself, her heirs and assigns for ever:—Held, that under the limitations in the will, M. took only an estate for her life, and that she did not take an estate tail female, after the estate in tail male to her first and other sons:—Held, also, that from the words "in default of such issue to D." &c., in the codicil, there was no ground for implying an estate tail in M., the word "such" being referential to the devise in the will of her sons in tail male, and her daughters in tail general:—Held, also, that the devise in the codicil to D., or any future husband, if M. should die without issue, or failing issue, was to take effect on the determination of the express limitations in the will to M.'s first and other sons in tail male, and to her daughters in tail general, and not on a general failure of M.'s issue, and that therefore M. did not take an estate tail by implication. Hamilton v. West, 10 Ir. Eq. R. 75.

A. devised an estate to his daughter for life, and after her decease to her son or sons, daughter or daughters, to him, her or them, or his, her or their heirs for ever; but should his daughter die without having such heir or heirs, then the estate to be sold within three months after her death, and the produce divided amongst other persons. The daughter died without having had any issue:—Held, that the gift over was valid, and took effect. Polley v. Polley, 29 Beav. 134.

In a will of a testator, who died in 1804, he devised real estate to his daughter for life, with remainder to her sons successively in tail, with remainder to her daughters as tenants in common (without words of limitation), and in default of such issue, to his son in fee:—Held, that the daughters took for life only. Arnold, In re, 33 Beav. 163; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1186; 9 L. T. 530; 12 W. R. 4.

A devise for life contained in a will cannot be enlarged by a recital in a codicil that such devise was in tail. Ib.

A testator devised lands in question to trustees, to the use of A. for life, remainder to the use of the first and other sons of A., and in default of such issue over:—Held, that the words "in default of such issue" did not operate to enlarge, by implication, A.'s life's estate. Purcell v. Purcell, 2 Dr. & War. 217; 1 Con. & L. 371; 4 Ir. Eq. R. 558.

Devise of real estates, upon trust to pay the rents and profits unto or to the use of R. L. and his assigns, for his life; and from and after his decease, unto the first and other sons of R. L.; and in default of such issue, in trust for the first and other daughters of R. L.; and in default of such issue, to pay the rents and profits as therein mentioned; and an ultimate remainder over:—Held, that R. L. did not take an estate tail in the devised premises, nor an estate for life with remainder to his first and other sons successively in tail, nor an estate for life, with remainder to his first son in fee. Bridger v. Ramsey, 10 Hare, 320.

A. devised lands in trust for J. B., a reputed son, for his life, and after his decease for and to his first and every other son successively in tail male, and in default of such issue to his daughter or daughters, to hold to them, if more than one, and their heirs, as tenants in common; and in default of issue of the said J. B., to and for the testator's right heirs:—Held, that J. B. took only an estate for life, and that no remainder in tail to him could be implied after the limitation to the daughter. Baker v. Tucker, 3 H. L. Cas. 106; 14 Jur. 771. Affirming 11 Ir. Eq. R. 104.

A devise of "all my real and personal fortune" to A. for life, and after his decease to "the first and every other son in succession of A."; and "in default of such issue," to B. for life, with the same limitations to his sons; and in default of such issue, to the daughters of A. and B.; and in default of such issue, to C. for life, with the same limitations repeated as to her sons and daughters; and in default of such issue, to X. in fee:—Held, to give successive life estates in all the limitations previous to the gift to X. Bevan v. White, 7 Ir. Eq. R. 473.

Devise of Reversion.]—A., having a reversion in fee of lands settled upon the marriage of B., his son, in the usual manner, devises all the lands in that settlement on failure of issue of the body of B., and for want of heirs male of his own body, to his daughter F. and the heirs of her body. This will does not give an estate tail by implication to B. The devise to F. is executory, and is void as being on too remote a contingency. Lanesborough (Lady) v. Fox, Cas. t. Talb. 262.

A., by a deed on his marriage, settled his estate upon the issue of the marriage, remainder to his own right heirs; and if he should die without issue male and leave one daughter, then the lands to be charged with 3,000*l.* for her at twenty-one, and 150*l.* yearly maintenance in the meantime. A. having then no issue, by his will devised thus: "And whereas by the settlement made on my wife I have reserved the inheritance of my lands in myself after the estate tail therein is spent, now in case I die without issue, or that such issue shall die without issue of his, her or their body, or that the estate tail limited by that settlement shall determine, I give all my said manors to my kinsman B., and to his first and other sons in tail male, remainder to C. in fee." A. had afterwards a daughter:—Held, that this daughter was entitled under the will to the whole estate as a tenant in tail, and that B. took nothing. Cornwall v. Williams, Colles's P. C. 117.

A. devises lands to his eldest son for life, remainder to the heirs male of his body lawfully begotten; remainder to the youngest son in like manner; remainder to any after-born son of the testator's for life; remainder to the heirs male of the body of such after-born son; and for want of such issue, to his brother J. for life, with remainder to the heirs male of his body. The testator was on his death-bed at the time of making his will, and died in about three weeks afterwards. The younger son, however, died before him, and the eldest son enjoyed the estate, but died without having barred the entail. Upon a question whether the limitation over to the testator's brother ought not to be considered as depending upon a general failure of issue, and consequently too remote:—Held, that a remainder after estates tail was vested in the brother, and that the testator had not the event of a second marriage in contemplation. Jones v. Morgan, 3 Bro. P. C. 323.

A testator, who was entitled, under his son's marriage settlement, to a reversion on the death of the survivor of his son and his son's wife without issue living at the death of such survivor, devised to trustees upon trust to sell, after the several deceases of his son and his son's wife without issue. The proceeds of the sale were to be divided between the testator's six daughters or such of them as should be then living, and the children of such of them as should be dead leaving issue. But in case only one of his said daughters or only one child of his said daughters should be living at the time of the death of the survivor of his son and his son's wife (they leaving no issue), then the whole was to go to such child or grandchild:—Held, that the trust for sale was not void for remoteness, as the will sufficiently referred to the issue mentioned in the settlement. Lewis v. Templer, 33 Beav. 625; 10 L. T. 638; 12 W. R. 128.

8. Death Coupled with a Contingency.

a. Death of Object of Prior Gift in Testator's Lifetime, and Substitution.

Gift over on Death of A. under a given Age—Where A. dies under given Age.]—Bequest over, in case of the death of a legatee before a certain period, takes effect on his death within that period during the testator's life. Humberstone v. Stanton, 1 V. & B. 388; 12 R. R. 243.

One devises portions to his children, A., B. and C., and if any die before twenty-one or marriage, the portion of the child so dying to go to the survivor. One of the children dies in the lifetime of the testator. This is not a lapsed legacy, but shall go over to the surviving children. Perkins v. Hicklethwaite, 1 P. Wms. 274.

Legacies of 300*l.* each to three children at twenty-one or marriage, and if any should die before that time his legacy to survive to others. One died before testator:—Held, his legacy survived. Hickman v. Stroud, 2 Eq. Abr. 541.

J. devised 3,000*l.* apiece to his three daughters, A., B. and C., at twenty-one or marriage; if any died before, to go to the survivors. B. died in the lifetime of the testator; her legacy shall go to the surviving daughters. Ledsome v. Hickman, 2 Vern. 611.

Legacy to A., in case she shall be living with the testatrix at her decease, with limitations over upon the death of A. before twenty-one or marriage, fails by the death of A. in the lifetime of the testatrix. Allen v. Callow, 3 Ves. 294.

One gives a legacy of 200*l.* apiece to his children, payable at twenty-one, and if any of them die before twenty-one, then the legacy given to him so dying to go over to the surviving children. One of the children dies in the life of the testator; though the legacy lapses as to the legatee dying under twenty-one, yet it is well given over to the surviving children. Willing v. Baine, 3 P. Wms. 113.

Devise of a legacy of 1,500*l.* to A., payable at his age of twenty-one, and if A. died before then to B. A. dies in the lifetime of the testator, yet B. shall have the legacy. Miller v. Warren, 2 Vern. 207. Sed quære, note there.

—— On Death before Legacy Payable or Received.]—Divers legacies given by a will, and the will is, that if any legatee died before his legacy was payable, it should go to his brothers and sisters. A legatee died in the testator's lifetime. No lapsed legacy, but shall go to his sister. Darrel v. Molesworth, 2 Vern. 378.

A testator gave to A. a sum of stock to be paid to him within six months after the testator's decease, and in case it should happen that A. should die not having received the legacy, and he should leave any children, such children should be entitled to the same in equal proportions, payable at twenty-one or marriage. A. died during the testator's lifetime, leaving three children who had attained twenty-one, and were living at the testator's decease :—Held, that the legacy lapsed, and the children took no interest therein. Smith v. Oliver, 11 Beav. 481; 18 L. J., Ch. 80; 13 Jur. 159.

A. devises 500*l*. legacy to the second son of I. S., and devises other legacies to the other sons of I. S., and declares that if any of the younger sons of I. S. should die before they are capable of receiving their share, the share or legacy of them so dying shall go to the survivor; the second son dies in the testator's lifetime; this 500*l*. given to the second son shall not survive. Rider v. Wager, 2 P. Wms. 330.

A testator gave the residue of his estate to trustees, upon trust to pay the dividends to A. during her life, and after her death to transfer the trust moneys to his two nephews B. and C., share and share alike, and if either of his nephews died before his share of the trust moneys became payable without leaving issue, the share of him so dying was to go to the survivor; B., one of the nephews, died in the testator's lifetime, and left no issue :—Held, that there was no lapse as to any part of the residue, and that the whole went, upon the death of A., to the surviving nephew C. Humphreys v. Howes, 1 Russ. & M. 639; Tam. 497; 8 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 165.

A testatrix directed her trustees to place out a sum of 1,000*l*., and to pay the interest to B. R. for life, and after his decease the principal to be divided between his son and daughter, but in case of the decease of either of them before the same should be payable, then such principal and interest to be paid to the survivor of them. The daughter of B. R. died before the testatrix :—Held, that the daughter's share in the 1,000*l*. did not lapse, but that the whole legacy was vested in the son subject to his father's life interest, and was not liable to be divested by the death of the son during the life of his father. Hues v. Jackson, 2 Eq. R. 462; 23 L. J., Ch. 51; 2 W. R. 83.

A testator left his residuary estate to M. for life, with remainder over to certain beneficiaries, and he directed that, in case any of them should depart this life before the time of distribution, leaving issue, and such issue should die before attaining twenty-one, the share of the beneficiary so dying should be equally divided amongst the survivors of the class :—Held, that the beneficiaries who survived the testator took an absolute interest in the gift, and that there was no lapse as to the shares of those dying in the testator's lifetime. Taylor v. Sparrow, 13 L. T. 494; 14 W. R. 124. Reversing 12 Jur. (N.S.) 593; 14 W. R. 881—L.JJ.

Devise of real estate, to be sold after the death of tenant for life, and bequest of specific sums out of the produce to several grandchildren and a child, and of the residue to other children, "to be respectively paid at twenty-one or marriage." "But if any of my said children or grandchildren should happen to die before the time of such legacy becoming due and payable, then I give and bequeath the share or part of such child or children, or grandchildren, so dying, unto and among those that shall be then living, share and share alike." Two of the children died before the testator; their shares are to be divided among the other children and grandchildren equally. Another child and a grandchild, having survived the testator and attained twenty-one, died before the tenant for life; their shares transmissible to their representatives; no implication that the survivorship was to take place among the children and grandchildren distinctly from the inequality of legacies, or from the bequest to each class being made by distinct clauses. Walker v. Main, 1 J. & W. 1; 20 R. R. 202.

A testator declared that the trustees of his will should stand possessed of the residue of the money to arise from his real and personal estate upon trust "for all and every my first cousins-german, to be divided equally amongst them, share and share alike; and in case any of my said cousins shall depart this life before their respective shares shall become due or payable leaving any lawful issue, I direct that such issue shall have the same share or shares of the same residue as his, her or their parent or parents would have been entitled to if living." The testator had several first cousins-german living at the date of his will, two of whom died in his lifetime; the others survived him. One of those who died left seven children; the other left no issue :—Held, first, that the words "due or payable" referred to the time of the testator's death; secondly, that the issue of the deceased cousin were entitled to their parent's share; thirdly, that the share of the cousin who died without issue did not lapse. Coort v. Winder, 8 Jur. 770.

—— "In Case of Death"—Construed Death before Distribution.]—A testator gave certain property to trustees, upon trust for his widow for life; and after her death directed the same to be sold, and the proceeds divided into two equal shares, one of which he gave, in five equal shares, to A., B., C., D. and E., and directed that, in case of the death of any or either of them before the widow, their respective share should go to their respective husbands or wives, if any, and if not, then to their respective children, and in failure of children, to the survivors of them, share and share alike. He gave the residue to the other moiety after payment of a legacy as follows: "to F., G., H., I. and K., and in case of the death of any or either of them, then their respective shares to their children, if any, and if not, then to the survivors of them, share and share alike" :—Held, that the words "in case of the death," in the gift of the second moiety, meant in case of death before the period of distribution, and applied to death in the testator's lifetime as well as to death after the decease of the testator, but before the decease of the testator's widow :—Held, also, as to each moiety, that the share of each legatee who died before the period of distribution vested absolutely in such of his children as were living at the death of their parent, or at the death of the testator, whichever last happened. Ive v. King, 16 Beav. 46; 21 L. J., Ch. 560; 16 Jur. 489.

—— On Death without Issue.]—Devise of an estate charged with two several legacies to A. and B., and in case A. or B. die without lawful issue, then the whole of the said two legacies to go to the survivor, his executors, &c.; A. dies without issue in the testator's lifetime:—Held, the legacy lapsed, the contingency on which it was given over being too remote. Massey v. Hudson, 2 Mer. 130; 16 R. R. 158.

Executory trust for three for their lives as tenants in common; if any died without issue living at their deaths, their shares to go to survivors with contingent remainders in tail, and remainders over. Two of them dying in testator's lifetime:—Held, their shares lapsed and went over. Sperling v. Toll, 1 Ves. Sen. 70.

Bequest of chattels to two legatees, share and share alike, and, upon the demise of either of them without lawful issue, then the share of her so dying to go to the other. One of the legatees died in the testator's lifetime:—Held, that the other was absolutely entitled by survivorship. Mackinnon v. Peach, 2 Keen, 555; 7 L. J., Ch. 211.

A testator gave his real and personal estate to trustees upon trust to pay the income to his wife until his youngest child should attain the age of twenty-one, and then upon trust to pay the income in fifths to his wife for life, and to his four daughters for life, and on the death of his daughters respectively to convey and assign their respective shares to their children respectively; and on the death of his wife, he directed the shares given to her to be divided amongst the daughters in the same manner as the original shares given to them. And his will was, that in case any or either of his children should die without issue, the share or shares of her or them so dying should go and belong to all and every the child or children of such of his said daughters as should happen to leave issue, his, her and their heirs and assigns, as tenants in common; but in case all his said children should die without leaving lawful issue, then he devised and bequeathed his said real and personal estate unto his brothers and sisters to hold to them, their heirs, executors, administrators and assigns as tenants in common:—Held, that the share of one of the daughters, who died under age and without issue, did not pass under the gift over to the brother and sisters; but that there was an intestacy as to that share in the events that had happened. Bastin v. Watts, 4 Jur. 791.

A testator gave the residue of his estate to trustees, upon trust to pay the dividends to A. during her life, and after her death to transfer the trust moneys to his two nephews B. and C., share and share alike, and if either of his nephews died before his share of the trust moneys became payable without leaving issue, the share of him so dying was to go to the survivor; B., one of the nephews, died in the testator's lifetime, and left no issue:—Held, that there was no lapse as to any part of the residue, and that the whole went, upon the death of A., to the surviving nephew C. Humphreys v. Howes, 1 Russ. & M. 639; Tam. 497; 8 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 165.

Bequest to the children of A. who should be living at the testator's decease, equally, with survivorship in case of death without leaving issue; if leaving issue, the issue to have the parents' share. The survivorship cannot be restrained to the period of the testator's death, as upon that construction the clause would be repugnant. Shergold v. Boone, 13 Ves. 370; 9 R. R. 195.

—— On Death leaving Issue.]—Testator ordered the interest of the residue to be paid to his sisters for life, and, in case any of them should die leaving issue, then to transfer the principal of the residuum to the children of the sister so dying at twenty-one; one of the sisters died in the life of the testator: her children shall take her share. Rheeder v. Ower, 3 Bro. C. C. 240.

When a testator devised real estate upon trust for A. and the testator's brothers and sisters for their lives, with benefit of survivorship where any of them should die without leaving children, but where any should die leaving children upon trust to let such children have their parents' share until the death of the survivor of A. and his brothers and sisters, and upon the death of such survivor upon trust to convey the shares of their parents among the children of A. and his brothers and sisters:—Held, that in the case of A. and of a brother and sister of the testator who were living at the date of his will, but who died before him, their children were entitled to shares during the continuance of the life estate of the testator's surviving brothers and sisters, but that the children of a brother who was dead at the date of the will were excluded from such shares. Habergham v. Ridehalgh, 39 L. J., Ch. 545; L. R. 9 Eq. 395; 23 L. T. 214; 18 W. R. 427.

—— On Death under Age leaving Issue.]—A testator gave to A. a legacy to be vested in him when and as he should attain the age of twenty-one, or if he should die under that age leaving lawful issue at his death; and in case he should die without attaining a vested interest in his legacy, the testator gave the legacy over to other persons. The legatee attained the age of twenty-one, and died in the testator's lifetime, leaving issue:—Held, that the gift over took effect. Gaitskell, In re, L. R. 15 Eq. 386; 28 L. T. 760; 21 W. R. 768.

—— On Death before Tenant for Life leaving Issue.]—Testator bequeathed a sum of stock to his wife, and after her decease to his three sons, to be equally divided amongst them, if they should be all living at the decease of his wife; but if any or either of them should die in her lifetime leaving a child or children, such child or children who should be living at the time of the wife's death should be substituted in the place of such of his sons who should so happen to die, and take his, her or their parent's share. All the sons died in the wife's lifetime, two of them leaving children who survived the wife; the third died a bachelor:—Held, that one-third of the stock fell into the residue. Hustler v. Tillbrook, 9 Sim. 368.

Gift of personalty to A. for life, remainder to the children of tenant for life nominatim, or such of them as should be living at the death of tenant for life. If any of them should die in the lifetime of tenant for life, leaving issue, such issue to take the share the parent would have been entitled to. There were four children of the tenant for life, who all died in lifetime of tenant for life. Two died in the lifetime of testatrix, and one of those two left issue. None of the others left issue:—Held, that the children of the deceased child took the whole fund. Ashling v. Knowles, 3 Drew. 593.

—— On Death before A. leaving Issue.]—A., by his will, gave his residuary personal estate and the proceeds of his real estate in trust for his nephews and nieces, the children of his brother F., and his late sister, E. B., and the brother and sister of his wife; and in case either of his nephews or nieces should die in the lifetime of his wife leaving child or children, such children to be entitled to the father or mother's share. A nephew died in the lifetime of the testator leaving a child:—Held, that such child was entitled to her father's share of the residue, as being a gift to individuals, and not to a class. Jones v. Frewin, 3 N. R. 415; 10 L. T. 330; 12 W. R. 369.

—— On Death in Life of A. without Issue.]—A testator gave the income of a fund to trustees, in trust to pay the same to A. B. for life, and after her decease to pay the principal money to her daughters, C. and D., in equal shares, with a gift over to the issue of either of them dying in the lifetime of A. B.; and should either C. or D. die in the lifetime of A. B. without leaving issue, then the whole fund was to go over to the survivor of the two daughters; but in case both of them should die in the lifetime of A. B. without leaving issue, then in trust for W. W. absolutely. The testator died in 1844, leaving A. B. and her daughter D. surviving. C., the other daughter, died in his lifetime unmarried:—Held, that upon the death of A. B. the surviving daughter was entitled to the whole fund. Domville's Trusts, In re, 22 L. J., Ch. 947; 17 Jur. 361.

—— On Death of A. in Testator's Lifetime.]—A testator by his will bequeathed personal estate to J. W. upon trust for his (the testator's) wife absolutely, and in case his said wife should die in his lifetime, he directed that all his said estate should be held by his said trustee upon certain trusts (which failed), and subject to those trusts he bequeathed all his property to J. W. absolutely:—Held, that the gift to J. W. was dependent on the event of the testator surviving his wife, and that J. W. did not become entitled from the mere fact of the gift to the wife failing to have practical operation. Underwood v. Wing, 4 De G. M. & G. 633; 24 L. J., Ch. 293; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 169; 3 W. R. 228.

—— On Death without Child Entitled.]—A testator gave his residuary estate in trust for his wife for life, and after her death he directed that one-sixth of the fund should be held to pay the income to his daughter H. for life, and after her death for her children who being a son or sons should attain twenty-one, or being a daughter or daughters attain that age or marry. He gave other shares upon similar trusts for others of his children by name, and their children respectively. The will contained a proviso, that if any of his children should die without having any child who, under the above trust, should become absolutely entitled to a share of the trust fund, then as well the original share given as also the share accruing under the proviso to each child whose issue should so fail and his or her children or child should go to the survivors or survivor of the testator's children; and if more than one, in equal shares during their lives, and after their deaths the shares to be respectively transmitted to such their respective children or child as thereinbefore expressed with respect to their original shares. H. was living at the date of the will, but died childless in the testator's lifetime:—Held, that her share was not undisposed of, but that the gift over in the proviso took effect. Rackham v. De la Mare, 2 De G. J. & S. 74; 3 N. R. 398; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 190; 9 L. T. 699; 12 W. R. 363.

Death of Object of Prior Gift before Date of Will—Where Gift to Individuals Nominatim.]—Distinction between a substitutional gift after a bequest to persons as a class and one following a gift to individuals nominatim. Ive v. King, 16 Beav. 46; 21 L. J., Ch. 560; 16 Jur. 489.

Bequest to A. for life, and afterwards equally between a number of persons by name; and in case of the death of any of them before A., their respective shares to go to their respective children, and on failure of children to the survivors. The following points were decided as to the several original legatees: first, Ann was deceased at the date of the will:—Held, nevertheless, that her children took by substitution; secondly, William was living at the date of the will, but he died before the testator:—Held, also, that his children took his share, and that the class was to be ascertained at the death of the testator; thirdly, Thomas survived the testator, and died in the lifetime of the widow:—Held, that his children took, but were to be ascertained at Thomas's death; fourthly, it was held, that, to entitle a child to take, it was not necessary that he should survive the tenant for life; fifthly, Charles died without issue:—Held, that the survivors were to be ascertained at his death, and not at the death of the tenant for life. Ib.

A testator directed his residue to be divided on the death of his wife (who survived him) equally between his brothers and sisters by name, and declared that if any of them should die leaving issue, his, her or their shares should go to his, her or their respective issue:—Held, first, that the class was to be ascertained, as to the issue of a legatee who had died before the testator, at the death of the testator, and as to the issue of a legatee who had survived him at the death of the legatee. Hobgen v. Neale, 40 L. J., Ch. 36; L. R. 11 Eq. 48; 23 L. T. 681; 19 W. R 144.

Testator bequeathed a sum of stock in trust for three persons nominatim in equal shares and proportions, to be transferred to them when they shall attain twenty-one, but if any of them shall depart this life under age and unmarried, then the share original and accruing of him, her or them so dying to go to the survivors; and if all of them should die under twenty-one and unmarried, the stock to fall into residue. One of the three persons named died prior to the making of the will:—Held, that the share of the one so dying passed to the other two persons named. Shepard's Trust, In re, 1 K. & J. 269.

Gift by will to the testator's wife for life, and after her death to A. for life, and after the death of the survivor to the testator's brothers and sisters, nominatim, and the brothers and sisters of his wife also, nominatim, "now living," and the children of her deceased brother and sister; but in case any or either of his brothers and sisters, or the brothers and sisters of his wife "now living," should happen to die in the lifetime of his wife and of A., or of the survivor of them, without leaving issue, then the share or shares of such of them as should so die should be equally divided between the survivors; but in case any or either of the testator's brothers and sisters, and the brothers and sisters of his wife, so dying should leave children, then the share or shares of him, her or them so dying should be equally divided among the children of him, her or them so dying that should be living at the death of the testator's wife and A. Prior to the date of the will one of the testator's brothers (H.) had died leaving children, but the testator made his will in ignorance of the death of such brother:—Held, that the words "now living" applied only to the brothers and sisters of the testator's wife, and that the children of his brother H. were entitled to the share to which their father would have been entitled if he had survived the testator. Hannam v. Sims, 2 De G. & J. 151; 27 L. J., Ch. 251; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 863; 6 W. R. 347.

Bequest to "each of the present nieces of P. E., for her own absolute benefit, and in case any of them shall die in my lifetime, leaving a child or children who shall survive me, then in every or any such case the legacy intended for her so dying shall go to her child or children, in equal shares, if more than one." P. E. had seven nieces, but at the date of the will only one was surviving, and she was a widow, seventy-five years of age, without children then living, but there were living several daughters and granddaughters of the deceased nephews and nieces of P. E.:—Held, that the children of nieces who were dead at the date of the will were not substituted for their deceased parents. Crook v. Whitley, 7 De G. M. & G. 490; 26 L. J., Ch. 350; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 703; 5 W. R. 383—C. A.

—— Children let in to take Original Shares.] —Testator devised an estate to trustees in trust for R. T. for life, and after the death of R. T., in trust, to convey the estate unto, between and amongst all and every, and such one or more of the child or children of R. T., who should be living at his decease, and the issue of such of them as should be then dead leaving issue, such issue to take between or amongst them the share which their parent or parents would have been entitled to if then living. R. T. survived the testator, and died, leaving several children, and the issue of another child who was dead at the date of the will:—Held, that such issue were entitled, amongst them, to an equal share of the estate with the surviving children. Tytherleigh v. Harbin, 6 Sim. 329.

Testator bequeathed his residuary estate to his grandchildren, and in case they should all die without leaving issue then to the children of A. and their issue in equal shares, or unto such of them as should prove their right within two years after the death of his grandchildren without issue. A. had five children, two of whom were living at the date of the will and survived the testator; the others died before the date of the will, but two of them left issue:—Held, that all A.'s descendants who were living at the death of all the testator's grandchildren without issue, or who should be born within the two years, would be entitled to participate in the residue. Clay v. Pennington, 7 Sim. 370; 6 L. J., Ch. 183.

Testator, by will dated 1828, bequeathed a fifth of his residuary estate to W. R., E. R. and J. R., and all other the children of J. R. the elder, and the issue of such of his children as should have departed this life, such issue to take the share which their parent would have taken if living. One of the children of J. R., not named in the will, had gone abroad in 1809, and had not been heard of since 1815:—Held, by the court, that he must be presumed to have died before the date of the will, and that his children were entitled to the share which he would have taken if he had survived the testator. Rust v. Baker, 8 Sim. 443; C. P. Cooper, 172.

Bequest in trust for all the children of the testator's late uncle J. B. deceased, to be divided equally amongst them and the issue of such of them as should be deceased, share and share alike, such issue to be entitled to the share of their deceased parents equally amongst them:—Held, that a grandchild of J. B., whose parent was dead at the date of the will, was entitled to take. Bebb v. Beckwith, 2 Beav. 308.

Where a sum directed by a testatrix to be set apart for an annuity was bequeathed, on the death of the annuitant, to such of the testatrix's nephews and nieces as should be "then" living, and the child or children of such of them as should be "then" dead:—Held, that the children of a nephew who was dead at the date of the will were entitled to participate, and that their interest vested at the death of the testatrix. Faulding, In re, 26 Beav. 263; 28 L. J., Ch. 217; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 1289.

The grammatical construction of a will will be followed so as to give a child the share of its deceased parent, even though the parent was dead at the date of the will, when the testator is shewn to be acquainted with that fact. Jordan, In re, 2 N. R. 57; 8 L. T. 307.

When a gift to a child of its deceased parent's share of an estate is made in such terms as shew that the testator did not contemplate the future death of the parent, the gift does not come within the strict definition of a "substitution" gift. Ib.

Therefore, the rule, that where issue are substituted for parents, the parent must have been capable of taking, in order to entitle the issue, does not apply. Ib.

Children cannot take by substitution for their deceased parent who forms one of a class, unless the parent, if living, could himself have taken. Coulthurst v. Carter, 15 Beav. 421; 21 L. J., Ch. 555; 16 Jur. 532.

A father gave property to the children of A. living at a prescribed period, and the issue of deceased children, so as such issue should have no greater share than their parents would have taken if living, and he afterwards provided that if any one or more of such issue should be then dead, having left lawful issue, then the issue of such issue as should be so dead should receive the share which their, his or her parent would have taken if living:—Held, that the effect was to create a joint tenancy amongst the members of the various families, subject to this, that if any one died leaving issue it must be considered for the purpose of determining the share which such issue were to take, as if he had survived the period of distribution, but had severed the joint tenancy at the date of his death. Heasman v. Pearse, 41 L. J., Ch. 705; L. R. 7 Ch. 275; 26 L. T. 299; 20 W. R. 271.

Held, also, that the issue of grandchildren of A. must be confined to children, and that the issue of a grandchild who was dead at the date of the will took. Ib.

The words "then living," though in one clause of a will they were held by virtue of the above-mentioned proviso to refer to the period of distribution, were in another clause, to which the proviso was held inapplicable, considered to refer to the death of a tenant for life. Ib.

A testator gives all his property, real and personal, to trustees, directing them to stand seised and possessed of all his said estates, real and personal, upon trust to receive the rents, dividends and annual profits, and pay the same from time to time to his son G. during his life until he should become bankrupt or insolvent, or make a composition with his creditors, and from and after any of such events, upon trust to receive the rents, dividends and profits, and accumulate the same at compound interest, and lay out the same on mortgage, such accumulations to continue to be made for twenty-one years after his the testator's death. There was then power to the trustees to apply such sums as they should think fit towards the maintenance of his son's wife (if he should have one) and the maintenance and education of his children (if any), until the expiration of twenty-one years, and then to apply the rents, dividends, profits and accumulations equally amongst his son's children until the younger attained twenty-one, and the issue of such as were then dead, such issue to take only the share the parent would have been entitled to if living; and when the youngest attained twenty-one, the testator gave all his real and personal estate and accumulations amongst his son's children in the same words as he had used in the former clause relating to the accumulations for twenty-one years. And in case his son should die without leaving lawful issue living at his death, then over to the testator's brothers and sisters equally, and the issue of such as should be then dead, the issue to take only the parents' share. The testator then gave to his trustees power of leasing during his son's life for seven years, and of sale and exchange at any time. G., the son, died without issue, and never having become bankrupt or insolvent, or made any composition with his creditors; a sister of the testator died before the date of the will, leaving children; the rest survived him, some dying and leaving children before the death of G., the testator's son:—Held, first, that the gift to the issue was original, and the children of a sister deceased before the date of the will took. Etches v. Etches, 3 Drew. 447; 4 W. R. 487.

Held, secondly, that a brother surviving the testator, but foredeceasing the tenant for life, took a vested interest, and his representatives were entitled. Ib.

Held, thirdly, as to a sister who survived the testator, but died before the tenant for life, leaving a child who also died before the tenant for life, the representatives of that child were entitled. Ib.

The testator devised and bequeathed his real and personal estate (subject to certain trusts for the benefit of his wife) to his son absolutely; but if his son should die under twenty-one without issue, the testator gave the same to his wife during her widowhood, with remainder (subject to certain legacies) as she should by will appoint; and in default of appointment, or in case she should marry again after the testator's decease, he directed, that from and after the second marriage or decease of his wife, which should first happen, a moiety of the trust estate, or so much thereof as the appointment should not extend to, should be held in trust for all and every the daughter and daughters who should be then living of his sister Mary Miles, and the issue then living of such of them as should be then dead, equally amongst them, per stirpes. The testator's son died under twenty-one, without issue, in the testator's lifetime; and the testator's wife also died in his lifetime:—Held, that the time of the testator's death was the period at which the persons entitled to take under the said residuary bequest were to be ascertained; that, notwithstanding a daughter of Mary Miles was dead at the date of the will, the children of such daughter, having survived the testator, were entitled, per stirpes, to a share of the said moiety of the residuary estate; that the children of a daughter of Mary Miles, such daughter being living at the death of the testator's wife, but having died in the lifetime of the testator, were also entitled per stirpes to an equal share of the said moiety of such residuary estate; and that the share of the child of a daughter would not lapse by the death of such a child in the lifetime of the testator, but the entire share of the class would be divisible amongst the children belonging to such class who survived the testator. Gaskell v. Holmes, 3 Hare, 438; 8 Jur. 396.

—— Where Gift to a Class or their Issue.]—Bequest to be equally divided between G. and "my brethers and sisters, or their children," and unto J.:—Held, that the children of such of the brothers and sisters as were dead at the date of the will could not take by substitution. Wood, In re, 31 Beav. 323.

A testator, after giving his residuary personal estate to all and every the children of his uncle F. or their issue in equal shares, gave his real estate to A. for life, and after her death upon trust for sale, and to hold the proceeds upon trust for "all and every the children of F. or their issue in equal shares per capita." Four of the six children of F. were dead at the date of the will, and two survived the tenant for life:—Held, that the issue of the four deceased children of F. alive at the death of the testator or born during A.'s lifetime took as by substitution the shares of their deceased ancestors in the proceeds of the realty, the issue of each of the four taking inter se, in equal shares. Sibley, In re, 46 L. J., Ch. 387; 5 Ch. D. 494; 37 L. T. 180.

Bequest of a legacy to A. for life, and after her death equally to and amongst her sisters living at her death, or their children:—Held, first, that the children of a sister who was dead at the date of the will took no interest; secondly, that the children of the surviving sister took per stirpes. Congreve v. Palmer, 16 Beav. 435; 23 L. J., Ch. 54; 1 W. R. 156.

—— To a Class or their Descendants.]—The testator, by will, bequeathed all his share in an estate in Barbadoes "to all the children of" his dear departed wife's sister, M. H. M., "or in event of decease, to their descendants, share and share alike." M. H. M. had six children, of whom five were living at the date of the will and at the death of the testator, and one had died prior to the date of the will, leaving issue an only daughter:—Held, following the decision in Christopherson v. Naylor (1 Mer. 320; 15 R. R. 120), that the issue of the child of M. H. M., who was dead at the date of the will, was not entitled to a share of the property, but that it went to the five children of M. H. M. who survived the testator. Webster's Estate, In re, Widgen v. Mello, 52 L. J., Ch. 767; 23 Ch. D. 737; 49 L. T. 585.

—— To a Class or their Legal Personal Representatives.]—Gift to one for life, and after his death to his children "then living, or their legal personal representatives, share and share alike":—Held, that the representatives took, as a distinct class, and not by substitution, and that the representatives of children who died in the lifetime of the testator, and of those who were dead at the date of the will, participated. King v. Clearelaud, 26 Beav. 26; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 702. Affirmed, 4 De G. & J. 77; 28 L. J., Ch. 835; 7 W. R. 602.

—— To a Class or their Heirs.]—A testator directed that certain stock should, after the death of his wife, be divided among his "children then living, or their heirs." Two of the children were dead at the date of the will; three survived the testator and died in the lifetime of his wife; and two survived her:—Held, first, that the "heirs" of the children who predeceased the wife (including the two who were dead at the date of the will) were entitled to share in the fund along with the children who survived her. Philps' Will, In re, L. R. 7 Eq. 151; 19 L. T. 713.

Held, secondly, that by "heirs" were meant the statutory next of kin of the children. Ib.

Held, thirdly, that such next of kin were to be ascertained, in the case of the children who survived the testator, at the time of the death of each child; but in the case of the children who predeceased the testator, at the time of the testator's death. Ib.

A testator gave real and personal estate to A., charged with the payment of annuities to the testator's six children "or their heirs respectively":—Held, that the annuities were personal estate, and that the statutory next of kin of one of the six children who was dead at the date of will were entitled to one of the annuities. Parsons v. Parsons, L. R. 8 Eq. 260; 17 W. R. 1005.

A testatrix by her will, dated in 1836, gave all her personal property and also her real property to trustees on trust for payment of her debts and legacies, and subject thereto she gave "all her personal and real property as aforesaid," between her five sisters, nominatim, and the survivors of them, in equal shares during their lives and spinsterhood, and upon the death or marriage of all her said sisters she directed that her "property should be divided into equal proportions or shares between her brothers and sisters then living or their heirs." She had twelve brothers and sisters, of whom one brother died before the testatrix was born, one sister died before the date of the will, two brothers and one sister died in her lifetime after the date of the will, and the rest survived her. The last survivor was one of the five sisters named in the will, who died a spinster:—Held, first, that (notwithstanding the will was before the date of the Wills Act) the word "or" in the gift in remainder could not be read "and," and that there was no intestacy. Wingfield v. Wingfield, 47 L. J., Ch. 768; 9 Ch. D. 658; 39 L. T. 227; 26 W. R. 711.

Held, secondly, that the word "heirs" must be construed distributively so as to mean heirs-at-law as to the real estate, and statutory next of kin (including widows) as to the personal estate. Ib.

Held, thirdly, that such heirs-at-law and next of kin were to be respectively ascertained, as regarded brothers and sisters who predeceased the testatrix, at the death of the testatrix, and as regarded those who survived her at their respective deaths. Ib.

—— Where Direction that Issue should take their Parents' Share.]—Bequest "to each and every the child and children of my brother and sisters which shall be living at the time of my death; but if any child or children of my said brother and sisters shall happen to die in my lifetime, and leave issue, then the legacy or legacies hereby intended for such child or children so dying shall be for his, her or their issue." The issue take only by substitution; therefore only the issue of such children as were living at the date of the will are entitled in the event of the death of their respective parents during the testator's lifetime. Christopherson v. Naylor, 1 Mer. 320; 15 R. R. 120.

A testator, in 1858, gave legacies to his cousins, the sons and daughters of the brothers and sisters of his late mother and father; and if it should happen that any of those cousins should die during his lifetime, and leave issue which should survive him, he directed that the legacies which would have been payable to any deceased parent should be paid to the children; and if the executors should fail to discover any one or more of his said cousins who might be living at the time of his decease, or any one or more of the children of his cousins as might have died during his lifetime, and an application should be made to the executors by any one or more of his cousins, or by the children, within eighteen months after his decease, the bequests were to be void:—Held, that the children of cousins who had died before the date of the will were entitled to legacies. Christopherson v. Naylor (supra) commented upon. Phillips v. Phillips, 5 N. R. 102; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 1173; 11 L. T. 472; 13 W. R. 170.

Testator, by will in 1860, gave property to trustees on trust for his sister for life, and after her death on trust to pay the principal to the child or children of his sister equally at twenty-one, "and if any of them die leaving issue the share or shares of such of them as shall so die shall go to their respective issue," and if any should die under the age of twenty-one without issue, the share or shares of such of them as should so die should lapse. The testator died in 1861. His sister died in 1881, having had three children, two of whom were dead at the date of the will, one leaving issue, and the other without issue:—Held, that the issue of the child dead at the date of the will were not entitled under the will. Christopherson v. Naylor (supra) followed. Barker, In re, Asquith v. Saville, 51 L. J., Ch. 835; 47 L. T. 38.

Testatrix directed her residuary estate to be equally divided between her nephews and nieces not before named, "but should any of them be dead before me I then direct that his or her share shall be equally divided between his or her children":—Held, that the children of nephews and nieces dead at the date of the will were not entitled to take under the bequest. Christopherson v. Naylor (supra) approved and followed. Musther, In re, Groves v. Musther, 59 L. J., Ch. 296; 43 Ch. D. 569—C. A.

Where a testator gave the residue of his property, in trust to divide it per capita, and not per stirpes, among his nephews and nieces, the children of his brother and sister; and in case any or either of his nephews or nieces should die in his lifetime, leaving lawful issue, then to pay the share of each so dying unto his or her children:—Held, that the children of a nephew who died before the date of the will were entitled to the shares which their parent would have taken.

Parsons v. Gulliford, Tarry, Ex parte, 10 Jur. (N.S.) 231 ; 10 L. T. 60.

A mother, among other legacies, gave to the children of her late cousin, H., 1,000*l*. The will contained a proviso that if any legatee should die in her lifetime leaving children, such legacy should not lapse, but should be paid to the children of the deceased legatee. One of the children of H. was dead at the date of the will, leaving children :—Held, that the children of the deceased child could not take under the proviso in the will, inasmuch as the deceased child was not a "legatee" within the meaning of the clause. Hunter v. Cheshire, L. R. 8 Ch. 751 ; 29 L. T. 383 ; 21 W. R. 778.

A testator bequeathed the residue of his estate, after the death of two persons, to such children of B. as should be then dead, leaving children ; he directed that the children should stand in the place of their parents :—Held, that the children of such children of B. as died in the testator's lifetime and who were also dead at the date of the will took no share of the residue. Butter v. Ommaney, 4 Russ. 73 ; 6 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 54 ; 28 R. R. 6.

Gift by a testator of his real and personal estate to his wife for her life, and the residue to be equally divided between her brothers and sisters ; and in case any of them should be dead at the time of her decease, leaving issue, such issue to stand in their parents' place :—Held, first, that no brother or sister who died before the date of the will was capable of taking under the bequest, and, therefore, the issue of any brother or sister who was dead before the date of the will could not take by substitution ; secondly, that it was not an original and substantive gift to the issue of those brothers and sisters who were dead at the death of the wife. Gray v. Garman, 2 Hare, 268 ; 12 L. J., Ch. 259 ; 7 Jur. 275.

A testatrix, having a power of appointment over a fund, bequeathed all her money under settlement to be divided, share and share alike, between her nephews and nieces, the children of those who might be deceased to be entitled to the share of their parents :—Held, that the children of a nephew who was dead at the date of the will were not entitled to a share of the fund. Atkinson v. Atkinson, Ir. R. 6 Eq. 184.

A testator gave the surplus of his property to trustees to divide among his nephews and nieces, and directed that, "in case any of them should be dead or die leaving issue," such issue were to take their parents' share :—Held, that the issue of three who were dead at the date of the will were entitled to their parents' shares. Jenks, In re, 18 W. R. 1085.

A testator devised his real estate to trustees, upon trust during the lives of the children of A., B. and C. (all deceased), and of the survivors and survivor of them, to pay the rents and profits to them in equal shares, and directed that the shares of such of them as should die in the lifetime of the others or other of them leaving issue should be paid to such issue, the share of the parent being divided equally among the issue if more than one. He further directed that after the death of the survivor of the children of A., B. and C., his real estates should be sold, and the proceeds of sale divided between the children of A., B. and C., equally ; and that the shares of such of them as might die under age and without issue should accrue to the other or others of them, but that the shares of such of them as might die under age leaving issue should belong to such issue, and be divided amongst them equally if more than one :—Held, that the representatives of those children of A., B. and C., who died without issue in the lifetime of other members of the same class, were not entitled to a share of the rents and profits ; and that the issue of such of the children of A., B. and C. as were dead at the date of the will took no benefit under it. Kelsey v. Kelsey, 38 L. T. 471.

A father gave his residuary estate to his wife for life, and after her decease to such of the children of his two late sisters as should survive his wife and should attain twenty-one or marry, in equal shares ; but in case any of such children should be dead at his decease, then he directed that such issue should take the share of their deceased parent :—Held, that the gift to the issue of deceased children was a substitutionary gift, and that the issue of a child who was dead at the date of the will could take nothing. West v. Orr, 47 L. J., Ch. 294 ; 8 Ch. D. 60 ; 38 L. T. 5 ; 26 W. R. 409—C. A.

A testator bequeathed a legacy to his first cousins, to be equally divided between them. He then gave the share or shares of those of his first cousins, if any, who might die in his lifetime, unto all and every the children of all his first cousins who might so die in his lifetime, share and share alike ; such shares to be taken per capita and not per stirpes :—Held, that the children of a first cousin who had died before the date of the will were not entitled to participate in the legacy. Hotchkiss' Trusts, In re, 38 L. J., Ch. 631 ; L. R. 8 Eq. 643.

Testator bequeathed the proceeds of his real estate upon trust for the equal benefit of his sisters, nephews and nieces as follows : As to the shares of his nephews upon trust to pay the same to them absolutely, and as to the shares of his sisters and nieces upon trust to invest and pay the dividends unto each such sister and niece for life for her separate use, and after the death of each sister upon trust to apply her share for the benefit of his said nieces upon the trusts of the original shares of such nieces, and after the death of each niece upon trust to pay her share to such of her children as she should by will appoint, and in default of appointment to her children equally on attaining twenty-one, and if no such children then in trust for the survivors or survivor of his said nieces. And the will provided that if any niece should die in the testator's lifetime her share should be for the benefit of her child or children, but if no such children who should live to attain twenty-one then such share should be for the benefit of his surviving nieces equally and upon the same trusts :—Held, that the child of a niece who was dead at the date of the will was not entitled. Smith's Trusts, In re (5 Ch. D. 497, n.), not followed. Chinery, In re, Chinery v. Hill, 57 L. J., Ch. 804 ; 39 Ch. D. 614 ; 59 L. T. 303.

The testator gave his residuary estate upon trust to divide the income thereof "equally amongst all my children during their respective lives, and from the death of any such child whether before or after my death" to hold the corpus upon trust for "all or any the child or children of such child who being a son or sons attain the age of twenty-one years or being a daughter or daughters attain that age or marry" :—Held, that the child of a child dead at the date of the will did not take. Christopherson

v. Naylor (supra); Chinery, In re, Chinery v. Hill (supra), and Musther, In re, Groves v. Musther (supra), followed. Wood, In re, Tullett v. Colville, 63 L. J., Ch. 790; [1894] 3 Ch. 381; 7 R. 495; 71 L. T. 413—C. A. See also Habergham v. Ridehalgh, supra, col. 1054.

—— Where Direction to take Share to which Parent would have been Entitled if living.]—A testator may so express himself as to cause a child of a deceased child to represent, and be substituted for, that deceased child, though he never intended a share for the deceased child. Loring v. Thomas, 1 Dr. & Sm. 497; 30 L. J., Ch. 789; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 1116; 5 L. T. 269; 9 W. R. 919.

A. gave property to trustees to divide equally between the children of D., provided that in case any child or children of D. shall die in her lifetime, then the child or children of each such child or children so dying should stand in the place of his, her or their deceased parent, and should be entitled to the same share or shares which his, her or their parent would have been entitled to if living at the time of the decease of the testatrix:—Held, that the words "shall die" did not necessarily refer to a death after the date of the will, but that the children of a child who was dead at the date of the will would share. Ib.

A gift to a composite class consisting of two or more generations may be made in such terms that all take as original members of the class. In such a case a direction "that the issue of deceased children may take by way of substitution the share which their parents would, if living, have taken," does not prevent the children of a child dead at the date of the will from taking, as original members of the class, the share which their parent would have taken if living at the period of distribution. Loring v. Thomas (supra) followed. Parsons, In re, Blaber v. Parsons, 8 R. 430.

Bequest to the testator's nephews and nieces living at his death, with a proviso, that in case any of his nephews or nieces should die in his lifetime, leaving children him surviving who should attain twenty-one, then such children were to stand in the place of their respective parents, and were to be entitled to the same share as their deceased parent would have been entitled to if living at the testator's decease:—Held, that the child of a niece (who died before the date of the will) having survived the testator, and attained twenty-one, was entitled to her parent's share. Chapman, In re, 32 Beav. 382; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 657; 11 W. R. 578.

A brother bequeathed to his sister Susan all the property he might die possessed of for life, and after her death he desired the property to be equally divided among his brothers and sisters, and should any of his brothers or sisters die leaving issue during the lifetime of his sister Susan, the share which would have been theirs to be equally divided among their children:—Held, that the children of a brother who died fifteen years before the date of the will were entitled to take the share of their deceased parent. Adams v. Adams, L. R. 14 Eq. 246; 27 L. T. 505; 20 W. R. 881.

A testatrix by her will gave a sum of money to trustees on trust, after the death of the widow of a cousin, for the children of the cousin, share and share alike; provided that, in case of any of the children dying in the lifetime of the testatrix leaving issue, such issue should take the share to which their parent would have been entitled if living. One of the children was dead when the will was made, and a codicil shewed that the testatrix was aware of this:—Held, that the issue of that child took a share in the money. Lucas's Will, In re, 17 Ch. D. 788; 29 W. R. 860.

Gift by will in trust for A. for life, and after her death for the children of A. who should be living at her death equally, with a proviso that if any child of A. should die in the lifetime of A. leaving issue who should be living at A.'s death, the issue of such child should take the share which his, her or their parent would have taken if living at the death of A., and with a gift over if there should be no such child or children or issue of a child or children of A. so living at her death. One child of A. died before the date of the will, leaving issue who survived A.:—Held, that the gift to issue was original, not substitutional, and that, therefore, the issue of the deceased child of A. were entitled to take. Woolrich, In re, Harris v. Harris, 48 L. J., Ch. 321; 11 Ch. D. 663.

A testator bequeathed his residuary estate and effects to trustees upon trust to pay the income to certain persons for their lives, and subject thereto bequeathed one-fourth of his estate and effects to his nephews and nieces, the children of L., in equal shares; and in case of the death of any of his said nephews and nieces leaving issue, he directed that such issue should take the share that his, her or their deceased parent would have taken if living:—Held, that the children of nephews and nieces who died before the date of the will, and of a nephew who died after the date of the will, but before the testator, took, by substitution, the shares which their respective parents would have taken if living at the testator's death. Potter, In re, 39 L. J., Ch. 102; L. R. 8 Eq. 52; 20 L. T. 649.

A testator gave a sum of 5,000*l.* in the event of the death of his nephew, J. W., without leaving issue, to be equally divided among all the brothers and sisters of J. W. who should be living at the time of his death and the children then living of any of his brothers and sisters who should have previously departed this life, but so that the children of such deceased brother and sister should take only the share that their parent would have taken if living:—Held, that a child of a brother of J. W., which brother was dead at the making of the will, took no share of the 5,000*l.* Waugh v. Waugh, 2 Myl. & K. 41.

—— Effect of Words "Such" and "Said."]—Testator bequeathed his residue to trustees in trust for all his children living at the decease of his wife, as tenants in common; and if any such children should die before his wife, and should leave issue, then the children of such his son or daughter should be entitled to the portion of such his son or daughter who might be deceased before the decease of his wife, provided that until the portions thereby provided for any of the said children of his said sons or daughters who might have died before their mother should become vested it should be lawful for his trustees to apply the interest of the portion to which any such child might be entitled in expectancy for the maintenance of such child. The testator at the date of his will had four sons and one daughter, and he had had another daughter who was then dead, leaving children who survived the testator:—Held, that those children were entitled to a share of the residue. Giles v. Giles, 8 Sim. 360; 6 L. J., Ch. 176; 1 Jur. 234.

Testatrix, having two sons and two daughters living, gave a legacy to each of them, and then gave the residue to Mary, one of her daughters, for life, "and after her decease I will that the said property be equally divided amongst such of my sons and daughters as may be living at the decease of the said Mary, and in case of the decease of any of my said sons or daughters, the surviving children of any of my sons or daughters to have their father's or mother's part." The testatrix had another son and daughter, both of whom were dead at the date of her will, leaving children:—Held, that their children were entitled to shares of the residue. Jarvis v. Pond, 9 Sim. 549; 8 L. J., Ch. 167.

A testator bequeathed stock in trust for a daughter for life; and in case there should be no child of the daughter living at her decease, or being such, they should all die under twenty-one, then he bequeathed the stock unto all and every his children then living, and the child or children of such of his children as should be then dead, in equal shares, but so that such his grandchildren should only have among them such share as their parents would respectively have been entitled to in case they had been then living:—Held, that children of a child of the testator, known by him to be dead at the date of the will, did not take any interest. Thompson's Trusts, In re, 5 De G. M. & G. 280; 2 Eq. R. 236; 2 W. R. 218, 445.

When a testator gave legacies to his brother and three sisters nominatim, and gave his residue in trust for his brothers and sisters who should be living at the death of his wife, and the child or children of such of his said brothers and sisters as should have died in the lifetime of his wife, equally to be divided between his said brothers and sisters and child or children of deceased brothers or sisters, such child or children taking nevertheless no more than his, her or their parent would have taken, and it appeared that he had one brother only surviving at the date of his will, but had had two other brothers, who were then dead, leaving children:—Held, that such children were entitled to a share in the residue. Thompson's Trusts, In re (supra), explained. Jordan's Trusts, In re, 2 N. R. 57; 8 L. T. 307.

A testator gave property to trustees to pay the income after the death of his wife to "all the children of my sisters or late sisters who shall be living at the decease or second marriage of my wife, and the issue then living of such of the said children of my sisters as shall be then dead":—Held, that the issue of one of the nieces, who was dead, to the testator's knowledge, at the date of the will, took the share to which their mother would have been entitled had she survived the wife. Hall v. Woolley, 39 L. J., Ch. 106; 18 W. R. 129.

Testator bequeathed one-sixth part of his residuary estate amongst the children of his late sister J. T., and directed that their share should be paid to them at twenty-one, and that, in case any of them should die under that age leaving issue, their shares should be paid to their issue at a certain time, but if any died without leaving issue their shares to be paid to the surviving children, and the issue of such of them as were dead, per stirpes; and he bequeathed another sixth part to his sister M. C. for life, and after her death unto and amongst her issue, and to be payable at the like time, and with the like benefit of survivorship, and in like manner as before expressed as to the other sixth part. M. C. had six children living at testator's death, and had had another, who had died before the date of the will, leaving a daughter:—Held, that she was not entitled to take either in her own right under the description of issue, which by reference meant the children of M. C., or by substitution for her mother, as she died in the lifetime of the testator. Peel v. Catlow, 9 Sim. 372; 7 L. J., Ch. 273; 2 Jur. 759.

Bequest to each of A.'s sisters and brothers, or to such of them as may be living at the time of my decease, in case of those who may not be in existence at my death, to go to their respective descendants:—Held, that the descendants of a sister who was dead at the date of the will were excluded. Smith v Pepper, 27 Beav. 86.

Death of Object of Prior Gift between Date of Will and Death of Testator.]—Devise of estate to B. for life, then to testator's nephews, &c., and to the children of them that should then be dead. Issue of nephews who died in testator's lifetime not entitled. Thornhill v. Thornhill, 4 Madd. 377; 20 R. R. 315.

Testator gave the residue of his estate in trust for his wife for life, and after her death for his children who might then be living, the shares of each to be paid at twenty-one, with benefit of survivorship as to the shares of any dying in the wife's lifetime and without issue, provided that if any did die in the wife's lifetime leaving issue, such issue should have their parent's share. One of the children, after he had attained twenty-one, died in the lifetime of the testator, leaving issue:—Held, that such issue was entitled to the parent's share. Smith v. Smith, 8 Sim. 353; 6 L. J., Ch. 175. Overruling Thornhill v. Thornhill, supra. And see Collins v. Johnson, 8 Sim. 356, n.; 4 L. J., Ch. 226.

A testator bequeathed his residuary personalty to trustees in trust for the children of L., to be divided equally between them, and directed that, "in case of the decease of either of them leaving a family, then such share as the parents would have taken shall be equally divided amongst the children of such deceased parents":—Held, that "decease" meant decease during the testator's life—that the children of L. who survived the testator took absolutely, and that the children of one child of L., who died between the date of the will and the death of the testator, took the share which this parent would have taken. Hayward, In re, Cherry or Creery v. Lingwood, 51 L. J., Ch. 513; 19 Ch. D. 470; 45 L. T. 790; 30 W. R. 315.

Testator bequeathed his residuary personal estate upon trust for his aunt for life, and from and after her decease for all the children of his uncle, "and the lawful issue of such of them as may be then dead." The aunt and all the children of the testator's uncle died in the testator's lifetime, but one of such children died after the tenant for life, leaving issue who survived the testator:—Held, that the word "then" referred to the death of the tenant for life, and not to the period of distribution, and that consequently there was an intestacy. Milne, In re, Grant v. Heysham, 57 L. T. 828—C. A. Affirming 56 L. J., Ch. 543.

Where a class of beneficiaries under a will is ascertainable at the testator's death (or semble at any other definite epoch), but the period of distribution is postponed to a different and later epoch, a substitutional gift of the shares of deceased beneficiaries primâ facie applies only to beneficiaries who become members of the class and die before the period of distribution. Hannam, In re; Haddelsey v. Hannam, 66 L. J., Ch. 471; [1897] 2 Ch. 39; 76 L. T. 681; 45 W. R. 613.

Bequest, after the death of life tenants, "to my brothers and sisters, in equal shares and proportions, the lawful child or children of any deceased brother or sister taking his, her or their deceased parent's share":—Held, that the children of a brother who died after the date of the will, and before the testator, could not take. Ib.

Clauses substituting Children for Legatees dying before Distribution — When Children must survive Period of Distribution.]—Bequest to widow for life, and afterwards to transfer to testator's children then living with a gift to the issue of such children if dead, the issue to take only the share their father would have been entitled to:—Held, that the issue took by substitution, and that to entitle them they must survive the tenant for life. Bennett v. Merriman, 6 Beav. 360.

Testator bequeathed his residuary personal estate to trustees in trust, to pay the interest to and amongst all the children of his brother for their respective lives; and after their deaths, as they should respectively die, he gave the principal of their respective shares to their respective children, and, if any of his brother's children should die without leaving any child, he gave their shares to their surviving brothers and sisters for life, and afterwards to their respective children, in the same manner as their original shares were given. One child of the testator's brother had three children, one of whom was born at the testator's death, and that child and another died in their parent's lifetime:—Held, that, on the death of the parent, the surviving child became entitled to the whole share of which the parent had been tenant for life. Amies v. Skillern, 14 Sim. 428; 14 L. J., Ch. 165; 9 Jur. 129.

Testator bequeathed one moiety of his residuary personal estate to trustees to pay the interest and dividends equally amongst such of his children as should be living at a certain period for their lives, and after the death of any of them, upon trust to stand possessed of a proportionate share of the fund for the use of the issue of the child or children so dying absolutely; "but in case of such child or children dying without leaving issue, then upon trust to stand possessed of the proportionate share of the child so dying, in trust for, and equally to be divided between and amongst, my other children then living and the issue of such of them as may then be dead, such issue nevertheless only taking the share their, his or her parent would have taken if living." H., one of the children of the testator, who was living at the period of distribution, died, leaving issue a daughter, who died without issue. Afterwards W. and A., two others of the testator's children, died without issue:—Held, that the daughter of H. took no interest in the shares of W. and A. Macgregor v. Macgregor, 2 Coll. C. C. 192.

A. bequeathed his residuary estate upon trust to pay the dividends to his cousin for life, and as to the principal from and after her decease, in trust for all her children who should be living at her decease and the issue of such of them as should then be dead leaving issue, as tenants in common; but the issue, if more than one, of any deceased child to take as a class as if by representation, and not as individuals:—Held, that the issue of a child who died in the cousin's lifetime were a class to be ascertained at her death. Penny v. Clarke, 1 De G. F. & J. 424; 29 L. J., Ch. 370; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 307; 8 W. R. 286. And see S. C., Johns. 619.

A testator directed payment of his debts, and gave all his personal estate and effects (by description) to his wife, for her sole use for life. He then gave to her a cottage at B. for her sole use for life, and after her death to fall into the residue of his estate; and he gave two houses in N. Street, one in K. Place, and one in M. Street, to her in the same words; and he directed that the aforesaid properties, and all other his property, real and personal, should be disposed of for the benefit of his children (or any of them) or so many as should survive the death of his wife; nevertheless, if any married and died leaving issue, they should inherit and have the benefit of the father's or mother's share, and that the property therein contained should be kept in repair and let for the best rents; and after deducting the interest on mortgage and repairs, he divided among his sons and daughters, and provided that his property should not be sold, but let until his youngest son attained twenty-one. Then there was a discretionary power to the executors to sell and pay off interest and just claims, and divide the residue equally among his sons and daughters. The widow claimed to be entitled in fee to the premises in N. Street, K. Place, and M. Street, and to be recouped the mortgage money she had paid off; she also claimed dower:—Held, that she was put to her election both as to the property given by the will, and as to dower; also that there was a forfeiture; and that there was a gift to those children who survived the wife, and the issue of those that died in her lifetime leaving issue. Hilton v. Hilton, 15 W. R. 193.

A testator by his will gave 4,000*l.* to be invested in stock in trust to pay the dividends to his daughter S. during her coverture, and upon the death of G., her husband, to transfer the capital to her for her sole use; but in case G. should survive his daughter, then in trust for H., F., E., A. and W., his five sons, and their respective issue (if any), to be divided among them in equal shares and proportions, such issue to take per stirpes, and not per capita; he gave also the residue of his personal estate to his sons H., F., E., A. and W., "and their respective issue (if any), such issue to take per stirpes, and not per capita, to be divided among them in equal shares and proportions; the shares of such of them as shall have attained the age of twenty-one years to be paid to them respectively forthwith after the testator's decease; the shares of such of them as should be under that age to be paid to them when and as they should respectively attain such age." Declared, that, S. dying in the lifetime of G., the sons of the testator living at such event would be absolutely entitled to the stock in equal shares, but if any of the sons should die in the lifetime of S. leaving issue, such issue, if living at the death of S., would be entitled to the share or shares of the fund which their parents would have been entitled to if living, such issue to take such shares equally among them, and adjudged, that the sons living at the death of the testator took an absolute interest in the residue. Dictum, that if any of the sons had died in the lifetime of the testator, his children, living at the death of the testator, would have taken, by substitution, the share of the parent. Whether grandchildren, or more remote descendants, would take as issue, and in what proportions, quære. Pearson v. Stephen, 5 Bligh (N.S.) 203; 2 Dow & Cl. 328.

By a codicil to his will A. desired his son to insure his life for 5,000*l.*, and to bequeath that sum to his wife for life, and at her death, or at the death of the son, to bequeath the 5,000*l.* to A.'s daughters or their "descendants" in equal proportions:—Held, that this was a substitutionary gift to the descendants of those of the daughters of A. who died in the lifetime of the son's wife leaving descendants; that "descendants" included children, grandchildren and great-grandchildren living at the time of distribution. Flower, In re, Matheson v. Goodwyn, 62 L. T. 216. See S. C. in C. A., 63 L. T. 201.

—— When Children must survive their Parent.]—A testator left the residue of his estate in trust for his wife for life, and after her decease to belong to all and every such of his brothers and sister as should be living at the decease of his said wife, and all and every the children and child of such of his said brothers and sister as should be then dead, per stirpes, and not per capita. The sister died in the lifetime of the tenant for life, leaving a son and daughter. The daughter also died in the lifetime of the tenant for life, leaving issue:—Held, that the personal representative of the daughter was entitled to participate, together with the son, in the deceased's sister's share. Cawthorne, In re, 11 Jur. (N.S.) 9; 13 W. R. 215.

Testator had four daughters, A., B., C. and D., and by his will gave 4,000*l.* to each of his daughters A. and B., with a direction that, if either of them died unmarried, 3,600*l.*, part of the 4,000*l.*, should be divided among his surviving daughters, and the child or children of such of them as should be then dead. A. died unmarried. C. had five children, two of whom survived A., but the other three died in her lifetime. The five children of C. took vested interests in equal fifths of the fund, as well those who died before as those who survived A. Stanley v. Wise, 1 Cox, 432.

Testator gave his residuary real and personal estate to trustees, in trust to pay the rents, interest and dividends thereof to his wife for her life, and after his decease to sell, convert into money, collect and get in the same, and to pay and divide the moneys to arise therefrom unto and equally between and amongst such of the children of his sisters Martha, Phœbe, Alice, &c., as might be living at the time of the decease of his wife, and the issue of such of them as might be then dead, in equal shares and proportions, such issue only to take the share which their respective parents would have taken if living, provided such children or issue should then have attained twenty-one, otherwise to pay to them the interest of their shares until they should attain that age, and then to pay them the principal. The testator's wife survived him. Each of his sisters had several children. A child of Martha died before the testator's wife, leaving children, and one of those children also died before the testator's wife:—Held, nevertheless, that that one took a vested and transmissible interest in the testator's residuary estate. Lyon v. Coward, 15 Sim. 287; 15 L. J., Ch. 460; 10 Jur. 486.

A testator gave a sum of money to trustees in trust, to pay the interest to his daughter for life, and after her decease to divide the principal between all and every the children of his said daughter who should be living at the time of her decease and the lawful issue of such of them as should be then dead leaving issue, so as that the issue of each child so dying should take the share which their deceased parent would have taken if living, and so as that such issue of each child so dying should take equally, share and share alike, to be paid to all such children and issue upon their respectively attaining, and in case they should live to attain the age of twenty-one years, with clauses directing the application of the income for the maintenance of the children and issue as the trustees might think fit. One of the children of the tenant for life died in her lifetime, leaving children, some of whom died in the lifetime of the tenant for life:—Held, that the time of the death of the child of the tenant for life, and not the time of the death of the tenant for life, was the period for ascertaining the class of his issue who were to take; and that the children of the deceased child living at his death, though they subsequently died in the lifetime of the tenant for life, took vested interests. Barker v. Barker, 5 De G. & Sm. 753; 21 L. J., Ch. 794; 17 Jur. 125.

J. B., after giving certain annuities and legacies, gave all the residue of his real and personal estate to trustees, with liberty to sell the same for the benefit of his personal estate, and upon further trust to pay the annuities and legacies, and from and after the decease of the last survivor but one of the annuitants, his children and grandchildren, upon further trust for sale as aforesaid, and to render residue into money, and divide the same equally share and share alike with and among the said survivor, whose annuity should then cease, and all and every the testator's grandchildren as should be living, if any should be born after the date of that his will, and the children of such living grandchildren, either the said annuitants or born after the date of his will, as tenants in common, except only that the child or children of any grandchild should be entitled to the share or part the parent would be entitled to receive, if more than one, in like manner as tenants in common. All the testator's children being dead, and two annuitants being still living, as between whom it appeared that an arrangement had been come to abandoning the right of survivorship:—Held, on a petition by a great-grandchild of the testator claiming to be entitled to a vested interest in the share of his deceased mother, and in opposition to the wishes of an assignee of the share of one of the grandchildren of the testator, that the great-grandchildren of the testator took vested interests under the will, and that a part of the fund might be distributed under the order of the court. Bellamy v. Hill, 2 Sm. & G. 328.

Under a deed of appointment the trustees were directed to pay the interest of the trust funds to the husband of the appointor for life; and after his death to divide the property equally between all the children of A., born or to be born, who should be living at the death of her husband, and the children of those who might then be dead, such children to stand in the place of their parents respectively, and to take such share as their parents, if living, would have been entitled to. A. left five children, one of whom died, leaving six children, and four of these six died before the husband of the settlor:—Held, that the six children, or their representatives, were entitled equally to one-fifth of the trust funds, but that there was no substitution. Harcourt v. Harcourt, 26 L. J., Ch. 536; 5 W. R. 478.

Under a bequest for the testator's daughter A. for life, and in case of her death without issue, her share to go among the survivors of the testator's children and the children of such of them as shall have died leaving issue, such issue to take the share of their respective parent:—Held, that children of testator's children who survived their own parents and predeceased the tenant for life, took vested interests on the death of their parents. Wildman's Trust, In re, 1 J. & H. 299; 30 L. J., Ch. 174; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 121.

A husband, who died in 1854, gave all his property to his wife for life, and after giving pecuniary legacies and annuities, devised and bequeathed to his son C. all the residue after his mother's death, and to his heirs; and in case his son should die leaving no issue, then his freehold estate was to be equally divided between his (testator's) surviving children or their families. All the children of the testator survived their mother, who died in 1861, and, excepting one, all (two without issue, two leaving children, one leaving a child, and the issue of another child) died in the lifetime of C., who died, in 1869, a bachelor and intestate:—Held, a gift on the death of C. without leaving issue living at his death to the other children of the testator then living, and to the families of such of them as were dead. Burt v. Hellyar, 41 L. J., Ch. 430; L. R. 14 Eq. 160; 26 L. T. 833.

A testator gave 500*l.* upon trust to pay income thereof to a daughter for life, and if she died without issue, then to pay the same sum and interest to his four sons (naming them), share and share alike; but in case any of his sons should be then dead, the testator directed that the part or share of him or them so being dead, should be paid to his or their child or children, share and share alike if more than one; or if but one, then to such only child; but if there should be no child, then to his or their legal representatives. One of the sons died a bachelor, and the others leaving children, some of whom died in their parent's lifetime; others survived their parent, but died before the tenant for life; and others survived both their parent and the tenant for life:—Held, that legal representatives meant executors and administrators; that the gift to the sons, being an absolute gift, liable to be divested, the gift to the children was by substitution; and that the gift being substitutional, it was necessary, to entitle the children to take, that they should survive their own parents, but that it was not necessary for them to survive the tenant for life. Turner, In re, 2 Dr. & Sm. 501; 34 L. J., Ch. 660; 12 L. T. 695; 13 W. R. 770.

Bequest to H. S. for life, and after her decease to the testator's four brothers and sister, "or such of them as should be then living," equally. And in case any of them should be then dead, then he bequeathed the deceased child's share to the children, "to be paid at the time before mentioned." The brothers and sister all died in the lifetime of H. S., one (A. B.) having had no children:—Held, that the representatives of A. B. were entitled to his share, and that all the children took, whether living at the death of H. S. or not. Masters v. Scales, 13 Beav. 60.

Gift by a testator of personal estate to his wife for life, remainder between and among his seven children by name, or such of them as should be living at his wife's decease and the issue of such as should be dead leaving issue, with power to apply the presumptive share of such issue for maintenance. A son of the testator died after his father's death, leaving an infant daughter, who died in the lifetime of the testator's widow:—Held, that such infant took a vested share. Pell, In re, 3 Giff. 152; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 207; 4 L. T. 544; 9 W. R. 733.

A testator gave his 3 per cent. consols to his wife for life, and after her decease he directed that one-half of his consols should become the property of his cousin M., or in case of her decease he directed that it should be "equally divided between her children living." M. died in the testator's lifetime, leaving one daughter B., who survived the testator, but died before the tenant for life:—Held, that B. took a vested interest in the fund, notwithstanding her death in the lifetime of the tenant for life. Hodgson v. Smithson, 8 De G. M. & G. 604; 26 L. J., Ch. 110; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 1199; 5 W. R. 3. Affirming 21 Beav. 354.

Devise and bequest of real and personal estate to trustees upon trust (subject to certain legacies and annuities) for A. for life, and after his decease upon trust to convey, assure and pay the whole of the said real and personal estate to and amongst the children of A. and the issue of such children. But in case A. should die without issue, then to pay and distribute the same equally amongst all and every the children of B. and C., and the survivors of them; but, in case any such children should be then dead, leaving issue of his, her or their body or bodies lawfully begotten, then such issue to have as well such original share or shares as the father or mother of such issue so dying would have been entitled to if then living, as also such other share or shares thereof as the father or mother of such issue so dying might have been entitled to by survivorship or otherwise. A. survived the testator, and died without issue:—Held, that the period of the survivorship of the children of B. and C. is not to be referred to the time of the death of the testator, but to that of the death of A., being the period of distribution; and that the children of B. and C., living at the date of the will, and those born after that date and before the death of A., were entitled to the real and personal estate, with survivorship between them in case of the death of any such children without issue before the death of A., the children of such of the said children as died before A., leaving issue, being substituted for the original legatees. Buckle v. Fawcett, 4 Hare, 536; 9 Jur. 891.

A testator devised realty to his wife for life, with remainder to A., B., C., D. and E. as tenants in common, and in case of the death of either in the life of his wife, leaving issue, his share was to go among all his children as tenants in common in fee, but in case of the death of any one in the lifetime of the wife without leaving issue living at his death he gave his share to the survivors:—Held, that the gift to children was substitutional, and those children only who survived their fathers could take under it. Hurry v. Hurry, 39 L. J., Ch. 824; L. R. 10 Eq. 346; 22 L. T. 577; 18 W. R. 829.

A condition of survivorship does not attach to a substitutionary gift. Merrick's Trusts, In re, 35 L. J., Ch. 418; L. R. 1 Eq. 551; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 245; 14 L. T. 130; 14 W. R. 473.

A testator, by reference, gave the income of a fund to M., who was unmarried, for life, with a gift to her husband (if any) for his life; and upon the decease of the longer liver of M. and her husband, he directed his trustees to pay, assign and transfer the capital to his four children, A., B., C. and D., who should be then living, "or to the issue of such of them as should be then dead," such issue taking their parents' share. "Issue" as used in the will was clearly equivalent to "children":—Held, that upon the death of any one of the four, A., B., C. and D., whether before or after the termination of the life estates, his children then living took vested interests in the fund, and that his children then dead were wholly excluded. Ib.

Bequest to A. for life, and after her death to pay and divide it amongst her children living at her decease, and the issue of such of them as should be then dead leaving issue, such issue to take their parents' share, with a gift over if all the children of A. should die in her lifetime without leaving issue. Two children died in the life of A., leaving children:—Held, that grandchildren of A. who predeceased their parents did not take; but that grandchildren of A. who survived their parents, but died in the life of A., took vested interests, which passed to their representatives. Thompson v. Clive, 23 Beav. 282.

A bequest of personalty to trustees upon trust to pay the interest thereof to the testator's daughters A. and B. for their lives and the life of the survivor, and upon the decease of the survivor to pay and transfer the capital equally among all the testator's children, and the issue, if any, of A. and B., and of any other deceased child, in such manner that such issue might be entitled to such share or shares as his or their deceased parent or parents respectively if living (A. and B. excepted) would have been entitled to:—Held, that the whole fund belonged to the testator's children other than A. and B., and to the children living at the death of such as had died leaving children. Bennett, In re, 3 K. & J. 280.

A testator, who died in 1871, by his will, dated in 1870, gave his residuary estate to trustees upon trust to pay the income thereof to his widow for her life, and after her death he gave the property unto and equally between all and every the children of his brothers and sisters, share and share alike, "the issue of any deceased child to take the parent's share." The testator's widow died in 1881. Some of the children of the brothers and sisters of the testator survived him, but died in the lifetime of the testator's widow, leaving issue. The question was, whether the issue of the deceased children of the brothers and sisters of the testator were respectively entitled to the shares of their deceased parents:—Held, that the substitutional gift took effect in the case of any child of a brother or sister of a testator who had died in the lifetime of the testator's widow. Gilbert, In re, Daniel v. Matthews, 54 L. T. 752; 34 W. R. 577.

—— Where Period of Distribution is Death of Parent.]—Testator gave 20,000*l.* stock in trust for his daughter A. for life, for her separate use, and after her death in trust for her children as tenants in common, to be vested at twenty-one, or death under that age, leaving lawful issue. By a codicil, testator, instead of the 20,000*l.* given by his will, gave 15,000*l.* in trust for his daughter for her life, after her death to her children to be equally divided amongst them or the survivors, share and share alike:—Held, that only those children of A. who survived their mother took shares. Haley v. Bannister, 23 Beav. 336.

—— Where Children survive neither Period of Distribution nor their Parent.]—Bequest of interest to one for life, and after her death upon trust to transfer the principal among the children living at her decease, "or the children of any child who may be then dead." A grandchild who predeceased its parent:—Held, excluded from a share in the fund. Crause v. Cooper, 1 J. & H. 207.

Where a testator gave a life interest to his wife, and immediately after her death to his two sons, at twenty-one, if then living, and to the issue of either of them that shall be then dead, such issue taking the share the parent (if living) would have been entitled to only, with a gift over, in the event of both dying under twenty-one without lawful issue; and one of the sons died in the lifetime of the wife, without leaving issue, but having had a son who had died in his lifetime:—Held, that the child of the son who predeceased the tenant for life, and who had died in his father's lifetime, did not take, but that there was an intestacy as to the moiety given to the son, who died during the life of the tenant for life. Humfrey v. Humfrey, 2 Dr. & Sm. 49; 31 L. J., Ch. 622; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 500; 6 L. T. 13; 10 W. R. 286.

When there is a gift by will to such of a class of persons as shall be living at the happening of a particular event, and to the issue of such of the class as shall be then dead leaving issue, the gift to issue is not to be restricted to issue who survive their parent, but all the issue of any member of the class who has predeceased the particular event leaving issue are entitled to share, whether they have or have not survived their parent. Smith, In re, 47 L. J., Ch. 265; 7 Ch. D. 665; 26 W. R. 418.

Whether Gift to Issue Original or Substitutional.]—Where a gift to one and his issue is an original gift to the issue, it is not necessary for the issue to survive their own parent, but where it is substitutional it is necessary; but neither in the case of an original nor a substitutional gift is it necessary for the issue to survive the tenant for life. Lamphier v. Buck, 2 Dr. & Sm. 484; 6 N. R. 196; 34 L. J., Ch. 650; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 837; 12 L. T. 660; 13 W. R. 767.

the annual proceeds to his wife for her life, and from and immediately after her decease to divide and distribute it amongst such of his nephews and nieces named in his will as should be living at her death in equal shares; but if any or either of them should then be dead leaving issue, then such issue to be entitled to their father's or mother's share, but in equal proportions:—Held, that the word "issue" was to be read as "children," and that the gift to the issue was not substitutionary for the gift originally given to the parents, but an original, independent and unconditional gift; and that the only child of one of the testator's nephews, who died after the testator, but before the period of distribution, acquired a vested interest in the share her father would have taken if he had then been alive, even although such child also died before the period of distribution. Martin v. Holgate, 35 L. J., Ch. 789; L. R. 1 H. L. 175; 15 W. R. 135. Reversing S. C. nom. Holgate v. Jennings, 34 Beav. 79; 5 N. R. 180; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 5; 11 L. T. 501. And see Smith v. Smith, L. R. 5 Ch. 342.

Real estate was devised upon trust (after the death of the tenant for life) to sell and divide the proceeds equally among such of the testator's five daughters as should be living at the decease of the life tenant, and the children, grandchildren and issue respectively to take and have equally amongst them, if more than one, the part or share which their, his or her parent respectively would have been entitled to had such parent been then living. One of the daughters, whose share was now in question, died before the tenant for life, having had ten children, of whom three survived the period of distribution, the other seven having died before that period, some with, others without, issue:—Held, that the gift to the children, grandchildren and issue was an original gift, and that the share was divisible into tenths, and that one-tenth went to each stock, irrespectively of the objects of gift surviving the mother or the period of distribution. Orton, In re, 36 L. J., Ch. 279; L. R. 3 Eq. 375; 16 L. T. 146; 15 W. R. 251.

A gift to the sisters of the testator living at a particular time, or the issue of any or either then dead, is not a substitutionary, but a substantive, gift to the issue. Attwood v. Alford, L. R. 2 Eq. 479.

Bequest of a fund in trust for A., and his wife B., for life; and after their decease, upon trust to pay the principal sum equally amongst the testator's nephews and nieces, children of A. and B. then living, or their legal personal representatives, share and share alike. A. and B. had seven children; two of them died in the lifetime of the testator, another died before the surviving tenant for life, and the remaining children survived:—Held, that the representatives took as a distinct class, and not by substitution: that the fund was divisible into sevenths, payable to the surviving nephews and nieces, and the representatives of those that were dead. King v. Cleaveland, 26 Beav. 26; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 702. Affirmed, 4 De G. & J. 77; 28 L. J., Ch. 835; 7 W. R. 602.

b. Death of Object of Prior Gift after Testator.

General Rule—Death at any Time—Where Gift Immediate.] — A testator directed his residuary real and personal estate to be divided into fourteen shares, and gave such shares to persons whom he named, and directed that the whole of them should have the benefit of survivorship between them in the event of any one or more of them dying without issue:—Held, that the "dying" meant was not "dying in the testator's lifetime." Smith v. Stewart, 4 De G. & Sm. 253; 20 L. J., Ch. 205; 15 Jur. 834.

When there is a gift over in the event of death without issue, the rule is that death without issue must be held to mean death without issue at any time, unless a contrary intention appears in the will; and the introduction of a previous life estate does not alter that principle of construction. Olivant v. Wright, 45 L. J., Ch. 1; 1 Ch. D. 346; 33 L. T. 457; 24 W. R. 84.

Bequest of residue to the testator's daughters, A. and B., in equal proportions, and in case of the death of either the whole to the survivor of them, and in the event of marrying, and having children, then to the child or children of them, or the survivor of them, if they should attain the age of twenty-one years, but if not then among the children of C. A. and B. survived the testator, and A., who died without having been married, bequeathed the whole of her property to B.:—Held, that the bequest did not become absolutely vested in A. and B. on the death of the testator, but continued subject to the executory bequest over in favour of C. Child v. Giblett, 3 Myl. & K. 71; 3 L. J., Ch. 124.

Whenever there is an interest limited by will, either by way of remainder or by way of executory interest, if all the preceding estates are out of the way, or the events on which the executory interest is limited have occurred, it is immaterial whether those estates are taken out of the way, or those events occur in the lifetime of the testator, or after his decease. Varley v. Winn, 2 K. & J. 700; 25 L. J., Ch. 831; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 661; 4 W. R. 792.

If there be an executory bequest of personalty depending either upon the determination of a preceding limited interest or upon a collateral event of defeating an interest previously given, and such limited interest determine or such collateral event happen during the lifetime of the testator, the executory bequest does not lapse. Ib.

Where, therefore, there was a bequest to the testator's five daughters of 6,000*l.* each, to be invested by the executors within seven years from his death, "in trust for them or their children, but if any of my daughters should die leaving no issue, then the share or portion so invested shall be divided amongst those who have issue, share and share alike, as they arrive at the age of twenty-one; and if only one, the whole to go to that one only," one daughter died without issue in the lifetime of the testator:—Held, that the 6,000*l.* given to her passed by the gift over to those of the testator's daughters who were living at his death, and had issue then living, absolutely. Ib.

Held, also, that the words above printed in italics ought to be read as though in a parenthesis. Ib.

As to each daughter's own legacy of 6,000*l.*, it was directed to be invested, and the interest paid to her for life. Ib.

A testator gave the residue of his property to be divided between his four sons in equal shares, with a proviso that the share of any son dying without leaving issue him surviving should be divided between such of his other sons as should be then living, in equal shares, the children of a deceased son to take the share to which their father would have been entitled. All his sons survived the testator, two having issue, and two being unmarried :—Held, that the share of each son was defeasible in the event of his dying at any time without leaving issue. Woodroofe v. Woodroofe, [1894] 1 Ir. R. 299.

A testator by his will declared that in case both or either of his sons, A. or B., died leaving their children fatherless, he left to such children the sum of 500*l.* to be divided amongst them, share and share alike. Both A. and B. survived the testator. A. died leaving children surviving him ; B. was alive, and had children :—Held, that the gift was not limited to one sum of 500*l.*, and that the contingency was not confined to death in the testator's lifetime ; and accordingly that the children of A. living at his death were entitled to be paid 500*l.*, and that the children of B. (if any) living at his death would be entitled to a similar sum. Richardson's Trusts, In re, [1896] 1 Ir. R. 295. Affirmed in C. A.

And see Farthing v. Allen, ante, col. 1037.

——Where Future Gift after Prior Interest.] —Gift by will of freeholds and leaseholds to A., durante viduitate, and then to B. absolutely, with a gift over to B.'s brother and sister, "if he should die and leaving no children." B. survived A. :—Held, that he then took an absolute vested interest not liable to be divested on his subsequent death without children, and that, therefore, the gift over in that event failed. Edwards v. Edwards, 15 Beav. 357 ; 21 L. J., Ch. 324 ; 16 Jur. 259.

Construction of gifts in the following form : first, to A., and if he shall die, to B. ; second, to A., and if he shall die without children, to B. ; third, to X. for life, with remainder to A., and if he shall die, to B. ; and fourth, to X. for life, with remainder to A., and if he shall die without leaving children, to A. In the first case the contingency has reference to the death of the testator ; in the second, to the death of A. ; in the third and fourth, to the death of the tenant for life. Ib.

The fourth rule laid down in Edwards v. Edwards (supra), that where a life or other estate is given to one or more of the objects of a testator's bounty, and on the determination of that estate the subject disposed of is given to another person with a direction that if the latter shall die without leaving a child, his share shall go over, the words indicating death without issue refer to that event occurring before the period of distribution, that is, before the determination of the estate. as there stated, disapproved of. Ingram v. Soutten, 44 L. J., Ch. 55 ; L. R. 7 H. L. 408 ; 31 L. T. 215 ; 23 W. R. 363.

The fourth rule would be better stated thus : "The period to which the executory devise will be referred will be the period of the death of the first taker, unless there are directions in the will inconsistent with that supposition"—Per Lord Hatherley. Ib.

A husband bequeathed his residuary personal estate to trustees upon trust to pay the income to his wife for life, and after her death upon trust (in the events which happened) to pay the income to his daughter for life, with a gift over, in the event of her death without issue, to his two sons, with a gift over, in the event of both his sons dying without issue, to H. "But in case H. shall die without leaving any issue living at the time of her death," then over. The widow died in 1823 ; his two sons survived her, and both died without issue in the lifetime of his daughter, who died without issue in 1866. H. survived the daughter, and died without issue in 1872 :—Held, that, H. having died without issue, the gift over took effect ; for in such a case death without issue at any time must be taken to be intended, unless there are any expressions in the will pointing to an earlier termination of the trust. Ib.

There is no authority that the words introducing a gift over in the case of the "death unmarried or without children" of a previous taker do not indicate, according to their natural meaning, death unmarried or without children at any time, or that the ordinary and literal meaning of the words is to be departed from otherwise than in consequence of a context which renders a different meaning necessary or proper. O'Mahony v. Burdett, L. R. 7 H. L. 388 ; 31 L. T. 705 ; 23 W. R. 361. And see Olivant v. Wright, supra, col. 1078.

Gift Over on Several Events—Immediate Gift.] —A. B. devised real estate to C. D., his heirs, executors and administrators ; he then directed that if C. D. should die without issue, the estate should go to other persons ; and in case C. D. died and leaving issue, they were to take their deceased parent's share :—Held, that the words "in the lifetime of the testator" could not be imported into the will. Gee v. Manchester Town Council, 19 L. J., Ch. 151 ; 14 Jur. 825. And see S. C. at law, 21 L. J., Q. B. 242 ; 16 Jur. 758.

Testatrix bequeathed to trustees 3,000*l.*, upon trust to pay the interest for the maintenance of A., and to pay him the principal when he should attain twenty-one ; but directed that in case he should die before his legacy should become payable, leaving lawful issue, such issue should take his legacy. The testatrix then gave half the residue of her estate upon trust for B. for her life, and after her death she gave this half to A. at the time his 3,000*l.* legacy became payable, and, "in case of his death without leaving lawful issue," then the same to be equally divided between C., D. and E. A. survived the testatrix, attained twenty-one, and died in the lifetime of B., without having been married :—Held, that the share of the residue had vested in him absolutely subject to the life estate of B., and that C., D. and E. took no interest therein. Woodburne v. Woodburne, 3 De G. & Sm. 643 ; 19 L. J., Ch. 88 ; 14 Jur. 565 ; 2 W. R. 131.

A testatrix made the following bequest : "I give to A. A. the sum of 400*l.*, to be paid at and after my decease, and vested in the public funds, the interest whereof she shall receive when she attains twenty-one. In the event of her decease at, before or after the said period, the sum so bequeathed to be divided between E. M. and A. M." A. A. took a life interest only in the legacy. Miles v. Clark, 1 Keen, 92.

Bequest of testator's residuary personalty equally between his four children (nominatim), to be equally divided between them share and share alike, and in case of either of them leaving issue, the issue of such child to take the parent's share ; but in the event of their dying without leaving issue, then the share or shares of the one so dying to form part of the residue:—Held, that the testator's children took for their respective lives only. Cooper v. Cooper, 1 K. & J. 658; 3 W. R. 470.

A testator by his will (dated in 1841) gave all his real and personal estate to trustees in trust, to convert, and pay, apply and divide the proceeds into three equal shares; one he directed his trustees to invest upon trust to pay the income to his daughter H. for her separate use; and from and after her death leaving issue, to such issue as therein mentioned. And the will contained provisions that, in case any of his said children or grandchildren should happen to die without leaving issue, the share or shares of him, her or them, so dying, should go to the survivors of them, his said children and grandchildren. And also that, if any of his said children or grandchildren should happen to die leaving issue, the share or shares of him, her or them should go to such issue as therein mentioned:—Held, that the sons J. and T. took life interests only. Clayton v. Lowe (5 B. & Ald. 656; 24 R. R. 509) observed upon. Gosling v. Townshend, 2 W. R. 23. Affirming 17 Beav. 245.

In a gift to A. (without any limitation of interest), "and if he should happen to die, leaving lawful issue," then to such issue, the contingency has reference to the death of A., and not to that of the testator. A., therefore, does not take an absolute interest. S. C., 17 Beav. 245.

Immediate gift to four residuary legatees and devisees in equal shares, "with benefit of survivorship" in case any of them should die without issue; and in case any of them should die leaving children, then the share, whether original or accruing, of each so dying to go to such children:—Held, that the clause of survivorship, and the limitation over to children of the legatees, were not confined to the lifetime of the testator, and intended merely to guard against lapse; and that the residuary legatees did not upon surviving the testator at once acquire absolute indefeasible interests in their shares. Bowers v. Bowers, 39 L. J., Ch. 351; L. R. 5 Ch. 244; 23 L. T. 35; 18 W. R. 301—C. A.

Gift over when restricted to Period of Vesting.]—Bequest to a female when and if she should attain twenty-one, to her sole and separate use; and in case of her death leaving children her share to go to her children:—Held, to vest an absolute interest in the legatee on her attaining twenty-one. Home v. Pillans, 2 Myl. & K. 15; Coop. t. Brough. 198; 4 L. J., Ch. 2.

In applying the rule that a clear gift in a will is not to be cut down by any subsequent provision, unless the latter is equally clear, the plain intention of the testator, and not the comparative lucidity of the two parts of the will, is to be regarded. Randfield v. Randfield, 8 H. L. Cas. 225; 30 L. J., Ch. 177; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 901; 9 W. R. 1.

A. devised all his freehold and copyhold estates to his son, "when he have obtained the age of twenty-one, upon the following conditions," and directed that his own widow should receive an annuity out of these estates; he then gave to his son all his personal estates, consisting of ships, bonds and funded stock, "but should the hand of death fall on my widow and son, and my having no other children, or my son any issue, my will is then that should he leave a widow, she shall receive an annuity out of my real estates as before mentioned, the residue then to be equally divided, share and share alike, after paying such legacies as I may hereafter name, the division to be" between certain persons specifically mentioned ("they paying all my son's debts, funeral expenses and demands, or my wife's, should she be the longest liver"). The son became twenty-one some years before the will was executed; he married, but died without ever having had issue:—Held, that the gift over affected only the real estate. Ib.

A testatrix devised to trustees freehold premises in trust to receive the rents, and after paying thereout all proper outgoings, and applying thereout, if they thought fit, any money towards the maintenance of S., to let the residue accumulate until S. should attain twenty-one, and then to pay such accumulations to him, but if he should die under such age without leaving issue living at his decease, then such accumulations should be for the benefit of the person to whom and in like manner and form as these premises were limited in the like event, and when S. should have attained twenty-one, then the trustees were to stand seised of the premises in trust for him in fee; but if he should not leave any issue living at his decease, then the trustees should stand seised of the premises in trust for A. in fee, and if A. should not leave any issue living at her decease, then over. S. attained twenty-one, and died without ever having had issue:—Held, that the premises vested in S. in fee on his attaining twenty-one, subject to be divested in the event of his dying without issue, which event having happened, the limitation over in favour of A. took effect. Smith v. Spencer, 6 De G. M. & G. 631; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 193; 6 W. R. 136.

A testator gave to two trustees, in trust for the child or children of his daughter-in-law, the sum of 700*l.* to each child, to be paid by his executors as soon as each child became of the age of twenty-one years; or by mutual agreement the trust was to continue longer after each child should have passed the age of twenty-one; the aforesaid sums to remain in the stock and possession of his executors until the whole sum be paid to the said trustees, for the sole use of the said children; but should either child or both children of his daughter-in-law die without leaving issue, then the 700*l.* for one child; or if both die and leave no issue living 1,400*l.* for the use of other persons:—Held, that the grandchildren of the testator, upon attaining twenty-one, took absolute interest in the money liable to be divested in the event of their dying without leaving issue. Cotton v. Cotton, 23 L. J., Ch. 489; 2 W. R. 207.

A testator gave the residue of his estate to trustees, upon trust to pay, apply and dispose of it to two women, A. and B., when they should attain their respective ages of twenty-one years, directing that their shares should not be subject to the control of their husbands; but in case both or either of them died without issue living at the time of their respective deceases, then he gave the share of her or them so dying to his nephews and nieces:—Held, upon the whole context of the will, that the executory devise over of the residue was not confined to the death of A. and B., or either of them, under twenty-one, and without leaving issue; but would take effect upon their respective deaths at any time, without leaving issue then living. Gray v. Folds, 7 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 182.

Under a bequest of stock to A. for life, and after the decease of A. to the testator's great-grandchildren, share and share alike, if they were living at the time of A.'s death, but that they should not receive any part of the capital till they arrived at twenty-one; but if any one, or all, of the said children should die before they arrived at the age of twenty-one years, the shares or part of those so dying should go to B. and C., share and share alike:—Held, that the attaining twenty-one was not confined to the event of surviving A., and, therefore, that on the decease of one of the children in the lifetime of A., under twenty-one, the share of such child passed to B. and C., and did not lapse so as to go to the testator's residuary legatee. Goodchild v. Fenton, 3 Y. & J. 481.

A testatrix in 1823 devised lands to A. and B. as tenants in common in fee, and in case of the death of either under twenty-one and leaving no child, the whole to go to the survivor, and in case of the death of both leaving no child, then over. A. died under twenty-one without issue; B. attained twenty-one:—Held, that the gift over would take effect in case of his death, leaving no child. Else v. Else, 41 L. J., Ch. 213; L. R. 13 Eq. 196; 25 L. T. 927; 20 W. R. 286.

A testator bequeathed his personal estate to his brothers and sisters absolutely; and declared, that if any of them should die in his lifetime, or afterwards, without leaving lawful issue, his share should go amongst the survivors; and that if any should die in his lifetime, or afterwards, leaving issue, his share should be divided amongst his issue; and he declared, that none of the legatees should be entitled to any bequest until they attained twenty-one:—Held, that on attaining twenty-one the brothers and sisters took absolute interests, and that the limitation over was to take effect only in the event of the death of a legatee under twenty-one, in the lifetime of the testator, or afterwards. Monteith v. Nicholson, 2 Keen, 719; 6 L. J., Ch. 247.

A testator bequeathed his residue to his children, in terms which gave them a vested interest, subject to be divested in favour of their children on their death under twenty-one. He then provided, that if it should happen that he should leave no such children or child living to attain twenty-one, "or such, if any, dying without leaving lawful issue," then over:—Held, that "the dying" referred to was dying under twenty-one, and that the testator's children, on attaining twenty-one, acquired an indefeasible interest. Pearman v. Pearman, 33 Beav. 394.

J. devised land to trustees for R. for life, and after her death for sale and investment of the proceeds, and to pay and apply the interest in the educating and bringing up of all and every his nephews and nieces, the children of G. during their minorities, and to pay to his nephews and nieces, his, her or their equal part or share in the proceeds when and as he, she or they should respectively arrive at his, her or their ages of twenty-one; and in case any or either of his nephews or nieces should die without leaving issue, then the share of him, her or them so dying should go to the survivor and survivors of them, and be paid to him, her and them respectively when his, her and their original share and shares should become payable as aforesaid; and if any or either of them should at the time of such sale be of such age, then to be paid to them so of age immediately after such sale, and he gave and bequeathed the same to his nephews and nieces accordingly:—Held, that the shares of the nephews and nieces were indefeasibly vested at twenty-one. Johnson, In re, 10 L. T. 455.

A testator bequeathed a legacy to each of his two nephews and his niece, if they should respectively survive him and attain twenty-one, when the legacies to his nephews were "to be paid." In case of the death of either of his nephews or niece, leaving issue, such issue to take the parent's legacy, as by his or her will directed; if no will, equally; but in case of the death of either, before his or her legacy payable, his or her legacy to go to the survivor; during minority income to be applied for maintenance and education; the niece's legacy to be settled:—Held, that the nephews took only a life interest in the legacies, and that after their deaths if they left children, the corpus would go to such children as their parents might appoint by will; if no children, that the nephews would take absolutely. Martineau v. Rogers, 8 De G. M. & G. 328; 25 L. J., Ch. 398; 4 W. R. 502.

A testatrix bequeathed a legacy of stock upon trust for her nephew R. until he should attain the age of twenty-one, and then over. And she directed that in case any of the four legatees therein named (R. being one of them) should happen to depart this life without leaving lawful issue, then in trust for the survivors or survivor of them, in certain proportions. R. attained his age of twenty-one, but died without issue:—Held, that he took an absolute vested interest in the legacy on his attaining twenty-one. Hayne, In re, 18 L. T. 16.

—— Where Gift Contingent on surviving Tenant for Life.]—A testator gave his residuary estate to his wife for life, and then to be divided into three shares; and he gave one-third between the children of his brother T. B., living at the death of his wife, one third to his niece F. G., and the remaining one-third to his nephew and niece T. B. and S. B.; and in case such, any or either of them should die, having left a child or children surviving them, he declared that the expectant's share should go between his and her children. T. B.'s children all died in the lifetime of the widow, but some left children:—Held, that the latter were entitled to the first-mentioned one-third. Garey v. Whittingham, 5 Beav. 268; 11 L. J., Ch. 334; 6 Jur. 545.

C. in 1814 bequeathed the residue of his personal estate to trustees, in trust for the benefit of his wife for life; and after her death he directed that an annuity should out of the same be purchased for his brother; and then he bequeathed the residue to H., "in case he was living at the time of the decease of his wife, or to his children, if he should marry and leave any; but if he should die without leaving issue," then he bequeathed the residue to other persons. The widow died in the lifetime of H., who in 1844 died a bachelor:—Held, that the words "die without leaving issue," referred to the death of H. in the lifetime of the widow, and that as he survived her, his residuary legatee was entitled to the fund. Andrews v. Lord, 6 Jur. (N.S.) 865; 3 L. T. 803; 8 W. R. 405.

S. bequeathed property to his wife's niece "for her own absolute use, provided that she survived his wife, or if she married before her aunt's death, then the property was to go equally between her children; but if none, then to her husband." If she died unmarried before her aunt, the testator directed that at his wife's decease the property should go to other persons in the will named. The niece married, and had children in the lifetime of the aunt, whom she survived. The dividends on the fund in court had been, since the death of her aunt, paid to the niece, who petitioned to have the principal transferred to her:—Held, that in the events which had happened, she was absolutely entitled. Sarjeant, In re, 9 Jur. (N.S.) 116. S. C., nom. Serjeant, In re, 7 L. T. 501; 11 W. R. 203.

—— When restricted by Express Direction to Pay and Divide.]—Bequest of personal estate, being in trust, to pay the interest to M., the testator's widow, during her life, and on her death "to pay and divide the trust moneys unto and equally between his daughters, H. and A., for their own use and benefit absolutely, and in case of the death of them, H. and A., or either of them, leaving a child or children living," to apply the interest for the maintenance of the children till twenty-one, then to divide the trust money among them, expressing that the testator's intention was, that the children of his daughters should be entitled to the same shares to which their mother would be entitled if then living, with an ultimate trust in case of the death of H. and A., without leaving issue living at their respective deaths, or of all their children dying minors. On surviving the tenant for life H. and A. become entitled to the absolute interest. Galland v. Leonard, 1 Swan. 161; 1 Wils. Ch. 129; 18 R. R. 44.

A testator gave all his freehold and leasehold property to trustees, upon trust to pay the rents to his wife for her life, if she should so long continue his widow, and directed that in case of her marrying again she should receive an annuity. He then disposed of the property among his three children, the gift to take effect in possession immediately upon the decease or marriage of the widow. He directed his trustees to make over the shares of the children to them immediately upon the widow's death, as soon as they arrived at the age of twenty-one years; and further directed, that if one of his children should die leaving no children, his or her share should be equally divided between the other two, and for their heirs for ever; and that if two of his children should die leaving no children, their shares should go to the surviving one, and his or her heirs for ever:—Held, that the share of a child who attained twenty-one, and survived the widow, did not go over on his subsequently dying without leaving children. Edwards v. Edwards, 15 Beav. 357; 21 L. J., Ch. 324; 16 Jur. 259.

A testator, being entitled to a reversionary fund upon the death of a husband and wife without leaving issue who should attain the age of twenty-one years, bequeathed the fund to trustees upon trust to divide the same between "his children living at the time of the decease of the tenants for life, or such others lawfully begotten as would have been entitled to it at the death of their parents":—Held, that the surviving children took, to the exclusion of a grandchild whose father died after the testator, but before the death of the last tenant for life. Miller v. Chapman, 24 L. J., Ch. 409; 3 W. R. 300—L.JJ.

Real and personal estate, including a business, was devised and bequeathed in trust to pay an annuity out of the income to the testator's widow during her life, and after her decease the property, including all accumulations, was devised and bequeathed to the testator's son W.; but if he should die without leaving issue, the testator directed the trustees to sell and convert, and to distribute the proceeds among certain persons:—Held, that the gift over only contemplated the son's death in the lifetime of his mother, and that the son having survived the widow, took on her death an absolutely vested interest. Edwards v. Edwards (supra) approved and followed. Dean v. Hanley, 6 N. R. 95; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 686; 13 L. T. 89.

A testator devised and bequeathed his real and personal estate to trustees, upon trust to stand possessed of the rents and proceeds thereof, and to pay an annuity of 500*l.* a year to his widow for her life, or so long as she should continue his widow; and from and immediately after her death or marriage again, upon trust to pay and apply such annual rents and proceeds for the maintenance and advancement of such of his children as should be under twenty-one as his trustees should think proper; and when the youngest of his children should attain that age, then upon trust to call in all his moneys, and distribute all his property equally between his children, except so much as would secure to his wife (if she should be then alive and married) an annuity or yearly sum of 100*l.* as thereinafter mentioned:—Held, that the period of division among the children of the testator was upon the death or second marriage of the testator's widow, in case the youngest child should have attained twenty-one, and not absolutely upon the youngest child attaining such age. Beckton v. Barton, 27 Beav. 99; 28 L. J., Ch. 673; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 349.

The testator directed, that in case of the death of any of his children leaving issue, the share or shares of such deceased parent or parents should go to his, her or their children:—Held, to have reference to the death of the children before the period of distribution. Ib.

The testator, upon the marriage of his daughter, and after the date of his will, settled a sum of money upon his daughter, her husband and children:—Held, to amount to an advancement, and that the daughter must be put to her election. Ib.

A wife gave all her property (consisting of realty and personalty) to her husband during his life to receive the rents and profits, and after his death to be divided amongst her five children, share and share alike; and if any of her children should die without issue, then that child or children's share to be divided, share and share alike, among the children then living; but if any of her children should die leaving issue, then that child, if only one, should take its parent's share; if more than one, to be divided equally amongst them:—Held, that there was a sufficient contrary intention within the meaning of the above-stated rule, that "after his death" meant immediately after his death, at which time the property was to be divided, that this was the time of division referred to throughout the will, that death without issue must be restricted to death without issue in the life of the tenant for life, and that therefore all the children who survived the tenant for life took indefeasible shares in the property. Olivant v. Wright, 45 L. J., Ch. 1; 1 Ch. D. 346; 33 L. T. 457; 24 W. R. 84—C. A.

A. gave the income of his residuary real and personal estate to his wife for life, and after her death gave the same to all his children absolutely; but in the event of the marriage of any of his daughters, he directed that the interest should be paid to them for life, and after the death of any of them to their husbands for life; and upon the death of the survivor, that the principal should be divided amongst the children of his married daughters to vest in them at twenty-one, or at twenty-one or marriage, with benefit of survivorship, and with clauses for maintenance and advancement; and if any of such daughters should have no children living at her death, the principal of her share was to be at her own disposal:—Held, that this was an express gift to the children of the daughters, and that the direction applied to all the daughters of the testator, and not to those only who married before the death of the testator's widow. Witham v. Witham, 30 L. J., Ch. 888; 5 L. T. 133; 9 W. R. 854—L.JJ.

Held, also, that the contingency of a daughter's marrying was not restricted to a marriage in the lifetime of the widow. S. C., 3 De G. F. & J. 758.

A testator bequeathed his residue to his wife for life, and at her decease "to be equally divided between his two daughters B. and C.," and in case of marriage to be settled on themselves. The tenant for life was still living, and B. had never been married:—Held, that B. took an absolute vested interest on the death of the testator. Smith v. Colman, 25 Beav. 216.

G. by his will bequeathed property to belong to and be given up to his child or children on attaining twenty-five. And he provided that if his eldest son should come to the inheritance of a certain estate, then that the share of such son in the above-mentioned property should be made over to his brothers and sisters equally:—Held, that the eldest son having attained twenty-five without having come to the above-mentioned inheritance, was entitled to his share absolutely. Glyn v. Glyn, 26 L. J., Ch. 409; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 179; 5 W. R. 241.

A testator gave and bequeathed all his real and personal estate to his trustees in trust for his wife for life, and after death upon trust to convey, assure and divide the same unto and amongst all his children in equal shares as tenants in common on their respectively attaining twenty-one; and in case of the decease of any or either of his said children without issue under that age, or before they should acquire vested interests therein, then the trustees were to convey, assure, pay and divide the shares of the children so dying to the survivors:—Held, that the testator's children, on attaining twenty-one, acquired absolute vested interests in the real and personal estate. Wheable v. Withers, 16 Sim. 505; 18 L. J., Ch. 156.

Where there was a gift over in the event of a legatee dying "before receiving his legacy," and a legatee died after the period contemplated for payment had arrived, but without receiving the legacy, by reason of a suit having been instituted, and the money paid into court:—Held, that the gift over did not take effect. Whiting v. Force, 2 Beav. 571; 9 L. J., Ch. 345.

—— When restricted where no Express Direction for Division — Immediate Gift.]—Bequest of residue to A. and B. equally; and in case they should be married at the time it became payable, to be paid for her separate use, "and her receipt alone for the same to be a sufficient discharge." There was a gift over to C. and D., in case A. and B. should die without leaving issue:—Held, that this case was an exception to the general rule, and that the gift over was confined to A. and B. dying without leaving issue in the life of the testator. Anstice, In re, 23 Beav. 135.

Bequest to four persons equally; but in case any one should die leaving lawful issue, then to his sons at twenty-one, &c.; but in case any of the four should die without leaving lawful issue, then his share should go to the others or other of them, and to A., and to the respective issue of such one or more of them, including A., as should die leaving issue, such issue taking the respective shares which the parent would have taken if living. One of the four legatees died in the lifetime of the testatrix without ever having been married; A. survived the testatrix:—Held, that there was no lapse, and that A. took an absolute interest in a share of the deceased legatee's bequest. Johnston v. Antrobus, 21 Beav. 556.

Gift over, after an absolute bequest, in the event of death without leaving issue surviving, construed, upon the context, such a death under twenty-one. Brotherton v. Bury, 18 Beav. 65; 2 W. R. 46.

A testator gave his personal estate, and the produce of his real estate (which was to be sold on his youngest child attaining twenty-one), between his children equally. There was a gift over, if any child should die after the testator's decease, without leaving issue surviving him (omitting the words "under twenty-one"). There was a maintenance clause, out of interest, and an advancement clause, out of capital, until the "shares should become payable and transferable," and which referred to the time when the legatees would be absolutely entitled to receive, as being on attaining twenty-one. A child died after attaining twenty-one, without leaving issue:—Held, that his share did not go over, but belonged to his representative. Ib.

A brother gave all his personal estate to his two sisters, one of whom was twenty-five years old, and the other under that age; and he directed that the former should have the immediate control of her share, and the younger upon the age of twenty-five years. And "in case of the death of either of my sisters before me, or before marrying and having children, the whole of the property to go to the survivor":—Held, that the younger sister who after the testator's death attained twenty-five, but had not married and had children, took, at twenty-five, an absolute and indefeasible interest in her share. Clark v. Henry, 24 L. T. 256. Affirmed, 40 L. J., Ch. 377; L. R. 6 Ch. 588; 19 W. R. 706.

A father gave his residuary estate upon trust to be divided equally amongst all his children in equal shares and proportions, with benefit of survivorship in case of the deaths of any of his children without leaving lawful issue, his, her or their respective executors, administrators and assigns:—Held, that death without issue meant death in the testator's lifetime; that there was no implied gift to the issue of a child dying between the date of the will and the testator's death; and that the children who survived the testator took absolutely. Smaling, In re, Johnson v. Smaling, 26 W. R. 231.

Residuary bequest to two grand-daughters of testator "in trust till they come of age or marry, the interest to be received in the meantime, and paid to them; but if one of them should die before marriage, or twenty-one, then to survivor and her children; but if both should die leaving no issue, then I give them power to leave it by will as they should think proper." One legatee married, and the other attained twenty-one:—Held, that both acquired vested interests. Thackeray v. Hampson, 2 Sim. & S. 214; 25 R. R. 186. S. C., nom. Thackeray v. Dorrien, 3 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 89.

And see Ware v. Watson, ante, cols. 962–3; Cuming v. Boswell, post, col. 1743; Hood v. Hood, ante, col. 1010; Apsey v. Apsey, post, col. 1380.

—— Future Gift after Prior Interest.]—A testator gave a fund, subject to the life interest of his wife, to A., B. and C., equally to be divided between them; "but in the case of the decease of C. without leaving lawful issue," he gave one-third between A. and B.:—Held, that upon the decease of the wife C., who was then living, became absolutely entitled to one-third of the fund. Barker v. Cocks, 6 Beav. 82.

Devise of copyholds in trust for the testatrix's sisters E. and N. for life, and after the death of each her moiety to go to her children, to be equally divided between them and their heirs and assigns respectively, with benefit of survivorship as tenants in common in fee, and not by way of entail; and if all of them should die without lawful issue before attaining twenty-one, then the moiety of the children so dying to go to the children of the other sister, the moiety of the children of N. to those of E. in the one case, and, in the other, the moiety of the children of E. to those of N. N. had two children only, who were born after the death of the testatrix, and died infants:—Held, the children of N. took an absolute fee. Grimshaw v. Howarth, 1 Jur. 558.

A testator, after directing the interest of a sum of stock to be paid to his widow for her life, and after her death to be applied towards the bringing up of his three children until they attained twenty-one years, proceeded: "And upon their severally attaining twenty-one years, after the decease of my wife, to pay, transmit and divide the principal sum unto and amongst my three children in equal shares; and in case all my said three children should die without leaving lawful issue in the lifetime of my wife, then I give and bequeath the same unto my wife absolutely; and if either of my said sons shall depart this life leaving lawful issue, such issue shall have and be entitled to such share as their respective parents would have had or be entitled to." T., a son of the testator, died in the lifetime of the testator's widow, having attained twenty-one, and leaving lawful issue:—Held, that the gift over to the issue of T. had taken effect, and that T. had not acquired an absolute vested interest so as to pass to his administrator; held, also, that as to the share of E. R., a son of the testator, who had died under twenty-one, there had been an intestacy. Rowell v. Saggers, 1 W. R. 517.

Devise to A. for life, with remainder to B. in fee; but if B. should die leaving issue, then to his children. B. survived A., and died leaving children:—Held, that the gift to his children did not take effect. Slaney v. Slaney, 33 Beav. 631.

A testator devised the residue of his estate and effects to trustees, upon trust to permit his wife to receive thereout during her life 40*l.* per annum, and after her decease he gave and bequeathed his residuary estate and effects equally between and amongst his three children and their respective heirs, executors, administrators and assigns, share and share alike; and in the event of the death of any or either of his children without leaving lawful issue, the share or shares of him or them so dying without leaving such lawful issue should go and belong to the survivors or survivor of his children, and to the child or children of any deceased child or children which might then be dead, so that the child or children of any deceased child or children should take only the share or shares absolutely which his, her or their parents or parent were or was entitled to or interested in during his, her or their lifetime or respective lifetimes. The widow having died:—Held, that the three children who were living at her decease were entitled absolutely, and not for life only, to equal shares of the property. Allen, In re, 3 Drew. 380; 25 L. J., Ch. 286; 4 W. R. 137.

A testator directed his real estate to be sold on the death of his widow, and the produce paid to his six children and the issue of such of them as should die leaving issue equally, "the issue of any such children being respectively entitled amongst them to such share only as their parents would have been entitled to if living." The will contained a gift over in case of any of the children dying in his lifetime or after his decease without having a child:—Held, that a child who survived the widow became absolutely entitled, and that her children took nothing. Wood v. Wood, 35 Beav. 587.

A mother devised lands to her daughter S. for life, with remainder to her husband for life, and after the death of the survivor of them to all the children of S. by her then husband who should be living at the testatrix's death as tenants in common in fee, and added a proviso giving over the shares of any of the children of S. who should "depart this life without leaving lawful issue" to the survivors or survivor of the children that should leave such lawful issue as tenants in common in fee:—Held, that the words "depart this life without leaving lawful issue" must be restricted to death without issue at the period of distribution, viz. the death of the surviving tenant for life. Besant v. Cox, 6 Ch. D. 604; 25 W. R. 789.

A husband gave the income of 4,000*l.* to his wife, which he directed after her death to fall into the residue. He gave his residue to his four sons nominatim, with benefit of survivorship; but if they should leave issue, their shares were to go over to their issue:—Held, that the 4,000*l.* belonged absolutely to the sons who were alive at the death of the widow, and the issue of such as were dead. Hill, In re, 40 L. J., Ch. 594; L. R. 12 Eq. 302; 24 L. T. 494; 19 W. R. 740.

9. Gifts Over.

a. On Death without, or without having, Children or Issue.

Construction when Varied.]—The words "if A. die without having any child or children" construed "without having had any child," and the words "should A. die without any child or children" construed "any child surviving him." Jeffreys v. Conner, 28 Beav. 328; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 986; 8 W. R. 572.

The duty of the court is, if possible, to give effect to every part of a will; and, therefore, where a testator gave property to his son and niece, and directed that if his son should die without having any child or children, the whole property should go to his daughter and niece equally; and that if his son and daughter should die without any child or children, then the whole property should go to his niece:—Held, that the words in the first clause, "die without having any child or children," must be construed as equivalent to "die without having had any child or children," so that the testator's son having had several children, but who were all dead, the gift over did not take effect; and that the words in the second clause, "die without any child or children," meant without any children living at the death, so that the gift over to the niece would only take effect if the son should die without leaving a child living at his death. Ib.

Absolute Interest.]—Residuary bequest to A. in case she should have legitimate children, in failure of which to go over. A., having only one child born alive, who died before her, entitled absolutely. Wall v. Tomlinson, 16 Ves. 413; 10 R. R. 212.

Bequest to testator's three children, to be equally divided between them, share and share alike; but in case of the death of any without being married and having children, the share of such child so dying to be divided between the surviving children; and so if one should only survive. One having been married, and having had a child, her share vested. Bell v. Phyn, 7 Ves. 453; 6 R. R. 148.

A testator bequeathed to his daughter an annuity of 100*l.* while she remained single, but on her marriage, and on some adequate provision made, and which he directed to be made by settlement for her life, and to the use of her issue, he bequeathed to and for her use 2,500*l.*, and in default of such issue, he bequeathed that sum for the benefit of his grandchildren who should be then living. The daughter married, but no settlement was made, and the annuity continued to be paid to her. She had an only child, who died in her lifetime under age:—Held, that the gift over did not take effect, and that her personal representative was entitled to the 2,500*l.* Findon v. Findon, 1 De G. & J. 380; 26 L. J., Ch. 561; 5 W. R. 794. Affirming 24 Beav. 83.

——Vested Interest subject to being Divested.]—Bequest to H. D. for his own use, and in case he should die in the testator's lifetime or afterwards without having any child or children, then over. H. D. survived the testator, and died without having had a child:—Held, that the gift over took effect. Stone v. Maule, 2 Sim. 490; 29 R. R. 150.

A testator directed the interest of his residuary estate "to be divided between his four sons, and at the decease of either without lawful issue, such share to revert to the remainder then living, or their child or children":—Held, that each of the four sons took an absolute interest, subject to being divested in the event of his death without issue. Dowling v. Dowling, L. R. 1 Ch. 612; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 720; 15 L. T. 152; 14 W. R. 1003.

A devise of real and personal property to the testator's unborn child, and in case of its death under age, to be equally divided between the children, male and female, of testator's two married daughters, L. W. and E. H., when they should arrive at their respective ages; and the interest of that part to the children of E. H. during such nonage to go to the sole and private use of B.; and in case she should not have children, such share to the children of L. W. share and share alike in manner aforesaid. The posthumous child died about a year after its birth, at which time L. W. had several children, and E. H. had not any. L. W. and her husband filed a bill claiming the whole of testator's fortune which had vested in his posthumous child:—Held, that E. H. was entitled to the interest of a moiety of her father's estate, and that on her death without issue the moiety should go to her sister's children. Williams v. Hopkins, Wal. Lyn. 285.

S. gives the residue of his estate to his daughter E. for life, and after her death to be equally divided among her children when the youngest should attain twenty-one; but if his daughter should die without any child, or the youngest should not arrive at twenty-one, and none of them should have left lawful issue, then he gave the residue to other persons. E. had only one daughter, who married and had four children, but both she and all the children died in the lifetime of E.:—Held, that upon the death of E., without any child then living, the devise took effect. Thicknesse v. Liege, 3 Bro. P. C. 365.

One devises a term for years to A., and if A. dies without a child, then to B.; this is a good devise to B. upon such contingency. Studholme v. Hodgson, 3 P. Wms. 304.

Though the freeholds of lands cannot be kept in abeyance, but must vest in somebody, yet there is no such rule with regard to personal estates which may remain in suspense and wait till a contingency happens. Id. 305.

Testator devised a term for years, and all his personal estate, to A., an infant, and if A. died during his infancy, and his mother should die without any other child, then to B. A. died during his infancy; though the mother was living, and might have a child, yet the court aided B., the devisee over, by directing an account and discovery of the estate, in order to secure it in case the contingency should happen. Id. 300.

b. On Death without leaving Children or Issue.

"Leaving" construed "Having."]—Bequest upon trust to pay and divide equally to and amongst all the children of testator's daughter when the youngest should attain twenty-one, followed by a gift over in case of the death of his daughter "without leaving any child or children":—Held, the youngest child having attained twenty-one, that the fund was divisible equally amongst all the children, and that such interests were not defeasible in the event of the death of the testator's daughter without leaving any child or children. Kennedy v. Sedgwick, 3 K. & J. 540.

In such a case the gift over being contradictory if the word "leaving" be construed literally, that word will be read as equivalent to "having." Ib.

Devise to A. for life; remainder to all and every the children of her body, their heirs and assigns, as tenants in common: but in case A. should die without leaving any issue of her body, then over. A. had two children, both of whom died before her. One died leaving a child who survived A.; the other died without issue:—Held, that the word "leaving" meant "having"; and that the two children of A. took vested interests as tenants in common in fee. Hooper, Ex parte, 1 Drew. 264. And see Tarbuck v. Tarbuck, 4 L. J., Ch. 129.

In a will by a father giving a life interest in a fund to his daughter, with words importing the gift of a vested interest in remainder after her decease to her child and children, followed by these words: "In case the said [the daughter] shall leave no child or children, or having such, all of them shall happen to die under age without issue," then a gift over in that event:—Held, that it requires very strong words to take away the effect of a prior clear vested gift, and notwithstanding the ordinary sense of "leave," that it was the testator's intention to give the fund over only in case the previous limitations should fail, and that the fund vested absolutely in the only child of the daughter, who died in the lifetime of its mother. Thompson's Trusts, In re, 5 De G. & Sm. 667; 22 L. J., Ch. 273; 17 Jur. 16.

Bequest to A. for life and to her child, &c., at twenty-one, is a vested interest at twenty-one, and not divested if child should attain twenty-one, and die in life of A., by subsequent expression in will, that in case A. should die not leaving child, &c., or leaving child, such child should die before twenty-one, gift over. Maitland v. Chalie, 6 Madd. 243; 23 R. R. 209.

A. devised freehold property to trustees to the use of his daughter for life, and after her decease for such one or more of her children or his, her or their issue as she should appoint by will, and in default of appointment, "in trust for all and every of her children, and the heirs of their body or bodies lawfully begotten, in equal shares and proportions; and in case of the death of my daughter without leaving any child her surviving, and in the event of such child or children her surviving dying without leaving any issue of his or her body, then in trust for my own right heirs for ever." The daughter had one son, who died in her lifetime:—Held, that her son took a vested estate tail under the will, and not an estate tail contingent upon his surviving his mother. Richards v. Davies, 32 L. J., C. P. 3; 7 L. T. 357; 11 W. R. 38.

Bequest to trustees, upon trust for the six children (by name) of L. F., deceased, for their respective lives, and the capital equally among the children of each tenant for life, per stirpes, to be paid at twenty-one or marriage; and if any of said six children should die without leaving any children or child, then over:—Held, a vested indefeasible interest in each child of a tenant for life on attaining twenty-one. Casamajor v. Strode, 8 Jur. 14.

Testatrix bequeathed her residuary estate to trustees in trust, to pay and divide the interest between her two nieces equally during their lives, and after their deaths to pay and divide the principal unto and amongst the lawful issue of her said nieces, or of such of them as should leave issue equally, per stirpes, and not per capita; and in default of such issue, to pay the interest to certain other persons for their lives, &c. One of the nieces died, having had seven children, five only of whom survived her:—Held, that those five became entitled on their mother's death to her moiety of the residue. Cross v. Cross, 7 Sim. 201; 4 L. J., Ch. 38.

A father gave a fund to trustees to pay the dividends to his daughter for life, and after her death to transfer the principal equally amongst all the children of his daughter, whether by her present putative husband, or by any other person whom she might marry, who should attain twenty-one, their executors, administrators and assigns, but in case his daughter should die leaving no issue, then to the testator's other children. Long before the date of the will the daughter was, with the testator's knowledge, living with a gentleman to whom she was afterwards married, and she had one son by that person, who was born four years before the date of the will, and was known by the testator to be illegitimate, and acknowledged by him as his grandson. The daughter being sixty-seven years of age, and having had no other child, and her husband being dead:—Held, that the illegitimate son was entitled absolutely to the capital, and the word "leaving" being construed "having," and he being over twenty-one, the money was ordered to be paid to the mother and son, who petitioned for payment to them jointly. Brown, In re, 43 L. J., Ch. 84; L. R. 16 Eq. 239; 28 L. T. 616; 21 W. R. 721.

A testator gave the residue of his estate to trustees to invest and pay one-fourth of the income to each of his four sisters for life, and when and so soon as any of them should die without leaving issue, then he directed that the share in the trust moneys of her or them so dying without issue should be divisible among his surviving sisters, and the issue of any who might then be dead, in equal shares, but such issue to take only their respective parent's share; and when and as soon as any of his sisters should die and leave issue, then upon trust to call in the share of her or them so dying leaving issue, and pay the same unto such respective issue, if more than one child, equally:—Held, that issue here meant children, and that leaving issue meant having had issue. Bryden v. Willett, L. R. 7 Eq. 472. Affirmed, 20 L. T. 502; 17 W. R. 336.

One of the testator's sisters died having had two children, one of whom survived her mother, and the other died in her mother's lifetime, leaving a family:—Held, that a moiety of her mother's share vested in the daughter who died in her lifetime, and consequently passed to her family. Ib.

A testator devised specific real estate to trustees and their heirs upon trust for his daughter R. for life, and after her decease he gave the same unto and equally between all and every her children, if more than one, as tenants in common, their heirs and assigns; and if but one such child, to his or her heirs and assigns; and in case his daughter should depart this life under twenty-one, or afterwards, "without leaving any child or children," the testator gave the hereditaments and premises to his son C., his heirs and assigns:—Held, that the children of R. took at their births indefeasible interests in fee, in remainder expectant on the death of their mother. White v. Hill, L. R. 4 Eq. 265; 16 L. T. 821.

A testatrix devised and bequeathed the residue of her real and personal estate to trustees, with a direction that they should receive the rents, and invest the same until a daughter should attain her age of twenty-one, and then "to pay the same to and for her sole and separate use and benefit. But if my daughter should die without leaving any lawful child or children, then I direct the same to be paid to the lawful children or child of my brother, if more than one, in equal shares" :—Held, that the gift was an absolute gift of the real and personal estate to the daughter, defeasible in the event of her dying without children. Drake v. Collins, 20 L. T. 970.

Devise to A. for life, remainder to her first child, and his or her heirs; but if such child should die under twenty-one without leaving issue, in like manner to every other child of A.; for in case of issue, it was the testator's will that they should inherit the estate; but in case A. should die without leaving issue of her body, or having such issue, such issue should die under twenty-one without leaving issue, then he devised the estate over. A. never had issue: —Held, that she took a life estate only, and that the devise over took effect. Goymour v. Pigge, 7 Beav. 475; 13 L. J., Ch. 322; 8 Jur. 526.

"Leaving" construed Strictly—Where Intention sufficiently Expressed.]—Bequest upon trust for A. B. for life, and in case he should leave any child or children, upon trust for such child or children, to be payable at twenty-one, and the share of each child to be a vested interest; and in case A. B. should not leave any child, then upon trust for C. D. for life; and after the death of C. D. and of A. B. without issue as aforesaid, then over. A. B. survived the testator, and had one child only, who attained twenty-one, and died in the lifetime of A. B., leaving a child, who survived A. B.:—Held, that upon the death of A. B. the gift over took effect. Bythesea v. Bythesea, 17 Jur. 645. Affirmed, 23 L. J., Ch. 1004; 2 W. R. 667.

A testator devised dwelling-houses to trustees for the life of his niece M., to permit her to take the rents and profits of the same during her life, and from and immediately after the decease of his niece unto her issue, to be equally divided amongst them at their respective ages of twenty-one or days of marriage, and to the heirs and assigns of such issue; and if any of such issue should be under twenty-one at the decease of his niece he directed an equal share of the rents and profits to be appropriated towards the education and maintenance of such issue as should not have attained twenty-one at the decease of his niece; and if his niece should die leaving only one child, then to such only child, and his or her heirs, as soon as he or she should attain twenty-one; but in case his niece should die without leaving any issue of her body at the time of her decease, or in case all such issue should die under twenty-one and unmarried, then to his brother's children. The niece married, and had one daughter, who attained twenty-one, but died in the lifetime of her mother, unmarried:—Held, that, if an estate in fee in remainder vested in her daughter upon her attaining twenty-one, such estate was divested upon her death in the lifetime of her mother. Young v. Turner, 1 B. & S. 550; 30 L. J., Q. B. 268; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 52; 5 L. T. 56.

Bequest of 4,000*l.* to A. for life, and afterwards, if she shall "leave" any children, upon trust to divide it equally amongst all "such children," to be payable and become vested interests at twenty-one; and in case there shall be only one "such child" who shall attain twenty-one, then to pay it unto such only child. There was a power of maintenance during minority, and also of advancement, not exceeding "such presumptive share," and a gift over, if the daughter should "have" no child who should arrive at twenty-one:—Held, that a daughter of A. who attained twenty-one and married, but died in the life of A., took no share. Sheffield v. Kennett, 27 Beav. 207; 4 De G. & J. 593.

By a marriage settlement a fund was settled, after the death of the survivor of the husband and wife, in trust for the children then living, to be paid at twenty-one, and in case the parents should die "without leaving any lawful issue," then as the husband should appoint; and in default, "in case there should be no child or children as aforesaid," over. Children attained twenty-one, but they all died in the life of their parents, leaving issue who survived the parents:—Held, that the gift over took effect. Heath, In re, 23 Beav. 193.

Bequest to A. for life, and after the death of A., then if A. shall leave issue, upon trust to transfer the share of A. to such issue equally if more than one, when and so often as they shall severally and respectively attain twenty-one, with a trust for maintenance in the meantime; and in case of the death of A. leaving no issue, or if A. should happen to leave issue, then upon the death of "such" issue under twenty-one, over:—Held, that the contingency of surviving A. was part of the gift to A.'s issue, and that therefore three children of A. who attained twenty-one, but died in her lifetime, took nothing; but that one child, who alone survived A., took the whole. Watson, In re, 39 L. J., Ch. 770; L. R. 10 Eq. 36; 18 W. R. 642.

A testator bequeathed to each of his five daughters 400*l.* per annum, to be payable half-yearly during the term of their natural lives; and after their respective decease, he gave the same to their children respectively, share and share alike, such children not to be entitled to more than their deceased parent's share; and in case any or either of these daughters should die without issue, he directed such annuity to cease, and to fall into the residue of his estate: —Held, upon the whole context of the will, that a daughter's children, who died in the lifetime of their mother, were not entitled to any share, and that, on the death of a daughter who had issue, but left none living at her death, the capital of the fund producing her annuity fell into the residue. Hedges v. Harpur, 3 De G. & J. 129; 27 L. J., Ch. 742; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 1209; 6 W. R. 842.

Gift of residue on trust to pay the dividends to the testatrix's son for life (except what was required for education of her son's children); and should her son die before all or any of his children should attain twenty-one, she wished each child to receive their share on attaining twenty-one; but should all his children die before himself, at his death, then over:—Held, that a child who died an infant, in the lifetime of the son, had not acquired a transmissible interest. Chadwick v. Greenall, 3 Giff. 221; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 950; 5 L. T. 232.

The rule in Howgrave v. Cartier (3 V. & B. 79) in favour of putting on a settlement or will making a provision for a family such a construction as will give the children indefeasible interests on their attaining twenty-one, is only a rule of construction to be applied in construing ambiguous words, and not a positive rule which will modify the effect of plain words. Hamlet, In re, Stephen v. Cunningham, 58 L. J., Ch. 242; 39 Ch. D. 426; 59 L. T. 745; 37 W. R. 245—C. A.

A testator gave his property to his daughter for life, and then to her children, who being sons should attain twenty-one, or being daughters attain that age or marry. "And in case my said daughter shall happen to die without leaving any child or children her surviving, or leaving such, they shall all die without having obtained a vested interest in the said trust moneys, and without leaving any issue them, him or her surviving," then over to two cousins. The daughter had children, some of whom attained twenty-one, but all died in her lifetime:—Held, that the gift over took effect, its terms being unambiguous, and the event to which it referred having happened. Ib.

A testator bequeathed personal estate on trust after the death of W. K. B. for W. R. B., and in case W. R. B. died without leaving issue male, for J. B. W. R. B. died in the lifetime of W. K. B., having had only one son, who died an infant in his father's lifetime:—Held, that the words "die without leaving issue male" must be construed as "die without leaving issue male living at the death," and not as "die without having had issue male," and therefore that the gift over to J. B. took effect. White v. Hight (12 Ch. D. 751; 41 L. T. 17) overruled. Ball, In re, Slattery v. Ball, 58 L. J., Ch. 232; 40 Ch. D. 11; 59 L. T. 800; 37 W. R. 37—C. A.

Testator gave all his property to his daughter, and if she "should die before the age of twenty-one, and at any time without issue," over. The daughter attained twenty-one, married and had a child:—Held, that "without issue" meant "without leaving issue alive at the time of her death." Clay v. Coles, 57 L. T. 682.

The words "without leaving" may be read "without having had" where the result of so doing is to make the whole instrument consistent, and where the contrary construction would have the effect of divesting a previously vested gift in a manner inconsistent with the expressed intention of the testator; but they will not be so read for the purpose of altering the event upon which the divesting of a gift previously vested is to take place. Armstrong v. Armstrong, 21 L. R., Ir. 114—C. A.

Testator devised real estate to "my son G. A. . . . Should my son G. and his wife E. die leaving no family, his share to revert to my two daughters D. and S." G. A. had several children, all of whom died in his lifetime without issue. By his will he devised and bequeathed all the real and personal estate to which he should be entitled at his decease to E.:—Held, that, upon G. A.'s death, E. took a life estate only in the property, and D. and S. the reversion in fee. White v. Hight (12 Ch. D. 751; 41 L. T. 17) not followed. Ib.

—— Where Subject Matter involves Personal Enjoyment—Annuity.]—The principle of construction whereby, in the case of a gift over on death without "leaving" children, the word "leaving" is construed "having," so as not to take away an interest previously vested, will not readily be applied where the subject-matter of gift is an annuity, which ex vi termini involves the notion of personal enjoyment. Hemingway, In re, James v. Dawson, 60 L. J., Ch. 85; 45 Ch. D. 453; 63 L. T. 218; 39 W. R. 4.

A testator gave to his daughter L. an annuity during her life, payable out of the rents of leasehold property held for an unexpired term of about sixty years, and after the death of L. directed that the annuity should be payable half-yearly to and amongst such of her children as being sons should attain twenty-one, or being daughters should attain that age or marry, and if there should be but one such child, should be payable and paid to such only child, and in the event of the death of L. "without leaving" any such child, the testator gave the annuity which should fail by such death unto and among the survivors of the testator's children and grandchildren. The testator directed that the leaseholds should not be sold, but be retained by his trustees, and the rents applied in payment of this and other annuities. L. survived the testator, and had one child who attained twenty-one, but died in the lifetime of L.:—Held, that the word "leaving" must be read in its literal sense, and that therefore the representative of the deceased child was not entitled to the annuity, but the gift over took effect. Ib.

c. On Death before Legacy is Vested.

"Vested" construed "Vested in Interest."]—In a gift over on the death of A. before the estate became vested in him, the word "vested" means vested in interest and not vested in possession. Arnold, In re, 33 Beav. 163; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1186; 9 L. T. 530; 12 W. R. 4.

The word "vested," used in a gift over, must be construed "vested in interest," and not "vested in possession," unless the rest of the will and the context require that it should receive the latter construction. Ib.

Where residuary real and personal estate was directed to be all converted into personalty, and to be applied in payment of debts, &c., and the residue to be divided among testator's children, J., M. and C., and grandchild R., the share of M. to be paid as soon after his decease as convenient, and the shares of C. and R. at the ages of twenty-two and twenty-one respectively; and in case any of his children should die before their shares became so vested as aforesaid, the shares to go to the survivors equally; and if but one, the whole to that one. J. and C. died in testator's lifetime, C. under twenty-two, and R. survived testator, but died under twenty-one:—Held, first, that "vested" must mean "payable," and that the original shares of the deceased children survived to the survivors; and, secondly, that "whole" meant the whole residue, and, therefore, that the accruing as well as original shares devolved to M. as sole survivor. Sillick v. Booth, 1 Y. & C. C. C. 121; 6 Jur. 142.

Devise before 1837 to the testator's daughter K. for life; remainder to the use of all and every the daughter and daughters of the body of M., as tenants in common; and in default of such issue, to A. in fee. By a codicil the testator recited that he had devised the reversion in fee in several estates expectant on the decease of his several daughters (including H.), to his son A.; and also that he had devised other estates to trustees, to the use of A., his heirs and assigns, until he attained twenty-five, and thereupon to him, his heirs and assigns for ever; and declared, that in case A. should die without issue, "and before the several estates should become vested in him by virtue of the said several limitations," then over. A. died after the testator's death, and without issue, and subsequently H. also died unmarried:—Held, that the word "vested" must be construed "vested in interest," and not "vested in possession." Richardson v. Power, 19 C. B. (N.S.) 780; 35 L. J., C. P. 44; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 739; 13 W. R. 1104.

Testator gave the residue of his real and personal estate to trustees in trust for his three nephews, their heirs, &c., as tenants in common, with cross-remainders and benefit of survivorship in case any of them should die before their shares in the trust property should become vested in them, which he desired might not be shared until his youngest nephew should attain twenty-four; and he directed his trustees to maintain and educate them out of the income of the property during their minorities; the nephews were infants at the testator's death:—Held, nevertheless, that they took vested interests under the will. Parkin v. Hodgkinson, 15 Sim. 293.

—— Construed "Vested in Possession."]—A testator gave his residuary personal estate to trustees to pay the interest to his wife for life, and after her decease he gave four-sixths of the capital to each of his four brothers and sisters, and in case of the death of any or either of the legatees in his lifetime, the sixth part of him or her so dying to go to his or her children. He then gave the remaining two-sixths to the children of a deceased brother and sister: provided always, that in case of the death of any or either of his legatees before their respective shares should have become vested, the share or shares of him or her so dying were to sink into the residue, and go to the survivors as if the legatees so dying had not been named, or had never existed. One of the legatees survived the testator, but died in the lifetime of his widow, the tenant for life:—Held, the period of vesting was the death of the tenant for life, and that her representatives were not entitled to her share, but that it sank into the residue as if she had not existed. Morris, In re, 26 L. J., Ch. 688; 5 W. R. 423.

A testator gave all his real and personal estate to trustees to sell and divide the proceeds into four parts, and as to each of three of the fourths upon trust for one of the testator's children for life, with remainders to such of his or her children as being a son attained twenty-two, or died under age leaving issue, or being a daughter attained that age or married, equally, with benefit of survivorship. As to the other fourth, the son being dead, the life estate was omitted; and there was a direction, that if all those constituting a set or class of beneficiaries died without acquiring a vested interest in the capital, the share, extinguished or lapsed, should go equally amongst the surviving sets or classes. A son died intestate and without issue:—Held, that the gift over took effect. Beardsley v. Beynon, 12 L. T. 698; 13 W. R. 831.

A testator, by his will, directed a fund to be set apart to answer an annuity which he directed to be paid to his widow. After her death he directed the fund to form part of his residuary estate; and he bequeathed his residuary estate to all his children equally, to be divided between them; with a proviso that if any child should die, either in his lifetime or after his decease, and before the part or share bequeathed to such child should become a vested interest, without leaving issue, then such share should go to the survivors; but in case any child should die leaving issue, then such issue should take their parents' share:—Held, that the second branch of the proviso must be read in connection with the first, and that in both the death contemplated was a death before the share vested in possession. King v. Cullen, 2 De G. & Sm. 252.

A testatrix directed that her trustees should stand possessed of the residue of her estate as to one moiety and the dividends, to pay the same to her daughter A. for life, and then as to this moiety and the dividends and accumulations, until it should be distributable, to pay the same to the children of A. who should survive her, at twenty-one, with benefit of accruer and survivorship; and she gave the other moiety in similar terms to her daughter B.; and in case, at the decease of either of her daughters, there should be no children of such daughter who should have lived to attain a vested interest, then the moiety of such daughter so dying and the dividends and accumulations to be held for the other daughter for life, and her children afterwards. And if upon the death of the survivor of the two daughters there should be no child or children of either who should have lived to attain a vested interest in the two moieties, then the entirety of the two moieties and the dividends and accumulations to be held for the testatrix's six nephews and nieces on attaining twenty-one. A. died before the testatrix, and she then made a codicil, directing that her moiety should go to B. in the same manner as it would have gone to A. if she had lived; and she gave an annuity for the maintenance of the only daughter of A. until she should attain twenty-one. B. died, leaving six children infants:—Held, that the interest of the six grandchildren of the testatrix was not vested until they attained twenty-one, and the dividends must be accumulated, and that the nephews and nieces were not entitled under the gift over until default in the attainment of twenty-one by the grandchildren. Bull v. Jones, 31 L. J., Ch. 858; 10 W. R. 820. And see Gaitskell, In re, ante, col. 1054; Young v. Robertson, ante, col. 966.

d. On Death before Legacy Payable.

Immediate Gift.]—A testator declared that the trustees of his will should stand possessed of the residue of the money to arise from his real and personal estate upon trust, "for all and every my first cousins-german, to be divided equally amongst them, share and share alike. And in case any of my said cousins shall depart this life before their respective shares shall become due or payable, leaving any lawful issue, I direct that such issue shall have the same share or shares of the same residue as his, her or their parent or parents would have been entitled to if living." The testator had several first cousins-german living at the date of his will, two of whom died in his lifetime; the others survived him. One of those who died left seven children, the other left no issue:—Held, first, that the words "due or payable" referred to the time of the testator's death; secondly, that the issue of the deceased cousin were entitled to their parent's share; thirdly, that the share of the cousin who died without issue did not lapse. Coort v. Winder, 8 Jur. 770.

A. bequeathed pecuniary legacies to two nephews and a niece by name, if they survived him and attained twenty-one, when the nephews' legacies were to be paid. In case of the death of either of the nephews, or of the niece, leaving issue, such issue to take the parents' legacy as the parents should by will appoint; but in case of the death of either of the nephews or the niece before his or her legacy became payable, the legacy to go to the survivors. During the minorities of the legatees the trustees were to apply the income of the legacies for their maintenance and education. The legacy of the niece, and any share she might acquire by the death of her brothers, or either of them, were to be settled for her separate use:—Held, that the word paid must be construed as vested, or payable, and that the executory gift to the issue would take effect in the event of the parent dying after attaining twenty-one. Martineau v. Rogers, 8 De G. M. & G. 328; 25 L. J., Ch. 398; 4 W. R. 502.

Future Gift after Life Interest.]—Real and personal estate were given upon trust, during the life of A., out of the income, to pay A. 200*l.* a year, and one-third of the residue to B.; and on the death of A., to sell and pay one-third to B., then a gift over, on the death of B., before his share should "become due and payable." B. died in the life of A.:—Held, that the gift over took effect. Creswick v. Gaskell, 16 Beav. 577.

A husband by his will gave his real and personal estate to trustees upon trust for his wife for life, and then to stand possessed of the same for all and every of his children, share and share alike, until his youngest child should attain the age of twenty-one, and upon his youngest child attaining such age, then upon trust for all his children, share and share alike. He then directed that if any of his children should die before his, her or their share or shares should become transferable and payable, without leaving issue, then the share or shares of the child or children so dying should go over to the survivors; but in case any of his children should die before his, her or their share or shares should become payable, leaving issue, then the trustees were directed to transfer and pay the share or shares of such deceased child or children unto his, her or their issue, share and share alike, when they should attain twenty-one:—Held, that the substitutionary gift to the issue of deceased children was sufficient to divest the share of a child who attained twenty-one, but died in the lifetime of the testator's widow, the tenant for life. Chell v. Chell, 23 W. R. 252.

Gift of residue in trust for wife during widowhood, remainder among five children or the survivor at such age as wife should appoint, in default at twenty-one; but share of child dying before it should become payable, to issue of child:—Held, that the issue of a child who attained twenty-one and died in the lifetime of the wife was entitled. Hind v. Selby, 22 Beav. 373.

The rule in Emperor v. Rolfe (1 Ves. Sen. 208) applies to the will of a person in loco parentis. The court will apply this rule in cases where the language of the testator does not necessarily imply an intention to benefit children dying before the tenant for life. Jackson v. Dover, 4 N. R. 136; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 631; 10 L. T. 489; 12 W. R. 855. And see Crowder v. Stone, ante, col. 958.

"Payable" under Appointment.]—A testator gave the interest of a fund to his widow for life, with a power of appointment amongst all his children, and in default of appointment amongst all such children, with a gift over to the widow, in case all the children should die before their shares should become payable. The widow appointed the fund to her two children, one of whom died in her lifetime:—Held, that the survivor took the whole fund. Bielefield v. Record, 2 Sim. 354.

Effect on Vesting of Interest—"Payable" construed "Vested."]—Where there is a gift for life, followed by a gift in remainder, which is to vest upon the attainment of a particular age, or any other event personal to the legatee in remainder, with a gift over in the event of the latter dying before the legacy is payable or receivable, or vested in possession, or the like, in any form of expression that signifies "paid" or "received," all such expressions are to be read as equivalent to "vested," and refer to the period at which the property is to vest. West v. Miller, 37 L. J., Ch. 423; L. R. 6 Eq. 59; 18 L. T. 429; 16 W. R. 602.

A testator bequeathed his personalty to trustees, to invest the same and pay the income to his wife, until his daughter should attain twenty-one, and as soon as she should attain that age then to call in all invested moneys, and divide the same between the daughter and his son; and in case of the death of either without issue before their respective estates or interests should be received, then to pay the estate or interest of him or her so dying to the survivor. But in case of the death of either previous to the time aforesaid leaving issue, then to such issue, with other remainders over. By a codicil, he directed the investments and payments to his wife to be continued during her life, though she might live beyond the daughter's attainment of the age of twenty-one; and, reciting that his son was dead, he gave the share and interest, which he would have taken, to the daughter, to be paid and applied along with her own. The daughter survived the testator and attained twenty-one, but died in the lifetime of his wife, leaving a child:—Held, that the daughter took an absolute vested interest in the fund on attaining twenty-one, which her death in the lifetime of the wife did not divest in favour of the child and the other persons entitled over. Ib.

A testator gave real and personal estate to trustees on trust, after the death of a tenant for life, to sell and convert into money, and "to pay and divide the moneys arising therefrom among" eleven persons named equally, as and when they should respectively attain twenty-one, with a gift over of the shares of any of them who should die "before such legacy, or share, or any part thereof, should become payable." All of them survived the testator, and attained twenty-one, but some of them died before the tenant for life:—Held, that "payable" was equivalent to "vested," and that the gift over did not take effect. Haydon v. Rose, 39 L. J., Ch. 688; L. R. 10 Eq. 224; 23 L. T. 334; 18 W. R. 1146.

Trust by will subject to an interest for life, to pay and transfer to the testator's nephew and nieces equally at twenty-one, with survivorship, in case any should die before his or their shares should become payable, and a limitation over in case all should die, &c. Vested interest at the age of twenty-one, before the death of the tenant for life. Hallifax v. Wilson, 16 Ves. 171; 10 R. R. 146.

Trust to pay the dividends of stock to the testatrix's niece for life, and after her death to divide the capital among the brothers and sisters of the testatrix, and in like manner to the survivors or survivor of them; the share of those who died in the life of the niece passed to their representatives. Ib.

Testator bequeathed 10,000*l.* in trust for his son, J. L. J., for life, remainder in trust for the children of J. L. J. when and as they should attain twenty-one, as tenants in common, and if any of them should die before their shares became payable, leaving issue; but if any of them should die before their shares became payable, leaving no issue, their shares to be paid to the survivors at the same time as the original shares should become payable; and if J. L. J. should have no child, or having such, they should all die under age and without issue, then the trust fund to sink into the residue, which the testator gave to two of his other children. J. L. J. had four children, all of whom attained twenty-one. One of them died in his lifetime without issue:—Held, that "payable" meant "attain twenty-one," and, consequently, that one-fourth of the fund vested in the deceased child. Jones v. Jones, 13 Sim. 561; 13 L. J., Ch. 16; 7 Jur. 786.

A testator devised his real estates to his widow for life, and after her death directed the executors to sell and divide the proceeds equally between his seven children; the shares of his three sons to be vested in them respectively when and as they should attain twenty-one, and the shares of his four daughters to be vested interests in them when and as they attained that age or were married. During the minorities of his children, their shares were directed to be invested and applied for their maintenance and advancement. In case any of the children should die leaving issue lawfully begotten "before the share of such child or children so dying as aforesaid shall become due and payable," the share was to be equally divided "amongst all the issue of such child or children as and when such issue shall attain the said age of twenty-one years"; the interest of such child's share so dying, leaving issue, to be applied for the advancement, &c., of such issue during minority. E., one of the testator's daughters, married and died in the lifetime of the testator's widow, leaving an infant child, and having assigned her share by way of mortgage:—Held, that the words due and payable did not postpone the vesting of the share until the death of the tenant for life, and that E.'s assignee was entitled, and not her infant daughter, under the gift over. Mendham v. Williams, L. R. 2 Eq. 396; 15 L. T. 130.

A testator, after giving all his real and personal estate to trustees, upon trust after payment of debts, funeral and testamentary expenses, to permit his wife to receive the rents of the realty and enjoy the personalty for her life, she maintaining his son E. during his minority, and after his decease to the use of the testator's sons T., J. and E., as tenants in common, subject to the payment of 200*l.* to each of his daughters H. and M. at the expiration of six calendar months after the decease of his wife, provided that if either or both of his said daughters should happen to die in the lifetime of his wife, or before their respective portions became payable, leaving lawful issue, such issue should have the portion of the parent so dying. H., one of the daughters, died in the lifetime of the testator's widow, unmarried; and upon the question whether the legacy of 200*l.* given to her was vested or not:—Held, that it was vested. Wilkinson v. Chamberlain, 3 W. R. 601.

A testator, by his will, bequeathed an annuity to his daughter, and directed that after her death the trustees should hold 2,000*l.*, part of the fund set apart to secure the annuity, upon trust to pay and divide the same unto and equally between the child and children of the daughter as and when they should respectively attain twenty-one, and in case any of the children should die before their shares should become "payable as aforesaid" without leaving issue, the share or shares of him, her or them so dying should be paid to the survivor or survivors of them, equally if more than one, and if but one, the whole to that one, with power for the trustees, during the respective minorities of the children, to apply the income of his, her or their expectant share or shares towards his, her or their maintenance and education. And if all such children should die under twenty-one, without leaving issue, the fund was given over:—Held, that the children's shares absolutely vested at twenty-one and were not divested by subsequent death without issue in the lifetime of their mother. Partridge v. Baylis, 17 Ch. D. 835; 44 L. T. 737; 29 W. R. 820.

Testator directed his executors to purchase out of his residuary estate a certain sum of stock, &c., to pay the dividends to his wife for her life, and after her death to divide the capital between such of his three daughters as should be then living. Provided, that if any one of them should be then dead, or should afterwards die before her share should become payable or divisible, leaving a child or children, that share should go to such child or children. The testator's wife died in his lifetime; one of the daughters died three months after the testator:—Held, nevertheless, that she had a vested interest in one of the shares. Collins v. Macpherson, 2 Sim. 87; 29 R. R. 65.

A testator gave his real and personal estate, after paying four annuities, to one for life, and after his death, he directed his personal and the produce of his real estate to be divided amongst the children of A. living at the testator's death, when the youngest attained twenty-one, if the annuitants should be then dead; but if not, then his trustees were either to invest it and pay and apply the residue of the income in the maintenance, &c., of the children, according to their discretion, or accumulate, such accumulations to be paid, after the death of the surviving annuitants, with the original shares. There was a gift over in the event of the death of any child who should become entitled to a distributive share before his share became payable. One of the children predeceased an annuitant:—Held, nevertheless, that the bequest was vested, and that the gift over did not take effect. Butterworth v. Harvey, 9 Beav. 130; 9 Jur. 999.

e. On Death before Legatee Entitled.

"Entitled" construed "Entitled to a Vested Interest."]—Construction of a gift over upon death before becoming entitled to payment. Williams, In re, 12 Beav. 317; 19 L. J., Ch. 46; 13 Jur. 1110.

Trust of a sum of consols for all and every the children of A. and B., the shares of sons to be paid, assigned or transferred to them at twenty-one, and the shares of daughters at twenty-one or marriage, unless such respective times of payment should happen in the lifetime of A. and B., or the survivor, in which case the same should be paid, assigned and transferred immediately on the death of survivor of A. and B.; and in case any of the same children should happen to die before he or she should become entitled to the payment, assignment or transfer of his or her share, then the share of the party so dying should be paid, &c., to the survivors or survivor who should become entitled to have their, his or her shares or share paid, assigned or transferred to them, him or her, as aforesaid:—Held, that a child who attained twenty-one, but died in the lifetime of A. and B., was entitled to a share, and that the benefit of the trust was not confined to children living at the period of distribution. Ib.

A testator gave the residue of his estate upon trust, to pay the interest to his widow during her life for her separate use, and after her decease to pay the principal to C. for her own use, and to be at her own disposal, but if C. should happen to die leaving any child living at her decease, then to such child or children; and if she should happen to die without any child living at her decease, then to D. and E.; but if either of them should die before they should become entitled to receive the fund, then he gave the whole to the survivor, and if they should both die in the lifetime of his widow, then he gave the whole to his wife absolutely. C., having survived the widow, was entitled to the residue absolutely. Da Costa v. Keir, 3 Russ. 360; 5 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 161; 27 R. R. 93.

Testator, having a power to appoint by deed or will, executed a will, and afterwards a deed, and then a codicil to his will. By his will he appointed four denominations of land to his four sons, giving one denomination to each and his heirs, "to go to them immediately after the death of his wife, and in case of the death of any or either of his said younger sons before he or they should be respectively entitled thereto, then the part or share of him or them, so dying, to go to and be divided amongst the survivors equally, share and share alike." By the deed he partly displaced the appointment contained in his will, and appointed to his third son and his heirs the denomination of land given by his will to his fourth son, leaving the latter without provision; then, by a codicil, he appointed to his fourth son and his heirs another denomination of land "instead of" that given by his will:—Held, that the words "and in case of the death of any or either of his said younger sons," &c., referred to the event of the death, not of the testator, but of his wife. Held, also, that although the appointment by the will would have been subject to the clause of survivorship, the appointment by the codicil was absolute to him and his heirs. Charitable Donations Commissioners v. Cotter, 2 Ir. Eq. R. 196; 2 Dr. & Wal. 615. And the decision was affirmed, S. C., 1 Dr. & War. 498, where, however, it was held, that the period of vesting was the death of testator, not of tenant for life.

Bequest of personal estate to A. for life, and after her death to the testator's brothers and sisters; but if any of the brothers or sisters should die before they became entitled to their shares, the shares of them so dying to go to their children. The testator left five brothers and sisters, two of whom died in the lifetime of A.:—Held, that the word "entitled" had reference to the death of the testator, and not to the death of A., and that the shares had therefore vested absolutely in the brothers and sisters, and that the representatives of each of them who had died were entitled to a fifth of the fund. Henderson v. Kennicot, 2 De G. & Sm. 492; 18 L. J., Ch. 40; 12 Jur. 848.

A testator by his will, dated in 1851, devised all his real estate to trustees upon trust to receive the rents and accumulate them until sufficient to pay his debts, and also to provide for the legacies next given. The testator then gave to J. C. the sum of 200*l.*; to S. W. the sum of 150*l.*; and to J. R. the sum of 19*l.* 19*s.* All of the three last-mentioned legacies the testator directed should be paid by his trustees at the end of seven years next after his decease; and he directed that, in case of the death of J. C. and S. W. respectively before they became entitled to the legacies above mentioned, leaving lawful issue him or her surviving, the legacy of him or her so dying should go and be equally divided between and amongst his or her issue at the end of seven years next after the testator's decease in case such issue should then have attained the age of twenty-one years, but if they should not have attained the age of twenty-one years, then when and as they respectively attained that age. The testator died in September, 1861. J. C. died in February, 1864, within seven years after the testator's death. He left two children and a grandchild. The question arose between them and his executors whether, in the events that had happened, the gift over of his legacy had taken effect:—Held, that the words "become entitled" did not mean "become entitled in possession"; that, therefore, notwithstanding that J. C. died within seven years after the testator's decease, the gift over of his legacy did not take effect; but that he became entitled thereto indefeasibly on the testator's death. Crosland, In re, Craig v. Midgley, 54 L. T. 238.

A gift over, after a tenancy for life, on death "without becoming entitled to the receipt of the trust moneys," construed "without attaining a vested interest." Hayward v. James, 28 Beav. 523; 29 L. J., Ch. 822; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 689; 8 W. R. 676.

A testator gave to trustees shares in his residuary estate for the benefit of his daughters for life, and after their death for their children, to be equally divided, and to be "assigned and paid," the shares of sons at twenty-one, the shares of daughters at twenty-one or marriage; but if either should die before his or her share became "payable," and in case her daughters or either of them should die without issue, or leaving issue, all of them should die without becoming entitled "to the receipt of the trust moneys," then over:—Held, that the shares of children vested at twenty-one or on marriage, and that they took an interest in the fund absolutely, and that the gift over did not take effect. Ib.

Personalty was given to parents for life, with remainder to all their children equally, the shares to be paid at twenty-one or marriage, unless in the lifetime of the parents, in which case payment was to be made on the death of the survivor. There was a gift over on the death of a child before becoming entitled to payment. A child attained twenty-one, but died in the lifetime of her parents:—Held, that the gift over did not take effect. Williams, In re, 12 Beav. 317; 19 L. J., Ch. 46; 13 Jur. 1110.

"Entitled" construed "Entitled in Possession."] — Entitled construed as entitled in possession. Turner v. Gosset, 34 Beav. 593.

Subject to prior life and possible absolute interests, there was a bequest of a portion of the residue to A., with a gift over to his children or other issue, in case of his decease before he should become entitled:—Held, that this meant entitled in possession. Ib.

Devise in fee and bequest of personal estate to A., and in case of his death under twenty-one without leaving issue, to B., codicil affirming the will in all respects, except by directing that A. should not be entitled till twenty-five. A. dying between the ages of twenty-one and twenty-five without issue, B. has no title. Scott v. Chamberlaine, 3 Ves. 302.

By a testamentary appointment a testatrix gave three copyhold houses to E. for life, and after his death she directed the houses to be sold and the proceeds "to be equally divided amongst" her three nephews and niece, "but should either of my said nephews or niece die before they are entitled to the property leaving issue, I give the share of him or her so dying to his or her child or children." All the remaindermen survived the testatrix, but three of them predeceased E., leaving children living at his death:—Held, that "entitled" meant entitled "in possession," and that therefore the shares of the three deceased remaindermen did not pass to their legal personal representatives, but to their children. Charitable Donations Commissioners v. Cotter (1 Dr. & War. 498) distinguished. Noyce, In re, Brown v. Rigg, 55 L. J., Ch. 114; 31 Ch. D. 75; 53 L. T. 688; 34 W. R. 147.

"Entitled in Possession" construed "Entitled to a Vested Interest."]—The will of the testator in this matter contained a bequest of 25,000*l.* to trustees, upon trust to invest the same, and to pay the interest to his daughter for life, and from and after her decease to pay the principal unto and amongst all her children equally, share and share alike, if more than one, and their respective executors, administrators and assigns; and if but one, to that one, his or her executors, administrators and assigns, "on the respective attainments of such children to the age of twenty-one years being sons, or on their respective attainments to that age or days of marriage being daughters," the interest of their respective shares from time to time, until their respectively becoming entitled to the principal, to be applied in their respective maintenance; and in case any of the children of his said daughter should happen to die before being entitled in possession to his, her or their share or shares under the will, the share of the child so dying was to go to the survivors or survivor of them. The daughter had two children only who attained twenty-one, the rest having died under age, and unmarried. One of these two children survived the testator, but died in the lifetime of her mother:—Held, that the gift over did not take effect, but the personal representatives of the deceased child were entitled to her share. Yates's Trusts, In re, 21 L. J., Ch. 281; 16 Jur. 78.

f. On Death before Actual Receipt of Legacy or Distribution of Estate.

"Received" construed Strictly.]—Where a testator directed the trustees of his will to pay a sum of money, and a share of his residue, to a legatee, but in case the legatee should die before the property was "actually paid or payable," then to hold it for other parties:—Held, that on the death of the legatee three months after the testator without any actual payment having been made to him the gift over took effect. Whitman v. Aitken, L. R. 2 Eq. 414; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 350; 14 L. T. 248.

"Payment" construed Strictly.] — Testator gave the residue of the proceeds of the sale of his real and personal estate between all such of his first and second cousins as should be living at the time of the determination of two life interests given by the will. The testator by a codicil directed that if any or either of his first or second cousins should die before the payment of any sum or share thereby, or by his will, directed to be paid to him or her, such sum or share should be equally divided amongst certain persons:—Held, that the gift over was meant to take effect in the event of death before the time of payment, i.e. the determination of the life interests. Wilks v. Bannister, 54 L. J., Ch. 1139; 30 Ch. D. 512; 53 L. T. 247; 33 W. R. 922.

Where Direction to Sell and Devise.]—Devise to the testator's wife for life, and as soon after her decease or refusal to release dower as conveniently might be, upon trust to sell and divide the produce between five nephews, at such time as the sale should be completed, if then living; if any should die in her life, or before the sale should be completed, his share to his children, if none, to the survivors; the interests not vested till the sale. Elwin v. Elwin, 8 Ves. 547; 7 R. R. 117.

—— To Pay Debts.]—Devise upon trust, by mortgage, or out of the rents and profits, to pay debts, and afterwards to raise portions for the testator's daughters, "such portions to become due and be considered as vested at the expiration of two years next after my decease, if my debts shall then be paid." This is a condition precedent to the portions becoming vested; and one of the daughters having died while her portion remained unpaid, upon a question between her representative and the persons who would be entitled in the event of the portion not having become vested in her lifetime, an inquiry was directed as to the time when the debts were, or might have been paid. Bernard v. Mountague, 1 Mer. 422. See 11 Ves. 508.

"Received" construed "de jure Receivable."]—Legacy out of a fund in the Indies given over in case of death of legatee before he might have received it, vested from death of testator. Hutcheon v. Mannington, 1 Ves. 366; 2 R. R. 115.

Where there was a gift over in the event of a legatee dying "before receiving his legacy," and a legatee died after the period contemplated for payment had arrived, but without receiving the legacy, by reason of a suit having been instituted, and the money paid into court:—Held, that the gift over did not take effect. Whiting v. Force, 2 Beav. 571; 9 L. J., Ch. 345.

A testator bequeathed personal estate in trust to pay the proceeds to his widow for life, and after her death to divide the capital between his brothers A. and B. and his sisters C. and D. He declared, that in case any of them should die in his lifetime, and before they should have received any benefit from the bequest, then the share of him or her so dying should be divided among his or her respective children. A. survived the testator, and died in the lifetime of the tenant for life, having bequeathed his share:—Held, that "and" could not be read "or," and that on the death of the testator the share of A. was absolutely vested in him, and transmissible by his will. Kirkbride, In re, L. R. 2 Eq. 400; 15 L. T. 51; 14 W. R. 728.

A residuary bequest upon the whole will vests only as the property is received:—Held, therefore, that the representatives of a deceased residuary legatee are entitled only to that part which was got in before his death. Gaskell v. Harman, 6 Ves. 159; 8 R. R. 224. From this decree, plaintiff appealed, when the Lord Chancellor reversed that part of it which declares that the residuary property vested only as it was converted into money, his lordship holding that such an intention, though, if clearly expressed, it must, notwithstanding its inconvenience, be executed, was not the true construction of the whole will, and it is not to be collected unless clearly expressed. S. C., 11 Ves. 489; 8 R. R. 224. And see Innes v. Mitchell, 6 Ves. 461; 5 R. R. 360.

Testator gave personal estate, outstanding on securities, to his wife for life, remainder in a moiety to six of his children, provided that, if any one died before receiving his or her share without leaving lawful issue, it should go over. One of the children died after the wife's death, before the securities were realised and the produce divided:—Held, that the proviso contemplated the time when the children should be entitled to receive their shares, not the time of actual payment; and that the representatives of the deceased child took a share. Dodgson's Trust, In re, 1 Drew. 440.

Frederick Hobson the elder, by his will, gave to three trustees (one of whom was his eldest son William) all his real and personal property, which included the proprietorship of a newspaper, on trust, to carry on the newspaper during the life of his wife, and they were annually to set apart and invest one-fourth of the profit of the paper as a reserve fund to meet emergencies, and to divide the remaining three-fourth parts of the profits of the same, and the income from his real and personal estate, into six equal parts for his wife and five children (all specially named), and in case of the death of any such child during the life of the wife, to pay the share of that child to the lawful issue of that child, or if none such, equally among the survivors of his children, and, after the decease ("or during her life if she and the majority of my children, and my trustees, shall deem it proper and expedient so to do), at the sole discretion of my trustees," to sell the real and personal estate and the newspaper, and divide the proceeds among the wife and children, bringing in the amount of the reserve fund as part; the shares to be for their absolute use and benefit immediately after such division. He declared that, "in case, under the above clause, it shall be agreed, or my trustees shall decide, to sell" the paper, and if any of his sons should wish to carry on the same, such one should be entitled to purchase it at 500*l.* less than the market price. Till all the property was sold the trustees were to apply the income of the part unsold in the manner before expressed as to the income of the real and personal estate. The will also contained a provision that "in case any of my children shall survive my wife and die before he or she shall have received his or her share of my trust estate and without leaving lawful issue," then that such share should go over:—Held, that these words imposed on the trustees an absolute trust for sale, not merely a power of sale, and that the discretion given to them referred only to the time and manner of selling to the best advantage. Minors v. Battison, 46 L. J., Ch. 2; 1 App. Cas. 428; 35 L. T. 1; 25 W. R. 27—H. L. (E.)

Held, also, that the word "received" in the divesting clause must be taken to mean "became de jure receivable," and that the shares vested indefeasibly immediately on the death of the widow, and (there being but three children of the testator then surviving) that William Hobson took an absolute vested interest in an equal third part of the testator's real and personal estate, including the newspaper. Ib.

A testator gave to his wife the rents and interest of all property for her life, but still giving her liberty to sell and dispose of the whole or any part of the property if she should think proper so to do; and he directed that all his property remaining at her death should be divided into two equal parts, one moiety among six persons and the other moiety among three, but that if any of the nine legatees should die before receiving their share, having no child, such legatee's share should be equally divided between the other legatees:—Held, that the widow took only a life interest in the property. Rose v. Rowe, 21 L. T. 349; 17 W. R. 1077.

Held, also, that none of the legatees to whom one moiety of the property was bequeathed were entitled to share in the other moiety. Ib.

The testator gave all his real and personal estate to trustees, upon trust to sell and invest, and set apart a sufficient sum to produce an annuity to his widow for her life, and that the trustees during the life of his wife should stand possessed of the residue of the moiety arising from such sales, and after the decease of his wife of the whole of such moneys, upon trust to pay and divide the same unto and equally between and amongst all and every his children as and when they should respectively attain the age of twenty-one years, and to their several and respective executors, administrators and assigns; but in regard to such of his children as had already attained the age of twenty-one years, he directed that the share or shares of such children should be paid to them respectively at the expiration of twelve months after the decease of his wife; but in the event of the decease of any or either of his said children before he, she or they should have received or become possessed of their shares, leaving issue, that the share of the child so dying should go to the children of such child on their attaining twenty-one; and on failure of issue of any of his (the testator's) sons or daughters, then the share of such his sons or daughters should go to such of his (the testator's) children as should be then living:—Held, that the children of the testator who had attained twenty-one at the date of the will took vested interests in their shares, liable to be divested in the event of their dying before the widow, but that they were entitled to receive the interest of their shares in the meantime, and that the children who had attained twenty-one since the date of the will were entitled to an immediate transfer of their shares, except as to the fund appropriated to the widow's annuity. Rammell v. Gillow, 15 L. J., Ch. 35; 9 Jur. 704.

—— Whether Gift over Good.]—A testator bequeathed to his executors the residue of his ready money, and money at interest that should be due and owing to him at his decease, upon trust, to receive and get in all his said moneys, and after paying certain legacies, to divide the remainder unto and between all his nephews and nieces who should be then living; and in case of the death of any of his nephews and nieces before receiving their respective shares, then the share of him or her so dying to go to the survivors. The testator, by a codicil which he directed should be annexed to and form part of his will, bequeathed to his wife all his real and personal estate and effects, of what nature or kind soever, which he should be possessed of at his decease, to hold and enjoy the same during her life:—Held, that the gift of the testator's nephews and nieces was a specific bequest, and no life interest in that fund was given to the widow; that the legacies vested in the nephews and nieces at the decease of the testator, subject to be divested upon the death of any of them before the expiration of twelve months, the usual period allowed for payment of legacies; and that the daughter of a niece who died within a year was not entitled to her mother's share. Arrowsmith's Trusts, In re, 29 L. J., Ch. 774; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 1231; 8 W. R. 555. And see S. C. on appeal, 2 De G. F. & J. 474; 30 L. J., Ch. 148; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 9; 9 W. R. 258.

A testator gave his real estate and the residue of his personal estate to trustees, upon trust with all convenient speed after his death to sell and convert the same, and to hold the proceeds on trust to pay his debts and funeral and testamentary expenses, and subject thereto, and to the payment of an annuity, to divide the residue of the trust moneys into six equal parts, among two nephews and four nieces of the testator named in the will. He directed that the shares of the nephews should be paid to them as soon after his death as possible. He directed that the trustees should invest the shares of the nieces and pay the income thereof to them for their separate use. He directed that, in case any of his nephews should die before him, or before the division of his estate as before directed, his share should go over; and there was a similar direction with regard to the share of any of the nieces who should die before him, or before the division of his estate as before directed:—Held, that the "division" of the testator's estate meant the expiration of twelve months from his death, and that the share of one of the nieces, who survived him but died within that period, went over. Collison, In re, Collison v. Barber, 48 L. J., Ch. 720; 12 Ch. D. 834; 28 W. R. 391.

Bequest of share of residue to K. and G., "but in case K. shall die before he shall actually have received the whole of his share and without leaving issue living at his decease, then and in such case, and whether the same shall have become due and payable or not, such part or parts as he shall not have actually received to be paid to G." K. died unmarried, without having received any share of the residue:—Held, that the gift over was not void for uncertainty, but took effect. Johnson v. Crook, 48 L. J., Ch. 777; 12 Ch. D. 639; 41 L. T. 400; 28 W. R. 12.

Where a legacy is absolutely vested it cannot be divested by a subsequent gift over in the event of the legatee dying before he has received the legacy. Bubb v. Padwick, 49 L. J., Ch. 178; 13 Ch. D. 517; 42 L. T. 116; 28 W. R. 382.

A testator gave his residuary estate in trust for all his children who should attain the age of twenty-one years as tenants in common, but so that they should not be entitled to receive their respective shares until the youngest child attained the age of twenty-one years, unless the trustees of the will should in their discretion consider it proper that the shares, or any of them, should be paid; and the testator directed that in case any child should die before the youngest attained the age of twenty-one years and without having actually received his share, then that share should go over to the other children:—Held, that each child on attaining the age of twenty-one years acquired an indefeasibly vested interest in his share. Arrowsmith's Trusts, In re (supra), observed upon, and Johnson v. Crook (supra) not followed. Ib.

Bequest of proceeds of real and personal estate (directed to be converted with power of postponement) on trust for the testator's three sons and daughter equally, the daughter's share to be retained for her separate use for life, and after her decease for her children, with a direction in the event of any child of the testator dying before the testator, or before the execution of all or any of the trusts of the will, leaving issue, to pay to the issue of such deceased child the share which their parent would have taken if living. The three sons having survived the testator, were held to be absolutely entitled, the gift over on death before execution of the trusts being void for uncertainty. Johnson v. Crook (supra) disapproved. Roberts v. Youle, 49 L. J., Ch. 744.

A testator gave each of four persons a fourth of the proceeds of his residue, and in case of the death of any legatee before the "final division" of his estate he gave that legatee's share over. One legatee died more than a year after the testator, but before the estate had been distributed:—Held, that his personal representatives were entitled to his fourth share. Johnson v. Crook (supra) approved. Wilkins, In re, Spencer v. Duckworth, 50 L. J., Ch. 774; 18 Ch. D. 634; 45 L. T. 244; 29 W. R. 911.

A gift over of a legacy, in case the legatee should die before the actual receipt of it, is bad in law, if the bequest is immediate. Martin v. Martin, 35 L. J., Ch. 281; L. R. 1 Eq. 369; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 889; 14 L. T. 129; 14 W. R. 421.

A testator gave a mixed fund, to be equally divided between his nephews and nieces; and he directed that the property which he left to his nephews and nieces should on their decease severally be divided equally between such of their children as might survive them, and if either or any of his nephews and nieces died before him, or before they should have actually received what was to go to them, their share should be divided equally between their children, and, in default of children, between his nephews and nieces:—Held, that the nephews and nieces who survived the testator took absolute interests. S. C., 35 L. J., Ch. 679; L. R. 2 Eq. 404; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 889; 15 L. T. 99; 14 W. R. 986.

A testator, in case of the death of any of his children without leaving issue, before payment of any part of reversionary legacies, directed such parts to be divided among the others and other of them, and in case of the death of a child leaving issue before such payment, he directed such parts to be divided among the children of such child :—Held, first, that "payment" referred to the time when the shares given over became payable, and the gift was not void for uncertainty; secondly, that "others" meant children other than those who had died without leaving issue; thirdly, that the gift over applied to accrued as well as original shares. Arrowsmith's Trusts, In re (supra), approved and followed. Hutcheon v. Mannington (1 Ves. Sen. 366) and Martin v. Martin (supra) distinguished. Bubb v. Padwick (supra) disapproved. Johnson v. Crook (supra) approved. Chaston, In re, Chaston v. Seago, 50 L. J., Ch. 716; 18 Ch. D. 218; 45 L. T. 20; 29 W. R. 778.

10. Acceleration of Interests.

Where Prior Interest revoked—Realty.]—The words "from and immediately after his decease," following a limitation for life, in general point out the order of limitation merely. Lainson v. Lainson, Lainson v. Ede, 3 Eq. R. 43; 5 De G. M. & G. 754; 24 L. J., Ch. 46; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 49; 3 W. R. 31. And see Carrick v. Errington, 2 P. Wms. 361.

Where, therefore, a testator revoked a limitation for life, which was followed by those words, introducing subsequent limitations :—Held, that the remainders were accelerated. Ib.

—— Personalty.]—The same rules as to acceleration which relate to real estate do not apply to personalty. However, under a gift by will of money out of which there was to be set apart as much as would produce an annuity of a certain amount to be paid to A. for life, with a gift over after A.'s death of the sum set apart, and a revocation by codicil of the annuity given to A. :—Held, that the interest of the persons entitled under the gift over was accelerated and took effect at once without waiting for the death of A. Eavestaff v. Austin, 19 Beav. 591.

Where Prior Devise void—Excess of Power.]—Lands were settled to the use of a man for life, remainder in fee to such one or more of his children as he should by deed or will appoint, and in default of appointment to the children equally. The father by his will devised the lands to his wife for her life, upon condition that she should thereout maintain and educate his children in such manner as his executors should think proper; and that, at the end of every year, whatever sum should be in her hands, after defraying all necessary expenses, should be accumulated in order to form a fund for payment of the legacies thereinafter given by him; and he gave to each of his younger children 500*l.*, and devised the lands to his eldest son in tail, with a direction that if at the death of his wife there should be accumulated a sufficient fund for the payment of the legacies, those lands, together with certain other lands not the subject of the power, should stand charged with the deficiency :—Held, that the devise to the eldest son was not invalidated by the previous devise to the wife, although the devise to the wife was void, as an excess of the power. Crozier v. Crozier, 5 Ir. Eq. R. 540; 3 Dr. & War. 353.

—— Under Wills Act.]—Gift to the testator's daughter of real and personal estate "during her lifetime, and after her decease the property to be equally divided between her children on their becoming of age" :—Held, that, as regarded the real estate, the gift to the children was strictly a remainder, and that the construction as to the personalty followed the same rule as the realty; and, therefore, that, the gift to the daughter being void on account of her having attested the will, the gift to the children was accelerated, and took effect immediately. Jull v. Jacobs, 3 Ch. D. 703; 35 L. T. 153; 24 W. R. 947.

Held, also, that the remainder to the daughter's children created vested interests. Ib.

A testator devised and bequeathed all his real and personal estate to his wife for life, and after her death to be equally divided between such of his children as should be living at her death; and in case of any of the above-mentioned children dying before his wife leaving children, such children were to take their parent's share. And in the event of any of his daughters being married at his wife's decease, it was his will that such proportion as they might be entitled to should be left to them and their children exclusively, and should in no way be controlled by their husbands. At the death of the testator's widow one of his daughters was living who had several children. Her husband was an attesting witness to the will, and consequently the gift to her was void under s. 15 of the Wills Act :—Held, that the daughter's children were not to be disappointed by her disability, but took an immediate interest in her share as tenants in common. Clark, In re, Clark v. Randall, 55 L. J., Ch. 89; 31 Ch. D. 72; 53 L. T. 591; 34 W. R. 70.

Gift by will of real and personal estate upon trust to convert and pay the income of the proceeds to A. for life, and after A.'s death to pay the capital and income thereof unto the child or children of A. in equal shares, with gifts over in case A. should die without leaving issue living at his death. The will had been attested by A.'s wife, so that the gift of a life's interest to him was void under s. 15 of the Wills Act. There were no children of A.'s marriage. The personal estate was exhausted, and the trust funds represented real estate only :—Held, that until A. had a child the gifts upon the determination of A.'s life estate could not be accelerated, and that during the life of A. and so long as he had no children, the income of the trust funds was undisposed of, and belonged to the heir-at-law, and could not be accumulated for the benefit of the persons contingently entitled in remainder. Jull v. Jacobs (supra) distinguished. Hodgson v. Beetive (Earl) (post, col. 1767) and Dumble, In re (post, col. 1771) explained. Townsend, In re, Townsend v. Townsend, 56 L. J., Ch. 227; 34 Ch. D. 357; 55 L. T. 674; 35 W. R. 153.

By Forfeiture.]—A testator appointed, under a general power, real estate, and devised other real estate to his wife and her assigns during her life, and after her death to his son, with a proviso, that if his wife should "do, make or execute any deed, matter or thing whereby she should be deprived of the rents and profits, or the power or right to receive, or the control over the same, so that her receipt alone should be a sufficient discharge for the same, her life estate should cease and determine as fully and effectually as it would by her actual decease." By a codicil he gave his personal estate to his wife for life for her separate use, independently of any future husband. The wife married again without making any settlement:—Held, that notwithstanding the limitation to her and "her assigns," and the allusion to a future husband in the codicil, the wife's life estate was forfeited by her second marriage; and that the remainder both in the appointed and devised estates was accelerated. Craven v. Brady, 38 L. J., Ch. 345; L. R. 4 Ch. 296; 16 W. R. 505.

—— Under Condition.]—A will directed a settlement to be made of the G. estate, which contained a shifting clause, providing, that if any person taking the G. estate should not re-settle the De Ligne estate (acquired through another title) to like uses, the G. estate should go to such uses as if the limitation in his favour had not been inserted. It also directed the insertion of a name and arms shifting clause in a very different form. A., a tenant for life with remainder to his children, refused to re-settle the De Ligne estate, and he had no issue:—Held, thereupon, the next remainderman was entitled to the rents of the G. estate until A. died or had issue. D'Eyncourt v. Gregory, 34 Beav. 36.

A devise expressly conditional upon particular contingencies in defeasance of a preceding absolute devise will not take effect by acceleration when the prior estate is avoided by an event which is in no way comprised within the conditions specified. M'Carthy v. M'Carthy, 1 L. R., Ir. 189.

By Implication.]—On construction of a will the enjoyment of bequests, given in terms indicating a future period, accelerated by implication. Parrott v. Worsfold, 1 J. & W. 594.

Executory Devise—Interim resulting Trust for Heir—Death of Devisee.]—Devise when the devisee attains twenty-one, a resulting trust for the heir until that period, and, by the previous death of the devisee, the remainder accelerated. Chambers v. Brailsford, 19 Ves. 652; 11 R. R. 214—C. A.

Right to Rent already accrued.]—There is no case in which the contingent estate of a remainderman has been accelerated for the purpose of giving him a right to rent accrued prior to the time when his estate took effect. Sidney v. Wilmer, 25 Beav. 260.

i. WHAT MAY BE DEVISED OR BEQUEATHED.

1. Contingent and Executory Interests.

Possibility.] — Contingent and executory estates, and possibilities accompanied with an interest, are devisable. Moor v. Hawkins, 2 Eden, 342.

A possibility is devisable. Perry v. Phelips, 1 Ves. 254, 255.

Executory Interest under Shifting Clause.]—A contingent estate in fee under a shifting clause may be devised both by the old and new law. Ingilby v. Amcotts, 21 Beav. 585; 25 L. J., Ch. 769; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 410, 556; 4 W. R. 433.

Devise of estate X. to A. in fee, with an executory shifting limitation to B. and her heirs, in the event of A. becoming entitled to another estate, Y. B. died first, and her estate descended on C., her heir, who by his will in 1851 made a general devise of his real estate. Some months after his death, the event took place on which the X. estate was to shift from A. to B.:—Held, that the estate X. passed by C.'s will, and did not descend either to the heir of B. or of C. Ib.

Contingent Interest in Personalty.]—A. devises a term for years to B. for life, remainder to C.; C. in the life of B., devises his remainder. This is good, and amounts to C.'s declaring by his will that his executor shall stand possessed of the term in trust for the devisee. Wind v. Jekyl, 1 P. Wms. 572.

—— Where Prior Interest lapsed.]—Bequest of a contingent interest in personalty void, where the preceding gift never vested, owing to a lapse. Miller v. Faure, 1 Ves. Sen. 85.

Contingent Interest of Testator's Widow under Partnership Deed.]—Under a proviso in a partnership deed that in the event of the death of one partner a certain proportion of the subsequent profits should be payable to his "widow or family," such profits were held to form part of his residuary estate, subject to the trusts of his will. Tibbs, In re, 17 W. R. 304.

A tradesman bequeathed his residuary estate, including his stock-in-trade, to trustees, with a direction to convert into money all such parts as should consist of leaseholds or money in the funds, and to invest the same and pay the annual income to Sarah his wife; and after her decease to Mary his wife's sister; and after the decease of the survivor of Sarah and Mary, he gave his residuary estate to another person absolutely. After the date of will Mary married, and her husband and the testator entered into partnership, under articles, which contained a proviso, that if the testator should die during the partnership, leaving a widow surviving, such widow might, if she should think fit, continue to carry on the partnership business with the surviving partner, and should be entitled to the testator's share in the profits and excess of capital; and if the testator should leave no widow, or his widow should not desire to enter into the business, or if the other partner should die during the partnership, the surviving partner to take upon himself the partnership business and property, accounting and paying for the same as therein directed. The testator died, leaving his widow, who under this provision claimed his interest in the partnership:—Held, that the provision in the articles took the testator's share of the business wholly out of the provisions of the will, and that the widow became entitled, under the partnership articles, to such share. Page v. Cox, 10 Hare, 163.

2. Equitable Interests.

Equitable Lien.]—Any equitable interest is devisable. Perry v. Phelips, 1 Ves. 254.

Testator cannot by any words devise lands, either under the statute or at common law, which he had not at the time of making the will. Ib.

An equitable lien is an equitable obligation to do according to conscience; and a devise of it good in equity. Id. 255.

Equity of Redemption—Devise by Tenant in Tail.]—A tenant in tail of an equity of redemption may devise it for the payment of debts. Turner v. Gwinn, 1 Vern. 41.

Personalty subject to Covenant to Settle.]—A covenant to settle on particular persons all the covenantor's personal estate, subject, nevertheless, to any disposition or changes he might make by will:—Held, only to amount to a provision in case of intestacy, and not preventing the party from disposing of the property by will to other persons. Stocken v. Stocken, 4 Myl. & Cr. 95; 7 L. J., Ch. 305; 2 Jur. 693. And see S. C., 2 Myl. & K. 489; 4 Sim. (N.S.) 152.

3. Rights of Action.

Right to Sue.]—A right to sue is a devisable interest. Gresley v. Mousley, 28 L. J., Ch. 620; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 583; 7 W. R. 427—L.JJ.

Property, which has been made the subject of a voidable conveyance, is capable of being devised, and the devisee is entitled to sue for the purpose of setting aside such conveyance. Ib.

A person, who has sold an estate under circumstances which entitle him in equity to have the sale set aside, has in the estate an interest of such a nature as to be devisable even by a will made before the passing of the 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26. S. C., 4 De G. & J. 78; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 583.

Right to Set Aside Deed.]—A right to set aside a release may be devised. Drew v. Merry, 1 Eq. Abr. 175.

The right to set aside a conveyance improperly obtained by a solicitor from his client, is devisable. Uppington v. Bullen, 2 Dr. & War. 184; 1 Con. & L. 291.

4. Devise by Purchaser after Contract to Purchase.

Where Contract not Completed — General Devise.]—A. articles to purchase lands in trust for B., and before any conveyance made by B., by will directed all his freehold estate to be settled on C., and his first son, &c. The lands articled for will pass by the will. Greenhill v. Greenhill, 2 Vern. 679; Pre. Ch. 320; Gilb. Eq. R. 77.

Estate contracted for will pass by a subsequent devise of all lands, the devisor being equitable owner under the contract. Capel v. Girdler, 9 Ves. 510; 7 R. R. 289.

If A. articles to purchase lands, but before the conveyance devises all his land to be sold to pay debts and legacies, the lands will pass, though he was not seised at the making of his will, neither did he republish it. So, if A. devises all his lands for payment of his debts, and then purchases land, equity will decree a sale of that land, though there were no precedent articles. Prideaux v. Gibbon, 2 Ch. Cas. 144.

From the execution of the contract, the estate is in equity the property of the vendee, will descend, and is devisable as such. Seton v. Slade, 7 Ves. 274; 6 R. R. 124.

By general devise, an estate in which devisor has acquired an equitable title passes. Broome v. Monck, 10 Ves. 605; 8 R. R. 48.

Contract for purchase generally; by a devise of real estate before the purchase is complete, the money will pass. Id. 613.

Devisee claiming benefit of contract for purchase of estate, directed to go to uses of will, the title proving defective, has no claim upon personal estate, either to have purchase-money or another estate purchased, or the purchase completed notwithstanding defects. Id. 597.

Estate contracted for after general devise will pass by republication, and must be paid out of personal estate. Id. 605.

Testator contracts for a particular estate, but dies before the purchase is completed; afterwards, from the state of his affairs, the contract is dissolved, yet the purchase-money shall not be sunk into his personal estate, but shall be laid out in other lands to the same uses as he had devised the land contracted for. Whitaker v. Whitaker, 4 Bro. C. C. 31.

—— General Words—"At A. or Elsewhere."]—Lands agreed to be purchased pass by general words in a will, such as "or elsewhere." Republication by a codicil. Potter v. Potter, 1 Ves. Sen. 437; 3 Atk. 719; Ambl. 98, upon other points.

—— "Of which I may be Possessed."]—Bequest of "the whole of my property of whatever description, freehold, leasehold, &c., of which I may be possessed at death":—Held, to pass real estate, agreed to be purchased by testator. Holmes v. Baker, 2 Madd. 462.

—— Devise of particular Estate Contracted for.]—A vendor and a purchaser being in treaty for the sale and purchase of an estate, the vendor wrote to his solicitor, stating that the purchaser had agreed to purchase his estate for 60,000*l.*, and requested him to settle an agreement on that basis for him to sign, adding that he had given to the purchaser a copy of this letter, not signed, as a memorandum. The purchaser subsequently wrote to the vendor's solicitor, inquiring when he would forward to him the draft of the agreement relative to the purchase he had concluded with the vendor for his estate in that county. Prior to the execution of the conveyances the purchaser made his will, by which he devised the subject-matter of the treaty to trustees upon certain trusts:—Held, that, at the date of his will, the purchaser had a devisable interest in the estate. Morgan v. Holford, 1 Sm. & G. 101; 17 Jur. 225; 1 W. R. 101.

—— Charge or Lien for unpaid Purchase-Money.]—A building agreement provided that when the lessee of certain land had built and taken leases on a sufficient number of houses thereon to secure by the ground rents a total annual rent of a fixed amount, the lessor would either convey to the lessee in fee-simple the surplus land not included in any lease, or, at the option of the lessor, would purchase the ground rents to be created out of such surplus land at an agreed price. The lessee built and obtained leases of houses sufficient to secure the total annual rent, and subsequently built houses upon the surplus land. The lessor elected to purchase the ground rents of these latter houses, but died before the "completion" of the purchase, having specifically devised the land which was the subject of the agreement, but without having made any disposition of residuary real and personal estate. The executors completed the purchase and paid the money:—Held, that the purchase-money of the ground rents was a charge or lien upon the land in question within Locke King's Act. Kidd, In re, Brooman v. Withall, 63 L. J., Ch.

855 ; [1894] 3 Ch. 558 ; 13 R. 101 ; 71 L. T. 481 ; 43 W. R. 51.

—— Copyholds.]—If A. buys copyhold lands, and dies before admittance, having first devised all his copyholds to T. S., the copyhold lands contracted for will pass by the will ; or in any case, if there are articles for a purchase, and the purchaser makes his will and dies before conveyance, the lands shall pass in equity. Davie v. Beardsham, 1 Ch. Ca. 39.

Where Will Insufficient to pass Real Estate.]—A., having agreed to purchase a real estate, the purchase-money for which exceeded the amount of his personal estate, by his will, made a few days afterwards, attested by three witnesses, as to all the worldly goods that it had pleased God to bless him with, gave and bequeathed to his wife and two sons all his goods, cattle, chattels, personal estate, and effects whatsoever ; and in case they died without issue, &c., he gave the children's share of the personal estate and effects over ; testator dying before the purchase could be completed :—Held, that the agreement ought to be specifically performed, and that, the words of the will being insufficient to comprehend real estate, the estate ought to be conveyed to the eldest son and his heirs, &c. Cane v. Cane, 2 Eden, 139.

Where no Binding Contract.]—Decree, upon the answer admitting a contract and a letter offering to sell at a valuation, for a conveyance on payment of the purchase-money into the bank by the plaintiff on a certain day, in default of payment the bill to be dismissed with costs. No binding contract until payment : the estate, therefore, did not pass by a previous devise, but descended to the heir. Gascarth v. Lowther, 12 Ves. 107 ; 8 R. R. 310.

Where Contract made after Will.]—One articles to buy certain lands ; he thereby becomes seised thereof in equity. But where A. devised all his real and personal estate, and afterwards articled to purchase lands, and then died, the heir-at-law was held to be entitled to this estate, as not passing by the will : secus, had the articles for the purchase been before the will ; for then the estate would have passed. Langford v. Pitt, 2 P. Wms. 629.

Effect of subsequent Conveyance as Revocation.]—See sub REVOCATION, ante, col. 434.

5. DEVISE BY VENDOR AFTER CONTRACT TO SELL.

Estate Contracted Passing under Devise of Trust Estates.]—In 1874 the plaintiff entered into a contract for the purchase of real estate. After the title had been accepted, and before completion, the vendor died, having by his will (dated in 1873) given his personal estate to E., whom he appointed executor, and devised all his real estate to H. and M. upon trust for sale, and having also devised to H. alone all the real estate which at his death might be vested in him as trustee :—Held, that the real estate contracted to be purchased by the plaintiff passed to H. under the devise of trust estates. Lysaght v. Edwards, 45 L. J., Ch. 554 ; 2 Ch. D. 499 ; 34 L. T. 787 ; 24 W. R. 778.

k. BEQUESTS AND DEVISES.

1. WORDS OF.

a. What Property will Pass by Particular Words and Descriptions.

i. Particular Words.

"All" with Qualifying Words.]—Bank notes pass as cash by bequest of "all that should be in his house at testator's death." Popham v. Aylesbury (Lady), Ambl. 68.

A will in these words, "I give all in S. to R.," does not pass a bond which happened to be at testator's house in S. Moore v. Moore, 1 Bro. C. C. 127.

Bequest of "all my property in A., except" a particular chose in action, described in the will, other choses in action of testator found in A. do not pass, notwithstanding the exception. Fleming v. Brook, 1 Sch. & Lef. 318 ; 9 R. R. 35.

A testator, by his will, said : "I give to my wife all my household furniture, plate," &c., "and other effects of the like nature, and all wines," &c., "which shall, at my decease, be in or about my dwelling-house, then occupied by me" :—Held, that in construing the bequest the sentence ought to be divided into two, and that the qualification as to his dwelling-house applied only to the latter part, and therefore that it passed plate at the testator's bankers, family plate in the possession of the testator's father as tenant for life, and to which the testator was entitled absolutely in remainder, and also the produce of family plate wrongfully sold by the tenant for life, and furniture, &c., deposited for safe custody at a warehouse. Domvile or Domville v. Taylor, 32 Beav. 604 ; 2 N. R. 258 ; 8 L. T. 624 ; 11 W. R. 796.

Where the testatrix bequeathed to her niece all her pictures and coins (excepting those of the two last reigns), in and about her dwelling-house, and all the residue of her estate, real and personal (except as afterwards given), to grandchildren, and directed that, from and after the day of her interment, all the property over which she had any disposing power in and about her dwelling-house should belong to her niece (except what she had otherwise given) ; hoards of money, in guineas, sovereigns, notes of the Bank of England, promissory and country notes, and a mortgage security, were afterwards found in the house :—Held, that the niece was entitled to the money and bank notes, but not to the country bank promissory notes, or mortgage. Brooke v. Turner, 7 Sim. 671 ; 5 L. J., Ch. 175.

R. by will, after appointing executors and directing his debts and funeral expenses to be paid, gave his wife "all my property leasehold and freehold which I now possess" :—Held, that all the testator's real and personal estate passed under the gift to his widow, and not only his leaseholds and freeholds. Roberts, In re, Kiff v. Roberts, 55 L. T. 498 ; 35 W. R. 176—C. A. Affirming 55 L. J., Ch. 628. See Portal and Lamb, In re, post, col. 1524.

"And so Forth."]—S. bequeathed as follows : "Whereas I am seised of a life estate in K. house and demesne, which passes after my death to W. S., I will and bequeath to him the house, furniture, books, plate, and so forth, as left by my late aunt, C. S. ; also the sheep, milch cows, together with the hay and corn on the premises," reserving certain pictures :—Held, that the bequest was confined to everything at K. of a permanent nature, such as furniture, books, and plate, whether left by C. S. or acquired by himself; and did not include articles necessarily liable to be parted with or consumed, or any property on the farm acquired by himself, except the sheep, &c., expressly mentioned. Sealy v. Stawell, Ir. R. 2 Eq. 326.

Appurtenances.]—By a devise of a house cum pertinentiis, only the garden and orchard will pass with it; but by a devise of a house with the land appertaining thereto, the land usually occupied therewith will pass. One devised that his cousin A. should continue to live at his house, and be at the charge of keeping the house and the servants, and coach-horses which the testator employed in ploughing the ground, and spend the corn arising therefrom in the house; here the land enjoyed with the house shall pass to the cousin A. Blackborn v. Edgley, 1 P. Wms. 603.

A testator devised and bequeathed his indigo factory in India, "with the zemindaries, villages, and lands therewith held and used, and the appurtenances," to A. for life, with remainder over. At his death, the "outstandings" of the factory business comprised loans secured by bonds of native landowners to obtain leases of lands for the cultivation of indigo, and advances made to sub-lessees to secure the supply of indigo to the factory. These loans and advances were always considered part of the concern, which, in fact, could not have been carried on but for such arrangements:—Held, that the outstandings did not pass under the specific devise of the factory, either as appurtenances or otherwise. Finch v. Finch, 35 L. T. 235.

The word "appurtenances" does not properly, either in a deed or a will, include land where the principal subject of gift is land or a messuage. But in a will, if the circumstances and context shew that land was meant to pass as appurtenant, the word is flexible enough to carry such land. In ascertaining such intent as between a cestui que trust under a devise in trust and the heir, it is material that the whole land, including that claimed as appurtenant, is comprised in the devise to the trustee. It is also material that the cestui que trust's interest is subjected by the will to charges of a particular amount. Cuthbert v. Robinson, 51 L. J., Ch. 238; 46 L. T. 57; 30 W. R. 366.

Devise since 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26, s. 24, of "all that messuage or dwelling-house wherein my son now resides, with the stables and appurtenances thereto belonging, and therewith occupied." The testator subsequently converted a piece of land into garden-ground, and attached it to the house, and the garden continued to be occupied with the house up to his death:—Held, that the garden passed under the devise. Otley and Ilkley Ry., In re, 34 Beav. 525; 6 N. R. 244; 34 L. J., Ch. 596; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 818; 12 L. T. 659; 13 W. R. 851.

A devise of lands situate, lying, and being within the parish of G., "with the appurtenances," does not pass lands, thirty-three and a half acres, in the parish of A., which had been allotted in respect of land in both parishes, and which had always been let and occupied together. Lister v. Pickford, 34 Beav. 576; 6 N. R. 243; 34 L. J., Ch. 582; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 649; 12 L. T. 587; 13 W. R. 827.

Land cannot be appurtenant to land, and a devise of "land at G., with its appurtenances," will not operate to pass land at B., although it has always been dealt with and leased as part of the land at G. Ib.

A testator, possessing a farm in the parish of G., and a small piece of land in the adjoining parish of A., which had always been occupied and let at an entire rent with the farm in G., devised all his lands and hereditaments, "situate, lying, and being within the parish of G., with the appurtenances," to G. for life, with remainder to the child or children of G. in tail, and he empowered P. and J., the trustees of his will, during the minority of a tenant in tail entitled in possession, to take possession of the property on behalf of the minor, and to grant leases; and he devised the residue of his real estate to P. and J. during the life of M., in trust for M., with remainders over. The testator died in 1842, and thereupon G. took possession of the lands in G. and A. In 1850, G. died, leaving an only daughter, an infant, and P. and J. took possession of the land in G. and A., and in 1861 they granted a lease of the whole farm in pursuance of the power. In 1863, the daughter of G. came of age and took possession of the whole farm. In 1864, M. filed a bill to establish his right to the land in A.:—Held, that the land in A. did not pass by the specific devise, but formed part of the residuary estate, and that M.'s right was not barred by the Statute of Limitations, inasmuch as the possession of P. and J. from 1850 to 1863 must be attributed to their character of devisees in trust of the residuary estate, and was therefore not adverse to that of M. Ib.

C. occupied a house at B., and stables in the neighbourhood held under a different title. He bequeathed the lease of the house at B., "with all buildings belonging to me, and what the buildings may contain":—Held, that the stables, and the carriages and horses therein, passed to the legatee. Kennedy v. Keily, 28 Beav. 223.

Under a devise of all the testator's freehold lands situate in the parish of C., with their appurtenances, land in two adjoining parishes, which had always been let with the lands in the parish of C., and occupied by the same tenant:—Held, not to pass. Evans v. Angell, 26 Beav. 202; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 134.

A devise of lands and tenements without more, or a devise of messuages and tenements to uses applicable only to the freehold property without more, will not pass the testator's leasehold property. But a devise of messuages or tenements, with the appurtenances, to uses applicable only to freehold property, will comprise leasehold property where a clear intention to that effect can be collected from the circumstance of the leasehold property having been blended in enjoyment with the freehold. Hobson v. Blackburn, 1 Myl. & K. 571; 2 L. J., Ch. 168.

Balance.] — Bequest of the balance in the hands of testator's agents at the time of his death:—Held, to include a sum which he had by letter directed them to invest in the funds, but which was not invested till after his death. Hill v. Mason, 2 J. & W. 248.

Gift of "any small balance remaining in the bank after payment of my funeral expenses." The testatrix had, at the date of the will, a balance of 480*l.* at her bankers', which had increased to the amount of 1,373*l.* 0*s.* 10*d.* at her death:—Held, that the whole balance passed.

Bank.]—See Money in Bank, and Securities Held by Bank, infra.

Property "Bequeathed."] — The word "bequeathed" (though not in itself a technical word) is primarily applicable only to property passing under a testamentary disposition. The testatrix, a married woman, had under her marriage settlement an absolute power of appointment over certain funds. By her will in 1867 she specifically appointed such funds, and then proceeded as follows: "I constitute and appoint E. M. my residuary legatee to any property which has been bequeathed to me, and which is not mentioned in this will." The father of the testatrix, by his will in 1873, bequeathed to her a certain sum of stock, but he subsequently determined to give it to her in his lifetime, and accordingly transferred it to the trustees of her marriage settlement:—Held, that this sum of stock did not pass to E. M. under the residuary gift obtained in the will of the testatrix. Armstrong, In re, Marescaux v. Armstrong, 49 L. J., Ch. 53; 42 L. T. 823.

Books.] — The manuscript notebook of a physician made during his attendance on a patient:—Held, to pass by his will under the general description of all his books in a particular residence where such notebook was found. Willis v. Curtois, 1 Beav. 189; 8 L. J., Ch. 105.

Dugdale's Monasticon, Domesday Book, and the State Trials will pass under a bequest of the testator's law library and books of antiquities. Wallace v. Bayldon, 4 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 74.

Book Debts.]—A. bequeathed his stock-in-trade, &c., to his wife and son to be used by them in his trade and business, which he directed to be carried on by them, in partnership, during the widowhood of his wife; "and for that purpose they were to have the use of the book debts or capital which he at his death might have employed therein":—Held, that the widow and son were entitled to the book debts or capital absolutely. Terry v. Terry, 33 Beav. 232; 9 L. T. 469; 12 W. R. 66.

Book debt held to be balance due to a testator who was a trader, after deducting the amount to which the testator was indebted to his debtors for trade and private debts. Chick v. Blackmore, 2 Sm. & G. 274; 23 L. J., Ch. 622; 2 W. R. 488.

And see Debts, infra.

Bonds.]—Bequest of a "bond of a given amount, with interest at a given rate":—Held, to carry the arrears of interest due upon the bond at the death of the testator. Kent v. Tapley, 11 Jur. 940.

A gift of 300*l.*, upon a bond, does not carry the interest incurred in the testator's lifetime. Roberts v. Kuffin, 2 Atk. 112.

Bequest, after several pecuniary legacies, "of all my bonds, shares in the bank to A., by paying the above-mentioned sums." The testator was possessed of several bonds upon which judgment had been entered, and of some which were barred by the statute of limitations:—Held, that the moneys due on the judgments entered on the bonds passed by this bequest. Mercer v. Mercer, 10 Ir. Ch. R. 505.

Canal shares will not pass under a bequest of property vested in "bonds or securities." Hudleston v. Gouldsbury, 10 Beav. 547; 11 Jur. 464.

And see Foreign Bonds, infra.

Box.]—A. devised to her daughter E. "my strong box, and whatsoever is in it, and all my chests and cabinets, and whatsoever is in them." This strong box was fixed upon a frame containing several drawers, and in these drawers were found bank-notes and other things of value:—Held, that the frame and drawers did not pass by the devise of the strong box; but, on an appeal, this decree was reversed. Paget (Lord) v. Bridgewater (Duke), 3 Bro. P. C. 79.

Business.]—A testator devised and bequeathed his whole property to trustees upon trust to invest such part as they should think fit in his business, and carry on the same till his son should attain the age of twenty-one years, and out of the profits to pay his widow the yearly sum of 200*l.* so long as she should remain a widow; and he directed the trustees, when his son should attain twenty-one, to transfer the business to his son. He then gave certain legacies to his other children, and provided that all his personal estate not required for the business should be continued in its then state of investment or altered at the discretion of the trustees, and the proceeds applied for the same purposes as the capital employed in the business. The business was carried on in a freehold shop:—Held, that the direction to transfer the business did not pass the freehold shop, and that the residuary gift carried the surplus profits of the business during the minority of her son. Henton, In re, Henton v. Henton, 30 W. R. 702.

Business, "Capital Invested in."]—P., by will, after desiring that his executor and partner H. might be allowed a year for converting his (the testator's) "proportion of capital, invested in the business he was then carrying on with H." into cash, and that such cash might be paid over as realised (with the exception of special bequests thereinafter mentioned) to the charity commissioners to be invested, desired that all shares of which he might die possessed might be transferred into the names of the charity commissioners, without being sold; the interest to be paid by them to certain persons for life. W. then directed, that after the death of the persons named sufficient of the property so invested by the commissioners should be converted by them and paid over to a number of charities, naming the sum to be given to each; and he then requested his executors would pay, as soon as conveniently might be after his decease, "out of the capital employed in the business," to the persons mentioned, certain sums (naming twenty-two legatees, and sums amounting together to about 700*l.*). At the date of his will, W. was in partnership with H., but before his death the business failed, and a composition was paid, mainly by the testator, at whose death the partnership assets were outstanding, and his proportion of capital consisted of half of these assets, after deducting the debts, one of which was a large debt due to himself:—Held, that the words "capital invested in the business" comprised all that was coming to the testator from his partner's estate, inclusive of the debt. Bevan v. Att.-Gen., 4 Giff. 361; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1099; 9 L. T. 221.

Business and Goodwill.]—The testator directed his executors to assign and transfer to H. "my business and the goodwill thereof, with the premises in which the same shall be carried on": —Held, that the capital of the testator employed in the business at his death and the stock-in-trade did not pass to H. under this bequest, and that the debts due to the business formed part of the capital, but the sacks, horses, and drays did pass to H. Delany v. Delany, 15 L. R., Ir. 55

Choice.]—See Power to Choose, infra.

Clothes and Linen.]—Bequest of "all my clothes and linen whatsoever" passes body linen only. Hunt v. Hort, 3 Bro. C. C. 311.

"Contents" of Desk.]—Bequest of a desk "with the contents thereof." The desk had in it, besides money, various choses in action—namely, a cheque to the testator's order and unendorsed, a banker's deposit receipt, promissory notes, some payable to his order and unendorsed, and the key of a box containing securities: —Held, that the choses in action passed by the bequest, but not the key of the box nor its contents. Robson, In re, Robson v. Hamilton, 60 L. J., Ch. 851; [1891] 2 Ch. 559; 65 L. T. 173.

—— Of House.]—A testatrix bequeathed certain legacies to A. C., sixth earl of E., and as to all her household furniture, paintings, books, china, and the whole contents of her house, she bequeathed the same to her trustees and executors upon trust that they should in the first place select and set aside a collection of the best paintings, statuary, and china for the Earl of E., and his successors, to be held and settled as heirlooms and to go with the title, and she authorised them to give to the said earl or his successors any articles of furniture which they should think fit, and as to all the rest and residue of the contents of her house upon trust for her trustees to select presents for her friends, and directed them to present any portion of the residue of the contents of her house to her cousins if they should think fit, or to sell the same, and the moneys so received to form part of her residuary personal estate. The testatrix died possessed of considerable personal estate, which comprised amongst other things a number of articles of jewellery which were at her death in a box at her bankers', which jewellery had been bequeathed to her. It was proved that it had been the practice of the testatrix, and also of the former owner, to send such box for safe custody to the bankers when they respectively were away from London:—Held, that the box of jewellery passed to the trustees as part of the contents of the house, that being the locality to which the property ought to be ascribed, although jewellery is merely for personal use, and is not appropriate to a house. Johnson, In re, Cockerell v. Essex (Earl), 53 L. J., Ch. 645; 26 Ch. D. 538; 52 L. T. 44; 32 W. R. 634.

Corn.]—One devised that his cousin A. should continue to live at his house, and be at the charge of keeping the house and the servants, and coach-horses which the testator employed in ploughing the ground, and spend the corn arising therefrom in the house; here the land enjoyed with the house shall pass to the cousin A. Blackborn v. Edgley, 1 P. Wms. 603.

Curiosities.]—Ornaments of the person do not pass by a bequest of a cabinet of curiosities, even though occasionally shewn with it. Cavendish v. Cavendish, 1 Bro. C. C. 467; 1 Cox, 77.

Debentures.]—Held, that the word "debentures" in a will was sufficient to include general policies of insurance. Phillips v. Eastwood, Ll. & G. t. Sugd. 270.

A policy of assurance on the life of a debtor is a security for a sum to be paid, and may pass in a will under the words "debentures or debts." Id. 291.

Debts Due.]—A testatrix being entitled to her son's residuary estate, the amount of which was unascertained at her death, bequeathed as follows: "If any debts due to me at my decease, I request my executors will collect and pay into the hands of my children":—Held, that the son's residue passed by the bequest. Bainbridge v. Bainbridge, 9 Sim. 16; 7 L. J., Ch. 4; 2 Jur. 63.

Under a bequest of "all debts due and owing to the testator at the time of his death," a bond conditioned for replacing a sum of stock sold by the testator, after the date of his will, and lent by him to the obligor, was held to pass; the day stipulated for the reinvestment being passed at the time of his death, therefore not comprehended in the residuary devise, enumerating (among other things) "his government stocks and funds." Essington v. Vashon, 3 Mer. 434.

Testator was entitled to a rent-charge or annuity (issuing out of an estate of a tenant for life) equivalent to the amount of the annual interest upon the purchase-money of the annuity, and the annual premiums payable upon policies of insurance effected upon the life of the tenant for life, to secure the repayment of the principal; and by a subsequent parole agreement the annuity was made determinable by either party: —Held, upon the entire transaction, that this annuity and the policies, being merely the securities for a debt, passed under a bequest of all the "outstanding debts owing" to the testator; held, also, that the word "debentures" in a will was sufficient to include general policies of insurance. Phillips v. Eastwood, supra.

Testator gives a debt due from "J. on bond, 300*l.* and upwards," to A., B. and C. The debt is 350*l.*, viz. 200*l.* by bond and 100*l.* by covenant, and 50*l.*:—Held, that the three sums pass to A., B. and C. Williams v. Williams, 2 Bro. C. C. 87.

A Scotch heritable bond, although it contain a personal obligation to pay the debt, does not lose its heritable quality, and will not pass by an English will, but descends to the heir-at-law. Jerningham v. Herbert, 4 Russ. 388; Tam. 103; 6 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 134; 28 R. R. 136.

Money at a banker's held to pass under a bequest of all debts due to the testator at the time of his death. Devaynes v. Noble, 1 Mer. 541; 15 R. R. 151.

A testator gave to the plaintiff the debt which was due from her to him. The plaintiff was not indebted to the testator, but she owed a sum of money to the firm in which the testator was a partner:—Held, that the joint debt passed under the bequest, subject to the rights of the surviving partners; and it being admitted that the partnership assets could be so arranged that the whole of the joint debt might be included in the testator's share of the assets, the plaintiff was declared entitled to the whole debt. Mayberry v. Brooking, 7 De G. M. & G. 673; 25 L. J., Ch. 87; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 76; 4 W. R. 155.

A father after reciting that his son was "now indebted" to him in various sums of money in respect of advances, and that he was desirous that his son should be released from the said several sums, and that the securities held in respect thereof should be given up to him, bequeathed to his son all the aforesaid several moneys, with the securities then in the testator's custody relating thereto, and also released him from all claims in respect of the aforesaid moneys, "and all other moneys due from him" to the testator. By a codicil the testator released the son from another specified debt for moneys misappropriated by the son:—Held, that the will must be construed as speaking from the death of the testator; and that the son was released from the repayment of money advanced to him by his father between the date of his codicil and of his death. Everett v. Everett, 47 L. J., Ch. 367; 7 Ch. D. 428; 38 L. T. 580; 26 W. R. 333—C. A.

A father directed his debts, including 300*l*. due to his daughter, to be paid immediately. He owed his daughter 150*l*. only:—Held, there was no legacy given by this direction. Wilson v. Morley, 46 L. J., Ch. 790; 5 Ch. D. 776; 36 L. T. 731; 25 W. R. 690.

Where arrears of debt are bequeathed, they are confined to those due at time of making will. Att.-Gen. v. Bury, 1 Eq. Abr. 201.

Bequest of debt which shall be owing on a particular day taken as it stood at that day, and not affected by consignments from the Indies on account since death of testator, which happened previous to day specified. Innes v. Mitchell, 6 Ves. 461.

And see Money Due on Mortgage, infra.

Dividends.]—Unreceived dividends held not to pass under a bequest of the dividends and interest of all the testator's money in the funds to a legatee for life. Shore v. Weekly, 3 De G. & Sm. 467; 18 L. J., Ch. 403; 13 Jur. 1021.

A testator bequeathed all the dividends or interest of all his money in the funds, and of all other his personal property, to A. for life. The testator was at his death entitled to some dividends on stock, which had accrued due during his life, but had not been received by him:—Held, that such dividends did not pass under the words "dividends of his money in the funds," but formed "part of his general personal estate." Ib. See also Constable v. Bull, 18 L. J., Ch. 302; 13 Jur. 619.

A testatrix directed her trustees to pay the dividends arising from her personal estate, invested at her decease in or upon any stocks, funds, or securities whatsoever, yielding interest, to certain persons named in her will. The testatrix, at her death, left a balance in the hands of her banker, who was in the habit of allowing his customers interest upon the amount standing to their credit on a particular day in the year:—Held, that this balance did not come within the terms used by the testatrix, but was undisposed of by the will. Archibald v. Hartley, 21 L. J., Ch. 399.

A testator bequeathed the dividends on his American bonds, "which should be due to him at the time of his decease," upon trust for payment of certain arrears of allowances to his daughters. In his lifetime the dividends on these bonds having fallen into arrear, part of the arrears was capitalised, and bonds issued for the amount, and delivered to the trustees of a separation deed executed by the testator, though it did not appear that he was himself aware of the capitalisation:—Held, that he must be taken to have been aware of the capitalisation, and therefore that the capitalised bonds did not pass as dividends due to him at the time of his death, but that only the uncapitalised dividends passed, and that the legacy was specific, and not demonstrative. Ricketts v. Harling, 23 L. T. 760.

Effects—Cash.]—A testator bequeathed to A. "my plate, house-linen, furniture, and all other effects in my house at the time of my death":—Held, that a horse, carriage, car, and some hay in the yard and outhouses passed to A., but not a sum of cash in the house. Watson v. Arundel, Ir. R. 10 Eq. 299.

Under a residuary gift of "all my household furniture, wines, carriages, horses, and other effects, except my jewellery":—Held, that 750*l*. in cash and a book debt of 220*l*. passed. Parrott, In re, 53 L. T. 12.

—— Fixtures of Business.]—A testator gave his real and leasehold estate, stock-in-trade, money at the bank, goodwill, book debts, and effects, belonging to his business to his son, and charged his real and leasehold estates with the payment of legacies. The estates were sold to pay the legacies, and bought in by the son:—Held, that the fixtures passed to the son under the bequest of "effects belonging to the business." Pinder v. Pinder, 18 W. R. 309.

—— Wine.]—A testator by his will, made on the 21st December, 1879, devised his property, known as Heathfield, with the offices, gardens, fields, and appurtenances belonging thereto, to the use of his wife, and then the will went on: "I bequeath all my furniture, pictures, plate, jewellery, horses, and carriages, and other household effects, to my said wife absolutely":—Held, that all the wine at Heathfield passed under the words "other household effects." Bourne, In re, Bourne v. Brandreth, 58 L. T. 537.

And see Furniture and Effects, infra.

"Equal Share."]—A testator devised his freeholds in trust to pay two-fifths of the rents to A. for life, with remainder to his children, and to pay three-tenths to B. for life, with remainder to his children, and to pay the remaining three-tenths to C. for life, with remainder to her children. By a codicil he left A. an equal share only of the property with B. and C., instead of the increased share:—Held, that the property was divisible into thirds, one of which belonged to each of the legatees for life, with remainder to his children. Quentery v. Quentery, 33 Beav. 369.

"Estates and Hereditaments subject to the Limitations of the Settlement"—Money liable to be invested in Land under the Settlement.]—A tenant for life of a certain manor and other estates in Cornwall under a settlement which contained a power of sale, and directed that the proceeds of sale should be invested in the purchase of land either in the county of Cornwall or elsewhere, made his will and thereby directed his son, who was tenant in tail in remainder under the settlement, within six months of the testator's death or of the son attaining twenty-one to effectually disentail the manor and estates and "all other the estates and hereditaments then subject to the settlement," and re-settle the same, with a proviso that if he did so the testator's residuary real and personal estate should belong to him absolutely; but that if he refused or neglected within the time aforesaid to disentail and re-settle, the residuary estate should go over. At the date of the testator's will, and also at his death, there were considerable funds which under the trusts of the settlement were liable to be laid out in the purchase of land:—Held, that the funds were described by the words "all other estates or hereditaments subject to the trusts of the settlement"; and that, therefore, in order that the condition of the will should be complied with, such funds must be included in the disentailing assurance and re-settlement. Quære, whether "hereditament" should be construed strictly as a word of art. Cleveland's (Duke) Settled Estates, In re ([1893] 3 Ch. 244), discussed and applied. Basset v. St. Levan, 13 R. 235; 71 L T. 718; 43 W. R. 165.

"All my Estate and Interest in the Lands of C."—Beneficial Interest in Charges on the Estate Passing.]—A testatrix who was entitled to an estate for life in the lands of C., and also to the reversion in fee in the same lands subject to the determination of the intermediate life estate of M. P., and who was also entitled to a charge of 1,000*l.* on the lands absolutely, and to the reversion in two other charges of 2,000*l.* each on the lands, subject to the determination of the life estate of K. in these charges by her will devised all her estate and interest in the lands to G. P., to whom also she bequeathed all her plate, plated ware, furniture, and pictures. There was no other legatee mentioned in the will:—Held, that the beneficial interest in the charges passed under the devise of all the testatrix's estate and interest in the lands. Kilkelly v. Powell, [1897] 1 Ir. R. 457—C. A.

A testator being possessed of a fee-simple estate in the lands of A., and also being beneficially entitled to a sum of money secured thereon by mortgage, devised all his estate and interest in the lands of A. to his son, W., for life, with remainder to his first and other sons in tail male; and in default of issue of his son W., to his son G. for life, with remainder to his first and other sons in tail male, with remainder over; and devised and bequeathed the residue of his property to his son W.:—Held, that the beneficial interest in the mortgage money passed under the specific devise of the lands. Mackesy v. Mackesy, [1896] 1 Ir. R. 511.

Estate—Plant.]—Devise of freehold and copyhold estate; part consisted of a brewhouse and malthouse, which was in lease, together with the plant and utensils:—Held, that the plant passed. Wood v. Gaynon, Ambl. 395.

And see Personal Estate, Real Estate, infra.

Estate, Money arising from Sale of—Books and Stock.]—Testator devised his estate in Leicestershire to trustees upon trust to sell the same, and also his books and stock, either together or in parcels. He afterwards disposes of the moneys to arise from the sale of his Leicestershire estate. As the estate, books, and stock might have been sold in one lot, and the produce was to form one common fund:—Held, that the disposition of the moneys to arise from the Leicestershire estate extended to the books and stock. Newburgh (Earl) v. Eyre, 4 Russ. 454; 6 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 153.

"Everything else."]—See Things, infra.

"Expense other than paying Rates."]—Held, that the words "any other expense than paying the rates and taxes" meant "any other expenses affecting the property," and not expenses merely incident to the use and enjoyment of it; but that the words immediately preceding those threw on the trustees not only the burden of keeping vineries and forcing-pits in repair, but also that of keeping up the gardens. Lethbridge v. Lethbridge, infra, col. 1160.

Farm.]—The word "farm" means primarily land which is not held by the owner, but granted out to and occupied by another person, and may relate to the interest either of the lessor or of the lessee. Holmes v. Milward, 47 L. J., Ch. 522; 38 L. T. 381; 26 W. R. 608.

A gift of farms with real estate, upon limitations which import the fee, carries the interest in the real estate only and does not carry with it the leasehold interest in a farm. Ib.

A bequest of "the field in the front of my dwelling-house" does not include the house and curtilage, though in fact locally situate in the field, and such house and curtilage pass by a bequest of "the residue of my said farm." O'Connor v. O'Connor, Ir. R. 4 Eq. 483; 19 W. R. 90.

Farming Stock.]—B., who was a tenant farmer, bequeathed his household goods and other things, together with all his live and dead farming stock, implements, and all other the household and farming effects, to his wife for life, or for so long as she should continue to be his widow; and he directed that after his decease an inventory should be made and taken of his personal estate, and that two copies should be made, one to be delivered to his wife, and the other to be signed by her and kept by his executors, but he gave no directions as to any valuation of his personal estate. The testator, in case his wife should marry again, bequeathed all his personal estate and effects in trust for certain legatees. After his death, an inventory of his personal estate generally was made for probate duty, but no inventory was made and signed as directed by the will. He died in 1853, and the widow married in 1857, whereupon the legatees in remainder claimed that the widow and her husband might be charged with the value of articles included in the inventory, viz. "growing turnips and roots, fallows, labour, seeds, and manure; layers; manure made, and not carried out on the farm; wheat, barley, beans and peas, and straw and haulm severed from the ground; oxen, sheep, pigs, and horses":—Held, as the testator had not directed a valuation, that the established rule of the court must prevail, viz. that articles quæ ipso usu consumuntur, and which were necessarily employed on the farm in order to maintain the course of husbandry, did not pass to the legatees in remainder. Bryant v. Easterson, 5 Jur. (N.S.) 166; 7 W. R. 298.

A farmer bequeathed "the whole of the consumable and other provisions, farming stock and effects, farming implements, growing crops, and tenant right," in or upon his dwelling-house and farm at his death to trustees, to carry on the farm "until the 6th of April next subsequent to or following the time of his decease," and after that day, to transfer "the consumable and other provisions, farming stock, and effects" upon his house and farm, to his son. He declared that his trustees were not to sell the "farming stock and effects" except in the ordinary course of management of the farm, and that the money produced thereby should fall into his residue. He died about four o'clock on the 5th of April, at which time there was on the farm, besides the ordinary farming stock, a large quantity of corn and wool of the last year's produce, and an excess of fat sheep and stock, of the value of 3,314*l.*:—Held, that these passed to the son. Harvey v. Harvey, 32 Beav. 441.

A testator bequeathed "all his live and dead farming stock in and about the farm and farm buildings then occupied by him":—Held, as against residuary legatees, that everything upon the farm belonging to the testator at the time of his death, including the animals, the unsold produce, and the growing crops, passed under the bequest. Burbidge v. Burbidge, 37 L. J., Ch. 47; 17 L. T. 138; 16 W. R. 76.

A gift of "all farming stock" will not, as against the devisee, pass crops on the ground, unless there be a plain intention that the legatee of the farming stock is to take all the personal estate. Vaisey v. Reynolds, 5 Russ. 12; 6 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 172; 29 R. R. 4.

A testatrix, after devising all her real estate to A., gave all the "farming stock, goods, chattels, and effects in and about" one of her farms forming part of her real estate to B.; and she gave the residue of her personal estate to other persons:—Held, that all crops growing on the farm at the testatrix's death passed to B. Vaisey v. Reynolds (supra) disapproved of. Roose, In re, Evans v. Williamson, 50 L. J., Ch. 197; 17 Ch. D. 696; 43 L. T. 719; 29 W. R. 230.

And see Stock, infra.

Fixtures and Fittings Up.] — Household furniture does not pass under the description of "fixtures and fittings up." Simmons v. Simmons, 6 Hare, 352; 12 Jur. 8.

Foreign Bonds.]—A bequest of "foreign bonds and other securities":—Held, to pass foreign securities only, notwithstanding that testator had a very large personal estate vested in the British funds. Ferguson v. Ogilby, 2 Dr. & War. 548; 1 Con. & L. 554.

Colonial bonds will not pass under the description "foreign bonds." Hull v. Hill, 4 Ch. D. 97; 25 W. R. 223.

Freehold Lands — Copyholds.] — A testator devised a farm by the description of "my freehold farm and lands situate at Edgware, and now in the occupation of James Bray." The will contained no residuary devise. The farm comprised about seventy-six acres, of which twenty-six were copyhold:—Held, that the copyhold parts of the farm passed under the devise. Hall v. Fisher (post, col. 1177) and Stone v. Greening (post, col. 1193) discussed and questioned. Bright-Smith, In re, Bright-Smith v. Bright-Smith, 55 L. J., Ch. 365; 31 Ch. D. 314; 54 L. T. 47; 34 W. R. 252.

"Full Salary"—Legacy Duty.]—A gift of six months' full salary is not a gift free from legacy duty. Marcus, In re, Marcus v. Marcus, 56 L. J., Ch. 830; 57 L. T. 399.

The Funds—Money in.]—A testatrix, by will, in 1837, bequeathed as follows: "To my dear brother I leave everything I may be possessed of at my decease for his life; and should he marry, and have children of his own, to those children after; but should he die a bachelor, at his death I leave the whole of my fortune now standing in the funds to E., my god-daughter." A portion of the personal estate of the testatrix, both at the date of the will and of her death, consisted of bank stock. Her brother died a bachelor:—Held, that the bank stock did not pass to E. by the bequest. Slingsby v. Grainger, 7 H. L. Cas. 273; 28 L. J., Ch. 616; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1111. Affirming 4 W. R. 623; 8 De G. M. & G. 385.

Certificates of the Boston (U.S.) water scrip and bonds of the Pennsylvania Railway Company:—Held, not to pass under the words "stocks in the foreign funds." Ellis v. Eden, 23 Beav. 543; 26 L. J., Ch. 533; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 950.

The words "money or stock in the foreign funds":—Held, upon the terms of a will, to comprise all foreign securities, for which the faith of the government of the foreign country was pledged. Ib.

East India stock will not pass under a bequest of money in the "government or parliamentary stocks or funds, or foreign stocks or funds." Brown v. Brown, 6 W. R. 613.

Testator bequeathed to trustees, for the use of his wife and children, the interest of his property in the English and French funds, and he gave the capital to his surviving children, that is to say, to be equally divided at the period of his eldest surviving child attaining the age of thirty. By a codicil he bequeathed to his executors, for the use of his children, "whatever sum now stands in my name, or may hereafter, in the Dutch funds, or any other funds, including the interest arising therefrom":—Held, that the words "any other funds" included stock in the British funds. Montresor v. Montresor, 1 Coll. C. C. 693.

Under a bequest of "all my Irish funded property, standing in my name in the Bank of Ireland," government debentures, which were in the hands of the testator's bankers at the date of his will, do not pass. Ridge v. Newton, 2 Dr. & War. 239; 1 Con. & L. 381; 4 Ir. Eq. R. 389.

A bequest of "property in the English funds" will not pass India stock or Exchequer bills. Stock standing in the testator's name at the time of his death, and which his bankers had purchased with moneys received by them on his account, without any express authority for their so doing, will not pass by a bequest of the testator's stock. Johnson v. Digby, 8 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 38.

Bequest of "all the funded property in my name":—Held, to pass Irish bank stock and Irish 3¼ per cents. belonging to the testator, and standing in his name jointly with three others. Mangin v. Mangin, 16 Beav. 300.

A testator directed his trustees to sell and convert into money all his property, except such portion as consisted of moneys in the public funds, and the proceeds thereof to be invested in the public funds:—Held, that the exception included long annuities. Howard v. Kay, 27 L. J., Ch. 448; 6 W. R. 361.

And see Stock in the Funds, infra.

Furniture—Books and Wine.]—Books and were held to pass by a specific bequest of "all the testator's furniture, linen, plate, pictures, carriages, horses, and other live and dead stock in his use and possession." Hutchinson v. Smith, 1 N. R. 513; 8 L. T. 602; 11 W. R. 417.

—— China.]—China held to pass under a bequest of furniture. Hele v. Gilbert, 2 Ves. Sen. 430.

—— Clock.]—Testator gave all his household goods, plate, linen, china, furniture, &c., which belonged to him at the time of his death to his wife absolutely, except so many and such parts thereof as should be contained in and described as heirlooms, or otherwise excepted by him in an inventory to be left by him, which he gave to his wife for her life. One of the articles enumerated in the inventory was an astronomical clock, which had belonged to testator's father, and been placed by him with a chronometer-maker thirty years back—in the first instance to ascertain the cost of repairing the same, and subsequently with a direction that it should be sold if a fair price could be obtained. The clock had remained with the chronometer-maker ever since, and had never been in the testator's actual possession:—Held, that this clock did not form part of the testator's general personal estate, but passed to his widow under the specific bequest of his household furniture. Pellew v. Horsford, 25 L. J., Ch. 352; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 514; 4 W. R. 442.

—— Plate.]—Under a bequest of the use of a house with all the furniture and stock, of carriages and horses, and other live and dead stock for life, plate passed; wine and books did not. Porter v. Tournay, 3 Ves. 311.

—— Stock-in-Trade.]—A silversmith bequeathing all his furniture, books, goods, and chattels, his stock-in-trade would not pass, though the plate in his house, as household furniture, would. Stuart v. Bute (Marquis), 11 Ves. 657; 8 R. R. 266.

"Furniture and Articles of Household Use or Ornament."]—A testatrix, claiming to be absolutely entitled to an altar-stone and certain relics, by her will specifically bequeathed all her "furniture and articles of household use or ornament":—Held, that the terms of the bequest were not sufficient to include the articles in question. Petre v. Ferrers, 61 L. J., Ch. 426; 65 L. T. 568.

"Rest of Furniture and Effects"—Bank-notes and Securities—Jewellery.]—A testator, after giving pecuniary and other legacies, including the sum of 100*l.*, to D., and including certain books, wine, and plate, gave "all the rest of the furniture and effects" at the house in which he resided to D., and devised and bequeathed the rest, residue, and remainder of his estate and effects to T. A sum of 2,740*l.* in bank-notes, certain stock receipts, certificates of railway stock, and some jewellery, besides the usual furniture and appointments, were found in his house after his decease:—Held, that the bank-notes, securities, and jewellery did not pass to D. under the gift of the rest of the furniture and effects at his house, but were included in the residuary gift to T. Miller, In re, Daniel v. Daniel, 61 L. T. 365.

"Furniture, Goods, and Chattels."]—A testator, after bequeathing pecuniary legacies, directed them to "be paid from such part of my personal estate as shall consist of money at my bankers or in the 3 per cent. consols." And after directing that the whole of his income should be devoted to the comfort and maintenance of his wife, and that she should have the use of his residence, he desired "that the furniture, goods, and chattels be not sold during my wife's lifetime, but at her decease to be divided among the executors":—Held, applying the rule, ejusdem generis, that the gift of "furniture, goods, and chattels," passed only such furniture, &c., as, on the house being let furnished, would go with the occupation of the house, and not such articles as jewellery, guns, pistols, tricycles, and scientific instruments. Manton v. Tabois, 54 L. J., Ch. 1008; 30 Ch. D. 92; 53 L. T. 289; 33 W. R. 832.

Household Furniture.]—A testator died in the occupation of a furnished tavern, where he carried on the business of a hotel keeper and betting agent, sleeping there occasionally for the convenience of his business, but having his ordinary residence at another house:—Held, that such parts only of the tavern furniture as were for the testator's own domestic or personal use, passed under a bequest of "all my household furniture," contained in his will. Manning v. Purcell, 7 De G. M. & G. 55; 3 Eq. R. 387; 24 L. J., Ch. 522; 3 W. R. 273.

—— Fixtures.]—Under a bequest of household furniture fixtures belonging to the testator in a leasehold house occupied by him will pass. Paton v. Sheppard, 10 Sim. 186.

A testator, who resided in a leasehold house, which was held by him for a short term of years, bequeathed all his leasehold messuages to his executors, in trust to sell; and bequeathed all his household furniture to his sister for life, and after her death to certain other persons:—Held, that the grates in the testator's residence passed under the bequest of "household furniture." Peto v. Grissell, 5 L. J., Ch. 286.

A bequest of "household furniture" will not, as a general rule, pass the tenant's fixtures in a leasehold house occupied by the testator. Finney v. Grice, 48 L. J., Ch. 247; 10 Ch. D. 13; 27 W. R. 147.

—— Pictures, Books, China, &c.]—Under a bequest of household furniture, plate in the house at testator's death, whether in common use or not, if suitable to the rank of the testator, pictures hung up, linen, and china, both useful and ornamental in the house, will pass; books in the library will not pass. Kelly v. Powlet, Ambl. 605; Dick. 559. See Cole v. Fitzgerald, 1 Sim. & S. 189. Affirmed, 3 Russ. 301; 1 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 91; 24 R. R. 169.

Household furniture comprises everything that contributes to the use or convenience of the householder, or ornament of the house. Ib.

Construction of a will as to what will pass under the description of "furniture." A testator by his will bequeathed his leasehold dwelling-house, together with all his pictures, prints, drawings, or paintings in miniature or enamel, with all his gold and silver coins, medals, watches, and trinkets of every kind whatsoever; as also his coaches, carriages, harness, and furniture to the same belonging; and also all and singular the fixtures appurtenant to his said leasehold messuage, together with the household furniture, plate, linen, wines, liquors, and other his estate and effects whatsoever, in and about the same, and that should be in his possession at the time of his decease, or in and about his said dwelling-house, or the outhouses and offices appurtenant thereto, and by him held, used, occupied, and enjoyed therewith; by a codicil he made a different disposition of the house, "with all its furniture and appurtenances thereunto belonging":—Held, that pictures placed in the house as ornamental furniture, and the plate and linen, passed by the codicil; but that the codicil had no operation on the disposition made by the will of the books, the gold and silver coins, trinkets, and things of that nature. Cremorne v. Antrobus, 5 Russ. 312; 7 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 88; 31 R. R. 117.

By the term "household furniture" neither books nor wines pass. Bridgman v. Dove, 3 Atk. 202.

Devise by an E. I. captain of all household furniture, linen, plate, and apparel whatsoever, includes only what is for domestic use, not what for trade or merchandise. It does not include books nor plate for trade. Le Farrant v. Spencer, 1 Ves. Sen. 97.

—— Personal Ornaments.]—Bequest of "household furniture, plate, linen, china, glass, books, pictures, plated articles, prints, and all and singular other my household furniture and effects which, at time of my decease, shall be in and about my mansion house":—Held, not to include articles exclusively of personal ornament, and not adapted for the use or ornament of the house. Tempest v. Tempest, 2 K. & J. 635.

—— Telescopes.]—Telescopes held to pass under the words "household furniture and implements of household." Brooke (Lord) v. Warwick (Earl), 2 De G. & Sm. 425; 12 Jur. 912.

Household Furniture and Effects.]—Under a bequest of "household furniture, plate, china," and "other household effects":—Held, that gold, silver, and china snuff boxes, used for the purposes of ornament about the mansion, passed to the legatee. Field v. Peckett, 29 Beav. 573; 30 L. J., Ch. 813; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 983; 4 L.T. 459; 9 W. R. 526.

Held, also, that cabinets for china, which had been ordered by the testator, but had not been delivered at his death, also passed under these words. Ib.

—— Jewellery.]—Testatrix bequeathed "all the household furniture and effects" in and about her residence to A. and her residue to B.:—Held, that jewellery did not pass under the specific bequest. Northey v. Paxton, 60 L. T. 30.

—— Farming Stock and Horses.]—A gift of household furniture, plate, linen, china, glass, books, fixtures, and other effects of a like nature, does not include cows, horses, carriages, and farming stock. Stone v. Parker, 29 L. J., Ch. 874; 8 W. R. 722.

—— Reversionary Interest in Stock.]—Where a testator directed that his household furniture and effects should be sold immediately after his decease, and the proceeds applied for the benefit of his three younger children, the court held that a reversionary interest in a sum of stock to which he was entitled at the time of his death, and the contingency of a failure of issue, was not included in the bequest, but that there was an intestacy. Marshall v. Bentley, 1 Jur. (N.S.) 786; 3 W R. 566.

A reversionary interest in two sums of stock held not to pass under a bequest of "household furniture and effects, plate, linen, china, glass, books, wearing apparel, &c." Newman v. Newman, 26 Beav. 218; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 1030; 7 W. R. 6.

Goods and Chattels—Horses.]—By devise of all testator's goods and chattels in and about his dwelling-house and outhouses at A., at his death:—Held, that running horses passed. Gower (Countess) v. Gower (Earl), 2 Eden, 201; Ambl. 612.

—— Cash.]—A. devises 1,200*l.* to his wife and gives her all the goods and chattels, plate, jewels, household stuff, and stock belonging to his house at N.; 400*l.* which the testator has in the house will not pass by these words. Anon., Pre. Ch. 8. S. C., nom. Saunders v. Earl, 2 Ch. Rep. 188.

Where testator devised all his goods, chattels, household furniture, stuffs, and other things which should be in his house at time of his death:—Held, a sum of money there did not pass. Trafford v. Berrige, 1 Eq. Abr. 201.

—— Choses in Action.]—Generally, choses in action do not pass by a bequest of "goods and chattels" in a particular locality. Bequest "of all the goods and chattels, plate, linen, money at the bankers, or stock in the Monte de Milano, horses, carriages, &c., I may die possessed of at M.":—Held, not to pass Polish certificates and Neapolitan bordereaux (being government obligations) there situate, entitling the bearers to receive the interest and capital at a future time:—Held, also, that such securities could not be considered as money or cash; and, thirdly, that not having their locality at M., they did not pass under the words, "&c., at M." Hertford (Marquis) v. Lowther (Lord) (Countess Zichy's Case), 7 Beav. 1; 13 L. J., Ch. 41; 7 Jur. 1167.

Neither choses in action nor securities for money pass under a bequest of "goods and chattels." Chapman v. Hart, 1 Ves. Sen. 271.

What passes by devise of all goods and chattels in a house, not a bond or chose in action. Ib. But see Anon., 1 P. Wms. 267.

And see Household Goods, infra.

Ground Rent.]—Bequest of leasehold ground-rents passes not the reserved rent only, but the reversionary leasehold interest. Kaye v. Lawn, 1 Bro. C. C. 76.

Devise of copyhold estate by the description of copyhold ground-rent good. Walker v. Shore, 19 Ves. 387.

Heirlooms.]—A testatrix having two houses, and residing occasionally in each, and having a life estate in them with limitations over in tail male, gave by two separate gifts, nearly in the same words, the household furniture, &c., "in and about the same," specifically, in one case inserting a few words not found in the other, and excepting in one an article not mentioned in the other, and as to one referring to the articles as "heirlooms," to be enjoyed by the persons entitled in remainder. Money, railway certificates, live stock, carriages, wines and spirits, and hay were found on the premises:—Held, that these did not pass, but that plate, books, jewellery, and a piano did pass, and whatever was not mentioned in one, but was mentioned in the other, did not pass as to that one, but did pass as to the other. Hare v. Pryce, 11 L. T. 101; 12 W. R. 1072.

House—Library.]—A library of books held to pass under a general intention that the testator's house should not be dismantled, but kept up for his family. Ouseley v. Anstruther, 10 Beav. 462.

—— Stables.]—A testator bequeathed to his wife his leasehold house, No. 32, Princes Gate. Together with this house he had at the time of his death occupied stables called No. 3, Princes Mews, which were originally held under a different lease from the house, though each lease was entered into on the same day, and they were for exactly similar terms, and between the same lessor and lessee. Upon the purchase of the house and stables by the testator from the original lessee, they were assigned to him by one deed, and afterwards the testator again assigned both house and stables by one deed by way of mortgage:—Held, that the stables passed with the house to the wife. Mocatta, In re, Mocatta v. Mocatta, 49 L. T. 629; 32 W. R. 477.

House and Premises.]—Testator took a conveyance of "all that messuage or tenement, garden, fold, yard, and premises, called the Upper House Farm, with the barns, stables, cider mill, and outbuildings, containing 1a. 3r. 1p.," together with other enumerated pieces of land amounting to forty-one acres, which estate was ordinarily called the Upper House. By his will testator devised "all that my freehold house and premises called Upper House" upon certain trusts, and gave all the rest, residue, and remainder of his "said real and personal estates" over:—Held, that the whole estate called Upper House, and not merely the house and garden, passed under the devise of "all that my freehold house and premises." Ross v. Veal, 1 Jur. (N.S.) 751; 3 W. R. 652.

Household Goods.]—What passes under words "all his household goods." The words added thereto, "and whatever else legatee should think fit to accept of," were rejected in the construction of the will. Anon., 2 Eq. Abr. 322.

Devise of plate, jewels, linen, household goods, and coach and horses, will be confined to things of the same nature; and goldsmith's notes and bank-bills do not pass by those words. Timewell v. Perkins, 2 Atk. 102.

Articles in the nature of household goods will pass under that description in a bequest, although they may never have been used by the testator, nor even kept in his house. Pellew v. Horsford, 25 L. J., Ch. 352; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 514.

—— Plate.]—Plate passes under a bequest of "household goods." Stapleton v. Conway, 1 Ves. Sen. 427. S. P., Nicholls v. Osborn, 2 P. Wms. 421; Masters v. Masters, 1 P. Wms. 425; Lillcott v. Compton, 2 Vern. 638.

By devise of all rings and household goods, plate used in the house does not pass. Jesson v. Essington, Pre. Ch. 207.

—— Clock.]—One, by will, gives all his household goods and implements of household. The malt, hops, beer, ale, and other victuals in the house do not pass; but the clock, if not fixed to the house, shall pass, but not the guns or pistols, if used as arms in riding or shooting game. Slanning v. Style, 3 P. Wms. 334.

A curious and valuable astronomical clock, formerly the property of Napoleon Bonaparte, had been taken as a prize of war by the testator's father in 1815. It had been shortly afterwards sent to a chronometer-maker in London for the purpose, first, of repair, and then for sale, and so remained unsold down to the death of the testator in 1854:—Held, that it passed under the description "household goods" in the testator's will. Pellew v. Horsford, supra.

Insurance Premium.]—Testator bequeathed to A. B. the premium of insurance on his life in an insurance office for her immediate expenses. Shortly before the date of the will a bonus had been declared upon the testator's policy of assurance:—Held, that the bonus alone passed under this bequest, a verbal declaration by the testator to A. B. upon the execution of the will to shew that he intended her to have both the policy and the bonus being inadmissible in evidence. Barrow v. Methold, 3 W. R. 629.

"All my Interest"—Will made before 1 Vict. c. 26.]—A testator in a will made before the wills act gave and bequeathed "all the interest of my houses and cottages situated as follows." He then proceeded to dispose of this property, which was copyhold, and after giving life interests, concluded with a gift to T. S.:—Held, that the words "all my interest" at the commencement of the will ran through the whole will, and were not in the nature of a recital merely, and that T. S. took the fee. De la Hunt and Pennington, In re, 57 L. T. 874.

Jewellery.]—A testatrix directs all her jewels to be sold to pay her debts, except a particular ring set with diamonds, which she gave to a friend, and she then bequeaths the remainder of her rings, her necklaces of every description, pearls, garnets, carnelians, and watches to B.; by a subsequent testamentary disposition she gives all her trinkets of every denomination, her jewels excepted, to C., and, in another part of the same instrument, directs her jewels to be sold; afterwards, by a third testamentary instrument, she bequeaths to C. all her trinkets and pearls, with various specific articles, among which were some rings set with diamonds; the testatrix was possessed of a very valuable necklace and cross, and of a pearl necklace, besides other necklaces, and of various diamond rings, besides those which were specifically bequeathed:—Held, that the diamond necklace and rings, and the diamond rings not specifically mentioned, were to be sold, and did not pass to B.; that the pearl necklace passed to B., under the gift of necklaces of every description, and did not pass to C., under the gift of pearls. Att.-Gen. v. Harley, 5 Russ. 173; 7 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 31.

—— Coins.]—A bag of coins found by the executors in the testator's strong box:—Held, not to pass under a bequest of "jewellery." Sudbury v. Brown, 4 W. R. 736.

—— Masonic Orders.]—A bequest of family diamonds and "other jewels" includes masonic orders and silver filigree ornaments. Brooke (Lord) v. Warwick (Earl), 2 De G. & Sm 425; 12 Jur. 912.

"Lease of House"—Freehold.]—A testator gave the lease of the house in which he should be living at the time of his decease to his wife. At the date of the will he was living in a house he held for a short term at a rack-rent; he subsequently bought and went to reside at a freehold house, where he died:—Held, that the freehold house was not devised to the testator's widow. Knight, In re, Knight v. Burgess, 56 L. J., Ch. 770; 34 Ch. D. 518; 56 L. T. 630; 35 W. R. 536.

Manor.]—A devise of a manor with all courts, &c. (enumerating the incorporeal hereditaments appointed to a manor only), extends to the demesne lands of the manor, and evidence of surrounding circumstances cannot be admitted to shew that such was not the intention. Hicks v. Sallit, 3 De G. M. & G. 782; 23 L. J., Ch. 571; 18 Jur. 915; 2 Eq. R. 818; 2 W. R. 173.

In a settlement of a manor, all hereditaments, as well corporeal as incorporeal, appurtenant thereto were enumerated. In a will exercising a power of appointment reserved by the settlement, the incorporeal appurtenants alone were enumerated, and dispositions were made of parts of the demesne lands, from which it might be inferred that the testatrix did not suppose that the demesne lands passed under the word manor:—Held, that these circumstances were not sufficient to raise a necessary inference upon the face of the will that the word manor was not intended to include the demesne lands. Ib.

The manor of W. was, by settlement, vested in trustees, upon such trusts as E. B., a married woman, should by will appoint. Before any will was made, a piece of copyhold land was, under an inclosure act, allotted to the trustees of the settlement as lords of the manor, and in compensation of their interest in the soil of the manor. Under the same act, two copyhold allotments were made to two other persons in respect of copyhold interests. The trustees of the settlement, in exercise of a power vested in them for that purpose, bought the two last-mentioned allotments, and held them upon the same trusts as the manor. Afterwards, in 1807, E. B. made her will, devising the manor, with its appurtenances, to the father of the plaintiff for life, with remainder to his first son in tail, with remainder to his second son, the plaintiff, and devising the residue of her property to trustees on trust to sell. E. B. died in 1813, and the copyhold allotment made to the trustees of the settlement, and the two allotments purchased by them, were then treated by the trustees of the will as part of the residue, and in 1814 were sold to a person from whom the defendant subsequently purchased. The plaintiff, while an infant, became entitled, in 1831, by the deaths of his father and elder brother, to the manor under the devise. He attained twenty-one in 1849, and soon afterwards filed a bill claiming the three allotments as part of the manor:—Held, that, as to each allotment, there had been, under the circumstances, an extinguishment of the copyhold in the manor, and that they all passed to the plaintiff under the devise of the manor. Ib.

The demesne lands of a manor previously granted in fee do not become reunited to the manor, if purchased by the lord, as they would do if they had reverted to him by escheat. Delacherois v. Delacherois, 4 N. R. 501; 11 H. L. Cas. 62; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 886; 10 L. T. 884; 13 W. R. 24.

If the demesne lands of a manor are treated, in a conveyance of them in fee, as a distinct property, as, for instance, being conveyed by the lord in fee without being accompanied by a declaration of the feoffor's title as lord, or being described as lands held of the manor, but only as lands situate, lying, and being within the manor, they are severed from the manor, and cease to form part of it, although the rents and dues may remain. Ib.

On repurchase, by the lord, of the fee-simple, he will hold of the chief lord. Ib.

They will, on such repurchase, again form part of the manor, so as to pass under that description made in a will dated anterior to the purchase. Ib.

Medals—Current Coin.]—Where current coin is curious, and kept with medals, it will pass as such. Bridgman v. Dove, 3 Atk. 202.

Messuage and Premises—Furniture.]—A testator devised his freehold messuage, tenement, or dwelling-house, with the yard, stables, and appurtenances, in Cavendish Square, together with the household furniture and effects therein, unto his widow for life; and, after her decease, he devised the same messuage or tenement, and premises, with the appurtenances, unto his son, his heirs and assigns:—Held, that the household furniture passed to the son. Sanford v. Irby, 4 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 23.

—— Garden on Opposite Side of Street.]—Devise of "a messuage and premises, situate No. 4, —— Terrace":—Held, to include a strip of garden-ground on the opposite side of the street from the house, but for some time let and occupied with the house. Hibon v. Hibon, 1 N. R. 532; 32 L. J., Ch. 374; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 511; 8 L. T. 195; 11 W. R. 455.

Money.]—In construing a will no absolute technical meaning should be given to such a word as "money," the meaning of which must depend upon the context, if any, and such surrounding circumstances as the court can take into consideration. A testatrix who was possessed of cash, securities, leaseholds, furniture, and effects, by her will, made in expectation of her death, which occurred two days after its date, gave "one-half of the money of which I am possessed to H., and the remainder equally between O. and S., and after them to their children":—Held, that the word "money" passed all the personal estate. Cadogan, In re, Cadogan v. Palagi, 53 L. J., Ch. 207; 25 Ch. D. 154; 49 L. T. 666; 32 W. R. 57.

L. by her will desired that all her debts funeral and testamentary expenses should be paid, and if she should not leave enough money for that purpose, she desired that sufficient to pay her debts might be sold of the property she purchased from R. She gave the remainder of that property to W. specifically; and after making certain specific bequests of furniture and jewellery, gave her interest in certain real estate to A. and made him her residuary legatee. The property purchased from R. was leasehold, held for a very long term of years. The testatrix at her death possessed no actual cash. She had a small sum due to her for rents, and the half of a turnpike bond, besides furniture, the property purchased from R., one leasehold dwelling-house, and the real estate specifically devised to A.:—Held, that the word "money" must be taken to mean not the general personal estate, but the rents and money due on the bond, and those being exhausted, the residue of the debts must be paid out of the property purchased from R. in exoneration of the furniture and leaseholds. Lloyd v. Lloyd, 54 L. T. 841; 34 W. R. 608.

At the date of the will in August, 1881, the testatrix had over 600*l.* at her bankers'. In February, 1883, she invested 600*l.* in the purchase of 586*l.* consols. At the date of her death in May, 1884, she had the 586*l.* consols, 555*l.* at her bankers', and 8*l.* cash in her house:—Held, that the word "money" in the will ought not to be extended beyond its strict meaning. Sutton, In re, Stone v. Att.-Gen., 28 Ch. D. 464; 33 W. R. 519.

A testatrix, by her will dated in 1874, appointed executors thereof, gave pecuniary legacies to servants, and directed her debts and expenses to be paid, and continued:—"I give in equal shares all my moneys to my brothers and sisters as shall be living at my decease." Then she went minutely through her furniture and similar articles, bequeathing them to different members of her family, but some articles of furniture, &c., were omitted from the bequest, and the will contained no mention or express disposition of any stocks or investments, nor any residuary clause. By a codicil, dated in 1883, the testatrix bequeathed her furniture, &c., which might be in the house in which she and her sister X. should be living together at the time of her decease, to X. for life, and, after her death, she directed that the same should belong to the persons to whom the same effects were bequeathed by her will, and in all other respects she confirmed her will. The testatrix died in September, 1883, possessed of New Three per Cents. standing in her name; bonds of a foreign government payable to bearer; consolidated and preference stock of a railway company, registered in her name in the company's books; sums due to her; cash in her house; and furniture, &c., some of which was not specifically mentioned in the will:—Held, that the intention of the testatrix appearing from her will and codicil was to dispose, first, of all her moneys; secondly, of all her furniture, &c.; and therefore that, though the gift of all her moneys could not be read as a residuary clause, it must be read as applying to all the property of which the testatrix died possessed other than furniture, &c., and that the furniture, &c., not specifically disposed of was, therefore, the only property as to which the testatrix had died intestate. Lowe v. Thomas (infra, col. 1145) distinguished. Townley, In re, Townley v. Townley, 53 L. J., Ch. 516; 50 L. T. 394; 32 W. R. 549.

The word "money" by itself, in a will, means money strictly, and nothing else; but when used in connection with other words, it may have a much more extended signification. Glendening v. Glendening, 9 Beav. 324.

—— Banking Account.]—Bequest of "all my moneys":—Held, to include two balances standing to the credit of the testator at his bankers': one upon an ordinary current account, the other secured by deposit notes bearing interest. Manning v. Purcell, 7 De G. M. & G. 55; 3 Eq. R. 387; 24 L. J., Ch. 522; 3 W. R. 273.

Secus as to a sum of money returned to the testator's personal representative by stakeholders with whom the testator had placed it to abide the result of a wager which remained undecided at his death. Ib.

A testator by his will bequeathed to his wife all his moneys, household furniture, plate, books, linen, wearing apparel, &c., and his residue to his wife for life, and after her death to his children. The testator had, as a house of business, a tavern and betting office, and a private residence, both containing furniture, and he lived at the latter, but sometimes slept at the former. At the time of his death he had at a bank 2,000*l.* on a common banking account, and 5,000*l.* on a deposit account, for which latter interest was allowed; he had placed 6,000*l.* with certain shareholders to abide the event of a bet, and after his death it was repaid to his administratrix, and he held moneys for wagers, some of which were decided in his lifetime, but others not, all of which the administratrix paid:—Held, that the 2,000*l.* and the 5,000*l.* deposit account passed to the widow under the word "moneys":—Held also, that the 6,000*l.* did not so pass. Ib.

J. B., at his death, had a balance due from his banker, and was also entitled to a share of the balance due to A. B. from his brother, A. B. having received moneys for him from time to time, and with his knowledge paid them to his own bankers as his own moneys; but J. B. had no concern with A. B.'s bankers, nor did they know that he was interested in the moneys paid by A. B. J. B. bequeaths all his money in the hands of any banker:—Held, that his balance at his own banker's, and also his share of A. B.'s balance, will pass; and that evidence is admissible to shew that he so intended. Heming v. Whittam, 2 Sim. 493; 1 L. J., Ch. 94.

Under a specific bequest of personalty a gift of money will not include money at a banker's. Loring v. Thomas, 5 L. T. 269; 9 W. R. 919.

—— Copyhold Lands.]—Copyholds held to pass by the words "money, property, and effects," aided by the context. Streatfield v. Cooper, 27 Beav. 338.

—— Furniture or Farming Stock.]—A testator, after directing payment of debts, gave to his wife for life the interest of all sums of money he might die possessed of; after her decease he gave all such "interest money" to his daughter for life; and after her decease he gave the principal and interest to be divided between his daughter's children. The testator, at his death, was possessed of 455*l.* cash, besides furniture, farming stock, and a farm at a yearly tenancy:—Held, that there was a specific bequest of the money only, and an intestacy as to the rest of his property, and that the debts must be paid out of his general estate. Larner v. Larner, 26 L. J., Ch. 668 ; 5 W. R. 513.

—— Fine.]—A testator bequeathed to his wife all his household furniture, plate, horses, carriages, stock, and all the money he might have, subject, however, to the payment of his debts and funeral and testamentary expenses, and to the erection of a suitable monument over him. After the date of his will the testator agreed, in writing, to make a grant in perpetuity of certain lands of which he was seised, in consideration of a fine of 1,250*l.* At his death the agreement remained uncompleted, and the fine was unpaid by the intended grantee, who was, however, willing to pay on getting a proper discharge. The will contained no further residuary gift. The lands to which the agreement related had been devised, in events which happened, to the testator's wife, durante viduitate, with remainder in trust for charitable purposes :—Held, that the fine of 1,200*l.* did not pass to the wife under the above-mentioned gift of "money." Dillon v. M'Donnell, 7 L. R., Ir. 335.

—— Money due on Securities.]—The word "moneys" in a codicil :—Held, to comprise not only all moneys in hand, but also all moneys due to the testator, whether upon security or otherwise, notwithstanding express mention made in the will of "moneys and securities for money." Langdale v. Whitfeld, 4 K. & J. 426 ; 27 L. J., Ch. 795 ; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 706 ; 6 W. R. 862.

A bequest of a cabinet with whatever it contains, "except money," will not pass a promissory note payable to the testatrix of a date anterior to the will, and which, at her death, was found in the cabinet. Read v. Stewart, 4 Russ. 69.

—— Stock.]—Bequest of "all the testator's money in the Bank of England" :—Held, to pass stock in the funds, testator having never had any cash in the bank. Gallini v. Noble, 3 Mer. 691.

Stock in the funds held in trust for the wife for life, with remainder as the husband should appoint, and in default to his executors, administrators, or assigns :—Held, not to pass under the will of the husband by the words "money he might have in the books of the Governor and Company of the Bank of England." Howell v. Gayler, 5 Beav. 157 ; 11 L. J., Ch. 398.

A testator, by his will, appointed A. and B. to be his executors, to take and receive all moneys that might be in his possession, or due to him at the time of his death, to be by them placed in the funds or otherwise laid out on security, the interest thereof to be paid to his wife for her life, and directed them, after her death, to divide the moneys held in trust by them between his two nieces. The testator had at his death only a small balance at his bankers', and the sum of 1,200*l.* consols :—Held, that the consols were disposed of by the will under the terms of moneys. Waite v. Combes, 21 L. J., Ch. 814.

The word "moneys" in a will extended, upon the context, to sums of stock. Barclay v. Maskelyne, 5 Jur. (N.S.) 12.

A., possessed of stock, made her will, and bequeathed "all the money I may die possessed of." She died possessed of no money, but of some personal chattels :—Held, that her intention could only be applied to the stock, and that it passed by her will, and did not form part of the residue. Chapman v. Reynolds, 28 Beav. 321 ; 29 L. J., Ch. 594 ; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 440 ; 8 W. R. 403.

South Sea stock and 3*l.* 5*s.* per cents. held in the context to pass by the expression "surplus money." Newman v. Newman, 26 Beav. 218 ; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 1000 ; 7 W. R. 6.

A testatrix bequeathed specific sums of South Sea stock and 3*l.* 5*s.* per cents. to her sister for life. At her death she left this money in trust to her niece, "to pay certain legacies," which did not exhaust the whole. She authorised her sister and niece (who were her executrixes) to sell out the residue of "her money" in the 3*l.* 5*s.* per Cents. over the sum she had mentioned for payment of her debts, and proceeded : "Then if there is any surplus money I give it to my niece" :—Held, that the niece took the surplus of both the funds. Ib.

Shares in an assurance company inclosed in an envelope, and indorsed "to be considered as ready money, and given to" the testator's wife :—Held, to pass under a bequest of "all sum and sums of money that might be in the house." Knight v. Knight, 2 Giff. 616 ; 30 L. J., Ch. 644 ; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 893 ; 5 L. T. 72.

A testator bequeathed all and every his household furniture and other effects, "and also all and every sum or sums of money which may be found in my house or be about my person or due to me at the time of my decease, and also all my stocks, funds, and securities for money, money due on bonds, bills, notes, or other securities which I may die seised, possessed of, or entitled to, and of any kind and description whatever, my will and intention is that my executors do and shall pay the same to H." The will contained no residuary gift :—Held, that shares in joint stock companies which belonged to the testator passed under this bequest. Herbert v. Harrison, 20 L. T. 386 ; 17 W. R. 523.

A testatrix made a bequest of "any interest or moneys to which she might be entitled on behalf of her late husband." At the time of her death she was entitled to a reversionary interest in consols and to other property, outstanding in the names of trustees, but of which she might at any time have obtained possession. As to one-third of the whole of this property, she had become directly entitled through her husband, and as to the other two-thirds through her infant son, who had acquired the same as one of the next of kin of his father :—Held, that the whole of the property passed under the bequest. Moysey v. Stuart, 23 L. T. 644.

A testator bequeathed to his sister a legacy of 100*l.* of good and lawful money of Great Britain, to be paid to her free from all expense, and a legacy of 20*l.* to his nephew, and the rest of his money to be equally divided between his brother and his niece. At his decease, his property consisted of 600*l.* Three per Cent. consols, and 119*l.* in sovereigns :—Held, that the stock did not pass under the word "money" ; under the words "free from all expense," the legacy of 100*l.* was to be paid discharged of duty. Gosden v. Dotteril, 1 Myl. & K. 56 ; 2 L. J., Ch. 15.

Under the following bequest, "to my brother, the whole of my money for his life, at his death to be divided between my two nieces, Rebecca and Mary ; my clothes to be likewise divided between them ; my watch and trinkets for my niece, Mary. I likewise declare the longest survivor of my nieces is to become possessor of the whole money." The testatrix died possessed of certain small sums of ready money or cash, but of considerable sums of stock:—Held, that stock did not pass. Lowe v. Thomas, 5 De G. M. & G. 315; 2 Eq. R. 742; 23 L. J., Ch. 616; 18 Jur. 563; 2 W. R. 499. Affirming Kay, 369.

Stock in the funds, in which a testator has a reversionary interest, will not pass by a bequest of "my goods and furniture, my plate and linen, all money and notes that may be due to me at my decease." Cowling v. Cowling, 26 Beav. 449.

Testator, after giving certain annuities, gave to H. all his books, plate, linen, china, wearing apparel, watches, jewels, and money (except his money at his bankers' or in the funds, or placed on security), and all other property not otherwise disposed of. He subsequently, after directing that if the rents, &c., should be insufficient to pay the annuities they were to be reduced pro ratâ, directed that upon the decease of the annuitants the whole personal estate was to be invested in government securities and transferred to certain societies:—Held, that money must be taken in its strict legal sense, and did not include foreign stock and stock in various railway companies, the object of the exception being to restrict, and not to enlarge; but that "all other property" was not confined to articles ejusdem generis with those preceding, but must have an extended signification as to the personalty:—Held, also, that there was an immediate gift to the societies, subject to the fund remaining in its existing state of investment to pay the annuities, the investment in government securities being postponed until the death of the last annuitant. Ludlow v. Stevenson, 2 W. R. 675; affirmed 5 W. R. 828—L.JJ.

A testator, after stating "as for his worldly goods and chattels, he bequeathed them as follows," gave certain pecuniary legacies to his sons and daughter, and then bequeathed to his daughter "all things in the house remaining" of whatever kind, and "all moneys both in the house and out of it." There was no other gift of his residuary estate. He had some moneys both in the house and out of it at his death. He had also consols standing in his name, and some shares in a benefit building society:—Held, that the bequest of "moneys" was specific, and that it did not carry the consols, the shares in the building society, or the residuary personal estate. Collins v. Collins, 40 L. J., Ch. 541; L. R. 12 Eq. 455; 24 L. T. 780; 19 W. R. 971.

—— Vested and Contingent Interests.]—A testatrix bequeathed "all my money, except the sum of 400*l.* invested in the Belgravian Dairy Co., to" A. and B. She gave "the interest of the money invested in the Belgravian Dairy Co." to C., D. and E., in equal sums for life, and "on their deaths I will that the whole sum invested as above be used for the purpose of erecting an east window in St. Martin's Church, Epsom." The testatrix's estate at the time of her death consisted of cash, 500 shares of 1*l.* each in the dairy company aforesaid (the value whereof was at that time about 30*s.* per share), stocks and shares in other companies, and also a one-fourth share in certain railway stock in reversion to which she was contingently entitled on the death of the tenant for life without children:—Held, (1) that the gift of "400*l.* invested in the Belgravian Dairy Co." was a gift of 400 shares in that company, and not a gift of 400*l.* sterling, and (2) that the words "all my money" included not only the residue of the personal property to which the testatrix was entitled in possession, but also the one-fourth share in the railway stock to which she was contingently entitled in reversion. Buller, In re, Buller v. Giberne, 74 L. T. 406.

Money and Securities for Money—Bank-notes.]—Bank-notes, being always regarded, by common usage, as cash, cannot be considered as a security for money. Southcot v. Watson, 3 Atk. 233.

—— Bankers' Deposit Notes.]—A testatrix, having money placed with her bankers on deposit notes, being receipts for the money to account for on demand, gave "all bonds, promissory notes, and other securities for money in my hands at the time of my decease, and all moneys due thereon," upon certain trusts:—Held, that the bankers' deposit notes were not included in this bequest, but passed under a residuary clause. Hopkins v. Abbott, 44 L. J., Ch. 316; L. R. 19 Eq. 222; 31 L. T. 820; 23 W. R. 227. S. P., Archibald v. Hartley, 21 L. J., Ch. 399.

—— Bond.]—A. and B. were both domiciled in England. A. lent B. money on an English bond payable to him and his executors. Afterwards B. gave A. a heritable bond, charging lands in Scotland, as an additional security, and made payable to him and his heirs at a different time, and with a different rate of interest. On the death of A.:—Held, that the English bond was the primary security, that it did not merge in the Scotch heritable bond as the jus nobilius, and that the debt passed under A.'s will executed according to the English, but not according to the Scotch, solemnities, under the general term "securities for money." Crust v. Goring, 18 Beav. 383; 24 L. J., Ch. 308; 18 Jur. 884; 2 W. R. 370.

—— Consols, Debentures, and Promissory Notes.]—A testator, who died in 1878, bequeathed all his "moneys due on mortgage, securities for money, and ready money," to trustees upon trust for his children. Part of the testator's property consisted of the following: (1) consols; (2) proportion of dividend on such consols to the date of the testator's death; (3) promissory notes; and (4) railway debenture stocks. The question was, whether such property passed under the specific gift:—Held, that the consols and promissory notes were "securities for money" within the meaning of the gift, and so also the railway debenture stocks, it being expressly provided by s. 23 of the Companies' Clauses Act, 1863, that debenture stock and interest thereon should be a charge upon the undertaking of the company; but held, that the proportion of dividend on the consols did not pass, as the Apportionment Act, 1870, applied, and the dividend must therefore be apportioned as at the date of the testator's death. Beaven, In re, Beaven v. Beaven, 53 L. T. 245.

—— I O U.]—Under a bequest of "money, and securities for money," an I O U held by the testator at the time of his death:—Held, not to pass. Barry v. Harding, 1 Jo. & Lat. 475; 7 Ir. Eq. R. 313.

—— Unpaid Legacy.]—An unpaid legacy bequeathed to a testatrix does not pass under her will by the words "moneys, and securities for moneys." Mason, In re, 34 Beav. 494; 34 L. J., Ch. 603; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 835; 13 W. R. 799.

A., a married woman, died in 1858, having bequeathed her money and securities for moneys to one, and all her separate personal estate and effects not thereinbefore disposed of to another. In 1863, A.'s mother died, having bequeathed to her a legacy and half her residue, and which bequest was saved from lapse by 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26, s. 33:—Held, that this legacy was passed under the residuary, and not under the specific, bequest in A.'s will. Ib.

—— Legal Estate of Mortgagee.]—Devise of all testator's freehold estates and all his farming stock, ready money, bills, bonds, notes, and other securities for money, and all the residue of his personal estate to trustees, their heirs, executors, &c., in trust to sell his real estates, and to sell, get in, and convert into money all his personal estate, will pass a mortgage in fee. Barber, Ex parte, Tyas, In re, 5 Sim. 451.

A testator, after several devises and bequests, gave, devised, and bequeathed all his messuages, chattels real, ready money, securities for money, debts, and personal estate to A. and B., their heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, upon certain trusts:—Held, that the legal estate in the premises mortgaged to the testator in fee passed to A. and B., the trusts declared not being repugnant to that construction. Mather v. Thomas, 6 Sim. 115. And see S. C. 10 Bing. 44; 3 Moore, 684; 2 L. J., C. P. 234.

A testator, being a mortgagee of lands in fee, gave all his moneys, "securities for money," and all his personal estate and effects, to his wife, her executors, administrators, and assigns absolutely, she paying thereout all his debts, and he appointed his wife executrix. The testator's heir-at-law was an infant. The mortgagor sold the estate. The mortgagor and the executrix of the mortgagee petitioned the court, asking that the mortgaged lands might be legally vested in the executrix, to enable her to convey in the place of the infant heir:— Held, that the legal estate passed to the executrix by the will, and the court declined to make the order asked. King's Mortgage, In re, 5 De G. & Sm. 644; 21 L. J., Ch. 673; 16 Jur. 1153.

—— Where Charge of Debts.]—On construction of devise:—Held, that although words of devise would, standing alone, have been sufficient to have carried the legal estate in the mortgaged premises which may be so devised, yet being qualified by the subjection to the payment of debts, a purpose to which the money secured was alone applicable, and not the premises, it must be taken not to have been the intention of the testator that the legal estate therein should pass; and that therefore the heir-at-law is a necessary party to reconveyance on paying off mortgage. Silvester v. Jarman, 10 Price, 78.

A residuary devise of all the testator's estate, personal and real, although made subject to the payment of his debts, passes the legal estate in premises of which the testator was mortgagee in fee, notwithstanding the case of Silvester v. Jarman (supra). Field's Mortgage, In re, 9 Hare, 414; 21 L. J., Ch. 175; 15 Jur. 1004.

A mortgagee in fee of lands of gavelkind tenure gave and devised all the residue of his personal estate and real property, moneys, and securities, and all other effects, which should remain after paying his just debts, funeral and testamentary expenses, to his wife, for her own use and benefit:—Held, that, in consequence of the devise by the will, no estate in the mortgage premises remained vested in the infant co-heirs in gavelkind of the mortgagee; and an order was therefore refused upon a petition presented under the Trustee Act, 1850, praying an order vesting the infant's estate in the petitioner. Ib.

A testator, by his will in 1832, gave all his money, securities for money, household furniture, &c., and all other the rest and residue of his personal estate and effects, subject to the payment of debts and legacies, to his wife, her executors, administrators, and assigns absolutely:—Held, that the legal estate of mortgaged hereditaments, which was vested in the testator at the date of his will, passed under the term "securities for money"; and that the concurrence of the testator's heir was not necessary to make an effectual conveyance of the mortgaged premises to a purchaser. Knight v. Robinson, 2 K. & J. 563.

The case of Galliers v. Moss (9 B. & C. 267; 4 M. & Ry. 268; 7 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 109) must be treated as overruled by subsequent decisions. Ib.

A testator, a mortgagee in fee of real estate, gave and bequeathed to A. and B. all and singular his household furniture, goods, plate, linen, and utensils whatsoever, and all and every other his goods and chattels, stock-in-trade, moneys, debts, and securities for moneys, and all and every other his personal estate and effects whatsoever and wheresoever, upon trust to get in his debts, and to sell his personal estate, and hand the money arising therefrom upon trust therein mentioned:—Held, that under these words the legal estate in the mortgaged property passed to the trustees. Walker's Estate, In re, 21 L. J., Ch. 674.

—— Sale Money.]—Money of the testator, in the hands of his salesmaster, does not pass under a bequest of all his ready money and securities for money, there being no evidence that the salesmaster acted as the banker of the testator. Smith v. Butler, 3 Jo. & Lat. 565; 9 Ir. Eq. R. 398.

—— Vendor's Lien for.]—A bequest of "all securities for money" will include money due to a testator in respect of which he had a vendor's lien for unpaid purchase-money. Gould v. Teague (7 W. R. 84) doubted. Callow v. Callow, 58 L. J., Ch. 698; 42 Ch. D. 550; 38 W. R. 104.

—— Shares in Companies.]—The context of a will must be clear to afford an indication that a testator has used the words "securities for money," which of themselves would not carry shares in public companies, in an extended sense. McDonnell v. Morrow, 23 L. R., Ir. 591.

—— Stock.]—The words "securities for money," in a will, pass stock in public funds, unless force of expression is controlled by context. Quære, as to bank stock. Bescoby v. Pack, 1 Sim. & S. 500; 2 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 17; 24 R. R. 217.

Stock included in a will under the word "securities," legacies being charged for which the securities properly so called were not sufficient. Dicks v. Lambert, 4 Ves. 725.

A testatrix bequeathed the residue of her property, of whatsoever nature and description, "not being ready money or securities for money," to three legatees:—Held, that stock in the 3½ per cents. was included in the exception, and, therefore, did not pass to the residuary legatees. Buckman v. Ives, 6 L. J., Ch. 197; 1 Jur. 234.

O. by her will gave all her "money and securities for money of every description":—Held, that these words did not carry Bank of England stock, shares in a canal company, or moneys invested on mortgage by and in the names of the trustees of the will of F., a prior testatrix to whose estate O. was entitled as residuary legatee, subject to an outstanding unpaid legacy; but that the same words carried, first, moneys which had been advanced on mortgage by F. herself, and allowed by her trustees for sixteen years after her death to remain invested on the same mortgage, and, secondly, moneys which had been advanced by F. on mortgage, and on the mortgage having been paid off after her death had been received by one of her trustees as agent for O. Ogle v. Knipe, 38 L. J., Ch. 692; L. R. 8 Eq. 434; 20 L. T. 867; 17 W. R. 1090.

Money on Security—Legal Estate of Mortgagee.]—The gift by the will of a mortgagee in fee of estates on trust for sale, and of money on securities, does not carry the legal estate in her mortgaged property. Cantley, In re, 22 L. J., Ch. 391; 17 Jur. 124; 1 W. R. 158.

The words "money in the funds and on securities" do not pass the legal estate in mortgaged premises. Ib.

A., who was mortgagee of real estate, gave by will all his real and personal estate to B., upon trust, after payment of his debts, to permit and suffer his wife to receive the rents of his real estate, and the interest of all sums of money that might be due to him on mortgage, bond, note, or other security, for her life, and at her death to get in all the debts owing to him on any security or on simple contract, and to pay the same as in his will mentioned. B. died intestate, leaving an eldest son, who was an infant, and of unsound mind, but he had not been found lunatic by inquisition. Upon a petition by the parties beneficially interested:—Held, that the legal estate in the premises mortgaged to the testator passed to B. Arrowsmith, In re, 27 L. J., Ch. 704; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 1123; 6 W. R. 642.

Will of mortgagee disposing of the money carries his interest in the land. Silberschildt v. Schiott, 3 V. & B. 45.

Gift of a mortgage security for money will pass the fee, if the estate be mortgaged in fee. Renvoize v. Cooper, 6 Madd. 371.

Money Due.]—Testator bequeathed to A. B. all his ships and money due to him at the time of his decease:—Held, that freight earned after his decease under a charter-party executed before that event, but after the will, did not pass either as "money due" or as incident to the ship. Stephenson v. Dowson, 3 Beav. 342; 10 L. J., Ch. 93; 4 Jur. 1152.

A testatrix, who was entitled to a distributive share of the assets of an intestate, to whom, at her death, no administration had been taken out, bequeaths "all such sums of money as should be owing to her, at the time of her decease, from G. B." These words will not pass her beneficial interest in a sum of money which was then due from G. B. to the estate of the intestate. Collins v. Doyle, 1 Russ. 135.

Bequest of "all sums of money due to me at the time of my decease." At the death of the testator, A. was under an unascertained liability to him for a breach of a covenant in a lease:—Held, that the damages recovered in an action brought by the executor against A. for the breach passed under the bequest, as the action merely ascertained the amount of what was due to the testator at his death. Bide v. Harrison, 43 L. J., Ch. 86; L. R. 17 Eq. 76; 29 L. T. 451.

A testatrix made a specific disposition of property, including "all sum and sums of money which shall be due and owing to me at the time of my decease," and gave the residue of her personal estate to other persons. At the time of her death in 1781, she was one of the two next of kin of her son, who had died intestate in 1778. The son was the residuary legatee of his father, who had died in 1776. In 1800 a decree was made for taking the accounts of a partnership in which the father had been engaged, and which had been dissolved by the death of the other partner a few months before the father's death. In 1820 the representatives of the surviving executor of the father paid into court a sum of money on account of what was due from the executor to the father's estate in respect of moneys coming from the partnership. Nothing was shewn as to the state of the partnership assets or of the estates of the father or son at the time of the death of the testatrix:—Held, that the moiety of the testatrix in the fund in question did not pass under the gift of "sums of money due and owing to me at the time of my decease," but under the residuary bequest, it not being shewn that the assets were at her death in such a state that her share could be treated as a sum of money then owing to her. Martin v. Hobson, 42 L. J., Ch. 342; L. R. 8 Ch. 401; 28 L. T. 427; 21 W. R. 376.

A testator, by a will made in India, gave "the whole of my personal property, together with my pay, arrears of pay, also all my goods and chattels, with any cash now in hand or money due to me or that may become due to me after my decease":—Held, that a reversionary interest in a fund in England, to which he was entitled under his parents' marriage settlement, passed. Maberley, In re, 24 L. T. 262; 19 W. R. 522.

Money due on Mortgage.]—A devisee of 200*l.* on a mortgage passes the principal only. Roberts v. Kuffin, 2 Atk. 112.

A term of 500 years was created in real estate, the trusts of the term being at the request of B. to raise and pay to him by demise, sale, or mortgage, or out of the rents, the sum of 1,500*l.*, and in the meantime, and until the whole of this sum should be raised upon trust, to pay to B. interest at 4*l.* per cent.:—Held, that the 1,500*l.* thus charged upon the land passed under a specific gift in B.'s will of "all the moneys whatsoever due to me on mortgage, and all debts owing to me on an account." Brown v. Brown, 6 W. R. 613.

A bequest of "all money which at the time of my death shall be due or owing to me on mortgage from any person or persons" does not include a sum charged upon the estate of which the testator was tenant for life, to which he had become entitled as the representative of his own younger children who had died intestate and unmarried. Poulett (Earl) v. Hood, 35 Beav. 234; 35 L. J., Ch. 253; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 85; 13 L. T. 783; 14 W. R. 298.

A testator by a specific devise bequeathed to A. a mortgage debt on estates in Ireland amounting to 10,000*l.* due to him from S. At the time of his death there was not this sum due to him on the mortgage, but only 6,781*l.* He, however, held a judgment against S. for 771*l.*, registered and re-registered according to the Irish act 13 & 14 Vict. c. 29:—Held, that the judgment debt, being duly registered at the time of the testator's death, passed to A. under the devise of the 10,000*l.* mortgage debt. Puxley v. Puxley, 1 N. R. 509; 8 L. T. 570.

The testator recited in his will that he had contracted for the purchase of farms, and had paid off and taken a transfer of a mortgage thereon from J. He directed that the purchase and conveyance should be completed, and specifically devised these farms to B. as part of his estate at L.:—Held, that the devisee was not entitled to the interest on the mortgage debt between the death of testator and completion of the purchase. Ib.

Testatrix, mortgagee of an estate of which her brother was tenant for life, and having his bond for some arrears of interest, bequeathed to him the arrears of her mortgage on his estate, likewise a bond from him in her possession; half of the mortgage money was paid before the will: the principal mortgage money does not pass. Hamilton v. Lloyd, 2 Ves. 416.

Specific bequest of all moneys, stocks, funds, shares, and other securities, "except mortgages on real and leasehold security":—Held, that mortgages on turnpike road tolls and toll-houses were not mortgages on real security, and did not come within the exception in the bequest. Cavendish v. Cavendish, 55 L. J., Ch. 144; 30 Ch. D. 227; 49 L. T. 626—C. A.

Quære, whether a debt, secured by a deposit of gems, with a written memorandum empowering the creditor to sell if default were made in payment by a day fixed, passed under the will of the latter by the description of "debts secured by mortgage." Townsend v. Martin, 7 Hare, 471.

Bequest of the debts that shall be due at the death of the testator by mortgages, bonds, or open accounts from certain persons, extended from the explanation of a similar bequest, by another clause, to debts of every description, therefore including judgments. Stenhouse v. Mitchell, 11 Ves. 352.

"Ready Money in Bank."]—A gift of "ready money in bank" includes money on deposit receipt which can be withdrawn without previous notice to the bank; secus, if previous notice is necessary. Mayne v. Mayne, [1897] 1 Ir. R. 324.

Money in the Funds.]—See Funds, supra.

Money in Hand—Balance at Bank.]—Where a testator gives to one person "all his moneys in hand," and to another "all his moneys out on securities," the balance at his banker's will pass as money in hand. Vaisey v. Reynolds, 5 Russ. 12; 6 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 172; 29 R. R. 4.

"Money I die Possessed of."]—A gift by a testatrix of "any money of which I may die possessed" includes cash in the house and money at the bankers', and any money of which, at the time of her death, she might have claimed immediate payment; but not the apportioned part of an annuity, or of interest payable to her which had accrued from the last stated days of payment to her death, nor a legacy due to her which had not been acknowledged as at her disposal. Byrom v. Brandreth, 42 L. J., Ch. 824; L. R. 16 Eq. 475; 21 W. R. 942.

Testatrix, after giving the residue of her moneys, securities for moneys, goods, and personal estate to M. by will, by a codicil gave all the residue of the moneys of or to which she might at the time of her death be possessed or entitled to N.:—Held, that "moneys" in the codicil included not only moneys actually in hand, but also moneys due to the testatrix on security or otherwise at the time of her death. Langdale v. Whitfield, 4 K. & J. 426; 27 L. J., Ch. 795; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 706; 6 W. R. 862.

F. was at the time of his death entitled to an estate in fee simple, subject to a mortgage debt, which was vested in trustees for his wife during her life, and after her death for him absolutely:—Held, that such reversionary interest passed under his will by a bequest of "sums of money upon real securities which he should die possessed of or in anywise entitled to," and did not fall into the residuary bequest. Wilkes v. Collin, L. R. 8 Eq. 338; 17 W. R. 878.

A testator gave to his wife "any money that he might die possessed of, or which might be due and owing to him at the time of his decease":—Held, that the money receivable under a policy of assurance on his own life, to which the testator was entitled, passed under the bequest. Petty v. Willson, L. R. 4 Ch. 574; 17 W. R. 778.

A testatrix, whose only property consisted of a small sum in consols, bequeathed, after the payment of her debts, "all the money she might die possessed of" to her brother and sister, and she gave her other property to her executor:—Held, that the stock passed to the brother and sister under the word "money." Chapman v. Reynolds, 28 Beav. 221; 29 L. J., Ch. 594; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 440; 8 W. R. 403.

Ready Money.]—A British subject domiciled in Russia made a will in the Russian language and in Russian form, commencing with the statement that he thereby disposed of all his property. He directed a sale of his landed estates in Russia, which he specified, and proceeded to make a disposition of "the money proceeds of all the above, as also the whole of my capital which shall remain with me, after my death, in ready money and in bank billets belonging to me." He closed his will with the statement that as all his property was entirely his own, and acquired by himself, nobody had a right to interfere with or contest his dispositions or those of his executors. It was proved that "bank billets" were a particular kind of Russian negotiable securities. At the time of his death, he had, besides his Russian property, a large sum in the English funds:—Held, that the words "in ready money and in bank billets" were not merely words of defective enumeration, but a description comprising the whole subject of the gift; that, the description of the gift being clear and unambiguous, the first and last clauses of the will were not sufficient to extend the meaning of that description, and that the property in the English funds was undisposed of.

Wylie v. Enohin, 1 De G. F. & J. 410; 29 L. J., Ch. 341; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 259; 8 W. R. 316. Affirmed, sub nom. Enohin v. Wylie, 8 H. L. Cas. 1; 31 L. J., Ch. 402; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 897; 6 L. T. 263; 10 W. R. 467.

A testator gave all his ready money to his widow. He had three half-years' dividends at the bank, for which he had not received the dividend warrants:—Held, that the unreceived dividends did not pass by the words "ready money." May v. Grave, 3 De G. & Sm. 462; 18 L. J., Ch. 401; 13 Jur. 1021.

—— Banking Account.]—A bequest of "ready money" comprehends money of the testator in the hands of his banker. Parker v. Marchant, 1 Y. & C. C. C. 290; 11 L. J., Ch. 223; 6 Jur. 292. Affirmed as to "ready money" comprehending money at bankers', 1 Ph. 356; 2 Y. & C. C. C. 279; 12 L. J., Ch. 314; 7 Jur. 457.

The testator directed his debts to be paid out of his ready money, and then gave his furniture, plate, &c., and the residue of his ready money, on certain trusts. The testator, at the date of his will, kept his money in his own house, and had no banker, but at his death he had 3,190*l.* at his bankers', and 100*l.* cash at home:—Held, that the money at the bankers' passed under the term "ready money." Taylor v. Taylor, 1 Jur. 401.

"I give to my wife all my ready money at my bankers', in my dwelling-house, or elsewhere; by which I mean money not invested in security or otherwise bearing interest, but what I may have in hand for current expenses at the time of my decease":—Held, that cash balances in the hands of the testator's bankers and of his agent, and dividends of stock due at the testator's death, passed by the bequest; but that the rent of a house, and the interest of a sum due on mortgage, did not pass. Fryer v. Ranken, 11 Sim. 55; 9 L. J., Ch. 337.

Cash of a testatrix at a savings bank, as to which she had given notice requiring payment, and which only awaited her receipt:—Held, to pass by a bequest of all her ready money. Powell, In re, Johns. 49; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 331; 7 W. R. 138.

But sums secured to her on notes of hand:—Held, not to pass by that bequest, although preceded by a direction for payment of her funeral and testamentary expenses. Ib.

A testator had at his death two sums of money at his bankers', one on a drawing account, the other on deposit, for which no notice of withdrawal was necessary; and he was also entitled to proportionate parts of two pensions, and of interest on mortgages, and of dividends on shares and stocks:—Held, that a gift of his "ready money" passed the two sums upon drawing and deposit account, but not the pensions, interest, or dividends. Stein v. Ritherdon, 37 L. J., Ch. 369; 16 W. R. 477.

—— Cash in Hands of Agent.]—A testator directed that his debts, and all charges and incumbrances affecting his estates, should be paid by the application in the first instance of all ready money and securities for money which he should die possessed of; and he charged his estates of C. exclusively with the payment of such, if any, which should remain after such application. He devised his real estate to trustees and their heirs, as to the residue thereof not before disposed of (which included C.), to the use of his wife for her life; and he bequeathed to her, in case she should survive him, all his personal property not before bequeathed. He then bequeathed a legacy, payable immediately after his decease, and gave, devised, and bequeathed, after the decease of his wife, two other legacies, and appointed his wife executrix:—Held, that money of the testator, which at his death was in the hands of a salesmaster in Smithfield, was not ready money within the meaning of the will. Smith v. Butler, 3 Jo. & Lat. 565; 9 Ir. Eq. R. 398.

R. L. P., in May, 1847, placed money in the hands of his agent, J. C., for investment on mortgage, and in April, 1848, bequeathed to his wife all his "ready money and securities for money, money in the funds, and money in the bank or banks (if any), due and owing to him at the time of his decease." J. C. died in October, 1847, without having invested the fund, but retained it in his hands; and R. L. P. died in July, 1848. In administering the estate of J. C., a claim by the executor of R. L. P. for the amount, subject to a deduction for money due by R. L. P. was allowed:—Held, that the sum due from J. C.'s estate to the estate of R. L. P. passed to the wife of the latter under the above bequest. Cooke v. Wagster, 2 Sm. & G. 296; 2 Eq. R. 789; 23 L. J., Ch. 496; 18 Jur. 849; 2 W. R. 434.

Held, that though the money did not pass under the words "ready money," yet following Parker v. Marchant (1 Ph. 356)—looking at the whole frame of the will, and the intention of the testator as indicated by the context—the money did pass, and was the legatee's money in the hands of the agent's executors. Ib.

Remainder of Money — Stock.]—The words "remainder of my money" pass all stocks and investments of money, but not the general residue other than such investments. Hart v. Hernandez, 52 L. T. 217.

A bequest of what might remain of testatrix's money after her lawful debts and legacies were paid, sufficient to pass stock. Rogers v. Thomas, 2 Keen, 8.

"Stock" held upon the context of a will not to pass by the word "money." A testatrix first directed her funeral expenses to be paid, and she gave the remainder of her moneys to B., and her wearing apparel and all other property whatsoever and wheresoever to C.:—Held, that money in the funds did not pass to B. Willis v. Plaskett, 4 Beav. 208; 5 Jur. 572.

A share in long annuities held, upon the context, to pass under the words "remaining sum or sums of money." Grosvenor v. Durston, 25 Beav. 97.

General residue of personal estate, including railway stock, held to pass under the words "residue of money," the will commencing with a general bequest of everything "in trust for the following purposes," and the gift of money being preceded by bequests of specific chattels. Montagu v. Sandwich (Earl), 33 Beav. 324; 3 N. R. 186; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 61; 9 L. T. 632; 12 W. R. 236.

A sister bequeathed 80*l.* to her brothers, and to S. 170*l.*, "also my watch, my chain, my Bible, my rings, my workbox, and all it contains, my cameo brooch and my father's miniature, and also anything else whatsoever belonging to me that he may wish to get; and I also direct that whatever money is left after my burial be handed over to him, he seeing that I am interred respectably and decently." She had at her death only a few pounds, chattels, and a sum of 500*l.* in the government funds:—Held, that the stock, after satisfying the pecuniary legacies, passed to S. Boardman v. Stanley, Ir. R. 7 Eq. 342; 21 W. R. 644.

A testatrix gave the interest of 2,777*l.* in the South Sea stock, and 2,650*l.* 3*l.* 5*s.* per Cents., to her sister for life, and at her death she left "this money" in trust to her niece, A., to pay the following legacies: to her niece, A., 1,777*l.* in the South Sea stock, and 650*l.* in the 3*l.* 5*s.* per cents.; to her niece, B., the interest of 1,000*l.* in the South Sea stock, and 900*l.* in the 3*l.* 5*s.* per cents., for her life; to her niece, C., 320*l.* in the 3*l.* 5*s.* per cents.; to her niece, D., 100*l.* in the 3*l.* 5*s.* per cents.; and she empowered her sister and her niece, A., to sell out any of the "residue of the money" in the 3*l.* 5*s.* per cents. for the payment of her debts and funeral expenses; and if there was any "surplus money," she gave it to her niece A. She appointed her niece, A., and her sister executrices:—Held, upon the general intent of the will, that there was no intestacy, and that the two sums of 1,000*l.* South Sea stock, and 900*l.* 3*l.* 5*s.* per cents., subject to the life interest therein of the testatrix's niece, B., passed to her niece, A. Newman v. Newman, 26 Beav. 218; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 1030; 7 W. R. 6.

Testator bequeathed to his wife the lease of his house and all the furniture, &c., therein for life, the interest of all money he should die possessed of, then half of the debts due to him at his death, one excepted, which he directed debtor to retain as long as he pleased, paying the interest to her, to be disposed of as she thought fit; in case the interest of the money he should die worth should not be sufficient for her maintenance, executors to allow part of principal out of the debts, except that before excepted, to make her life easy and comfortable; after her death, the interest of all money remaining to his sister; after her death, to her daughter all sums remaining for ever; if they die before his wife, one-half of all sums remaining to be disposed of as his wife should think fit, the other to A. Upon bill by testator's niece against executors of the wife, the niece held entitled to all beyond the debts, and a moiety of all debts but that excepted; the other moiety to wife's executors, who, being also executors of testator, were decreed to take out of wife's share a sum advanced under their power. Collet v. Lawrence, 1 Ves. 268.

—— Reversionary Interests.]—A., an officer in the army under orders at Cape Town to return to England, after bequeathing small legacies to men of his regiment, and directing that certain articles should be sent home to his father and disposed of as he should think proper, devised "that the remainder of his money and effects might be expended in purchasing a suitable present for his godson, son of the paymaster of the regiment," a boy of about a year old. The testator died at Cape Town. After satisfying the debts and the bequests there remained in the hands of the paymaster a small balance of money. At the time of his death the testator was entitled to reversionary interests in stock, expectant on the death of his mother and father, both of whom were living at his death:—Held, that the reversionary interests in the stock did not pass under the bequest of "all the remainder of his money and effects to be expended in purchasing a suitable present for his godson." Borton v. Dunbar, 2 De G. F. & J. 338; 30 L. J., Ch. 8; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 1128; 3 L. T. 519; 9 W. R. 41. Affirming 2 Giff. 221.

A bequest of any "money" which may remain after payment of his debts:—Held, to pass a reversionary interest in a sum charged on real estate. Stocks v. Barre, Johns. 54; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 537; 7 W. R. 247.

—— Insurance Policy.]—A testator, after making certain specific gifts, gave to his widow "the remainder of all my moneys, wherever it may be, in bonds, or consols, or anything else," for her sole use as long as she should live, but not to give it away from his sons or daughters at her death; and the testator, after disposing of the remainder of all his moneys, made a further specific gift. The testator died possessed of furniture, a leasehold house, and a policy of insurance, not specifically bequeathed:—Held, that the gift of the remainder of his moneys by the testator did not include the furniture and leasehold house, but did include the policy. Stooke v. Stooke, 35 Beav. 396; 14 W. R. 564.

Held, also, that the wife was entitled to all the testator's residuary personal estate invested in any security. Ib.

Mortgages on Real Security.] — Specific bequest of all moneys, stocks, funds, shares, and other securities, "except mortgages on real and leasehold security":—Held, that mortgages of turnpike road tolls and toll-houses were not mortgages on real security, and did not come within the exception in the bequest. Cavendish v. Cavendish, 55 L. J., Ch. 144; 30 Ch. D. 227; 53 L. T. 652—C. A.

Occupancy of House.]—Under a bequest to a wife of furniture and effects, and the free occupancy of a house for life, after which the effects to revert back to the estate, the free occupancy of the house entitled the wife either to reside in it or to let it during her life. Mannox v. Greener, L. R. 14 Eq. 456; 27 L. T. 408.

Testator directed that his wife should have liberty to occupy his house for a year, provided she continues so long in L. Then by a distinct clause he directed his executors to pay her a guinea a week during her stay at L. Her residence there beyond the year does not entitle her to a continuance of the weekly payment. Walker v. Watts, 3 Ves. 132.

A testator directed his trustees to allow A. to occupy a mill, so long as he should think proper to do so, "he nevertheless keeping the premises in good and tenantable repair, and paying" a rent of 100*l.* A. accepted the gift, but the premises were afterwards totally destroyed by accidental fire:—Held, that A. was bound to reinstate them, and was liable for the rent in the meanwhile, and that he could not escape from the liability to rebuild by declining any longer to retain them. Gregg v. Coates, 23 Beav. 33; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 964; 4 W. R. 735.

Partnership, "Share, Right and Interest in" —Debt due from.]—B. bequeathed all his "share, right, and interest" in the goodwill of a partnership business, and in the partnership real and personal estate, to his son, upon trusts for the benefit of the testator's wife and children :—Held, that a debt due to B. from the partnership, and on which he was receiving interest, did not pass by the trust bequest, but formed part of the testator's residuary estate. Beard, In re, Simpson v. Beard, 57 L. J., Ch. 887 ; 58 L. T. 629 ; 36 W. R. 519.

"Permit and suffer" Beneficiary to receive Rents and Profits—Legal Estate.]—A testator devised an estate to trustees, in case he should leave only one child (an event which happened), "to permit and suffer" such child to receive the rents and profits for her natural life, and declared that immediately after his death the trustee should stand seised and possessed of the hereditaments unto and to the use of the heirs of the body of such child, and the hereditaments were to be legally conveyed and assured unto such heirs of his child in equal shares as they should severally and respectively attain the age of twenty-one years or be married, and to their several and respective heirs and assigns for ever, the rents and profits in the meantime to be paid and applied by the trustees for the maintenance and education of such heirs of the child in such manner as the trustees should direct :—Held, that, notwithstanding the use of the words "to permit and suffer," the legal estate remained throughout in the trustees ; that the rule in Shelley's Case applied ; and that the will created an estate tail in the testator's daughter. Decision in Montgomery v. Montgomery (3 Jo. & Lat. 60) criticised by Lord Macnaghten. Van Grutten v. Foxwell, 66 L. J., Q. B. 745 ; [1897] A. C. 658 ; 77 L. T. 170—H. L. (E.)

Personal Ornaments.]—A pocket book and a case of instruments usually carried about the person of testator :—Held, not to pass under the words "personal ornaments" ; but whether a gold pencil case, toothpick, lip-salve box, and eye glass similarly circumstanced would pass, quære. Willis v. Curtois, 1 Beav. 189 ; 8 L. J., Ch. 105.

Personal Estate.]—A. having debts due to him by bond, and being possessed of a term for years, gave one moiety of his personal estate to his wife, and several legacies to other persons, and the residue to S. The wife shall have one complete moiety, if the other is sufficient to pay the debts, and she shall have a moiety of the lease. Lee v. Hale, 1 Ch. Ca. 16 ; 2 Freem. 157. See also Reynolds v. Hyde, 2 Barnard. K. B. 422.

A testator devised his real estate (subject to charges) in strict settlement, and gave all his "railway, canal, and navigation shares . . . and personal estate" to his executor, to pay his debts and legacies, and his residuary personal estate and effects to M. He was possessed of two navigation shares, which by the act creating them were made of the nature of real estate. Before his death, the undertaking to which the shares belonged became vested in a railway company, by an act which provided for an extinguishment of the freehold rights in the shares, upon their conveyance to the railway company. The shares were never conveyed to the railway company :—Held, that by the railway company's act, or if not, by the will, they were converted into personal estate, and went to the residuary legatee under the gift of his personal estate and effects. Cadman v. Cadman, 41 L. J., Ch. 468 ; L. R. 13 Eq. 470 ; 20 W. R. 356.

A. tenant for life, in case she should so long live, and continue unmarried ; in case of her marriage, to her in fee ; in case of her decease, unmarried, to her sister, B., in fee. A. and B., and the husband of B., join in a sale by fine ; the purchase-money was laid out in funds in names of trustees, without any declaration of trust, or agreement as to the application ; nor was any notice of this fund taken in the wills of B. and her husband. B., being the survivor, made a general disposition of all her personal estate in favour of A. Although still unmarried, A. was held absolutely entitled to the stock. Seawen v. Blunt, 7 Ves. 171.

A bequest of a moiety of the interest of the residue of the testator's personal estate :—Held, upon the context of the will, to pass the interest of the proceeds of real estate, which were directed to be invested so as to form one mixed fund with the residue of the personalty. Byam v. Munton, 1 Russ. & M. 503 ; 8 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 156.

Trustees holding moneys in trust for a married woman invested the amount in the purchase of land ; and, by the purchase deed, to which the vendor and they were the only parties, they declared themselves possessed of the estate, in trust to pay the income to the married woman for her separate use for life, and after her decease in trust for the benefit of all the children of the husband and wife equally between them ; and in default of children without issue, then in trust for the husband in fee ; and power was reserved to the trustees, at the request of the husband and wife, to sell the property ; and thereupon, with all convenient speed, to lay out the produce in the purchase of other freehold estates and so on toties quoties. At the end of fifteen years the estate was sold, and the purchase-money was invested as money, and the income was paid to the married woman for forty-four years until her death. Several years after the sale of the estate, the trustees, by a deed, which the husband and wife executed, declared that they held the fund upon the trusts of the first purchase deed. The husband died intestate, and the wife survived him for ten years. By her will she gave "all" her "personal estate and effects whatsoever and wheresoever, and of every kind soever, either in possession, remainder, reversion or expectancy," unto two of her children :—Held, that there was no evidence that the widow intended to change the character of the fund from being real estate ; that there being children entitled for their lives to the fund, it was not competent for her alone to change its character ; but that, as the property vested in her subject to her children's life interest, it was competent to her to have given such reversionary interest by will, but that the words she had used were not sufficient to include it. Gillies v. Longlands, 4 De G. & Sm. 372 ; 20 L. J., Ch. 441 ; 15 Jur. 570.

Real estate was settled by a marriage settlement, not comprising any personal estate. The tenant for life sold part of the land to a company under the powers of its act, and the proceeds were paid into court and invested. Afterwards, the tenant for life, under the power in the settlement, appointed by will to his son the whole of the settled estate, and the purchase-money of the part which had been sold. The son by will disposed of his residuary personal estate of which he might be possessed, or over which he might have any power of disposition at his death, including in such personal estate "all moneys to which I may be entitled under the marriage settlement of my father and mother"; and he declared that he did not by his will intend to dispose of any real estate, but only of personal estate and chattels real. The widow of the tenant for life, who was entitled to a jointure, was still living:—Held, that the fund arising from the sale did not pass by the will. Skeggs, In re, 2 De G. J. & S. 533; 13 W. R. 567.

Personal Property.]—See Montresor v. Montresor, infra, col. 1169.

Plant and Goodwill.]—Under a gift of "the plant and goodwill of my business in Aldersgate Street":—Held, that stock in trade and furniture in the house of business did not pass; but it appeared that the house was held by the testator on a lease, of which a few years remained, at a rack rent, and exclusively for the purposes of business:—Held, that the testator's interest in the house passed under the bequest. Blake v. Shaw, Johns. 732; 8 W. R. 410.

Plantation.]—Semble, that by a devise of a W. I. plantation, the stock, implements, utensils, &c., upon it will pass. Lushington v. Sewell, 1 Sim. 435.

Plate.]—A bequest by a testator of all the furniture (except plate and pictures) which might be in a house mentioned at his decease:—Held, to be confined to articles of solid silver, and not to include a plated service in the said house. Holden v. Ramsbottom, 4 Giff. 205; 1 N. R. 307; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 350; 7 L. T. 735; 11 W. R. 302.

R. after giving a legacy and an annuity to H., bequeathed to her for life a leasehold house at Chelsea which he occupied, in case he should be residing therein at the time of his death; and also absolutely all the furniture (except plate and pictures) which might be in the house at his decease; but in case she did not have the benefit of these contingent bequests, the annuity was to be increased. The testator died in the house at Chelsea. At his decease there were in the house a service of plated silver, and some articles of solid silver:—Held, that the plated articles passed to the legatee, the term "plate" meaning solid plate only. Ib.

And see Use of Plate, infra.

Portrait.]—A testator bequeathed the portraits of himself, of his grandfather and grandmother, of his mother and of the Duke of Schomberg, to A. B. The testator had one portrait of himself, one of his grandfather and grandmother, and one of his mother, and a three-quarters portrait and a portrait in crayons of the Duke of Schomberg, and also a picture in which the duke was represented on horseback, with a battle in the distance:—Held, that that picture was a portrait of the duke, and that it passed, together with all the other portraits, by the bequest. Leeds (Duke) v. Amherst (Lord), 13 Sim. 459; 14 L. J., Ch. 73; 9 Jur. 359.

House and Furniture to A.—Power to B. to choose everything he might desire from the Furniture.]—A testator, by his will, devised to A. a certain house and the furniture therein, except what he otherwise disposed of by will or codicil. By his codicil he empowered B. to choose everything he might desire from the furniture at the said house, except certain specified articles:—Held, that the testator intended B. to take all, or as much as he liked, of the furniture in question other than the excepted articles, and was not bound to leave a substantial portion thereof. Sharland, In re, Kemp v. Rozey, 74 L. T. 664—C. A.

Property in Possession.]—A husband transferred money in the funds in the joint names of himself and wife, for the purpose of making a provision for her; and by his will he bequeathed to his wife a life interest in "all his property that he was in possession of":—Held, that the stock did not pass. Low v. Carter, 1 Beav. 426.

Premises.]—The word "premises" where in a will it is not used in its primary meaning of "præmissa," is equivalent to appurtenances. Read v. Read, 15 W. R. 165.

Therefore, where a testator excepted from a general devise the yard and premises where he carried on his business, a house adjoining to and communicating with his business premises, and in which he resided when he carried on his business, was not included in the exception. Ib.

A testator, by will, after giving annuities, directed that the surplus of the rents, profits, and interest of his real and personal estate should be applied by his trustees in the reduction of mortgage and other charges upon his estates. Subject thereto, he delivered his S. estate to trustees for his sons for life, and empowered his trustees to permit the person entitled for life or any greater estate in the property, to occupy the mansion, gardens, and "premises" rent free. The home farm had no farm-house, and the farm buildings and farm were occupied by the testator at the time of his death:—Held, that the word "premises" must be taken to mean property in immediate connection with the mansion and without which the mansion could not be conveniently occupied, and that it did not include a farm occupied by the testator and near the mansion-house, but not otherwise necessary for its convenient occupation than as a means of supplying it with necessary farm produce. Lethbridge v. Lethbridge, 4 De G. F. & J. 35; 31 L. J., Ch. 737; 6 L. T. 727; 10 W. R. 449. See S. C., 3 De G. F. & J. 253; 30 L. J., Ch. 388; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 296; 4 L. T. 127.

Premium.]—See Insurance, supra.

Profits—Of Land.]—A gift of "the profits arising in my will" by a codicil to a will which disposed of the rents and profits of real estate:—Held, to be confined to the produce of the real estate. Elgood v. Cole, 21 L. T. 80; 17 W. R. 953.

One, possessed of a term for years, devises all the profits thereof to S.; only the profits accruing from the death of the testator shall pass. Tissen v. Tissen, 1 P. Wms. 503.

—— Of Business.]—A testator directs, that W. F. shall, with a capital taken out of his assets, continue his, the testator's, business; that he shall bind D. G. apprentice to himself; that he shall take D. G. into partnership at the end of his apprenticeship, or so soon after as he shall think him capable; and that D. G. shall have one-third of the profits of the business: D. G. is not entitled to claim any share of the profits which are made before he is admitted into partnership. Gordon v. Rutherford, Turn. & R. 373; 2 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 50; 26 R. R. 183.

Property.]—On a gift by a testator of all his freehold house and property situate in Wright's Road:—Held, that scaffolding and building materials situate in the ground near the house did not pass. Conway v. Vernon, 2 Giff. 277; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 958.

A testator gave his freehold estate "and property, whether real or personal," to A. for life; and after her decease, he gave "all his said freehold estate and property" to B. and wife for life; and after their decease, he gave "all his said freehold property" to their children, "for an estate of inheritance in fee-simple," and, in default, he gave "his freehold estate and property" to C., his heirs and assigns, in fee-simple. He charged his personal estate with some legacies, and he gave the residue of which he should die possessed, &c., to A.:—Held, that B. and his children took no interest in the personal estate, which belonged to A. Hollingsworth v. Shakeshaft, 14 Beav. 492; 21 L. J., Ch. 722.

Property at Interest.]—A testator gave his property at interest and in the funds to A. S., and he left to his executors any cash or bank-notes in his drawer in the study, or in his drawing-room; and by a codicil he left to the servants living with him at his death, one year's wages each, and stated that he left in his drawer in the study money to pay servants, and any surplus over he left to his executors:—Held, first, that deposit receipts passed to A. S. as property at interest. Sealy v. Stawell, Ir. R. 2 Eq. 326.

Held, secondly, that there being no cash in the study drawer or drawing-room, the bank post bills and cheques went to the executors for their own benefit, subject to the payment of the servants' wages. Ib.

"All my Personal Property"—Enumeration comprising Real Estate—After-acquired Freeholds.]—A testator, by his will, dated in 1875, gave and devised to the wife Rebecca "all my personal property, wherewith it has pleased God to bless me; that is, my freehold land, and my two cottages, Pennce Birr, situated at Clowstop . . . also my five leasehold houses . . . to have and to hold the same for her natural life." He then directed her to provide "out of the rents of the above property" for a granddaughter of hers, and concluded, "my wife Rebecca to be sole executor of the same." Subsequently to the date of his will the testator acquired other freehold property at Clowstop, of which, together with personal property, besides the leaseholds, he died possessed. The question was, what property passed by the will:—Held, that the words "personal property" were not used in their technical sense; that the testator meant to give all the property of every kind belonging to him personally; that this general description was not cut down by the words of enumeration which followed; and that the widow was entitled, for her life, to all the real and personal estate of the testator which he possessed at the date of his death. Smalley, In re, Smalley v. Smalley, 49 L. T. 662.

Property Whatsoever.]—A testator "devised and bequeathed his lands and property whatsoever in Australia," together with the arrears of rents, to A. and B., "their heirs and assigns," and he gave the residue of his estate and effects to C.:—Held, that his personalty in Australia passed under the first gift. Robinson v. Webb, 17 Beav. 260. See also Roberts, In re, Kiff v. Roberts, supra, col. 1120.

"Real Estate"—Leaseholds for Years.]—A testator by his will, dated in 1870, declared that his trustees should stand possessed of and interested in the annual income and proceeds of his real and personal estate in trust to pay an annuity to his wife, and after her decease he declared and directed that his trustees should stand possessed of and interested in his real and personal estate upon the trusts and for the intents and purposes following, that is to say, "as to my real estates wheresoever situate (the Victoria Park Cemetery in the parish of St. Matthew, Bethnal Green, excepted)" in trust to pay the annual rents and proceeds thereof to two children as therein mentioned, "and as to my freehold estate called the Victoria Park Cemetery, and my personal estate wheresoever situated, upon trust to pay the dividends, interest, and annual proceeds thereof," to his five daughters in equal proportions. The personal estate comprised certain leaseholds for years:—Held, that according to the true construction of the 26th section of the Wills Act (1 Vict. c. 26) the leaseholds for years did not pass under the gift of the real estates. Wilson v. Eden (16 Beav. 153) discussed; Turner v. Turner (21 L. J., Ch. 843) and Gully v. Davis (L. R. 10 Eq. 562) discussed and distinguished. Butler v. Butler, 54 L. J., Ch. 197; 28 Ch. D. 66; 52 L. T. 90; 33 W. R. 192.

B., by will, gave all his real estate in Kent to trustees upon trust for his sons, in strict settlement, and he gave all his real estate in the several counties of Durham and Middlesex, and elsewhere, and certain land at Stillington, in the county of Durham, held on lease from Merton College, Oxford, and all the residue of his personal estate, upon trust as to the personal estate for sale and conversion as therein mentioned, and as to the said real and leasehold estates in the counties of Durham and Middlesex, subject as to the said leasehold estate to the rents and covenants in the then present or any future lease thereof reserved or contained, upon the like trusts as were thereinbefore declared concerning the hereditaments in Kent. The testator at his death possessed in Kent a freehold mansion and estate; in Middlesex, a leasehold house only, and no real estate properly so called; in Durham, both freehold and leasehold lands in addition to the lands at Stillington mentioned in the will:—Held, that s. 26 of the wills act applied, and all the leaseholds passed under the gift of real estate in the counties of Durham and Middlesex. Davison, In re, Greenwell v. Davison, 58 L. T. 304.

Rents.]—See Ground Rents, supra.

Rents and Profits.]—Testator being seised in fee of freehold collieries, for which he received a rent, and also having shares in a leasehold colliery, directed that his legacies should be paid "out of the rents and profits of his collieries":—Held, that the freehold collieries only were charged. Shipperdson v. Tower, 4 Y. & C. C. C. 441; 6 Jur. 658.

And see Profits, supra.

Rent and Interest.]—Arrears of annuity held to pass under a bequest of "all arrears of rent and interest due." Hele v. Gilbert, 2 Ves. Sen. 430.

Residence Rent Free.]—A. by a codicil to his will stated that whereas he had made too small a provision for his wife, he thereby bequeathed to her a certain annuity for her life, and he also directed that his said wife might reside rent free in his then residence during her life. The widow inhabited the house for some years after the testator's death, but then let it and received the rents:—Held, that the widow, in so doing, was not residing in the house within the meaning of the codicil, and that she was not entitled to retain for her own use the rents received from the house, but must pay them over to the trustees of the will. May v. May, 44 L. T. 412.

Proviso that, until the sale of certain premises directed to be sold under trust for sale, the settlor and his wife, during their joint lives and the survivor after the death of either, should be permitted to reside in and enjoy all or any of the premises rent free:—Held, that where husband and wife did not both elect to reside on the settled premises, the proviso did not enable the husband to do so. Rainy v. Ellis, 27 L. T. 463.

A permission to reside in a house without paying rent gives no right to the rents and profits of the house. Parker v. Parker, 1 N. R. 508.

See also Occupancy and Use, supra.

Remainder—General Words followed by Particular.]—A testator by his will having made a bequest of a sum of money secured by a mortgage proceeded in the following terms:—I leave "the remainder of my personal property in funds, Royal Bank, and other deposit dockets to my wife absolutely." He left pecuniary legacies to two individuals:—Held, that the words "in funds, Royal Bank, and other deposit dockets," did not cut down the generality of the gift of "the remainder" of his personal estate, which passed to the testator's wife under the bequest. Tighe v. Featherstonhaugh, 13 L. R., Ir. 401.

And see Money, Remainder of, supra.

Residue—Direction that Share shall fall into.]—A testator bequeathed the residue of his personal estate to his wife for life, and after her death to his sister and three brothers in equal shares; but directed that in the event of his sister dying unmarried in his wife's lifetime (which happened), "her one-fourth should fall into the residue":—Held, that there was no intestacy as to the sister's one-fourth, but that the whole residue was, on the widow's death, divisible in thirds between the three other legatees. Humble v. Shore; and Lightfoot v. Burstall (post, col. 1205); and Crawshaw v. Crawshaw (post, col. 1209) considered. Rhoades, In re, Lane v. Rhoades, 54 L. J., Ch. 573; 29 Ch. D. 142; 53 L. T. 15; 33 W. R. 608.

Testator by his will bequeathed an absolute interest in his residuary estate amongst four persons, including M., in certain shares. By a codicil he altered the gift in the will as to M.'s share by restricting it to an interest for her life only, and directed that, upon M.'s death, "the same should fall into and form part" of his residuary estate; and in all other respects he confirmed his will:—Held, that there was no intestacy as to the remainder expectant on the death of M. in her one-fifth share of the residue, because, on the true construction of the will and codicil read together, such remainder had been effectually given to the other residuary legatees. Humble v. Shore (post, col. 1208) overruled. Palmer, In re, Palmer v. Answorth, 62 L. J., Ch. 988; [1893] 3 Ch. 369; 2 R. 619; 69 L. T. 477; 42 W. R. 151—C. A.

Securities.]—See Money, Securities for, supra.

Securities held by Bank—Shares—Inscribed Stock.]—M., by will, gave to a charity, "all the securities in my name now held, or which may hereafter be held for me by Lloyd's Bank, of 54, St. James's street, London, S.W." M. was living in India at the time of his death, and the bank then held, on his behalf, besides a number of bonds and debentures and certificates of debenture stock, the certificates for 200 ordinary shares of the Globe Telegraph Trust Company. The testator was also entitled to 3,000*l.* India three per cent. stock, and had given the bank a power of attorney to receive the dividends thereon, and to sell the stock. The bank did not hold any certificate or document of title relating to this stock:—Held, that the Globe shares were not securities, and that the India stock was not in any sense held by the bank, and therefore neither of these passed under the bequest. Maitland, In re, Chitty v. Maitland, 74 L. T. 274.

Security, Real.]—See Mortgage, supra.

Seised.]—R., being seised of freehold houses, died intestate in 1864, leaving A. his sole heiress-at-law. Upon R.'s death, his widow wrongfully entered into possession, and retained possession till her death in 1869, when her devisees entered. A. died in 1871, without ever having entered into possession of the property, having devised to L. all real estate (if any) of which she might die seised. An action having been brought by L. against the devisees of R.'s widow for recovery of the land:—Held, that "seised" being a purely technical word, and there being no qualifying context, it must be construed according to its technical meaning; and that as A. at the time of her death had no seisin at law or in fact, the property did not pass under her devise. Leach v. Jay, 47 L. J., Ch. 876; 9 Ch. D. 42; 39 L. T. 242; 27 W. R. 99—C. A.

"Settled Funds."]—By a marriage settlement, a husband covenanted that his representative should, after his death, pay a sum of money to the trustees of the settlement to be held by them upon the trusts thereof. The husband died, and the covenant was never called into operation by the wife, the only person who had any interest in its performance. By her will she made a bequest of "all her husband's settled funds":—Held, that his gift did not include the money covenanted to be paid under the settlement. Moysey v. Stuart, 23 L. T. 644.

Settlement, "Property not included in."]—By an ante-nuptial settlement a sum of 7,356*l.*, the property of the wife, was vested in trustees in trust, that if the husband should, within six months, secure payment to them of 4,000*l.* by mortgage of certain hereditaments belonging to him; they would pay him 4,365*l.*, part of the 7,356*l.* (of which 356*l.* was to be for his own use); and the mortgage debt of 4,000*l.* was ultimately, in case of no children of the marriage, which happened, to be upon trust for the husband. After the marriage the mortgage was made, and by his will the husband gave to his wife "all our furniture, horses, and movables at Chester, as well as all her own fortune not included in our marriage settlement, for her sole use as a feme sole should she marry again":—Held, that the ultimate absolute interest of the testator in the 4,000*l.* mortgage debt passed to the wife under the bequest to her of all her own fortune not included in the marriage settlement. O'Reilly v. Smyth, 1 Ir. Ch. R. 349.

Personal property was put in settlement on the marriage of A. with B. The trusts were inter alia for A. (the intended husband) for life: afterwards for B. (the wife) for life; and ultimately, in events which happened, as to one moiety of the trust fund for A., his executors, administrators and assigns. By his will, after confirming his marriage settlement, A. bequeathed all his property "not included in the above marriage settlement" to his executors, in trust for four of his children:—Held, that the moiety of the trust fund reserved to A., his executors, administrators, and assigns, under the limitations of the settlement, passed under the devise. Green, In re, Walsh v. Green, 31 L. R., Ir. 338.

Shares in Railway.]—A testator bequeathed some railway shares, "and all his right, title, and interest therein":—Held, that moneys which he had paid in advance beyond the calls, passed to the legatee. Tanner v. Tanner, 11 Beav. 69; 17 L. J., Ch. 115; 12 Jur. 87.

A testator who had stock in the public funds, and also stock in a railway company and partly paid-up shares in the same company, made a bequest of "all such stocks in the public funds or shares in any railway" of which he might die possessed:—Held, that the railway stock passed under the bequest. Morrice v. Aylmer, 45 L. J., Ch. 614; L. R. 7 H. L. 717; 34 L. T. 218; 22 W. R. 107; 24 W. R. 587.

—— In Mines.]—Shares in a partnership formed for working a slate quarry, pass under a bequest in a codicil of "all shares, debentures, or securities in railways or mines of which the testator should die possessed," the testator having no other interest in quarries or mines at the date of his codicil, but having since bought, and dying possessed of, some transferable shares in a mining company. Cleveland (Duchess) v. Meyrick, 37 L. J., Ch. 125; 16 W. R. 104.

"Shares" in Company—Debentures.]—A testator bequeathed all his stock, shares, and debentures in the M. bank, shares in four other companies (including the A. gas company), and all other shares in banks or public companies, not otherwise disposed of. At the time of his death the testator possessed one hundred and thirty-five shares in the A. gas company, and also 2,000*l.* debentures in that company:—Held, that the debentures did not pass under the bequest. Luard v. Lane (post, col. 1265) questioned. Dillon v. Arkins, 17 L. R., Ir. 636—C. A.

A bequest of all a testator's "shares" in a public company will not pass debenture stock. Dictum of James, L.J., in Attree v. Hawe (9 Ch. D. 349) discussed and explained. Bodman, In re. Bodman v. Bodman, 61 L. J., Ch. 31; [1891] 3 Ch. 135; 65 L. T. 522; 40 W. R. 60.

A testatrix gave "my shares in" a railway company to W. The testatrix held debenture stock, but did not hold any shares in the company:—Held, that the testatrix, by the bequest, intended to pass something, which she had, to W.: and that, as she had no shares, the debenture stock passed. Weeding, In re, Armstrong v. Wilkin, 65 L. J., Ch. 743; [1896] 2 Ch. 364; 74 L. T. 651; 44 W. R. 556.

"Shares and Interest" in Assurance Company.]—A shareholder in an assurance company bequeathed all and every his "shares and interest" in the company, and "all the advantages to be derived therefrom." There was also a general residuary bequest. The rules of the company required each shareholder to effect, or procure to be effected, an assurance to a prescribed amount, and provided that one-third of every bonus on a policy should be added to the capital of the company:—Held, upon the whole context of the will and codicils, that neither the moneys made payable by a policy effected by the testator on his own life nor the proportion of a bonus payable in respect of the policy, passed under the above words to the specific legatees. Harrington v. Moffatt, 4 De G. M. & G. 1; 1 Eq. R. 35; 22 L. J., Ch. 775; 1 W. R. 294.

Stock—Live Stock.]—Testator gives "all his stock, cattle, horses, and carriages" to his wife absolutely, and gives his "farm and stock, and crop thereof," to his said wife during widowhood:—Held, live stock upon the farm given to the wife during widowhood, passed to her absolutely under the former clause. Randall v. Russell, 3 Mer. 190; 17 R. R. 56. And see Hardman v. Johnson, 3 Mer. 347; 17 R. R. 95.

—— Growing Crops.]—A tenant for life of a plantation in Jamaica bequeaths and devises to A., his heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, all her negro, mulatto, and other slaves, men, women, and children, and all her cattle, mules, horses, asses, and other live and dead stock upon that plantation, and all other her real estate in Jamaica, and, after various specific and pecuniary legacies, she gives the residue of her goods, chattels, and personal estate and effects to B. A. is entitled to the growing crops, which were on the plantation at the death of the testatrix. Blake v. Gibbs, 5 Russ. 13; 29 R. R. 1.

—— Malthouse Stock.]—W. devised all his household goods, cattle, corn, hay, and implements of husbandry, and stock belonging to his house, messuage, farm, and premises held by him on lease, to his wife for life:—Held, that a malthouse being included in the lease, the stock of that as well as the stock in husbandry, will pass by the bequest. Brooksbank v. Wentworth, 3 Atk. 64.

And see Farming Stock, supra.

—— Books and Wine.]—A testator gave to his widow for her own absolute use and disposal "all his furniture, linen, plate, pictures, carriages, horses, and other live and dead stock which might be in his use and possession" at the time of his death:—Held, that the wine, which was of the value of about 150*l.*, and the books, about 50*l.*, passed to her by the specific bequest. Hutchinson v. Smith, 1 N. R. 513; 8 L. T. 602; 11 W. R. 417.

—— Plate and Linen.]—"Stock" held not to include plate, furniture or linen. Wilson v. Wilson, 11 Jur. 793. And see S. C., 1 De G. & Sm. 152.

Stock in Trade.]—A bequest "of my stock in trade and debts accruing therefrom" passes the stock in trade and trade debts existing at the testator's death. Ferguson v. Ferguson, Ir. R. 6 Eq. 199.

A testator, who was a barge builder, specifically bequeathed to his son his business, "together with all and singular his stock in trade as a barge builder." It is a custom in the testator's trade for a barge builder, when selling a new barge, to accept an old barge in part payment, and to repair such old barge and let the same out on hire. At the testator's decease there were five old barges belonging to him which had been thus acquired, and were thus let out on hire:—Held, that these barges formed part of the testator's stock in trade as a barge builder, and passed under the specific bequest. Richardson. In re, Richardson v. Pilliner, 50 L. J., Ch. 488; 44 L. T. 404.

Stock in the Funds.]—In a will containing a direction to convert all personal estate except cash and money invested in the parliamentary stocks, and the testatrix had a sum in long annuities:—Held, as between tenant for life and remainderman, that the long annuities must be converted. Reynolds v. Brown, 1 W. R. 50.

A. bequeathed all his "stock and money in the funds," and all the residue of his estate and effects whatsoever, both real and personal upon trust, after payment of debts, to convert into cash all his residuary estate and effects, except the freehold, copyhold, leasehold, and stocks:—Held, that certain long annuities were, as "stock and money in the funds," within the exception from the general direction to convert the residuary estate. Grant v. Mussett, 2 L. T. 133; 8 W. R. 330.

—— Purchase-money of Real Estate Invested in.]—Freeholds in which a lunatic was interested, were taken compulsorily by a company, and the purchase-moneys, which, under the act of parliament, were liable to be invested in land, were paid into court, and laid out in the government funds. The existence of the fund was overlooked, and it went on accumulating. A., who became tenant in tail in possession, with immediate remainder to her in fee, devised her real estate, and bequeathed "all such capital, stock, and moneys as she should be possessed of, or interested in, at her death, in the public, government, or parliamentary funds"; but she expressed no further intention as to conversion:—Held, that the principal fund passed as real estate, and the accumulations as personal estate. Dixie v. Wright, 32 Beav. 662.

—— Money to be Laid Out In.]—A testator having at the date of his will a mortgage to secure the re-purchase of a sum of three per cent. consols, of which he had lent the produce on a previous sale, it was held to pass by a bequest of so much stock. Collison v. Curling, 9 Cl. & F. 88; 6 Jur. 673. Affirming 4 Myl. & Cr. 63.

A gift by will of all the interest of the testatrix in certain stock, followed by a codicil, directing that a debt owing to her should at her death be laid out in the same stock, will not pass the amount of the debt to the legatee of the stock. Havard v. Price, 2 Hare, 98; 6 Jur. 1011.

—— Bonus on.]—Under a bequest of the interest, dividends, proceeds, and profits of a sum in stock to S. for life, and of the stock after death of S., to A., but if A. should die before twenty-one to S., a bonus on the stock given under statute 56 Geo. 3, c. 96, was held to belong to A. as the legatee of the stock. Hooper v. Rossiter, 13 Price, 774; M'Cle. 527.

Legacies of 1,000*l.* stock:—Held, not to pass additional capital, given as bonus by bank under 56 Geo. 3, c. 96, subsequent to will, and before testator's death. Norris v. Harrison, 2 Madd. 268. But see Matthews v. Maude, 1 Russ. & M. 397; 8 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 106.

Stocks, Funds, and Securities — Railway Shares.]—A testator gave the residue of his moneys, railroad shares, and personal estate to trustees, in trust to invest; and after the death of his wife and failure of issue, he gave to trustees "his residuary personal estate and effects, in trust to invest and stand possessed of the investment," as well as "the stocks, funds and securities" which composed his personal estate, upon trusts over:—Held, that the railroad shares passed by the bequest over. Surtees v. Hopkinson, 18 L. J., Ch. 188; 13 Jur. 181.

"Stock Standing in my Name."]—Where a testator made a specific bequest of "all my stock standing in my name in various companies, together with all bonds, &c.":—Held, that sums in consols, and in new three per cent. annuities, a thirty years' annuity, also sums of New Zealand four per cent. stock; of Victoria, 1883, four per cent. stock; of New South Wales four per cent. stock; of Metropolitan board of works stock; of Nottingham corporation stock and dividends, passed under the bequest. Parrott, In re, Parrott v. Parrott, 53 L. T. 12.

And see Funds, Money in The, supra.

Things.]—Under a devise to A., of the testator's house, with the lands thereunto adjoining as then used and occupied by himself, and also all the household and other furniture, pictures, plate, books, and other things whatsoever usually therein, or considered as belonging thereto, except only cash, bank-notes, and securities for money,—neither carriages, carriage and riding horses, used by the testator for the accommodation of himself and his family, nor farming stock and utensils used by him in cultivating said lands, pass, although some were usually in the stables and on the lands, and were there at the time of the testator's decease. Pennefather v. Bury, 3 Jo. & Lat. 727; 9 Ir. Eq. R. 586.

Bequest of the use and enjoyment "of everything else at my house," means such things as are proper to go with the house as heirlooms, viz. fixtures and ornaments, not watches, &c. Bown v. Cornforth, 2 Ves. Sen. 277.

Timber.]—Devise of real estate to M. for life, and direction that "timber or wood which should be on his real estates, should from time to time be used for repairing the houses thereupon, or otherwise, for the benefit or advantage of his estate, and that the same should be sold, and the money arising therefrom should be applied," &c.: —Held, devise to M. carried the underwood, and that trustees, leaving sufficient timber for repairs, might cut all fit timber, except ornamental. Butler v. Borton, 5 Madd. 40; 21 R. R. 272.

Use of House.]—Testator divided his will into several clauses or articles, which he numbered; and after appointing several trustees, and providing for their succession, he by the second article of his will bequeathed to his trustees in trust for the use of his wife and children as thereinafter detailed, viz. all his household furniture, plate, medals, china, linen, books, paintings, prints, wines, provisions, horses, carriages, cows, and sheep, and all other live and dead stock in and about his premises, with all his ready money in his house and at his agent's and banker's, with all moneys due to him at the time of his decease; also he gave and devised all and every his dwelling-house and mansion, buildings, gardens, and lands, with the appurtenances, and all his real estates, upon trust as aforesaid, and upon the uses thereafter stated, that is to say, all his real estate in and about Denne Hill, &c., until the youngest of his surviving children attained the age of twenty-five years; at that period he willed that his eldest surviving child should be put into possession of all his freehold and leasehold property, including all timber and underwood, and all personal property on the estates. By a subsequent article he appointed his eldest son, or next surviving child in seniority, his residuary legatee. There were other clauses in the will, and also a testamentary writing, from which it appeared to have been a principal object of the testator to give his children the advantage of having the same home for a period after his death as they had enjoyed in his lifetime:—Held, upon these clauses taken together, that the enjoyment and rents of the testator's real estates devised by the will belonged to the testator's wife and children generally (subject or not subject to a discretionary power of regulation in the trustees) until the attainment by the youngest surviving child of the age of twenty-five; held, also, that the property described as all the testator's ready money in his house, &c., did not belong to the residuary legatee, and did not fall within the description of all personal property on the estates, &c., but was to be applied for the benefit of the wife and children. Montresor v. Montresor, 1 Colly. 693.

See also Occupancy and Residence, supra.

—— Right to Let.] — A testator devised a house and premises to trustees, desiring that the use and enjoyment of the same should be offered rent free to his eldest child for the time being as long as he or she should please; and in case of refusal, or of his or her ceasing to occupy the same, then the house and premises were to be offered to his other children in succession:—Held, that a personal occupation was required, but that this was satisfied by keeping furniture and a servant in the house with occasional occupation; but the house and premises could not be let. Maclaren v. Stainton, 27 L. J., Ch. 442; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 199.

A testator desired that his two sons might have "the use and occupation" of certain lands, they paying a stated rent; and that in default of payment, or if they converted the arable land into tillage, they should no longer have "possession" thereof:—Held, that personal use and occupation was not enjoined, and that they might underlet. Rabbeth v. Squire, 19 Beav. 70; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 218. Affirmed 4 De G. & J. 406; 28 L. J., Ch. 565; 7 W. R. 657.

Use of Plate.]—"I bequeath to my wife all the household furniture and movable goods and chattels in and belonging to my dwelling-house, except my books; I bequeath to her the use of my plate, with power to dispose of such portion thereof as she shall think proper":—Held, that the wife took a life interest only in the plate, and that, as she had not disposed of it during her life, it fell into the residue. Espinasse v. Luffingham, 3 Jo. & Lat. 186; 9 Ir. Eq. R. 129.

—— Of Wine and Consumable Stores.]—Devise upon trust to permit M. to have the use and enjoyment of house and premises free of ground rent, and also of all household furniture, carriages, horses, goods, wines, linen, &c., in or about the house for life or widowhood:—Held, M. was not to be confined to the personal use and enjoyment of the house, furniture, and effects, and that she was entitled to the wines and other consumable articles absolutely. Clive v. Clive, 2 Eq. R. 913; Kay, 600; 23 L. J., Ch. 981.

And see Wine, infra.

—— Of Book Debts or Capital in Business.]—A. bequeathed his stock-in-trade, &c., to his wife and son to be used by them in his trade and business, which he directed to be carried on by them, in partnership, during the widowhood of his wife; "and for that purpose they were to have the use of the book debts or capital which he at his death might have employed therein":—Held, that the widow and son were entitled to the book debts or capital absolutely. Terry v. Terry, 33 Beav. 232; 9 L. T. 469; 12 W. R. 66.

Vertu, Objects of.]—A. by his will bequeathed unto his wife absolutely all his or her jewels, trinkets, gold and silver plate, ornamental and other china, and all objects of vertu and taste; and he directed that his said wife should be entitled, during her life, to his leasehold messuage, with the appurtenances, in Carlton House terrace, and the statuary, furniture, and other effects purchased by him therewith, or which might be therein at the time of his decease. After his death, the said leasehold premises, statuary, and effects were directed to be sold, and the produce was made part of his residuary estate. There were in the said house at the testator's death, but not purchased by him therewith, ten pictures valued at 15,000*l.*:—Held, that the words "objects of vertu and taste" were intended to include only things ejusdem generis with those enumerated, and did not include the pictures, but that these passed under the gift of the furniture, statuary, and effects in the said leasehold messuage. Londesborough (Lord), In re, Bridgman v. Fitzgerald (Lord Otho), 50 L. J., Ch. 9; 44 L. T. 408.

Wine, "as much as She requires for Consumption."]—By his will the testator bequeathed to B. certain other legacies, "also all consumable stores in my house, except wines, with respect to which she may have as much as she requires for consumption in the house, and with respect to the rest as to which I have hereafter given specific directions in dealing with my house." In a subsequent part of the will the testator gave to his trustees his house and all the furniture, plate, linen, china, wines, and other goods, chattels, and effects therein at the time of his decease, and certain other premises occupied by him, in trust to permit B. to use and occupy such house, furniture, plate, china, and other things, and to consume as much as she cared to do of his wines for and during her life, free of all rent or compensation of the same, and free of all obligation to repair or insure the premises or property (which he expressly directed his trustees to do), and free of all rates, taxes, tithes, and other outgoings (all of which he directed his trustees to discharge); and after the death of B. the house and property were to fall into and form part of his residuary estate:—Held, that B. was only entitled to the wines which she might require for consumption; that the rule with regard to gifts of all consumable articles could not be extended to a gift such as this; and that B. was not entitled to all the wines absolutely, though it might be that she and her friends would consume the whole during her occupation of the house. Colyer, In re, Millikin v. Snelling, 55 L. T. 344.

And see Use of Wine, supra.

ii. Local Description of Real Estate.

"Kingdom of England"—Whether Wales included.]—A testator devised "all my manors, messuages, lands, tenements, and hereditaments, whether freehold, leasehold, or copyhold, situate in the several parishes of M., C., L. and W., and also in the city of B., or elsewhere in the kingdom of England"; he had no lands in England, except in the places specified in the will, but he had a large estate in Wales, in the county of Carmarthen; quære, whether the devise passed the Carmarthen estate. Okeden v. Clifden, 2 Russ. 309.

County or Place.]—A will contained the following devise: "I give my mansion-house at Tedworth, in the county of Hants, and all my manors, farms, lands, tenements, and hereditaments in the county of Hants, devised to me by my late husband, subject to annuities charged thereon by his will, and subject to an annuity charged thereon by me, and all other hereditaments in the county of Hants to which I am or shall be entitled at my death, all which hereditaments in the county of Hants are hereafter described or referred to as my Tedworth estate." The Tedworth estate was partly in the county of Hants, and partly in the county of Wilts, and had long been enjoyed as one property. There was no boundary or division line, natural or artificial, between the two counties; and the mansion-house was largely disproportioned to the estate in Hants:—Held, that that portion only of the Tedworth estate which was in the county of Hants passed under this devise. Webber v. Stanley, 16 C. B. (N.S.) 698; 33 L. J., C. P. 217; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 657; 10 L. T. 417; 12 W. R. 833.

Devise of all the freehold and real and leasehold estates in the counties of Lincoln and Cambridge (except such as I have hereinbefore disposed of), "and all the leasehold lands" at S., in the "county of Dorset, and elsewhere, which I can dispose of by this my will":—Held, that it passed freeholds in Norfolk and elsewhere wherever situate. Pinney v. Marriott, 32 Beav. 643.

Under a devise of all the testator's freehold lands situate in the parish of C., with their appurtenances, land in two adjoining parishes, which had always been let with the lands in the parish of C., and occupied by the same tenant, held not to pass. Evans v. Angell, 26 Beav. 202; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 134.

A testator devised his estate, called "Arkley Hall Farm, in the parish of Ridge," upon certain trusts for A., and his will contained a residuary devise in favour of other persons. It was shewn that certain lands in other parishes had been purchased by the testator, and added to Arkley Hall Farm, and had been constantly let with it:—Held, nevertheless, that the land in other parishes did not pass under the devise of "Arkley Hall Farm," but went to the residuary devisees. Pedley v. Dodds, L. R. 2 Eq. 819; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 759; 14 L. T. 823; 14 W. R. 884.

A will contained a general devise of all the testatrix's messuages, hereditaments, &c., at Holton-le-Clay, and a subsequent devise of all her copyholds at X., Y. and elsewhere. The testatrix had no other copyholds, except those at X., Y. and at Holton-le-Clay. The Master of the Rolls was, under the circumstances, of opinion that the copyhold at Holton-le-Clay passed by the first devise, but directed a case to be sent for the opinion of the court of common pleas. Borrell v. Haigh, 7 L. J., Ch. 139; 2 Jur. 229.

Testator, having freehold, copyhold, and leasehold estates, some of which were within the liberties of the city of H., and others within the county of H., but out of the liberties of the city, devised all his freehold, copyhold, and leasehold tenements in the city of H. or the liberties thereof, in the county of H., and his two leasehold houses on Ludgate Hill, in the city of London, to trustees in trust to sell. In a codicil he spoke of the sale authorised by his will of his estates in the city and county of H.:—Held, that the estate in the county of H., but out of the liberties of the city, did not pass by the devise to the trustees. Moser v. Platt, 14 Sim. 95; 8 Jur. 389.

A testator, who died in 1818, after devising a freehold house to his wife and her heirs, devised a residue of his freehold estates, situate in four specified parishes, or elsewhere in the county of Cambridge, to two trustees and their heirs, upon the trusts thereinafter declared concerning the same, that is to say, upon trust that they should sell his several copyholds in the parishes aforesaid, and, after satisfying the costs of the sale out of the moneys thence arising, should pay the residue to his executor for the purpose of satisfying in the first place certain legacies; and he then devised all the residue of his real and personal estate to A. B. The testator, besides freeholds and copyholds situate in the four parishes, had freeholds not situate in the county of Cambridge, and copyholds not situate within the four parishes, and all the copyholds had been surrendered to the use of his will:—Held, that the beneficial interests in all the freeholds, whether situate in the county of Cambridge or elsewhere, passed to the residuary devisee; that the legacies were a charge only on the copyholds situate in the four parishes; that no estate in those copyholds passed to the trustees, but only a power to sell; that any surplus of the moneys arising from the sale which might remain after satisfying the legacies, passed by the residuary clause; that the copyhold not situate within the four parishes passed to residuary devisees. White v. Vitty, 2 Russ. 484. See this Case further, 4 Russ. 584.

Situation or Street.]—A. bequeathed to his son all those his freehold brewhouse, buildings, and premises, situate in S. Street, whereon for many years, he had carried on the business of a brewer (except a site of a portion of the premises on which stood a room used as a counting-house); and also all that piece of land with the old malthouse standing thereon situate near S. Street. The testator had for forty-five years carried on business as a brewer on freehold premises, situate behind certain houses in S. Street. On a plot of land situate about 218 feet from S. Street, he had, upon a piece of building land bought by him some years before his death, built a malthouse and a carpenter's shop:—Held, that the malthouse did not pass to the son under the description of all the testator's freehold brewhouse, buildings, and premises in S. Street. Lambert v. Overton, 11 L. T. 503.

A person purchased a piece of land abutting on O. Street on the east and T. Street on the west. He built two houses, one in O. Street and the other in T. Street, and he divided the property into two portions. He devised "all that his freehold estate situate in T. Street":—Held, that the whole property passed. Harman v. Gurner, 35 Beav. 478.

A gift of "messuages and premises, situate No. 4," &c., held to pass garden ground occupied with the house, No. 4, but on the opposite side of the road. Hibon v. Hibon, 1 N. R. 532; 32 L. J., Ch. 374; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 511; 8 L. T. 195; 11 W. R. 455.

A testator resided in Camperdown House, and had eleven houses in Camperdown Place, and three in the rear, in Ship Row, all being leasehold. He bequeathed his leasehold estates situate Camperdown House, Camperdown Place, to his wife, for life. After her death, he bequeathed another leasehold to A., and the other leaseholds, viz. fourteen houses Camperdown, to B.:—Held, the fifteen houses passed to B. Armstrong v. Buckland, 18 Beav. 204.

A testator bought at one time certain houses in Bullen Court, in the Strand, and in Maiden Lane. The houses in the Strand were adjoining the houses in Bullen Court, which leads into that street. By his will he devised his freehold estates in Bullen Court, Strand, and Maiden Lane, in the county of Middlesex, to A. and B.:—Held, that the houses in the Strand passed under the devise. Gauntlett v. Carter, 17 Beav. 586; 23 L. J., Ch. 219; 17 Jur. 981; 1 W. R. 500.

A testatrix devised all her messuages in Denmark Court. She had five houses in the court, and another which fronted towards the Strand, and formed one side of a covered passage leading to the place where the five stood, and to the back of which was attached an out-building, abutting on ground within the court. The vice-chancellor having decided that the five houses only passed, the Lord Chancellor, on appeal, directed an ejectment to be brought by the heir-at-law against the devisee, and, on a verdict being found for the defendant, reversed the decision of the court below, and made a declaration that the house fronting towards the Strand passed with the other five. Newton v. Lucas, 1 Myl. & Cr. 391. Reversing 6 Sim. 54.

Name of Estate.]—It is the ordinary rule of a court of equity, in cases where an heir disputes the will, to grant an issue to try that question; but where he does not dispute it but acts under it, merely denying that certain portions of the land pass under the description used in it, a court of equity has full jurisdiction to determine the question thus raised without granting an issue, or may grant such issue at its discretion. In such a case parol evidence of what was considered in the lifetime of the testator to be the extent of the lands constituting the estate is receivable. A testator, who described himself as of "Ashford Hall in the county of Salop," devised "all my estates in Shropshire, called Ashford Hall," to trustees for sale:—Held, that this description was not confined to the mansion-house so called, and the lands immediately adjoining, but extended to such other lands in Shropshire as he possessed at the time of making his will. Ricketts v. Turquand, 1 H. L. Cas. 473.

A devise in 1844 of "all my Quendon Hall estates in Essex." The testatrix at the date of her will, and at her death, had a mansion called Quendon Hall, and land around it, and also other detached farms in Essex. There was no parish of Quendon Hall, nor was the term "Quendon Hall estates" a recognised appellation of any particular property:—Held, that extrinsic evidence was admissible to shew what estates the testatrix understood to be comprised in that description. For this purpose, old account books, in the handwriting of the testatrix, one containing "an account of timber cut down on the Quendon estate," and a paper headed, "1844, Quendon Hall Farms," written by the testatrix at about the date of her will, were received in evidence. Evidence was also admitted to prove that much of the property had been derived by the testatrix under the will of a relative who had appended to her gift a direction that her devisee should assume the name and arms of Cranmer, particularly as the testatrix in this cause had annexed a like condition to the above-mentioned devise. Webb v. Byng, 1 K. & J. 580; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 696.

Under a power in a settlement, H. devised lands called Claggetts and Sievelands, in the parish of Buxted, to W. There were lands described in the settlement as Claggetts and Sievelands, in the parish of Buxted, and there were also other lands in the parish of Buxted described in the settlement by other names. Evidence was adduced to shew that all these lands were, at the time of the will, and before and since, held by one tenant, and that the whole were known as Claggetts Farm:—Held, that all the lands known as Claggetts Farm passed by the devise. Whitfield v. Langdale, 45 L. J., Ch. 177; 1 Ch. D. 61; 33 L. T. 592; 24 W. R. 313.

Quantity.]—The testator had in 1833 taken a conveyance of a farm of forty-one acres by the description of "all that messuage called U., with the gardens, outbuildings, &c., containing one acre and three-quarters; and also all that piece," &c.; the conveyance then enumerating six or seven other parcels, the whole forming one farm, in one occupation. The testator then mortgaged the whole by the same description for 1,000*l.*

Afterwards, by will, he devised "all my freehold house and premises called U." to trustees to sell, and pay the said mortgage, and then pay 950*l.* legacies; and gave all the rest and residue of his estate over:—Held, as between the residuary legatees and heir-at-law, that the whole forty-one acres passed by the words "house and premises at U." Ross v. Veal, 1 Jur. (N.S.) 751; 3 W. R. 652.

Testator, who was possessed of three leasehold houses in K. Street, bequeathed "two houses in K. Street" in trust for P. for life, and then to form part of his residuary gift. The will contained no other references to the testator's houses in K. Street:—Held, that two of the houses passed under the gift, and that P. was entitled to elect which he would take. Tapley v. Eagleton, 12 Ch. D. 683; 28 W. R. 239.

A testator devised his mansion and estate, called Cleve Court, with the appurtenances, upon certain trusts, and gave the residue of his property of every description, other than those thereinbefore mentioned, upon other trusts. The testator had contracted, before the date of his will, to purchase an estate near and adjoining to the Cleve Court estate, which was conveyed to him subsequently. He also purchased, after the date of his will, several other small properties adjoining the Cleve Court estate:—Held, that evidence was admissible to shew what property the testator designated by the particular description up to the time of his death, and that all the property acquired after the date of the will and treated by the testator immediately before his death as additions to the Cleve Court estate, passed under the particular devise. Castle v. Fox, 40 L. J., Ch. 302; L. R. 11 Eq. 542; 24 L. T. 536; 19 W. R. 840.

A bequest of "the field in front of my dwelling-house" does not include the house and curtilage, though in fact locally situate in the field, and such house and curtilage pass by a bequest of "the residue of my said farm." O'Connor v. O'Connor, Ir. R. 4 Eq. 483; 19 W. R. 90.

—— "Leasehold House and Premises"—Alteration of, between Execution of Will and Death of Testator.]—A testator, who died on the 28th December, 1869, by his will dated the 3rd August, 1868, made the following bequest:—"I give my leasehold house and premises called the 'Anchor Inn,' where I now reside . . . unto my son." The testator made a codicil to his will dated the 25th December, 1869, which did not mention this legacy. At the date of the will the "Anchor Inn" was in course of reconstruction, with the view of separating two rooms from the inn to be let to a tenant who was to occupy them as a shop. The alterations were completed between the date of the will and the death of the testator, and at the latter date were occupied as a shop by a tenant of the testator. Prior to and during the alterations the premises were occupied solely by the testator, who continued up to the date of his death to reside in the inn, which had been separated from the shop:—Held, that as the shop was not leased by the testator until after the date of his will, it was concluded in the terms of the bequest, and so passed to the testator's son. Edwards, In re, Rowland v. Edwards, 63 L. T. 481.

"Thereto belonging"—Evidence of Testator's Intention.]—In this case the plaintiff claimed to be seised in fee-simple and entitled to the rent and profits of a certain garden called the "Malthouse Garden." J. S. by his will gave and bequeathed "the malting-office with the two adjoining cottages, and the garden and outoffices thereto belonging" to J. D. the plaintiff, and by a codicil of a subsequent date devised all his real and personal estate, not otherwise disposed of, to T. S., the defendant. The question raised was, whether the "Malthouse Garden" claimed, passed by the devise to the plaintiff:—Held, that the "Malthouse Garden" passed under the devise, and that the words "thereto belonging" referred to the whole subject of the first part of the devise, viz. the malthouse and the two cottages; and that evidence of the intention of the testator was not admissible, as there was no latent ambiguity in the language of the will. Downe v. Sheffield, 71 L. T. 292.

Description by Double Limitation.] — The testator devised freehold and other property to E. N. for life, and at her decease he gave the same, together with his copyhold and leasehold property "situate at C., in the parish of S. N.," to J. N. A.:—Held, that J. N. A. took no estate or interest in the copyhold or leasehold property till the death of E. N., but that it passed to the heir-at-law in the meantime; and that the bequest of the leaseholds did not include other leaseholds of the testator in the parish of S. N., but at some distance from C. Attwater v. Attwater, 18 Beav. 330; 23 L. J., Ch. 692; 18 Jur. 50; 2 W. R. 81.

A father devised his freehold property at M. in trust for his children, a son and daughter, equally. He had no freehold property at M., but he had two undivided fourth shares of some in R., which M. adjoined, and in which parish it was situate:—Held, that the property in R. descended to the heir-at-law. Barber v. Wood, 46 L. J., Ch. 728; 4 Ch. D. 885; 36 L. T. 373.

A devise of "two improved ground-rents in the Queen's Road, Dalston." The testator had no such ground-rents, but owned one ground-rent, issuing in respect of houses in the immediate neighbourhood of the Queen's Road, in the parish of H., and another issuing in respect of houses in the parish of S., not in the immediate neighbourhood of Queen's Road. The houses in H. and S. were about a quarter of a mile out of Dalston:—Held, that the ground-rents in H. and S. passed under the above description. Tann v. Tann, 2 N. R. 412.

—— Place and Occupation.]—A testator devised all his lands "situated at or within Dormstone, in the occupation of J." The testator was seised of two farms, both in the occupation of J. The greater part of each of the farms was within the parish of Dormstone, but three closes of one and one close of the other were respectively situate in an adjoining parish. In each case the portion which was not in the parish of Dormstone immediately adjoined the remainder of the farm, and was only separated from it by the parish boundary, which was, in the one case, a high road, and, in the other, a fence. In the latter case the parish church of Dormstone was only a few yards distant from the fence:—Held, that the devise comprised the four closes adjoining the parish of Dormstone. Homer v. Homer, 47 L. J., Ch. 635; 8 Ch. D. 758; 39 L. T. 3; 27 W. R. 101.

The testator also devised all his land "situate at G. in the occupation of S.":—Held, that this devise did not include land situate at G., but in the occupation of J. Ib.

The greater part of a farm held by S. was situated in D. A devise by A. of his lands "at or within D. in the occupation of S." was held not to pass any part of the farm not within D. Horner v. Horner, 46 L. J., Ch. 617.

—— Name and Occupation.]—H. devised a messuage, barns, buildings, woods, wood-grounds, commonly called Tickeridge, in the parish of East Grinstead, in the occupation of W., to W. Evidence was adduced to shew that Tickeridge Farm, in the occupation of W., consisted of eighty-five acres in the parish of East Grinstead, and one hundred and sixteen acres in the parish of Westhoathly, and that the farmhouse and buildings were partly in one and partly in the other:—Held, that the whole of Tickeridge Farm, in the occupation of W., passed by the devise.

Some of the woodlands adjoined and formed part of Tickeridge Farm, but had been expressly excluded in the demise of this farm to W., and were retained by H. in her own occupation:—Held, that the woodlands did not pass by the devise.

H. devised a messuage, buildings, farm and land called Hookland, in the parish of Lindfield, by estimation eighty acres, more or less, in the occupation of C., to C. in fee. As to this, the description in the will was almost the same as that in the settlement. Evidence was adduced to shew that H. had a farm called Hookland, which at the date of her will was in the occupation of C., but that it consisted of one hundred and seventy-three acres, of which eighty-eight acres were freehold in the parish of Lindfield, sixty-six acres were copyhold in the same parish, and the remaining eighteen acres were copyhold in an adjoining parish:—Held, that the whole farm called Hookland, as well copyholds as freeholds, passed by the devise. Whitfield v. Langdale, supra.

—— Tenure and Occupation.]—Devise of "all that freehold farm called the Wick farm, containing two hundred acres or thereabouts, occupied by W. E. as tenant to me, with the appurtenances," to uses applicable to freehold property only. At the date of the will, and of the death of the testator, W. E. held under a lease from the testator two hundred and two acres of land, which were described in the lease as Wick Farm; of these twelve acres were leasehold:—Held, that the twelve acres did not pass by the devise. Hall v. Fisher, 1 Coll. C. C. 47; 8 Jur. 119.

One devises all his freehold houses in A., and hath none but leasehold houses there; the leasehold shall pass. Secus, in a grant. Day v. Trig, 1 P. Wms. 286.

—— Falsa Demonstratio—Restrictive Words Rejected.]—Where a testator uses a description of parcels consisting of two distinct and separable parts, of which the first is complete and correct, and the second incomplete and erroneous, the maxim falsa demonstratio non nocet applies, and the part which is false will not cut down that which is true. Secus, where the parts of a description are not distinct and separable. White v. Birch, 36 L. J., Ch. 174; 15 L. T. 605; 15 W. R. 305.

A testator devised "all his freehold estates at or near R. in the parish of H.," which was a complete and correct description of the property intended to pass. The context indicated an intention to pass the whole of such estate:—Held, that the gift was not narrowed by the erroneous addition of the words, "and now in my own occupation." Ib.

Where some subject-matter is devised as a whole, and then words of description are added which do not completely exhaust all the particulars included in the general devise, but seem to limit and restrict it, the entirety expressly and definitely given shall not be prejudiced by the imperfect enumeration of particulars; nor shall a clear enumeration of particulars be overlooked by an apparently general devise. West v. Lawday, 11 H. L. Cas. 375; 13 L. T. 171.

A person was possessed under one and the same lease for lives, renewable for ever, of lands denominated B., C., F. and G., all situate in the county of Kerry. He granted out the lands of G. for lives, with a covenant for perpetual renewal, reserving thereout a perpetual fee-farm rent. Some years after this grant he made his will, recited that he was possessed of a lease for lives, renewable for ever, of certain lands in the county of Kerry, which said lands are denominated B., C. and F., all situate in the parish of, &c., in the county of Kerry. He directed that "the aforesaid lands" should be sold, and after payment of his debts be equally divided between J. W. and S. L. After giving several legacies, he made J. W. "residuary legatee of all my real and personal estate and effects":—Held, that the estate of G. did not pass under the general devise, but went to the residuary legatee. Ib.

A testatrix devised "all that my share and interest in the messuages, lands, and premises, called or known by the name of the Dyffrydd and the Little Dyffrydd, situate in the parish of Kinnersley, in the county of Salop, now in the occupation of Mr. John Edwards." She was entitled to an undivided moiety of a compact estate containing 224 acres, all held under one title, part of which was called the Dyffrydd, and the rest Little Dyffrydd, the bulk of which answered the description contained in the will. There were, however, in the estate two small fields which, though in the occupation of John Edwards, were not in the parish of Kinnersley and county of Salop, but in the parish of Llandisilio and county of Montgomery; and the one field which, though in the parish of Kinnersley, was not, and never had been, in the occupation of John Edwards:—Held, that the leading words which defined the subject of the devise were "the lands known as the Dyffrydd and the Little Dyffrydd," and that they were not restricted by the words which followed, which were merely an erroneous description, and might be rejected. Hardwick v. Hardwick, 42 L. J., Ch. 636; L. R. 16 Eq. 168; 21 W. R. 719.

Where a testatrix "gave all those her freehold messuages or tenements, hereditaments and premises, called West Cliff, with the appurtenances thereto belonging, situate at West Cowes, and now used as lodging-houses"; and in a codicil referred to the same property as her estate, called West Cliff, at West Cowes:—Held, sufficient to pass, besides the lodging-houses, other houses, of which some were unfinished; and also certain plots of ground, together with the site of a private road and of a church, the building, and the advowson, all known as the West Cliff estate. Cunningham v. Butler, 3 Giff. 37; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 461; 4 L. T. 234.

A father gave all that part of Rigby's estate purchased by him consisting of closes A., B., C., D., E. and F., with the timber and coal mines, to trustees in trust for his son O. for life, with remainder to the use of O.'s children as he should by deed or will appoint, and in default of appointment to the use of O.'s right heirs. O., by his will, after reciting the devise in his father's will (but without enumerating the closes), appointed all that part of the property devised by his father's will and therein described as that part of Rigby's estate purchased by his father consisting of A., B., C. and F., with the timber, but not including the mines, to his two sons T. and J.; and he appointed the mines under the land which he had appointed to T. and J. to his four other children. The two omitted closes, D. and E., lay between the other four:—Held, that the corpus of the estate devised by the father was sufficiently designated in the son's will; that the enumeration of the four closes instead of the six was a falsa demonstratio which might be rejected; and that the whole of the six closes passed under the appointment. Travers v. Blundell, 6 Ch. D. 436; 36 L. T. 341.

In construing a will of real estate, the court will look at the nature and circumstances of the property, and at the value of the subjects of the various devisees, and if the whole will, read by the light of such circumstances, discloses intention inconsistent with restrictive words in the description of the subject of a devise, those restrictive words may, as a matter of construction, be rejected as a falsa demonstratio.

Where a will contained a devise of hereditaments "in the county of Hants," described as "my Tedworth estate," and it was proved that the testatrix had an estate at Tedworth extending into the two counties of Hants and Wilts, but which had been dealt with without regard to the county division, and the will contained various indications derived from the limitations of the estate, and the value of the Hants and Wilts portions of it, tending to shew that the testatrix must have intended to deal with the whole estate:—Held, that although no one of these circumstances alone would have controlled the words of the devise, their cumulative force was sufficient to justify the rejection of the words "in the county of Hants" as a falsa demonstratio.

Evidence of the intention of a testator or of mistake in the preparation of his will, is not admissible, and an issue will not be directed on this ground to try whether particular restrictive words were or were not part of the will. Stanley v. Stanley, 2 J. & H. 491; 7 L. T. 136; 10 W. R. 857.

S. devised to his wife during widowhood "my residence called S. House, and premises thereto as the same are now occupied by me." Some years before making this devise he had let to two of his sons for the purposes of their business, an office standing in the yard of S. House and the stable and coach-house belonging to the house, except a room on the first floor of the coach-house to which the only access was through the house, and the sons were in occupation till his death:—Held, that the devise included the room over the coach-house, but did not include the rest of the stable and coach-house nor the office, for that the property which was in the testator's own occupation answered the whole of the description, and that being so, the court could not enter into the question of inconvenience, and reject the reference to occupation as falso demonstratio. Travers v. Blundell (supra) distinguished. Stanley v. Stanley (supra) observed upon. Seal, In re, Seal v. Taylor, 63 L. J., Ch. 275; [1894] 1 Ch. 316; 70 L. T. 329—C. A.

iii. Local Description of Personalty.

Country or Colony.]—Bequest of the testator's fortune in India, not extended under the general words, "temporal estate," in the introductory part of the will, to the property in England, part remitted from India between the will and the death, and some on its passage to England at his death. Sadler v. Turner, 8 Ves. 617.

A promissory note due to a testator domiciled in England, by a person resident at the Cape, passes by the words, "property I shall leave in the colony." Scorey v. Harrison, 16 Jur. 1130; 1 W. R. 99.

A testator gave the interest of all the property he should leave at the Cape of Good Hope to his wife for life, and after to his children, and a question arose whether a note for 500*l.*, found by the master to be payable in London, formed part of such bequest:—Held, that it did, the maker being resident in the colony. Ib.

A testator resident in England at the time of his death bequeathed to his son "all his estate and effects in Mauritius." At the time of his death the purchase-money of real estate in Mauritius sold by him to persons residing in that island was due to him. He was not domiciled in Mauritius:—Held, that this debt was included in the bequest of his property in Mauritius. Guthrie v. Walrond, 52 L. J., Ch. 165; 22 Ch. D. 573; 47 L. T. 614; 31 W. R. 285.

Bequest of "my property not in England and in the hands of my attorney abroad, W., consisting of Russian bonds, &c.":—Held, to pass all the testator's property abroad without limitations. Drake v. Martin, 23 Beav. 89; 26 L. J., Ch. 786.

A testator bequeathed "all his American stocks, funds, shares and securities, and all other his personal property in America, or the North American colonies of Great Britain, or otherwise, coming under the designation of property in America, or the North American colonies of Great Britain, including all such properties which might be secured, or the title evidenced by any specialty or other instrument being at his, testator's, death in this country or elsewhere," upon certain trusts. The testator was entitled amongst other stock, funds and securities to shares and bonds in the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, Tennessee and Ohio shares and bonds, and of various other companies, Brazilian bonds, old and new Mexican bonds, and other South American securities:—Held, that such shares, bonds and other South American securities passed under the designation of property in America. Baring v. Ashburton (Lady), 17 L. T. 557; 16 W. R. 452.

Residuary disposition of all the testator's real and personal estate in Jamaica, in trust, to be remitted to England, was held specific, and not to include a debt originally upon bond and judgment in Jamaica, and afterwards further secured by bond and judgment in England, under which it was received, and being considered undisposed of, was applied, in the first instance, to the debts, &c. Nisbett v. Murray, 5 Ves. 149; 5 R. R. 6.

County or Place.]—Held, as against a claim by pecuniary legatees to marshal, that where there was a gift of all property, freehold, copyhold, and leasehold, at particular places and elsewhere in the county of Somerset, and all other real and personal estates whatsoever (testator not having, as it appeared, and the court observed, any real or leasehold property except in Somersetshire), the gift was specific, and not liable to be marshalled either as to leasehold or other property. Symons v. James, 2 Y. & C. C. C. 301.

A testator gave "all property belonging to him in the county of W." In that county he was entitled to collieries, in respect of which debts were due to him :—Held, that these debts passed under the gifts. Tyrone (Earl) v. Waterford (Marquis), 1 De G. F. & J. 613 ; 29 L. J., Ch. 486 ; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 567 ; 8 W. R. 454.

One devises to his wife all his personal estate at W. ; this is a specific legacy, and to be preferred to pecuniary legacies in case of deficiency of assets ; all the testator's personal estate that was at W. at his death shall pass, though not there at the making of the will. Sayer v. Sayer, 2 Vern. 688 ; Pre. Ch. 392 ; Gilb. Exch. R. 87.

—— In the City of London.]—A testatrix bequeathed her shares in a bank to the persons named in her will, and bequeathed the residue and remainder of her money, estate, and effects, whatsoever and wheresoever situate, to A., one of the legatees of the shares. By a codicil she devised and bequeathed her estate and interest in certain freehold houses in the city of London, and "all and every other my estate and effects in the city of London," to B. The shares were in a bank, the head office of which was in the city, and the testatrix also had a balance at a banker's in the city :—Held, that the shares passed under the will, and that the balance at the banker's being a debt, passed to the residuary legatee. Rhodes v. Rhodes, 22 W. R. 835.

"At Bank."]—Bequest of "half my property at R.'s bank." At the time of his will and of his death the testator had at R.'s bank in Paris a cash balance and certificates of French shares, some inscribed and some transferable by delivery, which were deposited with the bankers, who received the dividends and carried them to his credit. He had nothing else at the bank :—Held, by the court of first instance, that only half of the cash balance passed by the bequest ; but held, on appeal, that a moiety of the shares also passed. Prater, In re, Desinge v. Beare, 57 L. J., Ch. 342 ; 37 Ch. D. 481 ; 58 L. T. 784 ; 36 W. R. 561—C. A.

"Elsewhere."]—A testator by his will gave all his engravings in his dwelling-house at A. "or elsewhere" to his wife. He had sold certain engravings to T. by a voidable sale seven years before his will, and he died three years after making his will. The widow afterwards discovered that the sale was voidable and brought an action against T. to have it set aside, in which a decree was made that, as executrix, she was not bound by the sale and was entitled to the proceeds of the engravings :—Held, in an action against her as executrix by legatees that the engravings did not pass by the specific bequest to the widow. Turner v. Turner, 28 W. R. 859.

"In and About" House.]—Testator gave all the residue of his personal estate to his wife, except such parts as should be in and about his house, which parts he gave to his son, and directed the household furniture to go as heirlooms, and gave all arrears of rents which should be due to him at his death to his son : a bond to secure an old arrear of rent, and cash, both found in an iron chest, in which the steward kept the cash arising from the rents, belong to residuary legatee. Jones v. Sefton (Lord), 4 Ves. 166.

A testator directs that his household furniture, &c., and utensils in and about his mansion house at H., should go with the mansion house, and that for that purpose his trustees should make an inventory of the furniture, &c., and utensils which should be found in and about his mansion house and premises at the time of his decease. These words do not pass farming utensils on lands at H., occupied by the testator, along with the mansion house. Fitzgerald v. Field, 1 Russ. 427 ; 4 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 170 ; 25 R. R. 97.

A bequest of "all my household furniture, plate, jewels, &c., and other effects of a like nature, and all wines, liquors, fuel, housekeeping provisions, and other consumable stores which shall at my death be in or about my dwelling-house" :—Held, to include plate not in the dwelling-house :—Held, also, to include plate to which the testator was entitled in reversion, and moneys recovered by his executors from the estate of the tenant for life, in respect of the value of plate sold by the latter without the testator's knowledge. Domville or Domvile v. Taylor, 2 N. R. 258 ; 32 Beav. 604 ; 8 L. T. 624 ; 11 W. R. 796.

Horses only used at a testator's town house, but regularly wintered at his country house, and happening to be in their winter quarters at the time of his death, will pass by a bequest of the town house, with the horses in, upon, or about the same, or the stables thereof. Bruce v. Howe, 19 W. R. 116.

A testator bequeathed his leasehold mill to trustees upon certain trusts, and all the corn and other articles which at his death should be in or about his dwelling-house, mill, or premises, he gave to his two sons absolutely :—Held, that a cargo of wheat consigned to the testator, and in course of transit on the day of his death, passed to the executors and not to the sons. Lane v. Sewell, 43 L. J., Ch. 378.

A testator, having three places of residence at A., B. and C., after having devised to his nephew his messuages at A., next bequeathed to him his house at B., which was leasehold, and the will then proceeded, "and I also give to my said nephew all my carriages, horses, implements, and my live and dead stock and chattels in or about the said house and premises, and also my household goods and furniture, pictures, plate, linen, china, liquors of all sorts, and brewing vessels, and likewise my watches and personal ornaments" :—Held, that the household goods, &c., in each of the three residences, passed by this bequest. Quære, whether a bust passed under the above words. Willis v. Curtois, 1 Beav. 189 ; 8 L. J., Ch. 105.

"Therein."]—Bequest of "all my right and title to my property in the town of R., namely, my dwelling-house and household furniture, and all things now therein, in my possession, especially my car-horse and covered and side cars" :—Held, that banknotes, known by the testator to be in the house at the time the will was made, passed to the legatee. Mahony v. Donovan, 14 Ir. Ch. R. 388—C. A.

Furniture in a Particular Place.]—Gift of furniture in a particular house means furniture permanently there. Wilkins v. Jodrell, 11 W. R. 588.

One devises to his son the furniture of his house at D., and orders goods to be carried from London to his house at D., and agrees with carriers for that purpose, but dies before the goods are removed to D. These goods shall not pass by the will as part of the furniture of the house at D. Beaufort v. Dundonald, 2 Vern. 739.

A bequest of furniture, prints, pictures, articles of vertu, and effects in, upon, or about a mansion at G., includes pictures sent from thence to be cleaned, books sent from thence to be bound, and furniture sent from thence to be repaired: but does not include pictures, statuary, and furniture purchased for the purpose of being placed in, but not actually placed in, the mansion at G. Brooke (Lord) v. Warwick (Earl), 2 De G. & Sm. 257; 12 Jur. 912.

A bequest of household furniture and other household effects, in a dwelling-house and premises, comprises all the property placed there, either for ornament, or for use, or consumption in it. Cole v. Fitzgerald, 3 Russ. 301; 1 Sim. & S. 189; 1 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 91; 24 R. R. 169.

A. devises that the furniture and pictures of his three houses in B., C. and D., should go along with the houses: adjudged the plate then at his three houses passed by this devise. Franklyn v. Burlington (Countess), 2 Vern. 512; Pre. Ch. 251.

—— Pictures in Boxes.]—A. devises to B. all his goods and furniture in his house, except his pictures, which he gives to C.: pictures in boxes, as well as what were hung up in the house will pass to C.; and so will pictures bought after making the will. Gayre v. Gayre, 2 Vern. 538.

—— Horses and Carriages.]—C. occupied a house at B., and stables in the neighbourhood held under a different title. He bequeathed the lease of the house at B., "with all buildings belonging to me, furniture, and what the buildings may contain":—Held, that the stables, and the carriages and horses therein, passed to the legatee. Kennedy v. Keily, 28 Beav. 223.

Devise of a mansion house, with the parks, lands, and grounds thereunto belonging, "as now used and occupied by himself, and also all and every the household and other furniture, &c., and all other things usually therein, or considered as belonging thereto":—Held, not to pass horses or carriages in the stable, or stock, &c., on the land. Pennefather v. Bury, 3 Jo. & Lat. 727; 9 Ir. Eq. R. 586.

—— Subsequent Removal—Gift good notwithstanding.]—Testator bequeathed to his wife as follows: "all my interests in my house at Lavender Hill, the furniture, books, pictures, wines," &c., &c. After the date of his will the testator removed from Lavender Hill to Spencer Lodge, taking with him furniture, books, pictures, wines, and plate. He afterwards purchased more of these articles, and died at Spencer Lodge:—Held, that his wife was entitled to the furniture, books, pictures, wines, and plate which he had at the time of his death. Norris v. Norris, 2 C. C. C. 719; 15 L. J., Ch. 420; 10 Jur. 629.

A testator bequeathed the furniture, &c., which should be in Duddon Hall at his death to be held as heirlooms by the person entitled to Duddon Hall. At his death part of the original furniture of Duddon Hall had been removed and stored away along with new furniture and furniture from another house intended for, but never placed in, Duddon Hall:—Held, that all such furniture passed along with the furniture actually in Duddon Hall. Rawlinson v. Rawlinson, 34 L. T. 848; 24 W. R. 946.

A father bequeathed to his daughter "the trunks and boxes and anything contained therein which belonged to my late wife, and which were given to me at her death, and have not since been opened, but are sealed up in the dining-room of Carrig Park." After the death of his wife in 1847, two trunks containing her clothes—there being in one of them a dressing-case containing valuable jewellery—had been sent to Carrig Park, the testator's residence. A few years before his death and the date of his will, the testator, finding that the trunk in which the dressing-case was had been opened without his knowledge, caused the dressing-case with the jewellery to be removed out of the trunk and placed in an iron safe in another part of the house, of which he kept the key, where it was found after his death, locked, corded, and sealed. The trunks were found in the dining-room after his death, also locked, corded, and sealed:—Held, that the dressing-case and jewellery passed under the bequest to the daughter, and did not form part of the residuary estate. Norreys v. Franks, Ir. R. 9 Eq. 19.

J. devises all his household goods and furniture which should be in his house at R., at his death, to his wife, and afterwards going beyond sea, his steward gets the landlord of the house to accept a surrender of the house and removes the goods to another house, and writes an account of this to J., who approves of it. The goods will not pass by the will to the wife; otherwise if they had been removed by fraud to defeat the legacy, or by any fortuitous act without the privity of the testator. Shaftesbury v. Shaftesbury, 2 Vern. 747.

Bequest of goods on board a ship is good, though they may have been afterwards removed, and were not on board at the testator's death. Chapman v. Hart, 1 Ves. Sen. 271.

—— Gift Adeemed by.]—Testator gave all his plate and linen in his house in S. to his wife; he had but one set of plate and linen, which was usually removed with the family from house to house. The plate happened to be at B., the country house, at his death; yet it passed to the wife. Land v. Devaynes, 4 Bro. C. C. 537.

Goods removed for a necessary purpose, the legacy of them is not adeemed, as from fire or sent to be repaired, &c. Ib.

A testator, by his will describing himself as of a particular place, gave to his wife all his household furniture, plate, cutlery, linen, &c., which should be in, upon, or about his said dwelling-house at the time of his decease. The testator removed to another place, and the question was, whether that was an ademption of the bequest:—Held, that it was; the words "said dwelling-house" evidently referring to that particular place. Houlding v. Cross, 1 Jur. (N.S.) 250; 3 W. R. 334.

Bequest of furniture in one house which is afterwards removed to another house is adeemed. Heseltine v. Heseltine, 3 Madd. 276.

Testator gave to his wife his house in B., and the furniture in the said house. The lease of the house expired in the testator's lifetime, and he took another house and removed his furniture to it:—Held, that the legacy was adeemed. Colleton v. Garth, 6 Sim. 19; 2 L. J., Ch. 75.

A. bequeathed to B. his furniture, &c., which at the time of his death should be in the house he then occupied at X. The testator, at his death, had ceased to occupy that house, and had no furniture, &c., therein:— Held, that the bequest failed. Spencer v. Spencer, 21 Beav. 548.

A testator directed his furniture in Gloucester Square to be applied in payment of his debts, and in a subsequent part of his will, he bequeathed his furniture in England to his sisters. The testator removed the furniture in Gloucester Square to another residence:—Held, that it did not pass to his sisters. Blagrove v. Coore, 27 Beav. 138.

The testator by will gave to B. all his goods, &c., in his study, except his books and writings. He gave to C. all his books at his chambers in the Temple. He removed the books into the country before his death:—Held, that C.'s legacy was adeemed. Green v. Symonds, 1 Bro. C. C. 129, n.

iv. Description by Title or Ownership.

Realty.]—A testator, by a will made after the Wills Act came into operation, devised to trustees for five hundred years all his freehold and copyhold hereditaments in the county of D. which had or might thereafter come into his possession "by inheritance" from his father, whose heir he was. The testator's property in the county of D., when he made his will, consisted of one estate devised to him by his father before the Wills Act came into operation, and of another which had been conveyed to him by his father by a deed of gift, and into the possession of which he entered in his father's lifetime:—Held, that the latter estate was not subject to the trusts of the term, though without it they could not be fully performed as regarded the amounts directed to be raised under them. Wilkinson v. Bewicke, 3 De G. M. & G. 937; 1 Eq. R. 12; 22 L. J., Ch. 781.

A testator devised to his granddaughter a plot of freehold land by the description of "the portion of meadow land received by me in exchange from S., and other plots to the granddaughter, describing them by reference to the tenants in whose occupation they then were. Portions of the plot of land which the testator had acquired by exchange from S., and of certain of the plots which had been in the occupation of the several tenants named in the descriptions, were, at the date of the will, under contract for the sale to a railway company. The company had taken possession before the date of the will, but the conveyance was not completed until after the testator's death:—Held, that as there remained lands to answer the descriptions in the will at the time of its date, such lands alone passed under the devises, and that the purchase-money paid by the railway company to the trustee of the testator's will ought to have been paid to the plaintiff, the residuary devisee and legatee. Jackson, In re, Wilson v. Donald, 44 L. T. 467.

A testator, after reciting that he was possessed of property in D. for the residue of terms of years, bequeathed "his said D. property." He was entitled to freeholds as well as leaseholds in D.:—Held, that the leaseholds only passed under this gift. Corballis v. Corballis, 9 L. R., Ir. 309.

A lady was entitled under a will to a share of an estate, which, after the testator's death, was varied by allotments and exchanges under an inclosure act. She afterwards devised her share of the estate as "devised" to her "by the testator's will":—Held, that this passed the lady's share in the estate in its actual condition. Cooch v. Walden, 46 L. J., Ch. 639.

Realty and Personalty.]—A testator having a vested estate under the will of his grandfather, subject to a life estate in his grandfather's daughter, Mary, excepted from the operation of his will the real and personal estate which he might derive from his aunt Mary, or any of her family:—Held, a sufficient description of his vested interest under his grandfather's will. James v. Wynford (Lord), 2 Sm. & G. 350; 23 L. J., Ch. 767; 18 Jur. 868; 2 W. R. 607.

Personalty.]—A testator bequeathed all the property to which he was or should be entitled under his uncle's will to trustees upon trust for the benefit of the defendant. After the date of his will he received a sum in cash from his uncle's estate, part of which sum he invested in the purchase of stock in a railway company:—Held, that the railway stock passed under the bequest. Morgan v. Thomas, 46 L. J., Ch. 775; 6 Ch. D. 176; 37 L. T. 689; 25 W. R. 750.

Bequest, after the death of certain annuitants of a sum set apart by the court for payment of them, or of such part of it as should not, by reason of their deaths, have been assigned or transferred:—Held, that a sum which had been ordered to be transferred on the death of an annuitant, but had not been actually transferred, did not pass. Hooper v. Goodwin, Jac. 375.

A bequest of "the property which the testatrix had received by the death of B.":—Held, to pass not only the property which the testatrix actually received in her lifetime from the source referred to, but also property to which the testatrix was then entitled in possession, but which was not actually paid until after her decease, and was then received by her representatives. Girdlestone v. Creed, 10 Hare, 487; 1 W. R. 228.

A reversionary interest in consols and other property to which a testatrix was absolutely entitled in possession, but in respect of which latter property she had received no income, and which was at the date of her will outstanding in the name of a trustee, passes under a bequest of "any interest or moneys to which I may hereafter be entitled on behalf of my late husband," although as to two third parts she had become entitled thereto as sole next of kin of her infant son, who had acquired the same as one of the next of kin of his father. Moysen v. Stuart, 18 W. R. 146.

Insurance Money.]—J. tenant for life, remainder to W. for life, remainder to J. in fee; during life of J., houses on estate were burnt down, and insurance money paid to J., the insurer, and placed in funds in his name; J., by will, devised estate to R. in fee, and his personal estate to W. W. applied part of insurance money in repairing house on estate; insurance money unapplied remains in J.'s name; W., by will, stated the circumstances as to fund so standing in his brother's name, and bequeathed residue of his personal property:—Held, insurance money passed to R. as devisee of J. Norris v. Harrison, 2 Madd. 268.

—— Bonuses.]—A policy of insurance for 3,000*l.* on A.'s life was assigned to trustees, and, by a deed of even date, trusts were declared of it by the description of "the sum of 3,000*l.* for which A.'s life was insured," and power was given to B. to dispose of it by will. B., after reciting the settlement, bequeathed 1,000*l.*, part of the sum of 3,000*l.*, to A., and the remaining sum of 2,000*l.* to C. At A.'s death, 9,000*l.* was received under the policy:—Held, that the whole fruits of the policy were subject to the trusts of the settlement, and passed by the bequests to A. and C., in proportion to their legacies. Courtney v. Ferrers, 1 Sim. 137; 5 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 107.

Where Misdescription.] — Devise of "my estates at S., which were devised to me or purchased from A.," the fact proving otherwise, construed not as an intended restriction, but as a misdescription. Welby v. Welby, 2 V. & B. 191; 13 R. R. 58.

A testator entitled in fee to some messuages and lands in A., and entitled for life to other messuages and lands in A., devised his messuages and lands in A. to his son, and charged his tenement in A., occupied by H., with certain legacies. The tenement occupied by H. was part of the property in A. to which the testator was only entitled for life:—Held, that it was not to be inferred from the description as his own of the tenement in A., occupied by H., that the testator intended to describe and devise as his own the other property in A. in which he had only an estate for life. Parker v. Carter, 4 Hare, 400.

A testatrix had power to dispose by will of property which she enjoyed under the residuary gift of her brother; a part of this property consisted of 7,000*l.* bank stock, which, after the brother's death, was increased by a bonus to 8,750*l.*; the testatrix in her will, made shortly after the bonus was declared, described the bank stock as consisting of 7,000*l.* The court decreed, that the 8,750*l.* passed by force of general expressions, which plainly manifested an intention to bequeath all that the testatrix derived from her brother. Matthews v. Maude, 1 Russ. & M. 397; 8 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 106.

v. General Devise of Real Estate.

Before the Wills Act—Where Specific Gift Fails.]—If devise of land is revoked or does not take place, the land does not pass by the residuary clause. Watson v. Lincoln, Ambl. 328.

A testatrix, having the moiety of an estate, directed her executors to purchase the other moiety, and if the purchase should be completed within twelve months after her death, she gave the entirety on certain trusts; but in case her executors should not be able within that time to purchase it, she directed her moiety to be sold, and the produce, together with 1,100*l.*, to be held on other trusts. The will contained a gift of the residue of her estate of whatever kind, &c. The purchase was not completed within the time, although the executors were able, so that neither of the expressed events happened:—Held, first, that the trusts, both of the estate and 1,100*l.*, failed; and, secondly, that, as between the devisees and heir-at-law, the latter was entitled to the testatrix's moiety of the estate. Upjohn v. Upjohn, 7 Beav. 59.

—— Intent Gathered from Will.] — Where testatrix by will directed a sum of money to be laid out in land, and settled, after some previous limitations, on her own right heirs, and afterwards made a general residuary devise of all her real and personal estate:—Held, that upon the evident intent of the testatrix to exclude the residuary devisee, the heir-at-law was entitled to a remainder in fee in the lands to be purchased. Robinson v. Knight, 2 Eden, 155.

A. devised part of his real estates to his son W. in settlement, and other parts in fee, and the residue not specifically devised to W., whom, with E., he appointed executor and executrix. A., by codicil reciting the death of W. and the devises of the particular estates to him, devised the aforesaid estates, in case E. should die without issue in his wife's life, to his wife for life, with remainder to R., and appointed E. his sole executrix and residuary legatee. A. died seised of other estates than those specifically devised:—Held, that E. did not take the residuary realty. Hillas v. Hillas, 10 Ir. Eq. R. 134.

Under the Wills Act—Where Specific Gift void.]—The 25th section of the Wills Act is to be construed upon the principle of assimilating a residuary devise of real estate with a similar bequest of personalty. A devise which was, by construction, residuary:—Held, accordingly to pass lands which had been included in a devise void as contrary to law. Carter v. Haswell, 26 L. J., Ch. 576; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 788; 5 W. R. 388.

C., in 1854, gave to trustees, their heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, all his real and personal property, of whatever nature or kind, in trust for his sister S. The testator directed that certain farms should be sold, and that the money obtained, together with moneys due to him, should be vested in the names of the treasurers of the Wesleyan Methodist Missionary Society on annuity such as the law directed, such annuity to be paid to his sister as she might direct. After the decease of a brother and another sister and C., the claim to the annuity was to cease:—Held, that the testator had given his property, of every description, upon trust for one particular person, and everything given to the Wesleyan Methodist Missionary Society was given by way of charge thereon, which having failed, there was an absolute trust in favour of S. Ib.

A married woman, having a power of appointment under her marriage settlement over estates A. and B., appointed by will in September, 1838, estate A. to her husband in fee, "and all other the hereditaments comprised in the settlement not hereinbefore disposed of to another person." By codicils to her will she revoked the appointment of estate A. to her husband, and gave him the same estate for life, with remainder to trustees to sell and pay certain legacies and pay the residue to charities:—Held, that the devise of "all other the hereditaments," &c., by the will was not residuary but specific; and that the void gifts to the charities did not pass by it, but lapsed as unappointed. Brown's Will, In re, 1 K. & J. 522; 3 W. R. 542.

A testator made a will (dated before the Wills Act), by which he directed his residuary real estate to be sold and the proceeds to be divided (in the events which happened) among twelve persons, of whom A. and B. were two. He made a first codicil (dated after the Wills Act), by which he directed certain real estate acquired subsequently to the date of the will to be sold, and the proceeds divided in the same way as the proceeds of his other real estate. This codicil was attested by A. and B. He then made another codicil, described as a codicil to his will of a certain date, but not referring to the prior codicil:—Held, that the second codicil did not operate as a re-publication of the first codicil; that the gifts to A. and B. of two twelfth shares of the proceeds of the property comprised in the first codicil failed; and that these shares fell into the residue, and were divisible between A. and B. and the other ten residuary legatees. Burton v. Newbery, 45 L. J., Ch. 202; 1 Ch. D. 234; 34 L. T. 15; 24 W. R. 388.

A lady who had executed a deed of gift (which was enrolled) of lands at H. to three trustees for founding a charity, died within a year of its execution, having devised the same lands, in case she should not in her lifetime have effectually disposed of them, to A., B. and C. (two of whom were trustees of the deed) as joint tenants, and she devised certain lands to the plaintiff by the following description: "The rest of my hereditaments at H., and all my hereditaments at S. and W." The plaintiff filed a bill impeaching the devise as being a secret trust for charitable purposes, and claiming to be entitled to the lands:—Held, that as the testatrix devised the lands in full reliance that the devisees would carry out her object, and that the trust was tacitly accepted by them, the devise was therefore void:—Held, also, that the words "the rest of my lands at H." were not a residuary devise within the Wills Act, 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26, s. 25, and that the lands in question were undisposed of. Springett v. Jennings, 40 L. J., Ch. 348; L. R. 6 Ch. 333; 24 L. T. 643; 19 W. R. 575—C. A.

—— Where Specific Gift Lapses.]—If a specific devise of lands fails, it will fall into and pass by a general devise of all real estates not before devised. Green v. Dunn, 20 Beav. 6; 24 L. J., Ch. 577; 3 W. R. 277.

Devise of lands in E. to A. in fee, with other specific devises, and a devise of "all my lands not herein before devised" to trustees upon trust for A. for life, with limitations over. A. dies in lifetime of testatrix, who makes a subsequent codicil varying the will in other parts, but leaving the devises to A. unaltered:—Held, that the lands in E. passed by the residuary devise since the 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26. Ib.

A testator, in 1847, devised specific real estate to his daughter M., and, after making several specific bequests, devised and bequeathed all other real and personal estate of which he might die possessed to M. and others of his children. M. died in his lifetime:—Held, that the devise expressed by the words "all other," &c., was a residuary devise within the 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26, s. 25, and included the real estate devised to M. Cogswell v. Armstrong, 2 K. & J. 227; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 1162.

—— Where Will made under Mistake of Fact.]—Testator by his will recited that he left nothing to his nephews and nieces, as they would be entitled to the property, held by testator under their grandfather's will on his (testator's) death without issue, and devised all his real estate and his residuary personal estate to trustees upon certain trusts. The remainder after his own life, supposed by the testator to belong to the nephews and nieces, had in fact descended to the testator himself:—Held, that under the circumstances it did not pass by the residuary gift, but was undisposed of. Circuitt v. Perry, 2 Jur. (N.S.) 1157; 5 W. R. 15.

N. devised an estate at R. to such of the children of J. as J. should by will appoint, and in default to them equally. By the death of four of J.'s children, J. took half the estate as heir of his deceased children. J., by his will, devised all his real estate to his children equally, and he directed that the estate at R., devised by the will of N., over which he might have any power of appointment by will, should not be included in or affected by his own will, but should go according to the limitation contained in N.'s will:—Held, that J.'s moiety in the R. estate passed under the residuary devise in his will, and did not descend to his heir. Atherton v. Langford, 25 Beav. 5.

The wife of A., being entitled in fee, devised to him the B. property. A., under a wrong impression that his wife had no power of testamentary disposition, made his will containing this clause: "And I am wishful here to observe that my son, as heir-at-law of his mother, will inherit the B. property, and is therefore further provided for." A. then devised his residuary estate to other persons:—Held, that he had died intestate as to the B. property, notwithstanding the residuary devise. Hawks v. Longridge, 29 L. T. 449.

Effect on Lease for Lives.]—A testator, seised of estates in fee, and holding certain lands and titles in the county of H., under church leases for lives, devised all his lands and hereditaments in the counties of H. & G. and all other his real estate to his daughter, and the heirs of her body, and, for default of such issue, to F. and his heirs. The daughter at the testator's death, and ever afterwards, was of unsound mind. Her husband, having taken out administration to the testator, with the will annexed, procured from time to time renewals of the leases. She survived him as well as all the cestuis que vient named in the testator's leases, and died without issue, and without having done any act to bar such interest as F. had under the devise:—Held, that the leaseholds for lives passed by the will, and that F. was entitled to the benefit of the subsisting leases, which had been obtained by way of renewal of the old leases. Fitzroy v. Howard, 3 Russ. 225; 7 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 16; 27 R. R. 73.

Devise of all freehold lands would include leases for lives, though the limitations are inapplicable. Watkins v. Lea, 6 Ves. 642. And see Mogg v. Mogg, 1 Mer. 654; 15 R. R. 185.

A testator seised of an estate pur autre vie, and possessed of personal property to the amount of about 4,500*l.*, by his will bequeathed "the sum of 1,500*l.*, the other part of the 4,500*l.*, together with any further property," in trust for the use of his father, to be disposed of by him, share and share alike, as he by deed or will should appoint, among testator's brothers, H. and J., and the daughter or daughters of his sister E. The will contained a residuary clause in these words: "As to the rest, residue, and remainder of my worldly estate and fortune, not heretofore and hereby disposed of, in trust to the use of my affectionate father, J. C., and his heirs, executors, and administrators for ever":—Held, that the estate pur autre vie passed under this residuary clause, and not under the words "any further property," upon the true construction of the entire will. Acheson v. Fair, 3 Dr. & War. 512; 2 Con. & L. 208.

A testator, seised of freeholds and copyholds in fee, and leaseholds for lives, devised "all his real estate whatsoever and wheresoever":—Held, that the copyholds and leaseholds for lives, as well as the freeholds in fee, passed, notwithstanding some parts of the will were inapplicable to them. Weigall v. Brome, 6 Sim. 99.

Testator devised all his manor, messuages, lands, tenements, tithes and hereditaments, and all his real estate whatsoever, "except what is hereinafter mentioned and devised," to the use of all his children successively, in strict settlement, and gave two of them annuities, which he charged upon a rectory held by him under a lease for lives, which he directed to be renewed if those two children or either should be living at his death, and that their lives or that of the survivor should be inserted in the new lease, and the fine paid out of his personal estate; he gave part of his personal estate specifically, and directed the residue to be laid out in land, to be settled to the same uses as his real estate; but afterwards, by a testamentary paper, unattested, he disposed of his personal estate otherwise: the heir contracted to sell the lease of the rectory, and upon a case directed to the court of king's bench on his bill for specific performance, the certificate was, that the lease did not pass by the will, but devolved on the heir as special occupant; but the Lord Chancellor considered that title too doubtful to be forced on a purchaser: an act of parliament was therefore obtained. Sheffield v. Mulgrave (Lord), 2 Ves. 525.

—— Lease for Years—Intention of Testator.]—If upon the whole will it plainly appear that the testator meant to pass leasehold property under the description of real estate, the court will give effect to his intention. Goodman v. Edwards, 2 Myl. & K. 759.

—— Where Testator has no Freeholds.]—A devise, dated after 1837, of "all my real estate," without any words of locality or description, will pass leaseholds if the testator has no other landed property. Gully v. Davis, 39 L. J., Ch. 684; L. R. 10 Eq. 562.

A testator devised all his real estate whatsoever and wheresoever to trustees. The will contained a residuary bequest of personal estate. He was at the date of his will and of his death possessed of property which he believed to be freehold, but which proved to be leasehold. He had no other landed property:—Held, that the leasehold passed under the devise. Ib.

A testator gave and devised all his freehold and copyhold messuages, farms, lands, tenements, hereditaments, and real estate, situate at Market Rasen, to his wife for life, and then to his son, his heirs and assigns, for ever. The testator had no property at Market Rasen except a leasehold estate held for 1,000 years:—Held, that the leasehold estate passed under the above clause. Nelson v. Hopkins, 21 L. J., Ch. 410.

A. devised all his estates to B., and had only leaseholds:—Held, they shall pass. So where a man, having lands in fee, and for years, devised all his lands, the fee-simple only shall pass; but where he had a lease for years, and no fee-simple, the lease for years shall pass, for otherwise the lease would be void, and the court directed a trial at law upon the issue. Whether the testator had both freehold and leasehold, and in the same parish, quære. Knotsford v. Gardiner, 2 Atk. 451.

Absolute interest in leaseholds bequeathed to trustees in trust for two persons:—Held, to pass. Bradshaw v. Bradshaw, 5 Ir. Eq. R. 310.

—— Where Testator has both Freeholds and Leaseholds.]—One seised in fee, and possessed by lease for twenty-one years of lands in D., devises all his lands in D., whereof he is seised, possessed, or anyways interested in, to A. for life; remainder to B., in tail; remainder to C., with power to make a jointure; remainder to trustee to preserve contingent remainders, &c.:—Decreed, the leasehold should pass as well as the freehold. Addis v. Clement, 2 P. Wms. 456.

General devise of all manors, messuages, lands, tenements, and hereditaments, in the county of Y., or elsewhere, with long limitations in strict settlement, and a residuary disposition of the personal estate, also by very general words. The Lord Chancellor was clearly of opinion that two leasehold houses passed with the personal estate, and not under the devise of the land; but granted a case. Thompson v. Lawley, 5 Ves. 476.

Testator devised certain specified messuages and lands, and all other his messuages, lands, tenements, and hereditaments, which might not be in his will particularly described or mentioned, to trustees upon certain trusts. The court declined to decide whether a leasehold house passed under the general words without directing a case for the opinion of a court of law. Parker v. Marchant, 1 Y. & C. C. C. 290. The court of common pleas, to whom a case was sent:—Held, that the leaseholds did not pass, and their certificate was confirmed, &c. 2 Y. & C. C. C. 279; 12 L. J., Ch. 314; 7 Jur. 318. And see S. C. at law, 5 Man. & Gr. 496; 6 Scott (N.R.) 478; 12 L. J., C. P. 170.

Testator gave, devised, and bequeathed all his messuages, lands, tenements, and hereditaments whatsoever and wheresoever, and all moneys in the funds, to trustees, their heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, according to the several and respective estates and interests therein, and declared the trust of the rents, issues, and profits, dividends, interest, and proceeds, subject to ground rents and other outgoings in respect of the said messuages, lands, &c.; the leasehold estates pass with the freehold upon the subsequent words. Hartley v. Hurle, 5 Ves. 540; 5 R. R. 113.

Devise of all testator's real estates wheresoever situated, lying, and being:—Held, not to include leaseholds as well as freeholds. Whitaker v. Ambler, 1 Eden, 151.

One, having freehold and leasehold estate in C., devises all his manors, lands, tenements, mines of coal and lead, to, &c.:—Held, the leasehold as well as freehold passed. Lowther v. Cavendish, Ambl. 366; 1 Eden, 99.

—— Where Freeholds and Leaseholds intermixed.]—A devise of lands and tenements without more, or a devise of messuages and tenements to uses applicable only to the freehold property without more, will not pass the testator's leasehold property. But a devise of messuages or tenements, with the appurtenances, to uses applicable only to freehold property, will comprise leasehold property, where a clear intention to that effect can be collected from the circumstance of the leasehold property having been blended in enjoyment with the freehold. Hobson v. Blackburn, 1 Myl. & K. 571 ; 2 L. J., Ch. 168.

Testator devised to trustees all his messuages or tenements, farms, lands, hereditaments, and premises in C. and W., and all other his freehold lands and tenements whatsoever, to hold all such his real estate upon trust for his wife for life, remainder to other parties in tail. He also gave all his household goods, &c., and all other his personal estate, to his wife absolutely. The testator was seised in fee of freehold lands in C. and W., and also in S. ; but there was no messuage or building on any of the freehold lands, except a barn in S. He also had land in C. for a long term of years, on which there was a farm and buildings ; and at his death, and for six years before, he occupied the freeholds and leaseholds as one farm, but they were not contiguous :—Held, that the freeholds only passed by the devise to the trustees, but that the leaseholds did pass to the wife as personalty under the residuary bequest. Arkell v. Fletcher, 10 Sim. 299 ; 3 Jur. 1099.

A testator devised all his real estates to trustees ; as to his freehold messuages, farm lands, and hereditaments in the county of B., in trust for C. The testator had a farm in that county consisting of a messuage and 116 acres of land, of which the messuage and the greater part of the land were freehold, and the other parts leasehold for long terms of years at peppercorn rents : and they were interspersed with and undistinguishable from the freehold part, and had been demised therewith as one farm, at one entire rent, and the testator had always treated and dealt with them as freehold :—Held, nevertheless, that the leasehold parts were not comprised in the trust. Stone v. Greening, 13 Sim. 390.

A. gave all his real estate situate as described in his will to trustees to have and to hold to them, and the survivor of them, for ever or otherwise, according to the several and respective natures and tenures thereof, on certain trusts :—Held, that the leasehold as well as the freehold property of the testator at the place mentioned passed. Swift v. Swift, 1 De G. F. & J. 160 ; 29 L. J., Ch. 121 ; 1 L. T. 150 ; 8 W. R. 100.

A testator devised to A. and B., and their heirs, all his "freehold land, messuages or tenements, and hereditaments, respectively situate and being in, or forming the whole or part of," a set of buildings which he named, all in a particular parish. Of one part of the property thus described the testator at his death was seised in fee, subject to a lease ; of a second part he was possessed for a term of years ; and of (X.) a third part (now in question) he was possessed for a term of years, and he was also seised of the reversion of the same in fee, from the expiration of three years after the end of the term :—Held, that both the leasehold and the freehold interest of the testator in the portion (X.) passed under the bequest. Matthews v. Matthews, L. R. 4 Eq. 278 ; 15 W. R. 761.

A residuary devise of manors, messuages, lands, farms, tithes, tenements, hereditaments and real estate, as well copyhold as freehold, was held not to include long leaseholds which had been occupied in one farm with freeholds. Holmes v. Milward, 47 L. J., Ch. 522 ; 38 L. T. 381 ; 26 W. R. 608.

The dealing with land originally of leasehold tenure for a long period by persons in possession of it was held to afford a presumption, as between those claiming under such persons, that the reversion had been got in. Ib.

A testator, after certain devises and after charging his real estate with certain payments, gave and devised "all the rest and residue of my manors, messuages, farms, and real estate, whatsoever and wheresoever, in possession as in reversion, remainder as expectancy, and whether vested in me or any other person or persons in trust for me, or which I am entitled to at law or in equity," to the uses in his will mentioned. The will dealt separately with personal estate : —Held, that leaseholds had not passed under the residuary devise, notwithstanding the inconvenience of separating them from freeholds of the testator with which they were let to one tenant at and before the date of the will. Ib.

Effect of Insufficient Attestation before Wills Act.]—Devise of all lands and tenements in or near F., by a will attested by two witnesses only, where the testator had freehold, will not pass leasehold ; contra, if he had only had leasehold. Chapman v. Hart, 1 Ves. Sen. 271.

Leasehold Tithes Passing with Freehold.]—Testator, having tithes in fee, and likewise tithes by leases perpetually renewable, devised all his lands, tenements, and tithes to defendant ; the leasehold tithes pass as well as the freehold. Turner v. Hustler, 1 Bro. C. C. 78.

"Contrary Intention" under Wills Act.]—A testator having devised the residue of his personal estate, whatsoever and wheresoever, to A. B., devised all his manors, lands, &c., at W., in the county of Durham, and at B., in the county of York, and a parcel of land purchased of M. L., and all other his real estates in the counties of Durham and York and elsewhere, and all his estate and interest therein, to C. and D. and their heirs, to certain uses :—Held, under the 1 Vict. c. 26, s. 26, that his leaseholds in Durham passed to C. and D. with the real, and not to A. B. with the personal estate. Wilson v. Eden, 16 Beav. 153. Reversing 17 L. J., Ch. 459 ; 12 Jur. 488.

The Wills Act, s. 26, which provides that a general devise of the testator's lands shall include leaseholds, unless a contrary intention appear by the will, was intended to abolish a technical rule which generally defeated the intention, and not to substitute another technical rule in its place. If, therefore, on the fair construction of the will, there are indications of an intention that leaseholds should not pass by the devise of lands, they will be excluded. Prescott v. Barker, 43 L. J., Ch. 498 ; L. R. 9 Ch. 174 ; 30 L. T. 149 ; 22 W. R. 422—C. A.

A husband, after devising his mansion house to his wife for life, devised his mansion house and "lands" in strict settlement. There was a direction to trustees to receive and accumulate the rents during the minority of any tenant for life or tenant in tail by purchase, and to stand possessed of the accumulations, if such tenant for life or in tail attained twenty-one, or died under that age leaving issue entitled or inheritable under the will, to pay or transfer the funds to such tenant for life or in tail, his executors or administrators, as personal estate; but if such tenant for life or in tail died under twenty-one without leaving such issue, then to lay out the fund in the purchase of freeholds in fee-simple to be settled to the same uses as the devised estates. There was a power of sale, and a direction to invest the moneys arising from sales in the purchase of freehold lands, to be settled to the same uses, or leaseholds convenient to be held therewith, with a direction to settle the purchased leaseholds on like trusts, but so that they should not vest absolutely in any tenant in tail by purchase who did not attain twenty-one; but on his death under that age should devolve as if they had been freeholds of inheritance, and been settled accordingly. There was also a bequest of heirlooms to be held on trusts corresponding with the uses of the mansion house, with a similar proviso against their vesting absolutely in any tenant in tail by purchase who did not attain twenty-one. The testator bequeathed his residuary personal estate to trustees upon trusts corresponding with the uses of the devised estates, with a proviso that it should not vest absolutely in any tenant in tail by purchase dying under twenty-one, but on his death under that age should devolve as if it had been freehold of inheritance included in the devise:—Held, that there was sufficient indication of an intention not to include leaseholds for years in the devise of lands, and that they passed under the residuary bequest. Ib.

A husband devised and bequeathed the residue of his real and personal estate upon trust to convert his residuary personal estate, "except leaseholds," and out of the income of the investments and the rents and profits of the real estate to pay annuities, and accumulate the residue of the income during his wife's life; and after her death upon trust as to all his real estate at, in, or near E., and in or near W., out of the rents and profits during the life of J. T. W. to repair and insure, and to pay an annuity, and subject thereto in trust for J. T. W. and his assigns for life; and after his decease for his first and other sons successively in tail male, with remainder to his daughters equally as tenants in common in tail, with limitations over in the nature of cross remainders. The testator had both freeholds and leaseholds for a term of 1,000 years at E.; at W. he had leaseholds only for a term of 900 years:—Held, that the leaseholds at E. and also at W. passed under the devise, the exception of leaseholds in the gift of residue not showing a contrary intention. Moase v. White, 3 Ch. D. 763; 24 W. R. 1038.

Effect on Reversion.]—A., seised in fee, and in possession of several real estates, and of the reversion in fee of the manor of S., subject to the estate tail of three persons who were living, devises all his estates generally to trustees in trust to be sold and to invest the money for benefit of younger children. This reversion falls in after the death of A.:—Held, that reversion passed by will, and was well vested in trustees for the benefit of the testator's younger children. Atkyns v. Atkyns, 3 Bro. P. C. 408; Cowp. 808.

Construction of devise, as applying to the body of the estate, or merely a reversion from the combination of it with other estates, and the general inaptitude of the expressions, &c. Welby v. Welby, 2 V. & B. 192; 13 R. R. 58.

J., having lands in A. and B., settles lands in A. to particular uses, remainder to his own right heirs; then devises all his lands in B., and elsewhere, not formerly settled; hereby the reversion of lands in A. passes. Chester v. Chester, Fitzg. 150; 3 P. Wms. 55; 2 Eq. Cas. Abr. 330. pl. 9.

A devise of lands, out of settlement, will pass as well those lands of which the testator was seised in fee at the time of making his will, as those which were comprised in a settlement made on his marriage, the particular uses of which were determined by his having no male issue. Falkland (Viscount) v. Lytton, 3 Bro. P. C. 24.

A., by virtue of several settlements, being tenant in tail after possibility of issue extinct, of some lands, remainder in fee, to trustees in trust for him and his heirs, and to some other lands being tenant for life, remainder to his first, &c., sons, remainder to trustees in fee, in trust for the right heirs of B., whose heir he was, and as to other lands, being tenant in tail, remainder to the right heirs of his father; and having no issue, by will devised to his nephew all his lands, tenements, and hereditaments, out of settlement:—Decreed, all the lands so settled to pass by this devise. Strode v. Russel, 2 Vern. 621; 3 Ch. Rep. 169.

Lands with a power of revocation will not pass by a devise of lands out of settlement. Ib., 624.

Devise of lands not in settlement will pass the reversion of the settled lands. Glover v. Spendlove, 4 Bro. C. C. 337.

A devise "of all property which I am possessed of, which is not settled by either of my marriage settlements," will pass a reversion in fee, of an estate limited to the testator by his marriage settlement. Jones v. Skinner, 5 L. J., Ch. 87.

Testator was seised of one estate in fee-simple, and of another settled by marriage articles upon himself for life, remainder in tail to his first and other sons, &c., and, in default of such issue, to his own right heirs, provided that "in case he should die without issue, or intestate, the said lands" were to go to A. L., her heirs and assigns. By his will he devised all his "unsettled estate":—Held, that the reversion in fee in the settled estate passed. Incorporated Society v. Richards, 1 Dr. & War. 258; 1 Con. & L. 58; 4 Ir. Eq. R. 177.

A testator, entitled to a copyhold estate in remainder expectant upon the determination of the life estate of his wife in the same premises, by his will gave the income of all his property, wherever situate or of whatsoever kind, to his wife for life; and, at her decease, he gave all the property then left by him, and of which she was to have the income for her life, to his children; and, at his wife's death or second marriage, he directed his trustees to receive the rents and dividends arising from the estate and effects he should die possessed of, and to apply the same to the maintenance of his children until the youngest should attain twenty-one:—Held, that the interest of the testator in remainder in the copyhold estate passed by his will. The tendency of modern decisions is to read the different clauses of the same will referentially to each other, unless they are clearly independent. Ford v. Ford, 6 Hare, 486, 492.

A., at the time of making his will, was seised in fee of the manor of G., and was tenant for life, under his father's will, of the mansion-house of C. and the manor of W., with an ultimate reversion in fee after the determination of life estates and estates tail. By his will he devised the mansion-house of C. and the manors of G. and W. to C. for life, with remainders over. The limitations of the will corresponded in a great measure to those of the father's will. The will gave to the tenants for life, several of whom were tenants for life under the father's will, powers of jointuring, to be capable of being exercised as they should come into possession of the estates by virtue of the limitations in the testator's will:—Held, that it was not the intention of the testator to dispose only of his reversion in the mansion-house of C. and manor of W., but to deal with the present interest in them; and that C., who had become absolutely entitled to those properties under the will of the testator's father, was put to his election.

Although the inaptitude of some of the limitations in a devise to a reversion will not prevent a reversion from passing, it may furnish a sufficient ground for holding that something more than a reversion was intended to pass.

Where a testator devises property in which he has a devisable, but only partial, interest, it is a question of construction whether he has shewn an intention to dispose of more than the devisable interest that he has, and an express declaration of such intention is not necessary in order to raise a case of election. Wintour v. Clifton, 26 L. J., Ch. 218; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 74; 5 W. R. 129.

—— Where Reversion Created by the Will itself.]—A. devised a farm to B. for life, and after some legacies devises all other his personal estate, lands, tenements and hereditaments, not before devised, to C. The reversion of the farm passed by the general devise to C. Kingsman v. Kingsman, 2 Vern. 560.

A., seized in fee, devised Black-acre to B. for life, and devised to C. all his lands not before devised, to be sold. By this devise of all his lands, &c., the reversion of Black-acre was well devised to C. Rooke v. Rooke, 2 Vern. 461; Pre. Ch. 602; 1 Freem. 219. And see Taaffe v. Ferrall, 10 Ir. Ch. R. 188.

Where a testator gives a real estate to A. for life, and then makes a residuary devise to A., B. and C. for their lives, there is no such inconsistency as to exclude the remainder in that real estate from the residuary devise. Alliston v. Chapple, 6 Jur. (N.S.) 288; 2 L. T. 110.

Lands, parcel of the duchy of Cornwall and governed by the custom of that duchy, the tenure of which was originally a holding or convention from seven years to seven years, which ultimately grew into a holding to the tenant and his heirs and assigns, subject to the payment of a fixed fine every seven years under penalty of forfeiture, no surrender to the uses of a will being required:—Held to pass by a general devise made previously to the 55 Geo. 3, c. 192; and the circumstances of such general devise being followed by a devise of all testator's duchy lands to one for life:—Held, not to prevent its passing the reversion. Ustieke v. Peters, 4 K. & J. 437; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 1271.

Effect on Contingent Interest in Real Estate.]—Where a testator devised (by will dated in 1827) all the hereditaments to which he should be entitled at his death to trustees for sale:—Held, that a contingent interest in an estate in fee both by virtue of a shifting use, and also of an ultimate limitation in default of issue of his brother, did not pass by such devise. Honywood v. Honywood, 2 Y. & C. C. C. 471.

A contingent interest in real estate transmissible to heirs may be disposed of by a residuary devise made in general words, though the testator could not become entitled to such real estate, except on events depending on his own death without issue. Ingilby v. Amcotts, 25 L. J., Ch. 769; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 556; 4 W. R. 433.

—— On Legal Estate in Testator as Mortgagee.]—A man, seised in fee of divers lands, and having also lands mortgaged to him, devises all his lands to A. and his heirs; the mortgaged lands did not pass. Winn v. Littleton, 1 Vern. 3; 2 Vent. 351; 2 Ch. Ca. 51.

Testator, having real estates in A. and B., and a mortgage in C., and a statute extended in D., devises all his credits and mortgages to his executors, and then devises all his real estates to whatsoever, in A., B., C. and D., to S. for life, and after his decease to his heirs and their heirs for ever:—Held, that mortgage in C., and extent in D., went to executors. Davis v. Gibbs, Fitzg. 116; 3 P. Wms. 26; Mos. 269.

Under a general devise of all the rest, residue, and remainder of and in all and singular the property, estate, and effects which the testator should be possessed of or entitled to, or over which he should have a disposing power at his decease, of whatsoever kind, &c., the same might be:—Held, that the legal estate in mortgaged premises did not pass, but descended to the testator's heir-at-law. Horsfall, In re, M'Cle. & Y. 292.

The legal estate in mortgaged premises did not pass by a general residuary devise by the mortgagee. Leeds (Duke) v. Munday, 3 Ves. 348.

A., in 1860, gave all the residue of his real and personal estate to all his nephews and nieces as tenants in common, after specifically devising certain lands, not including any lands vested in him as mortgagee or trustee, and bequeathing annuities and legacies:—Held, that the estates on trust and mortgage did not pass to the unascertained class, but to the heir-at-law as trustee; and the court directed the same to be vested in the executors upon the trusts of the will. Finney's Estate, In re, 3 Giff. 465; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 965; 6 L. T. 745.

A testator who was mortgagee in fee with a partial beneficial interest in the equity of redemption, devised to trustees all his real and personal estate upon trust, first, to pay his debts and funeral and testamentary expenses, and then, upon certain trusts, for his wife and children; and he gave to his trustees powers to sell or mortgage any part of his estate. The will contained no devise of trust or mortgaged estates:—Held, that the legal estate in the mortgaged property did not pass under the will. Packman and Moss, In re, 45 L. J., Ch. 54; 1 Ch. D. 214; 34 L. T. 110; 24 W. R. 170. But see Brown, In re, 3 Ch. D. 156.

A testatrix devised and bequeathed all the residue of her property, of whatever description, which she had power to dispose of by will, as follows:—One moiety to be equally divided between her two daughters, and the other moiety she gave to a trustee to be paid in equal shares to her two sons at twenty-five, the shares of children dying under age to go to the survivors, and the trustee to have power to vary the securities and to apply part of the income for the maintenance and education of the children. The testatrix was mortgagee in fee of an estate which was subsequently sold under a power in the mortgage deed, and the purchaser required that the residuary devises should join in the conveyance :—Held, that the legal estate in the mortgaged property passed to the heir-at-law of the mortgagee. Martin v. Laverton, 39 L. J., Ch. 166 ; L. R. 9 Eq. 563 ; 22 L. T. 700 ; 18 W. R. 561.

—— Where Trust for Sale.]—A., being seised of the equity of redemption of lands in N., which he had mortgaged to his father, and also of the legal estate in them as heir to his father, the mortgage being still unsatisfied, devised all his lands in N. and elsewhere in trust to sell :—Held, that the legal estate did not pass by the will. Marshall, Ex parte, 9 Sim. 555 ; 8 L. J., Ch. 187 ; 3 Jur. 196.

A husband, who was mortgagee in fee of an estate to secure a sum of money of which he was trustee, devised and bequeathed his residuary real and personal estate unto and to the use of his wife, her heirs, executors, administrators and assigns, in trust, either to leave the same in existing investments, or sell and convert the same, and out of the proceeds to pay his debts, funeral and testamentary expenses, and certain legacies, and invest the residue and retain the income thereof for her life ; and, subject as aforesaid, such residue to remain in trust for C. There was no express devise of trust or mortgaged estate :—Held, that the legal estate in the mortgaged property did not pass under the will. Smith, In re, 4 Ch. D. 70 ; 35 L. T. 890 ; 25 W. R. 294.

A testatrix directed her just debts to be paid. She then gave pecuniary legacies, and gave all the rest, residue, and remainder of her real and personal estate and effects to T., for her own absolute use and benefit :—Held, that although by these dispositions the testatrix's own real estate was charged with debts and legacies, an estate of which she was mortgagee was not excepted from the residuary devise. Stevens's Will, In re, 41 L. J., Ch. 537 ; L. R. 6 Eq. 597.

Effect on Interest of Testator as Mortgagee in Possession.]—J. W., being seised and possessed of considerable freehold, copyhold, and leasehold estates in the county of H. ; and in possession, as mortgagee, of certain leasehold houses at K., in the county of M. ; but having no other property in the said county of M., and having other estates vested in him as mortgagee, besides those at K., makes his will, devising "all his freehold, copyhold, and leasehold messuages, &c., in the county of H., and in the town of K.," to A. W. for life, and after her death "all and singular other his freehold, copyhold, and leasehold messuages," &c., in the counties of H. and M. or elsewhere to E. W. and A. T. for their joint lives, and after their several deceases "all the said freehold, leasehold, and copyhold messuages," &c., unto and equally among their children ; and gives to A. W. "all the residue of his real estate, not before disposed of, and all other his estates and interests whatsoever, vested in him as mortgagee or trustee," &c., "and all the residue of his personal estate, ready money, and securities for money," &c., subject to the payment of debts and legacies :—Held, that the mortgaged premises at K. passed under the devise of all the freehold, copyhold, and leasehold messuages, &c., in the county of H., and in the town of K. Woodhouse v. Meredith, 1 Mer. 450 ; 15 R. R. 145.

S., in 1849, devised all his freehold and copyhold mansions, messuages, farms, and hereditaments, situate in the county of N., or elsewhere, to four persons, in trust. In 1843, S., being mortgagee of certain lands, with a power of sale, conveyed them to A., and he, in 1845, by deed, declared himself to be a trustee for S., who from that time held undisputed possession of them :—Held, that as between the parties beneficially interested under the will, the mortgaged lands passed under the above general devise. Burdus v. Dixon, 4 Jur. (N.S.) 967 ; 6 W. R. 427.

Lands originally held under old mortgages pass by general devise, though no release of equity of redemption appears. Att.-Gen. v. Bowyer, 3 Ves. 714 ; 4 R. R. 132. And see S. C., further, 5 Ves. 300. S. P., Att.-Gen. v. Vigor, 8 Ves. 256.

—— Where Foreclosure subsequent to Date of Will.]—Devise of all lands does not pass land held in mortgage, as it continues personal estate, till final order of foreclosure ; and devise of lands held in mortgage at time of will does not pass that land, if testator obtains final order of foreclosure before death. Thompson v. Grant, 4 Madd. 438 ; 20 R. R. 318.

Mortgages in fee, though forfeited, will not pass by a general devise, of "all my lands, tenements, and hereditaments" ; nor will they pass by such a general devise, though the equity of redemption is afterwards foreclosed or released. Strode v. Russel, 2 Vern. 621 ; 3 Ch. Rep. 169.

If a testator, after devising all "his lands, tenements, and hereditaments," foreclose an equity of redemption of a mortgage in fee, such estate will not pass by these general words, because a foreclosure is considered as a new purchase of the land. Casborne v. Scarfe, 1 Atk. 605.

Effect on Equity of Redemption.]—By a devise of land mortgaged in fee, the equity of redemption alone passes ; if for years, the reversion and equity of redemption pass. Forrester v. Leigh, Ambl. 174.

Tenant in tail, with remainders in tail, the reversion in fee to tenant in tail, the land having been mortgaged for a term of years by donor, previous to those estates, and so every of them having an equity of redemption incident to it. Tenant in tail by will appoints the mortgage to be paid off, and then mortgaged term to be assigned to his mother, and by same will (being seised in fee of other lands) devises all lands to W. and his heirs, by which reversion of mortgaged premises passes, on the estate tail and remainder in tail being spent :—Held, that the equity of redemption, which was incident to the reversion in fee of tenant in tail, did not pass to the mother by the will, and was, therefore, not severed from the reversion. Amhurst v. Litton, Fitzg. 99. Affirmed, 5 Bro. P. C. 254.

Neither the words "I give and bequeath all my effects (after paying of every due demand)," though immediately preceded by directions touching the rents of a copyhold estate, nor the words "what title I have left to call my own," will include the equity of redemption of that copyhold. Henderson v. Farbridge, 1 Russ. 479 ; 4 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 209.

Proceeds of Part of Realty not passing by Devise.]—Upon a marriage, an undivided eighth share in remainder in fee belonging to the wife expectant on a life estate entirety was settled in trust for the wife for life, with remainder to the husband for life, with remainder to the children in tail, and remainder to the heirs of the wife ; and a power of sale and of exchange was given to the trustees, who were to invest the proceeds in the purchase of realty in possession, and hold it on the trusts declared respecting the reversionary interest thus settled. The entirety of a portion of this estate was sold, in concurrence with the trustees of the settlement, by the other parties interested in the estate. By the deed an eighth part of the purchase-money was apportioned according to the values of the life interest and the reversion in that share and the value of the reversionary interest and the reversion in that share, and the value of the reversionary interest was expressed to have been paid to the trustees of the settlement. In point of fact, however, the whole of the eighth part was invested in consols, the dividends of which were paid to the tenant for life for the entirety. This state of things continued after the death of the wife (who died without leaving issue) during the lives of her husband and heir-at-law successively, but there was no evidence of their intention as to the destination of the fund beyond what was to be inferred from the above course of dealing with it :—Held, that an election could not be inferred to take the property in its actual state, and that on the death of the heir-at-law his share of the fund was to be treated as part of his real estate. Pedder's Settlement, In re, 5 De G. M. & G. 890 ; 24 L. J., Ch. 313 ; 3 Eq. R. 157 ; 3 W. R. 136.

Held, also, that it did not pass by his will under a devise of all such shares as he might at his death possess in the estate, there being a part of it remaining unsold to answer the description. Ib.

A testator devised to his grand-daughter a plot of freehold land by the description of "the portion of meadow land received by me in exchange from S.," and other plots to the same grand-daughter, describing them by reference to the tenants in whose occupation they then were. Portions of the plot of land which the testator had acquired by exchange from S., and of certain of the plots which had been in the occupation of the several tenants named in the descriptions, were, at the date of the will, under contract for sale to a railway company. The company had taken possession before the date of the will, but the conveyance was not completed until after the testator's death : — Held, that, as there remained lands to answer the descriptions in the will at the time of its date, such lands alone passed under the devises, and that the purchase-money paid by the railway company to the trustee of the testator's will ought to have been paid to the plaintiff, the residuary devisee and legatee. Jackson, In re, Wilson v. Donald, 44 L. T. 467.

vi. Gift of Residue.

"Residue"—What is.]—A testator gave all his personal estate for the use of his wife, not doubting but that she would exercise due discretion and economy in expending the same, and directed that the whole of his personal property should be under the care of his wife and other executor, who were requested to pay debts, &c. ; and after the decease of his wife the testator gave the residue of his personal estate over :—Held, that residue meant residue after payment of debts, &c., and that the wife took a life interest only with a gift over. Brooks, In re, 2 Dr. & Sm. 362 ; 34 L. J., Ch. 616 ; 12 L. T. 172 ; 13 W. R. 573.

A testatrix gave several life annuities and directed funds to be invested producing an income sufficient to meet them. She bequeathed the residue of her estate, "including the funds set apart to answer the annuities when and so soon as such annuities shall respectively cease," to T. The estate was only sufficient to pay about 5*s.* in the pound on the legacies and values of the life annuities, and under an order of the court the sums apportioned to the values of the life annuities were invested, and the dividends paid to the annuitants. On the death of one of the annuitants, T. applied for payment to him of the fund of which that annuitant had been receiving the income :—Held, that he had only the ordinary rights of a residuary legatee, and could take nothing until the legacies and annuities had all been paid in full. Tootal, In re, Hankin v. Kilburn, 2 Ch. D. 628 ; 24 W. R. 1031.

"Residue" of personal estate means the personal estate which remains after payment of the testator's debts, funeral and testamentary expenses, and the costs of the administration of his estate, including the costs of an administration suit. Trethewy v. Helyar, 46 L. J., Ch. 125 ; 4 Ch. D. 53.

The share of one of several residuary legatees consists of what remains after all equities between him and the estate have been settled. Willes v. Greenhill, 29 Beav. 376.

Arrears of income of separate estate pass by a general gift in a will of "the residue of the said trust fund comprised in my marriage settlement." Tatham v. Drummond, 2 H. & M. 262.

—— When Construed General Residue.]—A testator, after bequeathing some pecuniary legacies and some specific articles, directed "the residue" to be given to A. :—Held, that A. was entitled to the general residue of the testator's estate, and not the residue of such articles only as were ejusdem generis. Bainbridge v. Bainbridge, 7 L. J., Ch. 4.

The following passage at the end of a will, "I guess there will be found sufficient in my banker's hands to defray and discharge my debts, which I hereby desire E. M. to do, and keep the residue for her own use and pleasure," was held, under the circumstances and upon the whole context of the will, to amount to a gift of the general residuary personal estate to E. M. Boys v. Morgan, 3 Myl. & C. 661 ; 9 Sim. 289 ; 7 L. J., Ch. 247 ; 2 Jur. 514 ; Ib., 608.

The words "what remains" at the close of a bequest of a specific fund :—Held, a general residuary disposition, the full sense not being necessarily confined ; comprising, therefore, personal estate bequeathed upon a contingency too remote, not being to take place until thirty years after the testator's death. Crooke v. De Vandes, 11 Ves. 330.

A father, having bequeathed the residue of his estate to trustees, directed that they should convert into money such parts as did not consist of money at his death, and should stand possessed of the proceeds upon trust to divide the "residue thereof" among his daughters:—Held, that the trusts applied to the whole of the residuary estate. Wood v. Evans, 22 W. R. 438.

Testatrix by her will disposes of certain long annuities, and of a sum in cash, and then uses the following words: "I believe there will be sufficient money left to pay my funeral expenses." By a codicil to her will the testatrix expresses herself thus: "If there is money left unemployed, I desire it may be given in charity":—Held, that the general residue of the testatrix's personal estate, including a sum of 2,500*l.* trust moneys, in which she had a vested reversionary interest at the time of her death, subject to be divested by the appointment of her mother, passed under the words "money left unemployed," and was well given to charity. Legge v. Asgill, cited in Turn. & R. 265; 24 R. R. 51. See note there.

A testatrix having two leaseholds, at X. and Y., bequeathed those at X. to one for life, and directed that after her decease they should "form the residue of her leasehold estates thereinafter bequeathed." She then bequeathed all the residue of her leaseholds "whatsoever and wheresoever" not thereinbefore otherwise disposed of:—Held, that the leasehold at Y. also passed under the residuary gift. Markham v. Ivatt, 20 Beav. 579.

Testatrix gave nine legacies of 1,000*l.* each, part of 14,500*l.* South Sea annuities, and as to the residue of the said fund and all other her personal estate, including such of said legacies as should lapse by death before they should be transferable, upon trust to convert into money such part of her residuary personal estate as shall not consist of South Sea annuities, and invest such money with any money belonging to her at her decease in said fund, South Sea annuities, and from time to time invest the dividends, &c., of all such South Sea annuities as shall constitute her residuary personal estate in the same fund till the youngest of the said legatees shall or would, if living, have attained twenty-one, and then to transfer the whole of such South Sea annuities to said nine legatees equally, with such survivorship as their original shares. The nine legacies of 1,000*l.* each only are specific; the remainder of the South Sea annuities is part of the general personal estate. Richardson v. Brown, 4 Ves. 177.

It is a question to be determined by the particular words of each will whether a gift of "surplus" or "residue" means surplus or residue properly so called, or a mere proportional share of a particular fund. Where, after the gift of a fund charged with certain payments, the words were, "and the overplus which the said, &c., do produce more than all these disbursements do amount to (which I do find and compute to be about 60*l.* per annum)," they were held to mean surplus, and not proportional share. Southmolton Corporation v. Att.-Gen., 5 H. L. Cas. 1; 23 L. J., Ch. 567; 18 Jur. 435.

A feme coverte had power by will to appoint a trust fund, of which 2,000*l.* was payable immediately, and the remainder subject to her husband's life interest therein. She appointed the 2,000*l.*, and directed the trustees, after the decease of the husband, to stand possessed of the "residue" of the stock, after payment thereout of the 2,000*l.*, upon trust to pay 5,700*l.* as the husband should appoint, and to apply the residue in payment of a number of legacies. The husband appointed the 5,700*l.* to himself:—Held, notwithstanding there was a probability that the fund would prove insufficient for the payment of all the legacies, that he was entitled to immediate payment of the 5,700*l.* Vivian v. Mortlock, 21 Beav. 252.

The "residue" applicable to the payment of the legacies (other than the 5,700*l.*) being held to mean simply what remained after payment of the 5,700*l.*, and not a proportionate share of the fund. Ib.

—— When Construed Residue of Particular Fund.]—A testator, after disposing specifically of most of his property, enumerated funds out of which he directed that his debts, funeral and testamentary expenses should be paid, and added: "The remainder to be equally divided to my surviving children." The frame of the will left it doubtful whether these words were intended to apply generally or only to the residue of the particular funds:—Held, that, considering the general frame of the will, only what was left of the particular funds passed. Jull v. Jacobs, 3 Ch. D. 703; 35 L. T. 153; 24 W. R. 947.

A testator bequeathed to A. his household furniture and other like things, "and all other goods of whatever kind," and he appointed that certain specified moneys should be divided as follows after all his debts should be paid off. He then specified certain legacies, and proceeded, "three or four thousand pounds or whatever remaining sum or sums to A.":—Held, that A. did not take the general residue. Wrench v. Jutting, 3 Beav. 521; 5 Jur. 145.

Testator, after bequeathing to A. and B. legacies of stock unequal in amount, and giving several legacies to public charities, requests the said A. and B. to be his executors, and gives to them as such one hundred guineas each; he then orders his books, jewels, plate, and household furniture to be sold, and after desiring mourning to be provided for his servants, and five guineas each to be given to several persons named in the will, and to his executors for a ring as a token of remembrance, concludes his will in the following manner: "In case there is money remaining, I should wish it to be given in private charity":—Held, that the general residue of the testator's personal estate, consisting of a leasehold estate, money in the funds, and a balance in cash, was not comprehended in the residuary clause, which was confined to the residue of the produce of the articles which the testator directed to be sold. Ommaney v. Butcher, Turn. & R. 260; 24 R. R. 42.

A testator having stated in his will that he had four shares in the National Bank and an insurance policy, a bond and half an annuity, gave the bank shares to his sister S., as a trustee for his niece; and having disposed of the other property already mentioned, he bequeathed the "remainder of those effects (all my just debts being paid), if any remain," to his sister, adding, "and I beg she will apportion between the above-named [naming four of his legatees]; and as my nephew John Corbet has a less secure position in life than his brothers, to him such portion or portions as she shall seem fit. I would also wish that she should have power to give some small amounts for charity, especially to L.'s family," &c.:—Held, that the residuary bequest was confined to the property specifically enumerated, and did not pass National Bank shares or other property acquired after the date of the will. Corbet v. Corbet, Ir. R. 7 Eq. 456.

Held, also, that his sister took the residue as a trustee for the persons named, and not beneficially. Ib.

In December, 1867, J. devised her moiety of the freehold lands of B. to her sister L. for life, to whom she also left certain personalty absolutely, and appointed her "residuary legatee." The testatrix then proceeded, subject to L.'s life estate, to declare a trust for the sale of the premises, and out of the proceeds gave two effectual legacies, and several charitable bequests which subsequently failed from her dying within three months of the date of her will. In July, 1868, L. devised the other moiety of the lands to trustees to sell, and out of the proceeds to pay certain pecuniary legacies, and she gave "whatever residue" there might be after such payment to certain charities. She then directed her railway shares to be sold, and after charging her debts and some more legacies on the produce, she gave the residue to W., to whom, with others, she subsequently bequeathed several specific chattels. L. having died in July, 1869:—Held, first, that, the words "residuary legatee" referring primâ facie to personalty, there was nothing in the context of J.'s will to enlarge their operation into a gift of real estate, and that consequently her heir-at-law took the realty or its proceeds, which became undisposed of from the failure of the charitable bequests charged thereon; but that, since the purpose for which a conversion had been directed had not wholly failed, he took such real estate as personalty. Hamilton v. Foot, Ir. R. 6 Eq. 572.

Held, secondly, that the gift of "the residue" did not constitute W. general residuary legatee, but only referred to the residue of the produce of the railway shares, and that this view was confirmed by such gift being followed by that of specific chattels to W., which a bequest of general residue would have included. Ib.

Gift of Residue in Proportion to Legacies—When all Legatees Entitled.]—Under residuary bequest to legatees in proportion to their legacies, all legatees, pecuniary and specific, even of things, &c., not expressly or by implication excluded, were held entitled; so annuitants, if they had not been excluded, on construction of whole will. Nannock v. Horton, 7 Ves. 391.

Testator, after giving some legacies, directs payment to be made to his devisees as under, and then mentions certain persons and the sums to be paid them, and gives residue to all his devisees above mentioned in proportion to their legacies. Every one of legatees is entitled to share of residue. Coope v. Banning, 1 Sim. & S. 534; 2 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 11.

Testator distributes a sum of stock, except a small part, among certain legatees, as to one of whom, X. Y., he uses expressions of resentment, and says that the bequest is more than she deserves. By a codicil, he leaves the surplus stock to be appropriated, as his executors think proper, among the several legatees. The executors, in appropriating the stock, cannot omit X. Y. Inglefield v. Coghlan, 2 Coll. C. C. 247.

—— Pecuniary Legatees only Entitled.]—Gift of residue "to be divided among legatees in proportion to the legacies bequeathed by this my will"; restricted, upon construction of the whole will, to general pecuniary legatees, in exclusion of legacies payable out of a specific fund in futuro, and of legacies given by codicil. Henwood v. Overend, 1 Mer. 23.

Under devise of personal residue to relations in such proportions as testator had given other part of his fortune, pecuniary legatees only are entitled, and not a devisee of real estate. Adair v. Maitland, 7 Bro. P. C. 587; 3 Ves. 231.

P. bequeathed the residue of her personal estate unto all those of her legatees thereinbefore named whose legacies did not exceed 300*l.*:—Held, that a specific legatee to whom chattels valued at a less sum than 200*l.* were bequeathed was not entitled to a share.

An annuity of 20*l.*, valued at less than 200*l.*, was given by the will to P.:—Held, that she was entitled to a share of the residue.

The testatrix bequeathed sums of 200*l.*, and of less amounts, to certain charitable institutions:—Held, that they were not entitled to any portion of the residue. Nicholson v. Patrickson, 3 Giff. 208; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 987; 5 L. T. 202.

—— Remaindermen Excluded.]—Testator directed interest of sum of money to be paid to his sisters, during their lives, in equal proportions, and, at their death, gave to their children the inheritance their mother derived from his estate, and desired that his sisters should be residuary legatees in proportions already mentioned:—Held, that sisters were entitled absolutely to residue, and that their children took no interest. Grassick v. Drummond, 1 Sim. & S. 517.

—— Where Additional Legacies given by Codicil.]—Where testator, by his will, gave his residue among certain legatees in proportion to the amount of their legacies thereinbefore given, and afterwards by codicil gave other legacies to some of the same legatees, "in addition to what he had given them by his will":—Held, that the shares which the former took in the residue should be proportioned to their legacies under the will only. Hall v. Severne, 9 Sim. 515.

A testator by his will bequeathed a legacy of 70,000*l.* to trustees upon certain trusts in favour of one of his adopted daughters therein named, and a legacy of 80,000*l.* upon similar trusts in favour of another adopted daughter, also named; and, after declaring that the term "the said residuary legatees" thereinafter used should be considered to designate all persons thereinbefore named as pecuniary legatees, he bequeathed his residuary estate in trust for and to be divided among "the said residuary legatees" pro ratâ in proportion to the amounts of the legacies thereinbefore bequeathed to "the said residuary legatees" respectively. By a codicil the testator revoked the legacy of 70,000*l.* given by the will, and, "in substitution for, and not in addition to," the same, gave to his trustees the sum of 80,000*l.* upon the same trusts as those declared in the will concerning the revoked legacy of 70,000*l.*, and "in the same manner as if they were there repeated"; and in terms substantially identical the testator revoked the legacy of 80,000*l.* given by the will, and gave a legacy of 140,000*l.* "in substitution for, and not in addition to," the revoked legacy of 80,000*l.* A question arose as to whether, in the division of the residuary estate, any and what share of it should be allotted in respect of the two increased legacies, or in respect of the two for which they were substituted :—Held, that, in the absence of authority, the fullest meaning must be given to the words "in substitution for, and not in addition to," and, reading the will and codicil together, the effect was as if the testator had directed that the increased legacies should be read as if they were inserted in the will for all purposes ; and that the residue must be divided among the legatees as if their original legacies had been the amounts mentioned in the codicil, and not in the will. Cortauld, In re, Cortauld v. Cawston, 47 L. T. 647.

—— Where Prior Gift Cut down by Codicil.]—M., by will, gave all his property, real and personal, to trustees, directing them to pay the income to his son and heir J. until J. should attain thirty, and then convey to J. the residue. By codicil, M. recalled the direction to pay the whole income to J., and directed the trustees to pay to J. thereout 300*l.* yearly until he attained thirty, and then to dispose of "the said residue" as directed by the will :—Held, that the surplus income beyond 300*l.*, which accrued during the minority of J., was not undisposed of, but passed to the trustees under the word "residue." Sturgis v. Campbell, 12 L. T. 836.

—— Legatees under Codicil only not Entitled.]—Hall v. Severne and Nicholson v. Patrickson, supra.

—— Gift in "Equal Shares" to all Legatees.]—Under a gift of the residue to all the testator's legatees, in equal shares (which were twenty-three in number), each legacy will have added to it one twenty-third part of the residue. Taniere v. Perks, 1 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 79.

General Gift Qualified by Subsequent Words.]—The testator, after giving his whole property to his wife and daughter, qualified the bequest by the words "namely, to give to my wife 50*l.* a year for her life, and 500*l.* to my daughter at twenty-one" :—Held, that there was an intestacy as to the residue after payment of the 50*l.* per annum and the 500*l.* Childs v. Wilson, 2 Jur. 415.

Revocation of Share of Residue.]—A. by his will gives the residue of his estate to three of his children, share and share alike, as tenants in common, and not as joint tenants ; but by a codicil he revoked his daughter M. from being one of the residuary legatees, and in lieu thereof gave her a pecuniary legacy. This third shall go to the testator's next of kin, and does not belong to the two other residuary legatees as such. Cheslyn v. Cresswell, 3 Bro. P. C. 246. Affirming, 2 Eden, 123. And see Ramsay v. Shelmerdine, 11 Jur. (N.S.) 903 ; 13 L. T. 392 ; 14 W. R. 46.

A testator gave his residuary real and personal estate to trustees for his five sons as tenants in common, and by a codicil revoked and made void all the trusts in his will contained concerning his residuary estate, so far as the same trusts related to his son R., or his interest therein, and in lieu gave a pecuniary legacy upon trust for R., his wife and children, and if R. should have no children, he directed that the legacy should sink into the residuary estate, but so that R. or his representatives should not take any share or interest therein :—Held, that the testator died intestate as to the trusts of one-fifth share of his residuary estate, and that the legacy was payable out of the residuary estate, and not out of the share which was undisposed of. Sykes v. Sykes, 37 L. J., Ch. 367 ; L. R. 3 Ch. 301 ; 16 W. R. 545.

Gift by a testator of six-sevenths of his residuary estate unto and equally between six individuals ; but in a certain event, in order to secure to all an equal participation in the property, A. and B. (two of the six) were not to receive any share :—Held, that upon the happening of the event the six-sevenths became divisible among the four, and that there was no intestacy as to the share of A. and B. Vaudrey v. Howard, 2 W. R. 32.

Direction that Share of Residue shall fall into Residue.]—A gift by a will of one-sixth of the testatrix's residuary estate to S. W., revoked by a codicil, and the same sixth given to S. W. for life, with a direction, after her decease, to pay a legacy thereout, and that the remainder of such sixth should sink into the residue of her (the testatrix's) personal estate, and be disposed of accordingly :—Held, that the remainder of the sixth share of the residue was not thereby given to the other residuary legatees, but was undisposed of. Humble v. Shore, 7 Hare, 247 ; 1 H. & M. 550, n.

Where a testator gave one-third of the proceeds of the conversion of his real and personal estate to A. for life, with remainder to his children, and declared that on failure of A.'s issue the one-third should sink into his residuary estate, and be held and applied accordingly, and then gave the other two-thirds to other persons, and A. died without issue :—Held, that A.'s one-third was not given to the other residuary legatees, but was undisposed of. Humble v. Shore (supra) followed. Lightfoot v. Burstall, 3 N. R. 112 ; 1 H. & M. 546 ; 33 L. J., Ch. 188 ; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 308 ; 12 W. R. 148.

A testator gave the residue of his real and personal estate to trustees to convert, and as to two-fourths of the proceeds to pay the same to his sisters A. and M., and to stand possessed of the two remaining fourths upon trusts, as to one such fourth, in favour of his sister J. for life, and her children, and as to the other such fourth, in favour of his sister E. for life, and her children ; and declared that, in the event of either or both of his sisters J. and E. dying without issue, the share or shares of either or both so dying should sink into and form part of his residuary estate, and be paid and divided accordingly, but so that the husband of the one so dying should take no share therein as representing his wife. The testator died in 1863, M. in 1867, and J. in 1870 :—Held, that as to the share of J. there was an intestacy, and that the clause in the will relating to the share of J. or E. dying without issue was inoperative. Bevis, In re, 26 L. T. 239 ; 20 W. R. 359.

A testator bequeathed the residue of her personal estate, "and also all such and so much of her personal estate, the trusts, bequests, or dispositions whereof in the will contained should fail, or become incapable of being performed," in eleven equal parts, among different persons. The legacy of one eleventh part lapsed :—Held, that the lapsed legacy fell into the residue, which became divisible into ten parts, amongst the remaining residuary legatees. Evans v. Field, 8 L. J., Ch. 264. And see Atkinson v. Jones, Johns. 246 ; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 761.

A testatrix directed her residuary estate to be divided into three equal shares, and gave one share to the children of T. M., one share to the children of W. H. (subtracting from their share 2,000*l.* that W. H. owed the testatrix), and the remaining third part to the children of R. H. :—Held, that the 2,000*l.* was to be considered as part of the residue, that the residue was to be divided into the equal parts, and that the 2,000*l.* was to be taken as part of the share of the children of W. H. Murray v. Samson, 3 Sim. 536.

A testator, by his will dated in 1853, after appointing trustees and executors, gave to them his residuary real and personal estate in trust for sale, and to divide the proceeds "among all his children in equal shares" on their respectively attaining twenty-one, but to stand possessed of the share of his married daughter I. upon trusts for her during her life, and after her death for her children, and in default of children upon trust for such persons as she should appoint; and in default of appointment the testator directed that such share should "fall into and become part of his said residuary personal estate, and be paid and applied accordingly." By a codicil the testator varied the ultimate gift by directing that his daughter's power of appointment should be limited to a moiety of her share of the residue, and that the other moiety should "fall into and become part of his residuary personal estate, and be paid and applied according to the trusts of his will." The testator left seven children, including his daughter I., all of whom attained twenty-one. The daughter died without issue, but having appointed the first moiety of her one-seventh share of the residuary estate to her husband:—Held, that the second or unappointable moiety of her one-seventh was not undisposed of by the testator, but was divisible equally among his other six children as residuary legatees. Crawshaw v. Crawshaw, 49 L. J., Ch. 662; 14 Ch. D. 817; 43 L. T. 309; 29 W. R. 68.

A testator by his will directed that his trustees should stand possessed of the residue of his estate upon trust, as to one-seventh part thereof, to invest the same and pay the income to his daughter for life, and after her death to hold the same in trust for her child or children who should attain the age of twenty-one years; but if there should be no such child, then he directed his trustees "to apply the said share as part of his residuary estate." He afterwards declared trusts of the remaining six shares of his residuary estate. F. survived the testator, but left no child who attained the age of twenty-one years:—Held, that the share of F. was undisposed of by the will. Humble v. Shore (supra) and Lightfoot v. Burstall (supra) followed. Crawshaw v. Crawshaw (supra) distinguished. Savage's Trusts, In re, 50 L. J., Ch. 131.

A. B. by will gave real and personal estate to a trustee to sell and convert, and out of the moneys to pay debts, and to divide the residue equally between five persons named. By a codicil A. B. bequeathed to the issue of S. R., one of such persons, all the effects which by the will she had bequeathed to S. R., who was stated to be dead; but if there should be no issue living at A. B.'s decease, or being such if such effects should not be claimed by such issue within twelve months after her decease, then such effects shall fall into and be considered as part of the residue of the personal estate. S. R. never had any issue:—Held, that S. R.'s share of residue under the will was undisposed of. Barker's Estate, In re, Hetherington v. Longrigg, 15 Ch. D. 635; 29 W. R. 281.

Fund set apart for Annuities falling into Residue.]—A. gives 800*l.* to his executors, on trust to pay annuities to B. and C. for their lives, exceeding the interest of the 800*l.*, and gives the surplus of his estate to D. and E. The annuitants being dead, the 800*l.* shall go to the residuary legatees, and not to the executors. Cock v. Burrish, 1 Vern. 425.

Gift of a particular fund for life, then to residuary legatees as such, then the residue given to them as tenants in common; the particular fund is part of the residue, and vests accordingly in them as tenants in common. Pitt v. Benyon, 1 Bro. C. C. 589.
